But yet moreouer wee haue to marke y which is sayde heere: namely that if any of the Leuites bee disposed to come to the place which the Lorde shall haue chosen to be worshipped there, hee shall haue his part and portion of all the offerings of the Temple as one of their brethren, besides that which hee hath of his owne house. For if they had houses from their fathers in the Country, (as in deede there were Cities assigned them euerywhere:) they were to keepe them to themselves, and yet they were to haue their part of the offerings that were made in the Temple, so long as they serued there. But yet God sayth expressly, with the whole desire of his heart, to shewe that God ment not heere to giue occasion of ydlenesse, to such as sought but their owne ease and commoditie: but to speake of such as came with a rightmeaning mind to serue him. I tolde you afore, that the children of Leuie were disperfed and had no certain portion to inherite, but had certaine Cities heere and there, one in one place and an other in an other, disperfedly throughout the Lande of Chanaan. And therefore it is sayde, that if any of them being farre of Ierusalem, had a deuotion to giue himselfe wholly to the seruice of God: hee might doe so, hee might leaue the place where he dwelt, to goe to Ierusalem, there to giue himselfe wholly to the seruice of God. And this was no breach of the order that God hadde set, that is to wit, that the Leuites should be scattered abroad as a seeede, to holde the people continually in the purenesse of religion: but it was spoken in respect of some of them. For all of them had not a desire to resort to Ierusalem: that is sure. For the most part of the Leuites dwelt in places more fruitfull than Ierusalem: for that part of the countrey was not one of the best of all the Lande of Chanaan. But they that dwelt in the countrees of pasturage, were the welthiest. And we see also how the prophets vprayed them, saying: Ye Bulles of Baion, because the kingdome of Israell was become vncaproude by reason of their abundance. The Leuites then wold haue had no liking to haue abidden in a place y was not very fruitfull, & to haue left all their owne comodities & houses. Againe if any had bin led by desire of vaine glorie, God ment not to fauour them. Therefore it is sayde that if any of them woulde come of good will to Ierusalem to serue in y Temple; he should not be refused, so it might appeare that this intent was to giue himselfe to y seruice of God, and y he did it with a good courage. Now we see in effect y gods intent here was to giue a preheminence to such as besides their common duecie of teaching the people, were also desirous to be continued at the Sacrifices. That is one point.

Amos. 4.1.

But yet for the better vnderstanding of the whole; we must consider that the seruice of the Temple consisted not onely in the offering of sacrifices: but also in singing of praises vnto a God both euening and morning, in saying of publike praiers, yea and also in watching nightes: and so there was some hardenes in performing that charge. In respect whereof it is sayde in the Psalme, Blesse the Lorde ye that serue him, yea and which doe keepe the watch nightes in his house or Temple. It was not enough for the Leuites in their order and according to their turns, to be occupied from morning to night in calling vpon the name of God, and in making of praiers and supplications in the name of the people; but it behoued them to holde out all the night also: and it was a set order among them, that when one sort of them had bene occupied all the day in singing the prayes of God, it behoued them to be present there the next morning when the people came together, to shewe y way to others. Likewise, when solemne sacrifices were to be offered according to the commaundment of the Law, the Leuites were euer present. To be short, the Temple was neuer empty, but it behoued the watch as well for the keeping of the fire vpon the Altar, as for y mainteyning of the lights and such other like things. Thus see we now y cause why God vouchsafed to giue a certain priuiledge to those that came after that sort to Ierusalem.

And hereby we be done to vnderstande, first that the office of the Leuites was dubble: to wit, that on the one side they were to teach the people, & to be as keepers and maintainers of y law, to the intent that men should not turne away to any superstitiō, nor become heathenish for want of good looking to, and so bring the seruice of God in contempt; but that they might alwayes beare in minde to what end he kept them in the worlde, and referre their whole life to the gloryfying of him. That was one part of the charge of y Leuites. Also they were to teach men the meaning of the Ceremonies, as namely that the sacrifices serued to shew euery man eyefight, y all me are accursed, & condemned to death, and that they ought not in any wise to come in Gods presence without sacrifice. And there was not any sacrifice sufficient to make attonement betwene God and the worlde, but onely our Lorde Iesus Christes offering vp of himself. Ye see then how the dutie of the Leuites was to teach the people, that the Ceremonies guided them to the promise which had bene made vnto them concerning the Redeemer. And therewithall it behoued the Leuites moreouer to pray vnto God: and the Hygh priest was to goe into the tabernacle in the name of all the people, to shewe that they were not worthy to haue access vnto God, but by meane of a mediator to see before them and to enter as it were into Gods presence in their behalfe. All these things were to be done. And therefore the Leuites that serued in the Temple, hadde a harder charge than they that were disperfed abroad in the Countrey. In respect whereof it was Gods will that they should haue the sayde aduantage of taking their portions of all the sacrifices and offerings that were made in the Temple.

Whereupon wee haue to note, that Gods esteeming of the Ceremonies was not without cause. In graunting this priuiledge to the Leuites, he doeth vs to vnderstande that he liketh well of Ceremonies, and will haue them kept, & wishal, that he will haue the meanes maintained for the strengthening of them: but that is not in respect of God himselfe: for wee must alwayes thinke thus: What? Did God require men to offer him the blood of brute beastes? Why? that is nothing but stinck. Againe, required hee to haue the fatte burnt, which can ingender nothing but filth and stinck likewise? Yea: howbeit, that was not for any pleasure that heooke in those outward things: but for the saluation and benefite of the people, to keepe them in continual hope of the redeemer that was promised. Againe, their praying, their singing, and all the rest of their doinges serued to inure the faithfull, that they might pray to God with the better courage. True it is that we be commaunded to pray euery man by himselfe at home in his house, in his Chamber, in his bedde, and at his table: but yet our Lorde perceiuing the weakenesse and coldenesse that is in vs, hath willed vs to assemble together and to call vpon him with one common accorde. And so was done in the Temple. There was singing of Psalmes, there was giuing of thanks in the name of all the people, there was praying and such other like things, and finally there was sensing with perfumes, to shewe that our callings vpon God after y maner, are sacrifices of good sent, & steie vp to heauen like the smoke of the perfumes. All these things were done for the better inuring of the people to the seruice of God, and that they should fashion themselves after the Leuites that serued in the Temple.

To be short, we see how God did not this in fauour of y one tribe onely: but rather that hee tooke y order for y benefite of the whole Church. For had the Priestthoode ceased, and the order of the temple bene abolished: at what point had the people bene? All had gone to hauocke. And wee see also y when they were carried away captiue, and the temple beaten downe: they became as folk forlorne, & could not open their mouthes to sing vnto God as they had bene wont to doe. Sith it is so then, let vs marke y our Lordes intent was not to fauour that one tribe alone; but generally to procure the benefite and saluation of his whole Church. And likewise when mention is made of the order of the Christian Church, it is not in respect of some small number of men: but Gods intent is to draw both great and small vnto him. And let vs marke that his ordeining of common prayer and of the administration of the sacraments, is because he seeth that without them our saluation could not stande, but all would goe to wrecke, & his grace would after a sort vanishe away. And this ought to giue vs the better courage to giue our minds to the doing of the things which our Lord commaundeth vs concerning the Ceremonies, concerning the resorting to his word, concerning our meeting together in some place certaine to call vpon him in the company of y<sup>e</sup> faithfull. Let vs consider, y<sup>e</sup> seeing God hath ordained these things for our welfare, we must not withdraw our selues fro<sup>m</sup> them, but euery of vs must resort to them as much as we possibly can.

And it is said expressly, that they shall be there to minister in the name of the Lord, with their brethren which are there before the face of the Lorde. This Name of the Lord, betokeneth nothing else but y<sup>e</sup> Maiestie of God, euen as he manifesteth y<sup>e</sup> same vnto vs. For it was not for the people to conceite so grosse and brutish an imagination, as y<sup>e</sup> God should be inclosed in the Temple: but it behooued the to beare alwaies in mind, y<sup>e</sup> God had verily placed his name there, y<sup>e</sup> is to say, that he meant to haue his Maiestie known there as he had giuen assured tokens thereof: For the Sanctuary, the Altars, (as well y<sup>e</sup> wheron the whole burnt offerings were sacrificed, as the others wheron the shewbread was set, and whercon the perfumes were burned,) & all y<sup>e</sup> rest of the things there, serued for a warrant to shew that God accepted the petitions of his people. That then was the cause why it is expressly said, that those which abode in the Temple serued the name and Maiestie of God. And heere withal mention is made also of Gods presence (as we haue seene before,) which is a raising of the things that hee had taught afore, that the people should not bee disappointed in resorting to the temple to call vpon him there, because the Leuites should alwaies be there ready to succour such as fled to him for succour.

Now this was in the time of the figures, But we must marke that if we resort to our God in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, in whome dwelleth the whole fulnes of the Godhead; God will shew his face vnto vs: that is to say, we shall s<sup>e</sup>e by the effect that he regardeth vs, and that the dore is not shut against vs, but that we may peace into his presence. And besides that, to the end we may be guided by our Lord Iesus Christ, we must put the thing in v<sup>e</sup> which he hath told vs: that is to wit, we must come together in his name, to the intent that hee may bee among vs.

Then if wee wil be heard of God, and that our seruice should be wel accepted of him: we must meete together without hypocrisie, with a true & pure heart: and then will our Lord Iesus fo beare sway amongst vs, that God also wil therwithal reach out his hande to helpe & succour vs. And when we haue so offered vp our prayers vnto him, and euery of vs hath put himself into his hand: let vs not doubt but y<sup>e</sup> he regardeth our doings. As for example, for as much as we knowe y<sup>e</sup> these our present doings in meeting together to heare his word and to seeke him, are commaunded by him: Let vs not doubt but we be before his eyes, and he loketh vpon vs with pitie, and will consider all our necessities to provide for them, and to succor vs in them. And let vs on our part also fo mount vp vnto him by faith, as we may bee out of all doubt that he sheweth vs his face, that is to say, that he maketh vs to feele his presence, specially when we come to him by the way which he sheweth vs; for the wil he make vs to come in such sorte, that he wil keepe vs still vnder his protection, vntill he take vs vp into his kingdome.

Now let vs kneele down before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better, yea & that we may be so stricken down in our selues, as we may seeke him with true repentance, & rest vpon his promises, not doubting but y<sup>e</sup> he accepteth vs, howe wretched so euer we bee, because we come not to him vpon trust of our owne deserts, but vpon his meere goodnesse: where through he hath elected and chosen vs: and that moreouer he suffer vs not to be defiled with any of the corruptions of our flesh, but that seeing he hath called vs to his Priesthood, hee will also graunt vs the grace to dedicate our selues to him by offering vp all our thoughts, affections, & desires, yea & euen our whole bodies & soules vnto him, that he may bee honored more & more by them, & that such as are yet farre off from him may be brought vnto him, to the end wee may all together worship him in his only sonne. And for the bringing thereof to passe, it may please him to raise vp true and faithfull Ministers of his word, &c.

9 When thou art come into the Land which the Lorde thy God giueth thee: thou shalt not learne to doe after the abominations of those Nations.

10 There shall not any bee found among you, which maketh his sonne or his daughter to go through fire, nor any witch that vseth Witchcraft, nor any man that is a regard of times, or that regardeth the flying of foules.

11 Or that is a Sorcerer, or a charmer, or that asketh Counsell at spirites that are called familiars, or that is a soothsaier, or which asketh Counsell at the dead.

12 For all they that doe such things are an abomination to the Lord: and for such abominations sakes, the Lord thy God driueth them out before thy face.

13 Be perfect therefore before the Lord thy God.

14 For the Nations which thou shalt possess, giue care to regarders of tymes: and to witches: but the Lord thy God hath not taught thee to doe so.

15 The Lord thy God will rayse vp a prophet like vnto me, from among thy brethren: him shall you obey.

IT is in vaine for God to giue vs many lawes & lessons, if we determine not with our selues to obey him in all pointes. For the first point wherat we must begin is to know Gods authority, & to learne to submit our selues to his word without any gainsaying. If the Law in generall haue not this force; to what purpose is it for God to speake of this thing or of that thing? Therefore let vs beare well in mind, that we must be disposed to receiue whatsoeuer God inioyneth vs, before we can benefite our selues by any one sentence of the holy Scripture. As for example, when a man commeth to a sermon, though he heare the matter, yet shall it not touch him to the quick, vnlesse he know aforehand that Gods truth must be receiued, and that it is not to be encountered with disputing. And surely wee see many which are sufficiently conuicted, that the things which are told them are true, and that they be not able to reply against them: and yet passe not to make a mocke of them. And why is that? Because they be not touched with the maiesty of God; and therefore they cannot thinke that wee ought to submit our selues to him that made vs, & fashioned vs to be obedient to him & to his commaundement. But on the contrary part, when we be vrged to receiue the things which we knowe to come of God, his truth will beare sway with vs. As soone as we heare that it is God which speaketh, we tremble at his speech, as is said by the prophet Esay. And so we see now why God giueth this generall rule to his people, that they must houlde themselves to his pure and simple wil. But for as much as men are naturally giuen to superstition, & seeme to seeke euen wilfully to be beguiled: God here doth first withdraw vs from all errors and abuses, & afterward giueth vs a foundation wheron to stay & to be builded, that is to wit by herkening vnto him, & by sticking to the which he saith. Thus are there here two principall reasons. The one is that God correcteth the vanity that is in men, in that they rather giue our themselves to couisnages & lyings, than to the rightfull truth. And therupon he sheweth after what manner they may be directed, giuing them a remedie against all the wiles of Satan. For if a husbandman wil haue his seede to thriue, he must first till his ground: & if there come vp any shrewd weedes, he must pull them vp or cut them off. After the same maner doth God deale with vs: to the intent his worde may haue entrance into vs, and be receiued without any let; he riddeth vs from all the euil & vice that is in vs. For all our owne seeking is to giue our selues to folle: & the duell is so wylie & suttile, yet hee findeth meanes to attaine to his purpose, because he knoweth that our mindes are so fickle, that our whole seeking is to be beguiled. Therefore let vs marke wel that Gods meaning in this place, was to hold his people in obedience to his word, which was the mark he shot at. And moreouer because we be forepossessed with the said forwardnes, so as none of vs can forbear to hearken to leafings, but our wits are so shettle that we be still hearkening after this & that, delighting in fond curiosities & speculations which are nothing worthy; & serue to no purpose but to trouble our mindes about vaine and vnprofitable things: therefore here our Lorde turneth those which are his from all things that may corrupt them and withdraw the from his truth. In respect whereof he saith here in effect, That if wee will be his people, wee must not be intangled neither in Sorcerie, nor in Soothsaying, nor in Witchcraft, nor in coniuings of the dead, nor in calling up of familiar Spirites: but all these things must be rid away from vs, or else he will disclaime vs and vtterly forsake vs. Marke that for one point.

As touching these seuerall sorts, we will treat of them another time: for the time will not suffer to speake of theal as now. And therefore in this meane season, let it suffice vs to see whereunto God had an eye, & wherat he aimed. Let this then be one point: if we will be the true disciples of our God, and receiue benefite by his word, to be taught as becometh vs: we must put away all wicked superstitions, & all abuses wherunto the world is giuen, & wherewith we also should be bewitched, if we remedie thereof withdrew vs nor thereto. And because wee be too much giuen to custome, in so much that if a thing be once in vse, we thinke it to be lawfull: God telleth vs expressly that wee must not set our mindes vpon such clokings, for they will stand vs in no stead. Therefore whereas we see the whole world imbred with errors, to as Satan hath his full scope to deceiue both great & small: let vs not run after them. For it wil not serue vs for excuse, to sheld our selues vnder the greatness of the multitude, or to say, Every man beleueeth so: I see the wisest folke doe so. Well may we alleage such things; but our Lord telleth vs that we must not yeeld our selues after such maner vnto men, that he should not alwayes be preferred before them, and beare chiefe sway, and be regarded of vs though we were inticed away by all the examples of the world.

This thing is touched expressly by Moses in that he saith, True it is that when ye be come into the Lande which ye shall possess, ye shall finde it to be as a common Law, and that men haue so done: but ye must ye not thinke that God alloweth it ever the more, or that he is contented with it. For the world shall be condemned: and though all men were styned with some one kinde of crime; yet will not God forgo his office of Iudge, nor be overcome by any multitude be it neuer so great. And therefore let vs remember first of all, that if we will offer our selues to God to be his scholers ; we must not in-tangle our selues in the vanities that raigne in this world, but wee must yeeld our selues wholly vnto him with a simple and right meaning mind, so as nothing may stopp y<sup>e</sup> entring of his word into vs & our receauing thereof, but y<sup>e</sup> it may haue full authoritie to the vttermost . That is y<sup>e</sup> first point.

The second point is, that wee must not passe what the world doth, or how other men behaue themselves . For God will haue vs for all that, to frame our selues according to his woorde . And although wee see nothing but rebellion heere beneath : yet must wee doe him the honour to submit our selues to him . For it is not ynough for vs to worship him Ceremonially: the chief point is that his word do so raigne, as it be a brydle to hould vs backe, and that our life be framed altogether thereafter. And although this was so straitly commaunded: yet we see how the cleane contrary came to passe. Wherein we see a fayre mirrour of mans wickednesse and vnthank-fulnesse . For albeit that God doe shewe him the right way; yet doth he go astray still. Ye see how the Iewes had warning ynough that they should not corrupt themselves with the abominations of the heathen; God shewed them wherewith they ought to haue contented themselves and wheron to haue staied; namely y<sup>e</sup> they ought to haue learned at his own mouth: he gaue them his law, and hee raised them vp prophetes : and yet for all that they ceassed not to go sowlly astray, & to haue itching eares, and to be inquisiue of this & that . And that was the cause why foreeties and inchantments , Coniurations of the dead, and such other like things reigned among them: insomuch that in the time of y<sup>e</sup> prophet Esay, we see there were very fewe folke that followed the law of God . Lo here am I, (saith the prophet.) and those whom God hath giuen vnto me . What had he any great company w<sup>h</sup> him: No, But contrariwise he saith, that they were hated, and that they were pointed at w<sup>h</sup> mens fingers, as if they had bin monsters against nature. And those y<sup>e</sup> did so, would needes be counted wiser than all other men, like as y<sup>e</sup> Papisits vpbraide vs nowadaies, that we will needes make a new world, & require a reformatiō alone by our selues, by reason wherof we be scismatickes : & euen so was it in y<sup>e</sup> time of y<sup>e</sup> prophet Esay, as he declareth in his eight chapter. Yet notwithstanding he forbeareth not to vtter this sentence, & to confirme y<sup>e</sup> same, saying : If any man go about to turne you away to familiars, and to coniuering of y<sup>e</sup> dead, hold you your selues to the things that your God hath deliuered you.
 Ought not he to reigne both oter the quick and dead, and to be obied of all? Yes: and therefore hold you to his law and to his testimonies . And if the people speake against them ; it is by cause they haue no light. But let y<sup>e</sup> blind go on into decay & destruction , seeing they cannot be helde backe: & in the meane while hold you your selues to y<sup>e</sup> simplicitie of the doctrine. And for this cause it is said to y<sup>e</sup> Prophet Esay; Seale vp y<sup>e</sup> Testimonie of God, & let it be vnto you as a letter that is closed vp, seeing there is nothing but vnbeliefe euery where. And yet for all y<sup>e</sup>, cease not to holde you still to it quietly and obediently .

Now if this sel out in old time among y<sup>e</sup> Iewes: needs must we find y<sup>e</sup> like nowadaies, as is shewed by y<sup>e</sup> Apostle in y<sup>e</sup> Epistle to the Hebtewes, who applieth this text to y<sup>e</sup> raigne of our Lorde Iesus Christ, & to y<sup>e</sup> state of y<sup>e</sup> Christian Church. Then if they which were desirous to haue serued God purely were abhorred; & that not of y<sup>e</sup> heathen but of such as named themselves the Church of God: it becōmeth vs nowadaies to beare it patiently, if y<sup>e</sup> world not only looke awry vpon vs, but also hold vs for accursed. Yet notwithstanding, we may wel desie y<sup>e</sup> Papisits w<sup>h</sup> all their pride and diuellish ouerweening, sith we see them to be backsliders & to haue forsaken God; & (as much as in the lieth) to haue renouced their baptisme . Let vs learn to hold our selues to y<sup>e</sup> law. And although Gods trueth be not recieued; yet let vs keepe it stiles as a letter closed vp, & as a treasure laid vp in store. And when we see all other men wander away, some after superstitions, & some after errors: let vs assure our selues y<sup>e</sup> the way is infallible, so we hearken to our God, and in deouour to behaue our selues according to his wil, & we cānot misse the way, it is so certain, as Moses saith hereafter: This is y<sup>e</sup> way, walk therein. But for the better vnderstanding hereof, let vs marke the words y<sup>e</sup> are set down here . The people (saith he) whose land you must possesse , are imbrued w<sup>h</sup> many lyes & abuses : but you shall not do so; especially if wee will be taken for Gods flock, & accounted for his household folke; we must be separated from al the rest of y<sup>e</sup> world. Let vs learn then y<sup>e</sup> our faith must not wauer, nor wāder after our eyes: but we must settle our sight & al our senses vpon that which God telleth vs. Though we saw a thousand stumbling blocks to dazzle our eies wāll, yea & to put vs to trouble: yet must we yeeld such authoritie to Gods word, y<sup>e</sup> it may hold vs still in awe. They then y<sup>e</sup> run gadding at y<sup>e</sup> sight of this example or that example, do well shew that they were neuer thoroughly grounded vpon y<sup>e</sup> word of God. And therefore this saying is of great importance, whē God setteth the things which he vttereth w<sup>h</sup> his mouth, as a counterpesse against all things y<sup>e</sup> are to be seene in y<sup>e</sup> world. As if he should say, Must I be laid in y<sup>e</sup> balance against men, y<sup>e</sup> when I haue comaunded them to demean themselves thus or thus, my authoritie should be diminished and doubted of, & it might come in question whether my word ought to take place or no? Were it not a turning of all vpside downe? Can there be any greater or ougter confusion, than to compare the creature w<sup>h</sup> me? What are men? There is nothing in them but blindness & heathlines. Yea & when they thinke themselves wisest; then are they
 gainst me is stauke madness: & yet must my word be defaced for their pleasure? Then let vs marke well, y<sup>e</sup> it is not for vs to followe mens customes; nor to esteeme y<sup>e</sup> more of things for y<sup>e</sup> they haue had their free scope, when God turneth vs from them & saith, Yee shal not doe so. For why? It is good reason y<sup>e</sup> we should separate our selues frō those whom God hath not enlightened. It is no marvel though men trip & stumble & go astray ouer all the fields like flie beastes. For it is said y in this world we be as in the darke; & therewithal it is said also, y there is nothing but starke ignorance in vs, and that wee comprehend not the things y concerne God. Therefore when we want Gods word, we be as in an irkesome dungeo. And fo forasmuch as God graunteth nor y grace and priuledge to al me, to haue y lampe of his word & truth lighted vp vnto them to guide the withal: we ought not to wonder though we see them goe astray, but rather to make our benefite of y good y God offreth vnto vs, and to hold vs altogether to his word when it is giuen vnto vs.

And now he telleth them the cause why they should not do so. For your God (saith Moses) will raise you up a Prophet, and him you shall obey. If wee were but simply forbidden to giue our selues to superstition, force, and al other abuses y were not ynough. For we should be stil in vnquietnes, and euery man might iustly demanda, yea, but what will God haue vs then to doe? For he for-biddeth vs to haue any superstition among vs, and yet in the meane while he leaueh vs in vn-certaintie, so as the state of the heathen & vnbe-lieeuers is better than ours. After y maner might a man haue replied: But our Lord hath prouided well for it. For he saith, whereas I call you backe from al abuses & errors, it is not to leaue you in perplexitie & trouble, so as ye should not knowe on which side to turne you: but I giue you my worde, & that is the thing which you must take heede vnto. And if Gods trueth content vs not: what an vnthankfulness is it? We see then now y the thing whereby God will put a difference be-twene vs and the Infidels, is that we must haue his word for our guide, ro rule our selues therby: & therewithal we must let the world run at rouers, forasmuch as they haue no other doctrine to ground vpon, but their owne opinion, or y folly of other men. And so when one blind ma leads another, he himselfe stumbleth first, & al the rest follow him. As for vs, seeing we haue God for our Maister and teacher, let vs hold our selues contented therewith.

Matt. 15. 14.

And let vs marke hereby, y it is vnpossible for men to be withdrawn from errors, vnl:ffe they haue Gods word. In deede a great sort can well ynough mocke at the great number of follies which they see: as for example, ye shall see many worldlings nowdayes which will condemne the abuses & fond toys y are in the Popedome, & lustily reiect them: but yet for all y, they stand vpon neuer y better ground themselves, neither haue they any setlednes or roote. And if they be not stained w the errors which they condemne: they haue others as bad or worse. For many of them bee starke Atheistes, that is to say without Religion and without feare of God, whose shame must needs bee discouered at length, and God must needs giue them vpon a leaud minde, that euen yong children may laugh at their beastlines. And whence commeth y? Euen of this (as I said afore) y we shall neuer haue any certain rule, vnll God haue taught vs. And y is a point wel worthy to be noted. For first, we neede not to be troubled at y impediments which hinder many men to come to the Gospell in these dayes, when they see the whole worlde in a maner wilfully bent to superstition: for seeing that Gods word beareth no sway among them, what shal a man say, but y blind folke may wel ynough wander in darkenes? Againe, we see the singular yea & inestimable benefite which God vouchsaieh vpon vs, when he giueh vs his word, and applieth it to vs for our soule health. For it is the only meane to draw vs out of y bottomlesse pir.

So long as we bee in this world, we bee hemmed in with so many temptations of the diuel, as can not be nobred: & the world it selfe may well bee likened to a maze, so as we cannot step one pace wout dainger of falling down headlong to breake our neckes: from the which there is none other meane to preferue vs but Gods word. Seeing the y he vouchsafeth to looke mercifully vpon vs, & to open his holy mouth to shewe vs y way of sal-uation: how may wee excuse our selues, if wee vouchsafe not to come vnto him? So then, let vs learne to imbrace this treasure which is offered vs, & to yeeld due reuerence to Gods doctine, after wee haue once known what it bringeth vs, and howe much it is for our behoofe. And finally let vs beare in minde that by this texte where our Lord telleth vs that he will raise vs up a Prophet, he doeth vs to wit that we shal be deli-uered from all errors, if we receiue his worde to frame our selues therafter.

And hereby we be done to vnderstand, that all such as in these daies do make none account of the Gospell, are wel worthy to erre: of which sort a man shall see many nowdayes, which shute their eyes and stop their eares when God is so gracious as to draw them to him. They haue the meanes whereby to yeelde themselves into y way of saluation, & they play the deafe & blind folks wilfully & wittingly: & therefore is it meete that such folk should perish. For inasmuch as they reie-ct Gods grace whereby they might haue been saued, & which could not be sufficiently esteemed of: must he not needs be reuenged of their spitefulness, in y they bee so froward as to trample the word so vnder their feete, which serued to haue deliuered them from the gulfes of hell?
Marke that for one point.

And therewithal let vs marke on our side, that seeing God teacheth vs, it ought to be a sufficient arming of vs against all ecrours and all vaine fancies, in so much that although the diuell lay his snares for vs, yet shall he not be able to catch vs as long as we hearken to our God, and yeeld him the ductifull obedience which he deserueth at our hands, & which we owe vnto him. And for y same cause doeth S. Paul say expressly, that if we haue y doctrine of y Gospell thoroughly, printed in our hearts, we shall no more be led to daunce after other mens pipes, nor play the yong childre which are easily deceiued. Ye see then that Gods trueth is inuincible. And when wee receiue it by true faith, then are we armed with the spirituall sword. For it is not for nought that y title is giue to Gods word. We cannot be exempted fro being assailed by the diuel, for euen our Lord Iesus Christ himselfe passed through y battel. But yet howlocuer the world go, we shal haue wherewith to resist Satan, & al his wiles, so we receiue Gods word and sticke to it.

And by the way let vs marke, that whereas Moses saith that God will raise vp a Prophet: he speaketh of y continual order which God intended to stablish in his Church, which shall indure to the worldes ende. For had there bene no more but the once publishing of the Law, truly it had bene ynough to make folke vnexcusable whenioeuer they had turned from it: but yet had it not bene a sufficient meane to hold them to it, specially considering the frailtie of men, how they slip away like water and vanish away out of hand, chiefly when the case concerneth the accepting of any goodnesse. Therefore if God had done no more but published his Law, truly men ought to haue submitted themselues to it, and to hold themselues as in captiuitie thereunto: but yet wee see such was mens feblenesse and vnconstancie, that they would haue turned away from it by and by. God therefore vouchsafed to adde a second helpe, as if he should put to a double bond, saying y he will raise vp Prophets from tyme to tyme, among the people. As if he should say, True it is y I haue declared my will vnto you fully in my law: but yet will I send you exponders of the doctrine and maintainers thereof, which shall be as keepers thereof, that it perish not, ne be buried, nor bee corrupted with false interpretations. So shal there alwayes be Prophets. This doth vs to vnderstand, that God hath not onely once vttered his will vnto vs, but also y he hath sent vs teachers from time to time to keepe his Church in obedience, & by their meanes to make his word to be vnderstood. And so we haue to gather y the Church cannot stand without teaching, and y it is not ynough for me to reade the holy Scripture: for if God had knowen it to haue bin sufficient for vs, he would haue gone no further. But it is his will that there should be teachers to speak dayly in his name, as instruments of his spirit, and (to be short) as his owne mouth. If this be not superfluous, we may conclude thereupon, y where no doctrine is preached in Gods name, there is no Church. And therby we see the desolation that is in the Popedome. True it is y their hypocrites preach now and then: but for as much as they disguise themselues, yea and euen falsifie & corrupt all good doctrine: all that they doe is but abhominacion. Againe, we know that those which beare the name of Bishops & Prelates in the Popedome, are but Idols and dumb pictures. For to what ende hath God set this order and policie among his people, but that his word should bee heard, and that it should bee sounded out with a loud & cleare voyce, so as both great and small may be taught by it, and by that meanes submit themselues thereto. according to this saying, that his word is his Kingly Scepter or Mace wherwith he intendeth to govern vs: So then let vs know that if we will be knowen and reckened to be of Gods church, and haue him to dwell among vs: his word must be preached to vs, and wee must not thinke it ynough to haue the holy Scripture, vnles we haue teachers also to bring vs backe to the things y are written, & to giue vs the vnderstanding of the, & to apply them to our vse. That is y thing which is shewed vs in this text. Now I would you that this serued not for the people of olde time onely; but that it belongeth to vs also; and we see in as much as the same text is applied by the Apostles to our Lord Iesus Christ. The Apostles intending to shewe that Iesus Christ was sent of God his father with full commission to gouerne vs, and that it is he to whom we must giue care: say it is written that God will raise vp a Prophet. Howbeit I haue told you already, that this place speaketh not of one Prophet alone, but of many, and of their continuall succession. Howe will that agree? Very wel. For in as much as God had promised his people, not to leaue them destitute, nor vnprouide dit is to be considered now, whether the same hath bin performed or no. True it is that there were Prophets sometime moe and sometime fewer. It is saye of the time of Samuell that is to wit of his childhood; that Gods word was very precious that is to say: very rare. And why? It was a punishment of God, according as he threatneth by his Prophet Amos, that hee would send a dearth, not of bread and other vtiles, but of hearing the truth, and of the doctrine of saluation. The Israelits then were sometimes as good as bereft of the thing that had bin promised them: but yet not so vtterly that God had no Prophetes at all. And after that maner did he encounter the malice and stubbornnesse of that people; in so much that although the Prophets were reiected, yea & cruelly murdered: Yet notwithstanding hee ceased not to maintaine his promise still, euen to y coming of Iesus Christ. In deede there was a certaine intermission, to y end that the people should bee moued with the greater desire to receiue this great and cheefe Prophet y was promised them. For we see there were no moe Prophetes in Israell after the time of Zacharie and Aggeus. And had God for all that disappointed them? What was become of this Prophecie of Moses? It is sayd expressly by Malachy, Call to mind the Law that was giuen you on Horeb. As if he should say, Sirs, looke to your selues, for ye haue the perfect wisdom, which is contained in Gods Lawe, and therewal ye haue had prophetes also, which haue expounded the same vnto you faithfully. Hitherto God hath euer performed his promise towards you: & now hencefoorth he sendeth you backe againe to his law. To what end? He addeeth the reason. Behold (saith he) I will send mine Angell before my face, (that is to wit, Iohn Baptist:) and when he hath made ready the way, then will I come, & therfore loke that ye obey me. For else I must be faine to smite me, & all y stand me must needs be beaten downe. This text sheweth how God promised Prophetes, & yet notwithstanding had an eye to our Lord Iesus Christ, at whom the final conclusion & the perfect working of all the propheties aimed. Yea & this was so comon a thing among y Iewes, that euen the wretched harlot of Samaria could say, that whē Messias came, he should teach vs all things. Not onely y Iewes, but also y Samaritans who had but a kind of shadow

 to we heare how it is said, y<sup>e</sup> his Gospell must bee preached our all the world. And he limits no short time to it, but will haue it done to y<sup>e</sup> worldes end. Sith it is so, wee see (as I haue touched before) y<sup>e</sup> Gods setting of this continuall order in his Church, was not for y<sup>e</sup> Iewes onely, but also for vs, so y<sup>e</sup> although we heare his wo. de, & haue it preached vnto vs dayly, & yet we be not disposed to learn as at his mouth: he shaketh vs off, & banisheth vs out of his kingdome, & we be not worthy to be reckoned in the number of his seruants. Thus ye see what we haue to marke.

But now forasmuch as this text is referred to our Lord Iesus Christ, & the Prophetes that were raised vp afore, were inferiours to him & but his members: we must know also y<sup>e</sup> those that beare y<sup>e</sup> office of shepherds in his Church nowadayes, are in the same degree y<sup>e</sup> the Prophetes were, to wit, compared to Iesus Christ, inferior vnto him.

True it is y<sup>e</sup> they be preferred far before y<sup>e</sup> Prophetes, as in respect that the Gospell is a higher and excellenter matter than any was vnder the shadowes of the law. But yet forasmuch as Iesus Christ is y<sup>e</sup> head of all, he alone is to be acknowledged for Maister of the houthould, as the Apostle speaketh of him when he compareth him with Moses. Seeing it is so then, let vs marke that euery doctrine is as it were excommunicated, if it respect not Iesus Christ. In deed: there are many Prophetes and teachers: but yet must Iesus Christ ouerrule al; al y<sup>e</sup> is expounded must come from him; he must haue all preheminance; that the thing which the heavenly father hath spokē may be performed, namely, This is my welbeloued sonne, heare ye him. This is not spoken of any man, but only of the onely Son of God himselfe. And therefore let vs learne, that wherefoeuer there are Pastors or shepherdes, the brydle is not laid loose in their necks to set forth what they thinke good: but they bee tyed to this condition, that our Lord Iesus must alwaies be their Maister, and alonly be heard, so as nothing bee set forth but in his name, and that truly. Rightly saith Moses, ye shall obey the Prophet. As how? not y<sup>e</sup> they haue the authority to bind y<sup>e</sup> Church & to bring it into bondage: for (as S. Peter sheweth in his first Canonically Epistle,) it behoued y<sup>e</sup> Prophetes to speake by the spirit of our Lord Iesus Christ. And in the same respect also doth S. Paule say, that it was he which led & gouerned the people [in the wildernes.] Although Moses bare the coitenance, yet was it Iesus Christ that bare y<sup>e</sup> sway. Now I pray you, if a man take more authority vpon him than Moses had, & aduance himselfe about him: what should a man say to it? Moses and all the Prophetes are but vnderlings, to the end that Iesus Christ might speake: And seeing that the Sonne of God is come, is it reasō that men should put fourth their owne dreames and dotages, & that Iesus Christ should hold his peace? But the Popish Religion tendeth to none other end, than to put Iesus Christ to silence. The Pope boasteth himselfe to be his vicar. Howsoever the case stand, he will needs make lawes at his owne pleasure: he will needs make newe articles of faith: to be short, the Gospell is but an Apse, if we beleue the Pope: and the dotages y<sup>e</sup> he hath deuised, are the full perfection of all. For behold, they haue not bin ashamed to say, that the things which the Popes and their Councils haue decreed, and all their gewgawes, filth, and pelting trash, (which yet notwithstanding are but diuillish abominations to peruert the seruice of God) are the things which the Apostles could not beare away, when Iesus Christ said vnto the, I haue many things to say vnto you, but ye cannot cary them away as now. And what things be they? O they be the high Mysteries which the Pope deuised about the Gospell. Lyke as Mahomet saith y<sup>e</sup> his Alcoran is y<sup>e</sup> fountaine widome: so saith the Pope of his owne decrees: For they be the two hornes of Antichrist. Sith it is so, doe we not see that we cannot in any wise cleaue to the Pope but by renouncing Iesus Christ: Then let vs beate well in minde, that seeing it is Gods will to exalt his onely sonne after that fashion: surely he wil haue vs to looke vnto him, and that all doctrine be referred vnto him, and doe concerne him, so as wee must conclude that all such as will not speake in the Church, must utter nothing but y<sup>e</sup> which they haue learned in y<sup>e</sup> schoole of this great schoolemaister. According whereunto he hath giuen this commiſſion to his Apostles, Preache the things which ye haue learned of me. Againe, when he promised them the holy Ghost, he saith, he shall teach ye all the things which ye haue hard of me. He sendeth them not there to a new doctrine; but saith that they shall haue vnderstanding of the things which they knew not by reason of their rudenesse. That is y<sup>e</sup> thing which we haue to remember in that God attributeth the fountaine authoritie to his sonne by name, and will haue all Prophetes to be vnder that heade, as well whome he had rayfed vp afore, as those whom he hath set vp in these daies in his Church, so as this order must be kept, that he onely doe speake, and that all others which open their mouths, serue but to deale fourth the things purely which they shall haue received at his hand.

But by y<sup>e</sup> way, let vs also wey this speech where it is said, Ye shall hearken vnto him. For as God sheweth himselfe freeliared; not minding to forsake his Church, but to prouide the things which he knoweth to belong to the welfare thereof: so is it good reason that we on the other side should not despise the benefite that he offereth vs, and imparteth vnto vs. Heere of his own free goodnesse he bindeth himselfe to vs in saying: I will raise you vp a Prophet. And on the other part he exaeth exacteth a covenāt, in cōmanding vs to receiue ȳ benefit as it deserueth, & to make our profit of it. Therefore see that you obey. Wherefore let vs marke, that when God hath allured vs to him so gently and after so fatherly manner, that hee is ready to speake to vs as it were mouth to mouth: he will not haue vs to giue him deafe eare, or to runne gadding away, and to despise or mocke him. It is not for vs to thinke that God will beare such vnthankfulness and contempt of his word: 10 for the reuendge thereof will be horrible as shal be declared in due place. But in the meane while let vs goe willingly to our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is sent vnto vs in the name of God his father, & protesteth that he will reach vs his hand to leade vs to endlesse saluation. Therefore let vs heare him, not onely to say, it is true that he speaketh; but also to giue our heartes vnto him. For the hearing that he requireth, is that all wisdome be beaten downe, so as men be not puffed vp with vain selfeewing, as if they would say, I will doe what I list: but that wee hearken to our master which is giuen vs from heauen, and that all our affections be subdued to him, and that our lust be ouercropped when they would carie vs here and there; so as Iesus Christ may raigne howsoeuer the worlde goeth, and that both great and final may knowe how ȳ to them it is that God speaketh. For as touching the great ones, it is sayd vnto them in the seconde Psalme, Kisse the Sonneye kings and Princes of the earth: do homage to the sonne of God who he hath sent vnto you. Nowe if our Lorde will haue all highnesse to stoope after that fashion vnder the soueraign dominion of our Lord Iesus Christ: (accordingly also as S. Paul saith, that the preaching of the Gospell serueth to pul down all loftinesse that will needes be exalted:) what shall become of these wretched wormes, when they disdayne to receiue the Gospell obedi- 40 ently?

Let vs marke then that here is no exception, and that Gods intent is to bring all the world to his lure. For if it bee so that the Angels must worship Iesus Christ, and reuerence his Gospel: seeing then that wee be but creatures, not only mortall, but also flightfull, and such as haue nothing in them but corruption: what shoulde wee doe when our Lorde is so gracious to vs, as not only to raise vp men to speake to vs in his name, but also to sende vs his onely sonne, by whome the doctrine is so authorized, as it cannot be doubted of any more. Seeing we bee at ȳ point, what shoulde we doe but resort to our God, forsaking all things that may hinder our obedience towards him, yea and euen our owne wits, lusts, and affections eueric chone? Having laide all those things downe and hauing subdued them, let vs come to the thing that is tolde vs here: which is, that we must obey the Prophets. Also let vs not prouoke our god to anger by vsing such shameles hypocritie as to say, O, I wil obey God, as wee see a number of the Papistes doe which say, wtlhe, I am a good Catholike. And euen among vs (without going anie further) how manie are there to beefound which boast themselues like shamelesse harlottes, As for mee I woulde haue the gospell, and yet for al that, they can finde in their heartes to spit at it? But wee must not thinke that God accepteth such Protestations, vnlesse we desire vnfaignedly to be gouerned by his hand, For the doing whereof let vs vnderstand that there is but only one meane, which is to obey Gods word. For he separateth not his maiestie from ȳ declaration of his righte-ousnesse and iustice which he hath set forth vnto vs. The things that are conteyned in the law, 2. Cor. 3. 18, the Propheetes and the Gospell, are his luely i- 4. 4 mage. Will wee then obey our God and be subiect to him? Let vs go to that which he decla-reth, & there shew the obedience which we owe him. And sith he sheweth himselfe so gracious and freeharted towards vs as to call vs to our saluation: let vs also on our side answer him againe.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may with true repentance seeke to be reformed by his holy spirit, that we may follow his holy commandments, and also that it may please him to beare with vs & to bury all our offences, vntil hee haue clothed vs with his owne righteousness, and rid vs of all the imperfections wherewith we be now inuironed. And so let vs allsay, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

On Monday the ij. of December. 1555.

The Cix. Sermon which is the third vpon the eighteenth Chapter.

10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15 There shall not anie beefound among you, &c, I haue seene howe our Lorde, to make his worde preuile: among the Iewes, hath willed them to put away all supersti- 60 tions from among them. For in verie dede the truth of God cannot be cuppel with satans lies & corruptiōs: we must be either altogether the ones or altogether the others. Also I haue declared vnto you, that this order of Preaching Gods word, must be observed to the worlde ende. In doing whereof I haue reserued hitherto the declaring of the feuerall sorts of the superstitions that are set down here: First of all it is saide That the Iewes must not make their children to passe through ȳ fire. And ȳ may be taken two waies. For we know they were caried away w̄ such rage, ȳ they burnt their childre in sacrifice, & ȳ was a terrible thing. But ye may see how foolish ȳ deuotiō of men is, when they estrange the selues frō God. Needs must they be berett of al

all humane sense, and needs must the deuil possess them & driue the into such furie as is horrible to al men. Yet notwithstanding, this mischief befell among the Iewes, that they sacrificed their children to Moloch. But there was yet another fashion of making their children to goe through the fire, whereof Moses doeth rather speake in this place, according to the observing thereof among the heathen. They termed it a manner of purging or cleansing when they vsed such Ceremonies. As for example, there haue remained some remnant thereof in the Popedome, in their Bonfires on Midsummer night. They had such a kinde of witcherie as they did beare themselves in hande, that it was a kinde of purging to go take the aire of that holy fire (as they esteemed it) in going about it. But our Lord putteth such superstitions among the number of inchauntements. Likewise the Papistes haue their holy water: and what else is that in a kinde of cleansing inuented by themselves to set against the blood of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and against Baptisme, which is the true signe thereof? They let vs marke well that here our Lorde condemneth all manner of purgings or cleansing which inē deuiſe of their own brains, when they will be clenſed by any other meane than he hath ordeyned, which is, by the onely sacrifice of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and by receyuing the records and assurances of the same by the Sacramentes. True it is that the Sacramentes of themselves haue not this power in the to make men cleane: it is not the water of baptisme y washeth away our sins before God; but it is a figure that putteth vs in minde of the trueth and substance, which sealeth in vs the thing that was brought to passe by the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Thus much concerning this one point, that here our Lordes meaning is that men should not inuent meanes or fashions of purging themselves, but be contented with that which he hath ordeyned in his lawe.

Also he speaketh of such as haue regard of the flying of birdes, and obserue times. Although it be lawful for vs to marke the courses of the times according to the starres: yet is it a cursed superstition well worthe to be condemned, when we goe beyond the order of nature. The measuring of the yeare by the course of the Sunne is according to Gods rule. So likewise is the measuring of the monethes by the course of the moone, and the obseruing of the other things which God hath set in all the planets and starres. For it is not faide for nought that God hath ordeyned the Sunne and the Moone to do vs seruice: but yet therewithal they haue a kind of government ouer the day and the night: and thereof springeth the difference of times, as is said thereof. Then if men holde themselves within those bounds, no euil wil come of it: but if they range without them, and fall to inuening of other things beyonde the ordinarie course of nature: then it is diuſh superstition, like as that is which men call iudiciall Astrologie. For there is a great sort of fantasticall persons nowadays, which will take vpon them to tel mens fortunes by the disposition of the Starres. Such a one (say they) shall come to such an ende: or else if hee take his journey on such a day, such a thing shall beude him, because such a planet reigneth and hath his aspect to the taile of such a one. Again if a man be borne vnder such an aspect, then must he die after such a sort. When men inuent things after this fashion beyond Gods limitation, they be but diuſh deuiſes to corrupt the order of nature. Therefore let vs marke well that here Moses forbiddeth all such diuinations as are made vpon the time: not meaning but that we shoulde haue respect of winter and sommer, that we shoulde sowe and reape, that we shoulde dresse our vines according to the season of the Moones, and as we see that opportunitie will serue best: For otherwise it were an vter vndoing of all things, and an abolishing of the order that God hath set. But his meaning is that men shoulde not through their sonde and wicked desires, passe the boundes which God hath appointed. So then let vs keepe our selues to this playnnesse that God hath set downe.

Moreover, whereas he speaketh of Diuination by the flights of birdes: It was too common a vice among the heathen, as I haide afore. When they were to take anie thing in hand, they went gasing abroad in the aire, and they might not conclude vpon any thing, till they had seene some birde flying. And there were three or foure of them, or if they came frō the East or the North, theyooke them by & by for signes: and that was a cursed kinde of diuination. For why? we must holde it for a generall rule, that wee marre all when wee drawe Gods creatures to anie other vse than he hath ordeyned them vnto. Let vs marke (say I) after what maner God will haue his creatures to be vsed. For as soone as we turne from that point, such disguising of his workes is a cursed corruption of them. God hath not created the birdes to speake vnto vs by their flying from one place to another, nor to the end that we shoulde make account whether there be foure or fise of them, or take their flying out of this coast or that coast to be a token of euil luck. These are starke witcheries, forged by men out of their owne fonde curiositie, and blown into their eares by Satan. And therefore let vs not maruell though our Lord haue forbidden vs such things: for as soone as wee happen to bee imbrowed w such superstitious and follies, we must needes bee turned away from Gods trueth. Yea and there followeth iust punishment vpon such curious persons, so as they bee euer doubtful & in perplexitie.

For in as much as they resorte to deade creatures, or to such creatures as haue no reason nor vnderstanding; they must needes bee alwayes vncertaine. But if we feare our God; we shall be sure of all things. The feare of God is the best hold that wee can haue. I meane such a true and euill feare of GOD, as therewithall we take him for our father. For if we be agast at him, we shall stil be in neuer the lesse anguish & vnquietnes. But if wee submit our selues to God for loue ; surelie his protection shall auaille vs to rest vpon, so as we may defie Sathan and all that he practiseth against vs. On the contrarie part, when we feare not God, we shall be afraid both of the birdes and of the beasts, of the winde and of the rayne, of the Sun and of the Moone, of the earth and of the heauen; and to be shone, euen our owne shadowes (as men say) shall make vs afraide . And as for them which submit them selues to the Sunne and Moone, and make Idols of them as though they had dominion ouer vs: all such doe shoue in dede that they haue no feare of God in them , and therefore needes must they be caried away anewe. And that is the cause why the Prophete Ieremie expressly forbiddeth vs to be afraide of the signes of the heauen, at leastwise according to the inchauntes which the Infidels haue inuented , as is saide alreadie . For if wee be afraide of them after y maner, we beaue God of his dominion, and impart it to the Stars and other dead creatures. But God wil haue the Sunne & the Moone to giue vs light, and to doe vs seruice with their natural vse, (as the Sun to heate the earth, & the Moone and the Stars to giue their influences:) I say he will haue all these fo to keep their natures and proprieties; as that he himselfe alone be the gouernour notwithstanding . For when we imagine that the Sunne or the Moone haue such power ouer vs, that we cannot goe one step without they bring vs some misadventure or prosperitie by their aspectes towards vs : is not God himselfe so much debaced? Yes verily . If it be said that God worketh by his creatures : that is true; but yet will he not doe it after that fashion. We must haue an eye to the iucane which he hath helde, and we must not go beyond that. And therefore as many as rend Gods dominion in peeces and impart it fo to the luellesse creatures, are starke mad, and it is good reason that they should alwayes bee as men in a trance or afrighted, & not know where to become. Wherefore let vs learne to put our selues in Gods wise vnder the hand & guiding of our God: as we fall not to passing beyond the course of nature. That is the thing which we haue to remember here.

As touching the other kinds , in dede a man might distinguish the, as many haue laboured to doe: but it is enough for vs to vnderstande that here is mention made of Inchaunters, Sorcerers, Calkers, workers with Familiars, and of such as aske counsell as the dead. As concerning Inchaunters, they be not these jugglers that beate niens eyes with slight of hand, and make men beleue they doe the things which they doe not: but the diuell hath such dominion ouer the vnbeleuers, that although a thing be not done in very deed; yet the illusion is such , as makes men beleue they see that which they see not. And so it is a kinde of Inchaunement, that is to say of diuellish illusion, when a man shall bee made to thinke that one is transformed into a wolfe, or that he sees the shape of a thing that hath no substance or truth in dede. Now it is demaunded whether such things can be done or no. And why not? we haue an example in Pharaoes sorcerers, who made frogges to come vp as well: Moses did: not that the diuell hath any thing in his owne power: for we must not imagine that hee can fight against God to doe aught whether he will or no: we knowe he is vnder Gods hande, & can doe nothing without leaue or licence. Hee may well attempt much, but yet can he not stir one finger, as ye would say. And hereof we haue example euident enough in Iob: for we see y the duell is therin among the Angels, that is to say, that he is faine to coneyde an account before Gods seate, and to haue leaue of him, and to be admitted. As much is saide when God will haue Achab to be beguiled for his Idolatry. Ye see then howe the scripture sheweth that the diuell hath not a seuerall dominion by himselfe, as though he could attempt any thing against God. But yet by permission he may in dede trouble the aine, and also do other thinges, after which maner God is saide to send tempestes & hailes. And by whome doeth he it? By the wicked Angels. For he speaketh not there of the heauenly Angels, but of the duells by name, which execute Gods vengeance vpon men. And therefore let vs marke, that (as experience also sheweth) y duells may worke many such illusions by inchauntes. And truly such thinges are not done but in the dark. For so long as we be inlightened by GOD, we neede not feare that a man shall seeme a wolfe to vs, or that such tristraths shall get the vpper hand of vs. But if we be faithles, it is a iust reward for our quenching of y light y should haue shone into vs, & of our turning of our backs vnto God. And when we wil not be ruled by him, then discern we no more between white and black, but men seeme vnto vs to be wolues, and all things are out of order, & that iustly. Therefore whereas here is mention made of such as mishape things by their inchauntes: Let vs note y the law is not superfluous. For sith y case standeth so, it is to be concluded y such thinges may befall, as whereof we haue examples.

But yet for al that, it is abhominable before God: and so likewise are Soothsayers. It is a questiō whether it be possible for mā to foretel of things, for it is Gods office to foreknow things to come: and how then may it belong to the diuell? Sure it is (as saith y prophet Esay) that idols can foresee nothing. And as for Satan, hee must alwayes needs be the father of lies, & deceiue al such as aske counsell of him. Yet notwithstanding God doth nowe & then suffer satan to tel of things to come, and y is for the more hardening of such as will not obey the truth, (as we haue seene by example in the thirteenth chapter) & it hath been treated of partly already. Yet notwithstanding it is true also, that soothsayers do ly most comonly, and by that meanes our Lorde deludeth them y seeke counsell of satan after y fashion. And beside let vs not thinke it strange, though inchaunters, soothsayers, & such other like do now & then tel of things to come: for it is gods iust sufferance, to y intent they should be y deeper plunged in error. For as much as they would needs be willingly deceiued, he letteth the be so, y they may perish. Thus ye see why the law was made concerning

such as diuine of things to come. Also hee speaketh of Sorcerers: And this sort conteyneth manie things: For what a sinne is it, that men shoulde forsake God, and giue themselues ouer to Satan? Must they not needs fall into horrible confusion? Yes: For after Satan hath once possessed vs and stopped our eyes, and that God hath withdrewen his light from vs, so as we bee destitute of his holy spirite, and voyde of all reason: then follow infinite abuses without end or measure. And thereof come sorceries. Manie incredible things are reported of Sorcerers. And truly when wee heare them spoken of, we ought not onely to mislike of them, but also bee sorrowfull in our heartes, yea & the very hairens of our heades ought to stand vp thereat. But yet therewithall we must consider that they bee reuengements of God cast vpon such as haue forsaken him. And that the same may be a cause to holde vs in awe and feare, let vs learne not to tempt our God nor to play with him, sith wee see men become so brutish after they be once turned away from the right path. Truly if there were no moe but two or three examples hereof; yet might it well seeme straunge vnto vs. But we know that in all ages and in all Nations Sorcerie or witchcraft hath borne sway, yea and y more sway for y reiecting of Gods truth. In somuch y where men haue once fallen to withstanding y truth & haue disdaind to be taught by the pure worde of God; there haue followed the moe illusions of Sathan, yea and the more excessive, which haue also bene the more manifest and greuous. And whereof commeth this, but of the cause which Saint Paul sheweth vs in his epistle to the Thessalonians? namely that such as will not obey the truth, are vtterly peruerced by leasinges: and that thence forth the diuell must needs worke with the greater force, because God giueth him the bridle to carie men so away as they become ougly monsters. To be short, we must beare in minde, that whereas God speaketh to vs of inchauntements and sorceries, it is to holde vs shorte vnder the obedience of his worde, least wee shoulde fall into such a maze as the wretched Infidels are in, yea and proceede so farre as to wander quite away, when we haue once forsaken his worde. Therefore let vs abide in this simplicity of obeying him and of submitting our selues to his mouth.

Also here is mention made of workers with Familiars. As touching the which, needs must Satans illusions be horrible. But what? There haue bene of them in all ages, and wee see a notable example thereof in King Saule when he went to the Witch. He as king had erst forbidden all inchauntements and all kinde of damnable craftes, and hee had behaued himselfe vertuously in executing Gods lawe. And yet in the ende he became so wretched, that hee fell to running after a Witch. And what was y cause thereof, but that hee despised God? Whereuppon in the end he fell into despaire, and gaue himselfe ouer altogether to Satan: which thing hee shewed full well. For if ye looke aduisedly into the matter, ye shall finde that Satans illusions doe then get the vpper hand of men, when their wittes bee amased by reason of sorrowfullnesse that gnaweth them inwardly, & for that in steeede of receiuing some comfort of Gods word, they bee ouerwhelmed with such anguish, that they fall into vtter despayre. When doeth Sathan meete a man in some bodily shape, and tangle him in his snares? When a man is in some greefe of minde, or in some hatred against his neighbour, or when a woman spiteeth her husbande. Well then, although such affections beare sway, yet doeth not God by and by giue Sathan the bridle, to raigne ouer men, vntill they be come to such extremitie that they fall to chawing vpon the bit, and become so wilfull in their sorrowe, that they fall into despaire and will no more admit anie comforte, but refuse all remembrance of G O D, and woulde that his name were buried: for there is the gate open to Satan, and he entereth to worke his illusions, which a man is not able to withstande. Hereof we haue a faire warning in Saul. For hee had offended God, and therefore was to be bereft of his kingdome, because it was Gods pleasure it shoulde be so, and there was none other shifte for him but to humble himselfe. But he would not doe that. And when hee sawe there was no meane to appease Gods displeasure, but that for all his flattering of Samuell, yet hee auayled so little thereby, that when hee had rent the Prophets Cote, the Prophete saide vnto him, euen so will God rende the kingdome from thee: hee cryed our and sang himselfe out of his bounds, saying thus: What should I doe more? Seeing that God hath forsaken mee, I also on my side must forsake him. And what was the end hereof? He went after Witches. Whereas since hadde punished inchaunters before; now hee goeth to seeke them. And what came of it? Samuell was shewed him in a shape, that is to say in a shadowe and imagination, so as he thought the Prophete to haue bene raised vp againe by means of the Witch. Sith wee see it befell thus to such a king as God had chosen, and to whom hee had giuen the sacred authoritie, til the kingdome of Dauid were set vp: what shall wee lay to it? Let vs applie it to such instruction as I haue touched alreadie, to make vs liue in feare. For when men doe feele themselves after that sort in euil, and wilfully shrinke away from God: Satan must needs take possession of them, and then is there not any thing vnpossible vnto him. Wee shall heare incredible things reported of Witches, and wee must not maruell though God execute so exceeding great vengeance. For when men haue once turned their backs vpon him, and forsaken him euen of wilfull malice: they must needs become starke bestes.

Finally here is mention made of such as aske counsell of the dead. For it is not our Lords will that wee shoulde haue anie thing to doe with the dead. Therefore they that vse such coniurations, goe about to peruert the whole order of nature. For doe men what they can, yet can they not bring the liuing and the dead together: but the diuell steps in betwix them and pretendeth the persons of the dead, so as to outward seeming, the dead man himselfe appeareth (as was not long since rehearsed) whereas in verie deed it is the duell that worketh such illusions. And therefore let vs marke wel, that seeing our Lord hath forbidden vs to haue with the dead, we cannot be deceiued so long as we keepe within our bounds, and attempt no new thing which we see not to bee comprised within the order which he hath set. And thereby we see also, that al the things y<sup>e</sup> cuer haue bin said of y<sup>e</sup> comming vp againe of dead mens ghosts, haue bin but sleights of satan: & when men haue bin beguiled by th<sup>is</sup>, it was al one as if they had wilfully yeelded themselves slaues to satan. And yet was it held for great deuotion in Poperie. The cause why they made pilgrimages, and Masses to be sung, yea and their feast of all soules to be kept once a yeare, was by reason of a Reuelatiō or dreame of some deuout Monke that had an idle head. He heard y<sup>e</sup> crying of dead mens soules: and thereupon the Papiſtes concluded, that a solemne feast was to be kept for the dead, & such and such things were to be done for them. To be short, in that men haue inuented seruice for the dead in the Popedome, that was nothing els but meere witcherie, euen such as God disliketh in this text and vterly abhorreth. And all they y<sup>e</sup> haue their deuotion after y<sup>e</sup> fashion to pray for y<sup>e</sup> dead, are witches and forcerers: for they beleeue in Satans enchantments in despite of God.

And now let vs marke that these things here are not noted as small & tolerable faults: but it is said expressly, that they be abominable before God, & that the people of Chanaan were to be rooted out for such crimes & misdeeds. Wherby we see y<sup>e</sup> although other vices were to be pardoned, yet ought this to be punished and vterly rote out. Therefore if we will be taken for Gods people, let vs see that we vnderstand what this word Abomination betokeneth: namely y<sup>e</sup> we must be very ware of sorceries, enchantments, & such other like things. And indeed we see how such things haue cuer bin misliked, euen among y<sup>e</sup> heathen. How much soeuer witchcraft had raigned, yet was it a great thing for a man to haue asked, is this well done? For euery man would haue said, How so? It is a monster: it is a shamefull & cursed thing. After y<sup>e</sup> maner did the heathen speake thereof. For it was Gods will y<sup>e</sup> it should be so ingrauen in mens hearts, as it might be reproued euen without y<sup>e</sup> doctine of the lawe. True it is y<sup>e</sup> in Poperie all are witches in their idolatries: for in y<sup>e</sup> fiftenth of the first booke of Samuel, God cuppleth those two sins together: yea & I haue told you already, y<sup>e</sup> seruice of y<sup>e</sup> dead is a kind of witchcraft. Yet notwithstanding they alwaies abhorre y<sup>e</sup> terme, and vterly mislike thereof. And why? Because God hath suffered it to make th<sup>is</sup> y<sup>e</sup> more vnexcusable. So then let vs marke, y<sup>e</sup> it is not for vs to suffer either inchanters or witches among vs. And if these be forbidden; we must vnderstand therewithall, y<sup>e</sup> all other kinds of Wisardrie are deadly crimes before God. And if Iudges & Magistrates do their duties, it is certain y<sup>e</sup> they will no more beare with them than with murderers. It seemeth a small fault to turne about y<sup>e</sup> siue (as we terme it in this country): but it is more worthy to be punished, than y<sup>e</sup> fleeing of a man quick. For why? It is an overthrowing of Gods seruice, and a peruerting of y<sup>e</sup> order of nature. Were it not worthy of punishment and punishment againe, if the order of nature should bee confounded betweene men and brut beasts? Were there any reason in so doinge? And surely when men begin with such inchantments, it is certain y<sup>e</sup> they fall into a deeper and dreadfuller dungeon, than if they giue ouer their bodies to companie with the brut beasts. And yet we see the selfe same illusions to be wrought by satan vpon all witches & forcerers. And what is the original cause thereof, but that they bee turned away from Gods truth? Although there were no further euill in it than the attributing of Gods office vnto satan: yet were it a matter in no wise to be borne with. There is a thing concealed from me, & I would know it: yea, but God is not minded to discouer it vnto thee. That no matter, I will find it out by some meanes or other though he say nay to it, yea I will haue vnderstanding of it by diuells illusion. Is it not a making of warre against God, if this be suffered? So then let vs marke, that if we will be taken for Christians; Witchcraftes, inchantments, & such other like things must bee lesse borne with among vs, than Robberies and murders.

Allo it ought to make indeede the hayres to stand vpon our heads, when it is said y<sup>e</sup> the heathen which were neuer tryed up in the lawe, were razed out because of such things. For if God pardoned not y<sup>e</sup> infidels which neuer had any knowledge of his truth: what shal become of vs y<sup>e</sup> are so wel warned, to whome God crieth aloude, that hee will not suffer it, and that such abominations stinke before him, and that we must be cleaned from them, or else he vterly disclaimeth vs? I pray you shall we hope to be spared, when wee lie still asleepe, hauing such warning from heauen? God must first giue ouer his office. Against, whereas it is set downe here, first that God cannot away with such abominations, & secondly hath shewed in effect what punishment shall insue vpon it, by rooting out those that rebelled not wilfully against him, but had cuer bin hardened in their superstitions, and neuer knewe tasted of the good doctrine: seeing that such are rooted out for hauing to doe with satan: it standeth vs in hande to take the better heede, & to learne to withhold our selues in such wise from all illusions and wiles, that if there be either forcerer, witch, or wiarde among vs, they be luely repressed. If there be a poysoner or a theefe; euery man runnes vpon him. For it is known that they be the common enemies of mankind which do so peruert all lawe, and endeavour to abolish all policie and order of nature. But these are much worse. For God hath commaunded that his worde shoulde raigne among vs: and ought not euery one of vs to be diligent in preventing the mischeefe when the duell goeth about to overthrowe all and to bring all things to horrible confusion? Verily it is not to be doubted but that because manie superstitions are suffered, God also doeth giue Satan head, to ouerwhelme vs altogether. Wo worth them that haue plaide the blinde busfardes, and would see nothing, but haue suffered the mischeefe to settle among vs. For it must needs increafe more and more, vntill it come to the top, and that wee be so far and so deeply plunged in it, as it is vnpossible for vs to get out againe. That is y thing which wee haue to remember vpon this Text.

And further let vs marke well, that whereas Moses saith here, that the Lewes must not doe so; but that they must giue eare to Gods Prophetes: it is according to that which I haue expounded alreadie: namely that forasmuch as God hath giuen vs so good a remedie by being taught at his mouth, it is good reason that wee should hearken vnto him. If we had no witness of Gods will it were halfe an excuse for vs to alledge, yea but should wee knowe nothing? The Infidels haue meanes to finde out things by their illusions. True it is that they serue idols: but yet are they in better case than we bee. After this manner might we speake. But our Lorde telleth vs, that wee shall haue teaching enough, if we list to hearken to his worde. He addeth that he will raise vp Prophetes from among vs. As if hee should say vnto vs, Wretched men, seeing that I am so gracious to you as to condescende to your rudenesse and infirmitie, and to speake to you by the mouthes of men: are ye not too too vnthankfull and malicious in turning away for my doctrine, to satans trafficke, so as ye can not finde in your heartes to acquaint your selues with the manner of teaching which I haue chosen as fittest and conuenientest for you? Then is it not superfluous that God saith here, that hee will raise vp a Prophet from among vs which that be one of our brethre. Indee we coulde well finde in our heartes that the Angels shoulde come downe from heauen to speake vnto vs: but our desiring thereof, springeth of a foolish lust. For as shal be shewed more fully hereafter y people of Israel hauing founde by experiee what it was to heare Gods voice in his heauenly maiestie: were so afraide, that they besought God to speake to them by the mouth of Moses. Now then, if the choice were put vnto vs, it is certaine that wee should euer finde it best for vs that God should speak vnto vs by the mouthes of me. And it was knowe to be so: as we haue seene heretofore, and as God himselfe auoweth there againe, saying: likewise of the peoples request, that there shoulde bee a meane betwixt them and me, and that there should be a man to bring them worde from me in my name. And so here our Lord vpbraideth nien with their vnthankfulness, in that they wil not receiue his worde when it is brought them by the Prophetes and teachers whom he hath appointed & placed in his Church. If he had said, I wil send mine Angels; it had bin much. But we see how men abuse the heauenly reuelations also. God therefore appleteth himselfe so much more vnto vs, & commeth downe one step lower vnto vs, in y hee saith, I wil raise you vp a Prophet frō amōg your brethre. Such we see that God cometh so familiarly vnto vs, & speaketh with vs as it were mouth to mouth: were wee not worde than mad, if wee should say I would that God would send mee his Angels, I would hee would worke some miracles, I would hee would send mee some reuelations, or raise me vp the dead, & tel me some newes of the things that are done in the other world: Needs must it be y we be driuen by the diuell, when we haue so inordinate desires. For behold our God intendeth to teach vs familiarly. After what manner I will raise vp men. Now seeing we bee wont to be fellowlike one w another: what a prerogatiue doth he giue vs in applying himselfe fo vnto vs? We be lyers by nature, we be full of vanitie: & yet doth God appoint vs to be preachers of his word, and messagers of his vnfallible truth: he appointeth men as his instruments to speake in his name.

And fo let vs beare in minde, that when God graunteth vs the grace to haue his word faithfully expounded vnto vs, and to haue shepeheardes to teach vs: it is such a priuiledge as ought well to holde vs in such singleness of faith, that all curiositie be laide away among vs, and none of vs be led with fond desires, as they be which are euer seeking and neuer attaine to the knowledge of the truth. Let vs beware (I say) y we be not such questioners, and disputers of this and that: and let it suffice vs to heare our God speake, assuring our selues that he hath so ratified that order as we neede not to doubt: but that it is the verie way to be taught by him. For (as shall be declared more fully hereafter) let vs make that whereas our God hath ratified his lawe: yet to y ende it shoulde be helde for the more certaine, he hath also left vs the Prophetes, and that the Gospell hath yet had a more full approbation when it was published. For at that time (as is saide by the Prophet Haggues) God shooke, not onely the earth, but also the heauen. And therefore when we come to heare the doctrine that is drawn out of the lawe as out of the verie fountaine, and out of the Prophetes, and out of the Gospell which is the perfection of all our wisdom: when we take that touchstone to trie the things that are set afore vs, and are desirous to be taught of God: Let vs not doubt but we stand vpon a sure grounde, and shall haue whatsoever is needfull for our saluation, and therefore let vs leaue al vnprofitable speculations; to such as can not find in their heartes to bee taught in Gods schoole; and let it suffice vs that our Lord speaketh not to vs by halues, nor as it were to leaue vs hanging in the aire that we might know neuer the more what to doe: but that he giueth vs such a knowledge as we may be thoroughly assured, and safely rest vpon the saluation of our soules. Thus ye see howe we should put this text in vre, tarying till the rest may be laide fourth more fully.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgment of our sins, praying him to make vs feele thie better than we haue don, & y we may more & more be drawe w such repetiōe, y forsaking al our own lusts our whole desire may be to be governed by him, & to be held in such awe to him, as we may not either to the right hande or to the left, by withdrawing our selues from his obedience; but that seeing he hath once shewed vs the way of saluation, wee may neuer turne away from it for any practise of satan, howsoever he seekte to blind our eyes with his illusions & enchantments, nor bee suffered by our good God to fall into his snares, to be trapped by him, & in y end to be swallowed vp and drowned; but y we be so inlightened by y holy Ghost, as we may thunne and elchew all satans allurements, which tende but to our ruine. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth &c.

On Tewsdlay the iij. of December. 1555

16 According to all that thou desiredst of the Lord thy God at Horeb, in the day of the assemblie, when thou saidst, Let mee henceforth heare the voice of the Lord my God no more, nor see this great fire any more, least I die.

17 And the Lord said vnto me, they haue done well, to say so:

18 I will raise them vp a Prophet from among their brethren, like vnto thee: and I will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speake vnto them, all that I commaund him to say.

19 And it shall come to passe, that whosoever obeyeth not my words that hee shall speake in my name, I will call him to account for it.

20 But the Prophet that shall presume to speake words in my name, which I haue not commaunded him to speake, or which speaketh in the name of other gods: that Prophet shall die for it.

After that God hath declared that he wil govern his church by meanes of his word preached by men: he addeth that the same is done at y request of the people themselves. As who should say, th it they which will not obey the doctrine of the law, are dubble gualtie. For they despise the maiestie of God: and that is too outrageous a rebellion. And besides that, they be also thanklesse, in that God vseth them after their owne desire. For how was the Lawe published? Did not God giue signes of his presence as though he had come down from heauen, and spoken visible to the Iewes? But they perceiving that Gods glorie amased them and made them at their wites ende, desired to haue some Prophet to speake to them, and to bring his messages to them: which thing was graunted vnto them. Nowe if they cannot like of the condition that they themselves required: what excuse is there for them? Wee see then what the meaning of Moses was, in saying that G O D would raise vp Prophetes from time to time among the Iewes, yea euen according to their owne request, as who should say that nothing coulde be better for them. Sith it is so, it was for them to holde them to that order. For if they coulde not abide the thing that was graunted them at their owne request; what a thing were that: Should they not shewe themselves vterly vnttractable and vnruly?

Moreouer it behoueth vs to wey yet better the circumstances that are set downe heere, namely according to all that thou desiredst at Horeb.

God thinks it not ynough to say that it came of the Iewes themselves to desire a Prophet: but he doth also shew that he condescended in all points to their desire. For the Gentler that God sheweth himselfe towards vs, and the more he fashioneth himselfe to our nature: the more are we bounde vnto him: and if wee drawe not nigh vnto him, surely we bee dubble to blame. We heare how S. Paul saith; Brethre, be ye as I am; for I desire not but to be as you are. If a mā speake after y maner, shal he not be heard? If God the shal appeare in his glorie, and shal say: That hauing pittie of vs, he will for our sake stoope downe & debase himselfe; and we hereupon remaine hardened, & can at no hand bow our selues to obey him: must it not needs follow, that we are vterly void of all sense, and y the diuall hath so blinded vs, that there is no more natural vnderstanding in vs? Yes: For it must needs be a horrour to vs, not to followe our God when he sheweth vs such example. Who are we that our G O D shoulde as it were transforme himselfe (as wee see hee maketh himselfe both a father and a mother, and a nounce towards vs,) and that wee on our side shoulde holde skorne to bowe any whit vnto him? Thus yee see what we haue to marke vpon this saying, where Moses telleth vs that God gaue his people all that they had desired of him.

But therewithall we must also remember the fearefulnessie of the people. It is saide, Let vs not heare the voyce of our God any more, nor see this great fire any more, for feare lea? we die. I haue tolde you already howe it was Gods will to authorise his Lawe by doing the myracles that were scene at mount Horeb. And it was meete that the Lawe should be ratified after that fashion, to the intent men might knowe that Moses deuised it not of his owne heade, nor added any thing to it of his owne; but that God was the author thereof. When the trumpettes sounded in the aire, when the skie was on a fire, when the greare thunders were hearde, and when the order of nature was changed: the Iewes ought well to haue vnderstood, that God shewed himselfe to bee their gouernour, and that the Lawe came of him, and that he auowed it to be his. Yee see then that that was as a seale to make the Law of God to bee of authoritie. But there was yet another reason; which was that God meant to make the Iewes perceiue that the Lawe could do them no good, but onely make them at their wits ends, I meane the Lawe so farre forth as it sheweth vs the rule to liue well. For whereas God commandeth vs to do the things that hee alloweth; indeed it is the way of life and welfare. But what are wee? Wee haue a frowarde nature: and in Steele of obeying and of behauiour vs as becommeth vs; wee cease not to offend God. Nowe he pronounceth his curse vpon all such as transgresse his commandements. All of vs therefore are condemned by the Law, and there is no remedie but God must be our Iudge. And therefore it was meete that all the tokens which God gaue at y setting forth of his Lawe, should be terrible, and that the people should be made afraide with them. And in the same respect doth S. Paul say that we receiue not the spirite of fearefulnesse in the Gospell; & after the same manner also it is spoken of in the Epistle to the Hebrewes.

Hebr. 7. 25.

Also heere is a thirde reason alledged by Moses, which is, that God meant to shew howe it was good for the maintenance of the Church, that men should be the bringers of the doctrine of saluation. For surely, God knowing that the best way to gouerne vs, was by sending vs Prophets and teachers to speake vnto vs in his name: would that the people also should knowe the profite thereof. True it is, that whensoever God speaketh wee ought to bowe downe our neckes and yeelde him such reuerence, as none of vs refuse to obey him, though hee speake to vs by the mouthes of morrall men. Yet notwithstanding, his meaning is not that his worde should but onely haue such maiestie among vs as to make vs afraide: but that it should be swete and amiable to vs, and that wee should receiue it with a free heart, and take pleasure in it, and knowe that to rest vpon it is our soueraigne welfare. So then, Gods intent was to make men desirous to be taught by the Prophets and preachers whom he would sende vnto them. And that is the thing which Moses toucheth in this present place.

Now then, we must vnderstand first of al, that our Lorde will not come downe from heauen visible to speake vnto vs: for that were not for our benefite. In deede many men are of that minde that they would faine haue God to sende them his Angels: and they thinke it a matter of no great authoritie that a man which is but a fraile creature and but an earthen pot, should goe vp into the pulper: but yet doth God knowe it to bee for our behoofe. And therefore wee must vnderstand, that forasmuch as the Iewes found by experience that it was a dreadfull thing to them to heare God speake: it behoued God to alter that manner of declaring himselfe, and to send Moses vnto them. Therewithall let vs marke also that Gods authorising of the Lawe was not for the Iewes onely; but to the ende that wee also at this day should receiue the same with all humblenesse, and vnderstande that whosoever despiseth it, doth auenture himselfe against the maiestie of the liuing God, and maketh warre against him. That is the thing which wee haue to remember where mention is made of the terriblenesse of Gods voyce, and of the fire that filled the aire. And thereupon let vs make (as hath beene treated of already), that God promised a Prophet, not onely to the Iewes, but also to vs; and that it is a continuall order in his Church. So then, will wee be reckened for the children of God? Let vs suffer our selues to be gouerned by his word. Yea, and let vs not hold skorne to heare men that speake to vs in his name. But although they bee from among vs and of our owne companie, so as wee might alledge that we owe them no such dutie as in respect of their persons: yet notwithstanding seeing they be set in Gods steed, and by his will, let that suffice vs. And if we intend to honour God, and to haue him to reigne ouer vs: it behoueth vs to shew it in this case, by yeelding such obedience to his worde, as those whom he sendeth to vs be heard of vs. And hereof wee see what is saide by the Prophet Esay. For like as Moses had foretold y God would raise vp a Prophet: so Prophet Esay saith that at the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and in the time of his reigne, God would put his worde into his mouth, & into the mouth of his seed, and of his childr's children. This thing then ceased not when y Gospell was published throw y world: but rather it was newly confirmed, as I haue also shewed before. For who was this Prophet, but our Lord Iesus Christ? True it is that in that saying are comprehended all the Prophetes from Moses to Zacharie and his followes. But yet did GOD restore all the propheties in our Lorde Iesus Christ, which had beene as it were broken off for a time. For the Iewes had beene bereft of that benefite a long time together, and GOD had not appeared to them any more as hee had beene wont to doe before. And the reason was, to the ende they should with the earnest desire looke for the Messias that had beene promised them, and vnderstande that hee should bring them the full perfection of all wisdome. Our Lorde Iesus therefore is nowe come to performe all Prophetes, and to make such a restitution as men might perceiue that God had then laide forth the treasure most bountifully: which he had spokē of afore by Moses. And this was not done alonely for our Lord Iesus Christ himselfe, himselfe as S. Paul sheweth in the fourth to the Epheſians, where he ſaith that Ieſus Chriſt being gone vp into heauen, hath prouided for the ſtate of his Church to the end that it might be maintained by the foreſaide meane, ordeining ſome to be Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome ſhepherds, and ſome teachers . To be ſhort, it is the will of Ieſus Chriſt, to execute his office by the mouthes of thoſe whom he ordeineth to be miniſters among his faithfull. And herein is accompliſhed the foreſaided text of Eſay, that the ſeede of Ieſus Chriſt and his childrens children ſhall haue the worde in their mouth at this day. God ſaith not, I will ſende you my worde from heauen, or, I will cauſe it to bee preached vnto you by mine Angels: What ſaith he then? I will put my word into thy mouth In deede our Lord Ieſus is ſet there in higheſt degree: but yet there ſoll weeth; and into the mouth of thy ſeede, and of thy childrens children. Then let vs conclude, 20 that euen to the worlds ende, if we wil be members of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, and (to be ſhort) if we wil be taken for Chriſtians: wee muſt hearken to the worde which God putteth into mens mouthes, whenſoeuer it is preached vnto vs.

Eph. 4. 7. 11.

And in that reſpect is it ſaide, that the men which will not heare the Prophetes, ſhall die without reſeaſe . Here God thinks it not ynough to haue exhorted the Iewes to receiue his worde with mecke and lowly mindes: but alſo threateneth them, becauſe things are neuer ſo well ordered among men, but that there is ſome incountering and rebelling . Our Lord therefore is ſaine to ſee here ſome rigor . Which thing he doth, ſaying: Looke to your ſelues, for my ſending of Prophetes vnto you is to your benefite, and it were as much eaſe for mee to make my voice ring from heauen: but I know what is meeteſt for you, and you your ſelues haue found by experience that it is moſt for your behoofe. 30 Therefore ſee that ye heare my worde, and receiue it meckely, and ſubmit your ſelues to mee with all mielidneſſe. And herunto alſo doeth S.

James leade vs, ſaying that if wee wil bee edified by Gods word, we muſt be mecke . And as the earth that ſhal receiue ſeede to yeeld fruite, muſt firſt be well tilled: euen ſo the true preparation that God requireth of vs, is to humble our ſelues: for our Lorde Ieſus began at the ſame ende. Howbeit ſo far as much as there are ſome ſo blockiſh, that they cannot be moued by gentleneſſe: therefore is this threatening added, wherein our Lorde declareth that if wee deſpiſe his worde when it is brought vs ſo by men, ſuch a fault ſhall not ſcape vnpuniſhed: for I will require a reckoning thereof, ſaith hee, As if he ſhould ſay, Indeede it may well bee that ſuch contempt ſhall bee let alone, and not once thought vpon in the worlde: but yet ſhall I continue ſtill to warrant my worde, and yee muſt come to account before mee though yee bee ſcaped the handes of men. And this is to bee well marked . For when our Lorde will haue men to obey him, hee ſaith not ſingly, hee that will not obey my worde; but he that will not heare the Prophetes whom I ſende . For wee ſee many nowadayes which proteſt that they bee readie to ſubmit themſelues to God; but yet in the meane while they cannot finde in their heartes to yeelde him obedience in reſpect of his Lawe, or in reſpect of the holy ſcripture, or alſo in reſpect of the order of the Church . Yee ſhall ſee a ſort of ſkoffers which will neede be taken for good Catholikes, but as for ſermons, they let them alone, and they thinke them to bee ſuperfluous. And if they chauce to come to any, it is but in a ceremonie, and for faſhions ſake, as men terme it: ſo as if it were not for ſhame of men, they woulde neuer come at the Church. Yee ſhall neuer heare that they be deſirous to be taught: And what Chriſtianitie is that? Contrariwiſe we heare howe it is ſaide here, that God will haue vs to hearken to him . As howe? They can ſay wellynough that they bee willing to obey. But he addeth whoſoeuer heareth not the Prophetes whom I ſende . I haue ſhewed already that ſeeing God hath ſet this order in his Church: it ought to be helde as vniolable. Therefore whoſoeuer hee bee that maketh none account of Sermons, ne reſorteth to them; doeth ſhew him ſelfe to be a rebell againſt God. Who ſayes ſo? Euen he himſelfe. We neede not go to reaſoning thereupon. For our Lorde telleth vs that all ſuch as will not quietly ſubmit themſelues to the order which hee hath appointed, are rebelles againſt him . Yee ſee then that the thing which we haue to marke here in the firſt place, is that we muſt not ſeek to ſtarting holes to deceiue God withall; for if wee deſire that he ſhould reigne ouer vs, the men that haue the charge and office to ſpeake to vs in his name, muſt be receiued, & all of vs both great and ſmall muſt frame themſelues thereafter.

Moreouer let vs proceed to y<sup>e</sup> cōpariſon which y<sup>e</sup> Apoſtle maketh in the Epiſtle to y<sup>e</sup> Hebrewes. For he ſheweth (as truth is) that Moſes and his fellow Prophetes were but ſeruants. The maſter himſelfe is come: and that is the onely ſonne of GOD, who hath ſuperioritie ouer the whole Church, and he ſpeakes by his Goſpel which if a man deſpiſe he is not to be borne withal. He that tranſgreſſed the Lawe of Moſes, was ſtoned to death as we haue ſeene before . But nowe our Lorde Ieſus ſpeaketh more liuely in the Goſpell: and ſhall men make no account of hearing him? 40 Let vs marke then that all ſuch as ſtrive nowadayes againſt the doctrine of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, offend much more greuously, and ſhall be puniſhed more rigorouſly, becauſe they ſpite God openly, as though they proteſted in effect, that they paſſed not to prouoke him to bartell, and to deſace his maiſtie utterly . Therefore let vs beare in minde, that as oft as the Goſpell is preached vnto vs, it is all one as if the ſonne of God ſpoke to vs himſelfe: and therefore that hee ought much rather to bee hearde than Moſes . True it is that the Lawe is of God likewiſe, and it was giuen by the verie ſpirt of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt . But as nowe we ſtand vpon the meanes that God hath vſed in the Lawe and the Goſpell. For the more that our Lord hath vttered his glorie, the more ought wee to Hebr. 3. 5. 6. &amp; 10. 2. 29.

Gal. 3. 19.

be prouoked to submit our selues vnto him: and that is done in the Gospell . Wherefore let vs conclude, that as nowe we must haue a greater regard to hearken to the things that are brought vs and set forth vnto vs in the name of our God, than our forefathers had in the time of the law. And that is the thing which our Lorde Iesus ment by this saying, that Iohn Baptist excelled al the prophets, so as there was neuer any man that had so excellent an office as he had, and yet that the least of them which preach the Gospell nowadayes, excelleth Iohn Baptist. Iesus Christ speaketh not there of the holinesse of mens persons: but magnifieth the doctrine of saluation which is preached to vs at this day, in so much that Iohn Baptist was preferred before all the Prophetes, as in respect that he brought the tydings that the Redeemer was come.

But wee procede yet further; for wee shewe that our Lorde Iesus hath performed his mediatorship in reconcyling vs to God his father; that his death and passion are the euerglasting sacrifice whereby perfect righteousness is purchased to vs; that all our sinnes are washed away by his blood; that he continueth still our advocate and spokesman at this day, to procure vs fauour in Gods sight: that his obedience is imputed to vs for righteousness: and that God adopreth vs in him to make vs heires of his kingdom. All these things then are at this day declared vnto vs largely in the Gospell. And seeing that God is so gracious to vs in preferring vs before all the kings and Patriarks that liued vnder the olde testament: Wo worth vs if we cannot fare the better by such a prerogative. Seeing that the kings (I say) which were desirous to haue heard the things which wee heare, and to haue seene the things which wee see, obtained not their desire; and nowe GOD hauing giuen vs more than them, can winne nothing at our hands by so doing but skorne and despite: what will our reward be? Hee may well vpbraide vs as hee did the Iewes in olde time, saying: My people what haue I done to you? My vyneyard, I haue planted thee, I haue husbanded thee, and I haue taken great paines about thee: and thou bringest forth bitter grapes that are able to choke their master. If GOD blamed the vnthankfulness of his people after that fashion in olde time: howe much more may hee blame vs in these dayes? Are not wee worthie to receiue a hundred folde more damnation than they? Yes certainly. So then let vs marke well, that if God could not beare the despising of his Lawe: he will much lesse nowe suffer the skorning of his Gospell, or that men shoulde make none account of the order which hee hath set for them to resort to sermons, there to be taught by the mouthes of those that are in that degree and office. For as I haue declared, it is not ynough for vs to say, Gods worde is worthie to be hearde: but wee must also shewe the same by prooffe. Whensoeuer our Lorde speaketh, although it be by the meane of creatures: yet let vs receiue him quietly and obey him.

Let vs note further, that where as it is said hee will require an account of it: the meaning thereof is: that wee shall haue gained nothing by seaping the handes of men. For why? God will maintaine his owne honour. And this is notable in many respectes. For oftentimes yet shall see, that they which shoulde holde the sterne to make Gods worde to be receiued with reuerence, haue no regarde of it at all. The Princes, Magistrates, and Iudges of this worlde, doe punish things which they knowe to be to their owne damage: such offences are straitely looked to. And why? For if they shoulde goe unpunished, great disorder woulde insue thereof. This respect were not amisse, if they did not set the cart before the horse. For if God be offended, they let that slippe. And why? Because they thinke there grows no inconuenience of it. And in verie deede it is growen to a comon byword to say, Who is hee that accuserth mee? Whome haue I wronged? The partie that shall haue spited God openly, and therefore deserueth to be rooted out of the worlde, shall but wring his mouth or rather his groyne, and steppe forth with a shamelesse foreheade to aske who accuserth him. The verie Angels of heauen, yea and all other creatures crye out against him; and yet hee hath not offended. And why so? Because no bodie is against him heere among men: for it may chauce that no man will stand in Gods defence. Euerie man will willynough pleade for himselfe: but they be not so zealous as to set themselues against such as offend God. And yet in the meane whyle the Iudges are asleepe, and let all such manner of vngodly dealings slip. Yea there are some which are worse than Iewes and Sarafins, shewing no token of Christianitie, but openly despising both Sermons and vse of Sacramentes. Other some are not contented with such contempt, but they doe also make warre against God, and play the venemous beasts in spewing out their vilenesse to make all religion to be fet light by. These things are to be seene: and yet men winke at them. Therefore doeth God tell vs that hee will call them to account for it. Verie wel (saith hee): let men be as negligent as they will: yet wil not I forget these things, whatsoeuer come of it.

Hereby wee be warned to receiue Gods worde when it is set forth vnto vs, and to inure our selues to the hearing thereof, not for feare of men onely, but to eschew the wrath of the heauenly Iudge, seeing hee is minded to defende the authoritie of his worde. Were this well marked, men woulde be better disposed to suffer themselues to be taught by Gods worde than they be. Men woulde make more speede when they heare the beltol, than they doe. But what? We can scarce finde in our heertes to goe three stepes to a Sermon. And why? For feare least wee shoulde afterwarde be censured. If I go continually to sermons, men will point at me with their fingers, and I shall be called afterwarde into the Consistorie for it: and in the end I shall be censured. After y maner do these Sarafins speake

that dwell among vs here, who haue neither faith nor Christianitie in them more than dogs.

Their comming hither commonly is but to scrape the ground with their pantoples in mockage of God . But it were better for them to breake their neckes, than to come to vnhalowe Gods temple after that sort . Others come with gay Ceremonies and outward shewes: and in the meane while haue no affection at all. But let vs bethinke vs howe it is saide here, that our Lord wil not let men alone fo: for although no mā maintain his glorie, but presume malaperly to despise him: yet shall not their so doing boote them. For why? Here telleth vs that he will doe his office, & not bury things in forgetfulness. Then if men winke at the despising of Gods worde: God himselfe must in the end shewe, that he setteth such store by it, that hee will be auenged of them for it. Thus yee see what we haue to mark, in Gods vttering of such threatnings against all the despisers of his Law.

Besides this, it is his minde also to prouide y we be not deceived nor abused vnder pretence of this honourable title of Prophet. For as it becommeth vs to obey God by being taught by such men as he hath set in the office of teachers; so on the other side it is not for any man to take that charge vpon him, thereby to deceiue the plaine and ignorant people. God then hath prouided here for both twain. First he sheweth how there is no cause why the people should grudge seeing there was no want of teaching: and therefore that they which turne away after Witches, Soothsayers, and Inchanters, are leawd and vnthankfull. For why? God commeth to vs, and requireth no more but to teach vs familiarly. Therefore when men step aside after that manner to superstitions, and cannot be contented with Gods truth which is the perfection of all wisdom: must it not needes bee that they are possessed of Satan, and worse than starke madde or out of their wits? Yes truly. And therefore seeing our Lord protesteth that he hath so prouided for his Church, as men may well holde themselves to that which he hath done: Let euerie man be readie to heare and receiue the doctrine which he setteth forth.

Nowe he commeth to those that are appointed to be teachers. Let no man (saith he) Presume to speake in my name. For I must put my worde in the mouth of the Prophetes. Hee saith expressly, I will put my word in their mouthes: and the unto answereth the text of Esay which I cyted afore. Whereby it is shewed vs that God raiseth not Prophets vp to lay the bridle in their neckes, and to giue them full libertie to preach what they list: but hee raiseth them vp to be as his instrumentes to deliuer the things faithfully which they haue heard of him. Yee see then with what condition God hath raised vp prophetes in all ages, namely y he put his word in their mouthes. And whereas we preach now ad. yees it is not for that Christ hath giuen vp his office. For he is alwayes a teacher, he is the head of the Church, yea & the only head, not to be as an ydoll, but to rule vs with his doctrine. Therefore we must not presume to alledge any thing which we receiue not of the only sonne of God. Wherefore let vs marke well, that as it was Gods will heere to subdue folk to humble themselves, so as they should not refuse to bee taught by his worde when it is preached: so on the other side he hath prouided that such as haue commision to speake, must not bring their owne dotages and dreaues, nor deuise any newe doctrine, but onely fist learne of their master, and afterward deliuer the same faithfully to others, without adding any thing at all of their owne. For whatsoeuer men inuent of their owne heades, is vtter corruption: there needs no more Leauen to fower the whole lump of paste. And if a man take heade neuer so litle, he shall vtterly peruert Gods truth, and turne it into vntruth. And this serueth also to put al men in mind vpon what condition they should heare the Prophetes. For here are two extremities, as in dedee we neuer keepe any meane, vnlesse our Lorde drawe vs to it by force. If wee keepe it not, wee become heathenish, and his worde is skorned of those to whom hee sendeth vs: which contempt wee see in the most part of the worlde. Howe deale wee when wee come to framing of our selues? We vse a kinde of fond and beastly deuotion, without putting any difference betwene good and euill, and God will none of that. In dedee hee will haue our faith matched with humilitie, but not that we should be starke blockes without discretion. For cleane contrariwise hee willett vs to trie mens spiritites. Then must wee haue skill to examine things whether they be true or no, when men speake to vs in the name of God. The way therefore which wee must holde, is that when Gods name is alledged, wee must be touched with reuerence to hearken earnestly to the things that are spoken, and howsoeuer the world go, wee must bee prepared to receiue them. And when wee haue this modestie of yeelding our selues teachable by the things that are set forth in the name of God: Wee must also pray him to giue vs his holy spirite, that wee bee able to discern aright and not be beguded, nor imbrewed with lyes vnder false pretence of his name, but that although Satan transforme himselfe into an Angell of light, yet he may not so blind our eyes, but that wee may perceiue what is good. That is the way which wee must holde. And it is the thing whereto God intendeth to leade vs, saying that although he will haue vs to hearken to the Prophetes, and addeth this threat that the despising of them shall not abide vnpunished: yet notwithstanding hee meaneth not therefore to bereaue vs of all discretion, and to stop our eyes that we should not knowe what to followe. No: but he wil haue vs to examine mens doctrine, & to sift the Prophetes whether they teach aright or no. Wee must not be so doltish as to admit al that euer is tolde vs without exception: but (as I saide,) when men speake to vs in the name of God, we must serch whether it be truth or falsehood. And now must we lay forth the things particularly which are contended here.

First of all let vs marke, that God meant not to exempt the preachers of his worde from all examination, but will haue the faithfull to consider what is set foorth vnto them, according to the generall rule that is giuen vs thereof. It is saide that they which haue the gift of Prophesying must speake in order, and that the residue must iudge. It is not saide, whatsoeuer they say, let it bee receiued; but, let men iudge and discern of it. Lo howe the holy Ghost sheweth vs howe to measure our faith, and after what manner we may keepe a meane betwene the contempt and rebellion which we see in the heathenist fort, and the beastly blockishnes of such as say, as for mee, I am so well minded that I receiue whatsoeuer is tolde me. Yea, and thou art a good goose for thy labour. But God will haue such children as be of discretion & knowledge. And although our faith be not a worldly science: Yet doth it require skill to be taught vs at Gods hande as the Prophet saith. One point then is this, that when we preach Gods word, it is not for vs to say that men shoulde not iudge of our doctrine, or that we shoulde not yeelde any account thereof. For that were in vaine to be spoken, and not onely needeleffe, but also vnreasonable, that a false Prophet shoulde be punished and no examination had of him, nor any means to try him and to take knowledge of his case. We see here in fewe words then, that God hath giuen his Church leaue to inquire of mens doctrines, and that hee woulde haue his prophetes accountable, so as they shoulde bee bounde to yeelde a reason of their doctrine, and to shewe that it is of God. And this condition was neuer refused, neither of the Prophetes nor of the Apostles, who at all times when they were accused of false doctrine, were readie to shewe openly that they were sent of God, and that they had behaued themselves faithfully. And euē so must we do at this day. And thereby will all tyranny be shut out. If a man woulde nowadayes examine the doctrine of the Pope: he saith it is not lawfull. And why so? Because I sit in the Apostolike see, saith he. And ment not God to prouide for his Church? He saith expressly that the Prophet which is sent of him, shall haue his worde in his mouth. To whom doeth God speake? He speaketh generally of all that cuer were sent by him. For I haue proued alreadie that this text is not meant of Moses alone, and of them that liued vnder the olde Testament: but that it extendeth euen vnto vs also, and comprehends in it the whole reigne of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Seeing then that God hath not excepted either Pope or any man else: it is to be concluded, that their doctrine may, yea and ought to be examined. And so wee see that the Papiests in these dayes haue but a buckler of snowe, in that they beare men in hande that they be exempted from yeelding any account. For our Lord hath declared the cleane contrarie as we see.

And we must marke further, that it is not ynough to haue the title of a Prophet, but the effect must be had also. And wherein doth that consist? In this, that they which speake in Gods name, haue his worde in their mouth. He saith not, they must but onely haue his spirit, howbeit that hee addeth that also. And euen in this text of Esay hee saith, My spirit shall rest vpon him. But doth that serue to exclude the worde? No: they bee things linked together with vnseparable bonde. It is saide, my spirit shall bee vpon thee, and my worde shall bee in thy mouth. But what saith the Pope to aduance himselfe? I haue Gods spirit. And where is his worde? O: let that come behinde for I haue a greater and farre excellenter reuelation of mine owne. As for Gods worde, it is but an Apie: the greates mysteries haue bene reuealed to mee by the holy Ghost. See how this diuell will needes set vp himselfe above all order of the Church, and about all direction that God hath set downe to rule his Church by, in that hee will haue the Gospell to be preached nowadayes in his name, and his worde to bee in the mouthes of those whom hee hath set in that office. Is it not a hellish kinde of diuorcement, to breake the things so vsunder, which God hath ioyned together? It is all one as if a man woulde clyue the skies, and plucke downe one halfe of the starres, and more too. For neither Sunne, nor Moone, nor any other creatures are comparable to Gods Maiestie, which vttereth it selfe both by his spirit and by his word.

Nowe he hath cupped them two together, and it is not lawfull to take the one of them and to leaue the other. And therefore let vs learne that as many as will nowadayes bee taken for teachers in the Church, must haue the charge to bring Gods worde with them, and also must haue his spirit: that is to saye, they must haue the gift of expounding the holy scripture, they must haue such vnderstanding as belongeth thereto, and they must bee faithfull so as they put forth nothing of their owne, but onely follow the trade that is appointed them, so as they may cuer protest in the ende, that God hath spoken vnto vs. And that if any man doe steppe vp against them, they may say with Moses, Who am I? As for mee, I haue brought you the message that was committed to mee of God: nowe goe your wayes and strue with him for it. All they then that will bee knowne to bee teachers of the Christian Church, must haue the saide modestie: and then may wee boldly (as shall be shewed more at large to morrowe) despise all such as presume to speake in Gods name, & in the meane while go beyond their bounds, and will not submit themselves to the condition which God will haue to be common to all his Prophetes.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgment of our faultes, praying him to make vs feeble them better than wee haue done, and to leade vs to such amendment, as we may be willing to be ouermastred of him, and perceiue that all our affections are frowarde, and that all the sense and wit which wee haue in vs, is vtter confusion. Wherefore let vs be willing to submit our selues wholwholy to his will, desiring him to cause the same to be so vttered vnto vs, as we may not walke wanderingly and at a lauerture, but be throughly certified and assured by his speaking vnto vs, that we shall be guided to him, because the doctrine of his Gospell is the right way to saluation, wherein we cannot goe astray: and y<sup>e</sup> we may be confirmed more and more in the same, vntil we haue no more need to be taught by y<sup>e</sup> means of men, but are come to the singing of eternall prayles vnto him in the company of the Angels. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the iiii. of December. 1555.

The Cxi. Sermon which is the fifth vpon the eighteenth Chapter.

21 And if thou say in thy heart, howe shall wee knowe the woorde which the Lord hath not spoken vnto him:

22 When a Prophet speaketh in the name of the Lorde, and the thing that hee hath spoken commeth not to passe: that is a woorde which the Lorde hath not spoken vnto him, but the Prophet hath spoken it presumptuously; and therefore be not afraide of him.

Yesterday was shewed why Moses setteth downe here a Lawe for false Prophets, to the ende they should be punished for seeking to corrupt Gods truth, 30 and for abusing their office.

For he had declared before, that as many as wil be knowne to be of Gods house and sheepefolde, must submit themselves to the common order, which is to heare the Prophets whom hee hath sent. But yet must there be a meane in so doing. For were the bridle layd in their neckes which speake, and were there an absolute authoritie giuen them: what a thing were that? Great confusion would insue thereof. Therefore like 40 as our Lorde bindeth the whole body of his Church to the hearing of his word and doctrine when it is preached: so wil he haue those to be ruled, which haue the charge to teach others, to the intent they presume not to put forth any noy doctrine of their deusing, but faithfully deliuer the things that are commanded them of God, and which they haue receiued as it were from his owne mouth. That was the meaning of Moses, to the end that such as haue prehemence should not abuse it, and that the people also should al the way yeeld themselves teachable, and so there might be no tyranny in Gods Church, but good order in all poynts. For if it might be Lawfull for euery man to refuse the doctrine, as who would say, I am wise ynough, I know how to behaue my selfe, I am able to teach others: and againe, I can reade it at home in mine owne house: if such libertie were giuen; all would goe to hauoocke. And on the 60 contrarie parte, if the partie that hath commision to beare abroad the word of God, should say, I am not to yeeld account to any body, it is not for any man to examine my doctrine whether it be good and true or otherwise: it were a tyrannous Lordynesse, whereby God should be excluded from hauing any prehemenc or audience among vs. So then, we must keepe the meane that is shewed here by Moses, which is, that al such as disobey the common order must be punished and cut off from Gods people: and therewithall, that they which are in office to speake, doe take good heed that it is not for the to set forth their owne dreames and dotages, but to behaue themselves as Gods messengers, faithfully and without adding any thing of their owne.

Now let vs come to that which Moses addeth here: If thou say in thy heart, how shall I know when a Prophesie is not of God? It is sayd, If the Prophet tel thee a thing which commeth not to passe, assure thy selfe he is not sent, but he doth it altogether of pride: and therefore he shall be punishable. Here wee haue to marke, that in this place God hath not set downe al the tokens whereby the false Prophets may be discerned from the true. And for prooffe hereof, the office of Prophets was not onely to tell of things to come, but also to giue tolke good instruction, to exhort them to amendment of lyfe, and to edify them in faith. As for example, wee see that the Prophets did not onely say such a thing shall befall: but also confirmed the covenant whereby God had adopted the people of Israel, and tolde them of the coming of the redeemer on whom the hope of all Gods children was grounded. Moreouer they comforted the sorrowfull, by preaching the promises of Gods fauour vnto them; therewithall they threatened the people when they became disordered; they discouered their faultes, and transgressions; they cyted sinners to Gods iudgement to make them humble themselves. All these things belonged to the office of the Prophet. So then there were other tokens besides that which Moses setteth downe here, whereby to discern false Prophets aright. And in very deed if we will know whether a Prophet ferueth God 60

faithfully or no; wee must compare the things that are cleane contrary. We knowe that the true touchstone whereby to try the goodnesse of any doctrine, is the referring of all things vnto faith, (as Saint Paul saith thereof,) and to the gloryfying of God, that men be taught to put their whole trust in the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ, to mislyke of themselves and to be ashamed of their own doings, & to frame themselves to a true amendment. This is it a true tryall of good doctrine, when we see y<sup>e</sup> preacher inducours that God may be purely honored and serued, and that the prayse of all power, wisdom, and righteousnesse be yeilded vnto him. That doctrine is alwayes good, and that is an infallible rule. When men are condemned in themselves; when they be shewed that there is nothing but corruption in their nature, and that they be accursed of God; when they be so beaten downe as they wote not what to doe, but onely to craue forgiuence lyke wretched sinners: that is a sure doctrine. For faith leadeth vs thereunto, and compasseth it as a certeine rule. Again, when sinnes are condemned by Gods lawe, and men are shewed what true repentance is, to wit, a mislyking of their sinnes & a desiring to be gouerned by Gods spirit, and to bee altogether chaunged: that is a sure doctrine. Moreover, when men are tolde that they must flee to God for refuge, and call vpon him onely, and not be vnthankfull to him for his helping and succoring of them: the doctrine also is of the holy scripture, and men cannot faile in embracing of it. If it be sayd that the very vse of the Sacraments is to leade vs to our Lord Iesus Christ, and to assure vs the better of the benefices which he bringeth vs that we may be partakers of them, and that God also putteth vs in possession of the: that also is a trueth which ought not to be reuoked nor doubted of. And hereof there is no disputing to be made: for men knowe that in those pointes is nothing but good doctrine. On the contrarie part, a man may iudge that a doctrine is false, when it darkeneth or diminisheth the glorie of God. If the thing that belongeth to God bee plucked away from him to be bestowed vpon creatures: it is a practise of Satans to turne vs out of the right way. Again, if one doe puffe vp men with pride and ouerweening; and make them beleeue that they be able folke, & so rock them asleepe in their sinnes: or if he reach them to serue God with peling toyes, and to forget his Lawe, and in the meane while to giue mens inuentions their full scope: or if the Sacraments be vsed but as light or fond pastimes: a man may easily see that such doctrine is leawd and cursed, and that it was forged in Satans shop.

Furthermore, whereas nowadayes men are inquiring whereon to stay in y<sup>e</sup> myddest of these troubles and diuerfities of opinions that are in the world: it is no very hard thing to doe, so they be attentiu and discrete in discerning after the maner that our Lord hath shewed vs. For all the whole doctrine of poperie redeth to none other end, but to aduance men, and to puffe them vp in such wise with their owne deserts, as they may be halfe at defiance with God, as though they could accuse him. Again, it sendeth men too and fro. In stead of putting their trust in the onely freegoodnesse of God, and in stead of embracing our Lorde Iesus Christ: men are taught other infinite meanes to saue themselves. Moreover, in stead of hauing the only Lawe of God for their onely rule in all things, and for their onely holynesse and perfection: men haue set out their owne trifling traditions. Thus may ye easily iudge of these things. And what is to be sayd of their Sacraments? It is euident that they be meere witcheries in the Popedome, so as Iesus Christ is driuen a great way off by them. and men make idols of the visible signes & liuellesse creatures, and Satan hath so inbrued the wretched world with his illusions, that men are become starke beastes. Now then, if a man intend to make trial of a good doctrine; he shall find the things which I spake of afore, to be sure & infallible markes thereof. But in this text our Lord meant onely to tel vs that he will discouer the false prophet, at leastwise one way or other, whereof hee setteth downe one kinde here.

I haue told you already that there are diuers other meanes to discern the true doctrine from the false; but none of those come in question here. Our Lorde hath tolde vs, No no, yee shall not be beguled so long as ye inducours to follow the trueth that proceedeth from me. If a deceiver haue any countenance among you; I will make his leawdnes to be layd open: I will giue you some such token thereof, as ye may alwayes keepe your selues vndefiled, so ye haue the mind and zeale to sticke to my pure worde. Thus much concerning this text, which importeth a kinde of promise, as if our Lord should tell his people that he would discouer the hypocricie of deceiuers, and not suffer them to reigne cuer. but that in the end they shall in some respect or other come to confusion. Now we see the principall drift of Moses words.

But here a question might be moued. For heretofore in the thirteenth Chapter, it was said that if a Prophet tolde a thing to come, and the same came to passe in deede: yet was he not to be beleeued, because God would suffer such things to try his people withall. And here it is sayd that a false Prophet shall be knowne and iudged by the not falling out of the things which he prophesieth. Now here seemeth to be some contrarietie. But the solution is easie, in marking that though a false prophet be knowne by his lying: yet it followeth not that he should be takē and deemed a true Prophet because it falleth out that he speaketh some trueth. Truly if he spake the trueth at all times and in all cases, then were he a true Prophet. But hee may well say the trueth in some respect, (which may be done for some iust punishment from God, as is declared in this same text:) and yet he shall be but a deceiver neuertheless. As how? Put the case that folke seeke to bee soothed in their vices, and are loth to be waked and quickened vp as they should be, and had rather to be borne with: (for such hath the fashion of y<sup>e</sup> world cuer bin:)

Well,

Well, God seeing such leawdnesse, suffereth deceivers to plaster them, and to beare the folke in hand (which are so desirous to sleepe in their wilfulnesse) that their faultes are nothing. Here ye see how those men are beguiled, because of the desire which they had before. And God addeth the same thing moreouer, namely that those false Prophetes and deceivers shall haue wherewith to confirme their doctrine, that they which were intruded wth lyes before, may become more wilful. For they will thinke then, y<sup>t</sup> there is no more daunger in beleeuing them. And what is the cause hereof? Euen Gods iust vengeance. Forasmuch as men shut their eyes at the light, & wil needs dwell in darknesse: God giueth Satan the bridle. By means whereof it cometh to passe, y<sup>t</sup> the false prophets doe sometimes speake y<sup>t</sup> truth; as is to be seene euen at this day. For what a number are there to be found, which seek after witchcraft to abolish y<sup>e</sup> authoritie of Gods word: Ye shall see on y<sup>e</sup> one side a sorte of curious heads, & on y<sup>e</sup> other side another sorte y<sup>e</sup> haue no feare of God: & yet y<sup>e</sup> mark which they all throte at, is to put away Gods word, y<sup>t</sup> they might not be ruled by it. And in y<sup>e</sup> meane while they wil needs haue some Wizard to tel them of their good fortunes: & our Lord suffereth the to be drawn by such meanes into al y<sup>e</sup> deceites of Satan, notwithstanding y<sup>e</sup> some truth bee mingled therewithall. Now the, though a false Prophet speake y<sup>e</sup> truth, yet is not that a warrant that his doctrine is true: our Lord will not haue men to credit him a whit y<sup>e</sup> more for y<sup>e</sup> we see for what cause he putteth the truth of scriptures into the mouthes of deceivers. And so, notwithstanding the things that are set downe here, yet doth it abide true still, y<sup>t</sup> when our Lord is minded to haue pitie vpon his people, and not to suffer them to be abused by false doctrine: he giueth them some token wherby to find the deceiver: and whereas erst he was in estimation, and might haue amazed the wretched world: God bewrayeth his leawdnesse, & so he is found to be a lyer. Thus wee see now the whole meaning of Moses, concerning the things that are coneyned in this text.

These things were performed among the people of olde time, and the examples thereof which we see, ought to shewe vs the vse of them and what fruit we should gather of this warning which Moses giueth. When the Prophetes meant to proue that they were sent of God: they would say, I am no prophet if this come not to passe. See how Ieremie submitteth himselfe to the Law, saying: I tell ye, ye shall be led captiue to Babylon, and thinke not your selues to be discharged by y<sup>e</sup> which hath hapned vnto you already: (for the citie had bin taken eue before, and therefore they thought themselves discharged by being become tributaries after that fashion to the king of Babylon: and so they thought themselves escaped.) No no, ye must indure yet more. This chastisement, which hath not amended you at all, seemeth ouer hard and too sharpe a rod vnto you. But forasmuch as god hath called you, and you continue still vnammended: he is seene to deale now more roughly with you: the temple must be beaten downe, the citie must be razed, you your selues must be no more a people, there must be no more sacrifice, all things must be so cleane taken away, as ye may seeme to be vtterly perished. To this extremitie must yee come, because ye haue abused Gods patience euen vnto this houre. And if it come not so to passe, take me no more for a Prophet, but let me be stoned to death, for I am well worthe of it. But I am well assured of that which I haue foretold you, for God himselfe hath told it me. We see how the Prophetes submitted themselves to the Lawe, & also did let themselves against the false prophets, as we see by the example of Ieremie, when Ananias came and sayd, No, the vessels of the Temple shall be brought againe from Babylon, and the kingdome of Dauid shall be set vp againe in our time, and we shall flourish more than euer we did: and thereupon did break the chain of Ieremie, who walked about the streetes as it were with a whit about his necke. For it behoued him to represent the captiuitie, because men were so blind in their sinnes, that they tooke all Gods threatenings to be but a iest, and thereupon did make euen a mocke of them. And therefore it behoued the Prophet to goe about the citie after that fashion with a whit about his neck, as who should say, Euen thus shall you be miserably haled into captiuitie, yee make a goodly shewe, nowe yee triumph, ye thinke it a goodly thing to befor your selues in your pleasures and delighes; but this yoke that I weare, serueth to shewe that you your selues shall be put vnder the yoke of subiectiō. Behold, Ananias breaks me this yoke asunder, saying: no, we shall liue still at libertie, and be deliuered from that bondage. It is a wonder. Yea, but how did these wretched and wicked folkes afterward behaue themselves? How did God ratify the thing that Ananias had spoken? I wis it might be so, (sayd Ieremie:) but yet must I goe further and tell him his condemnation, seeing the Lord hath commaunded mee so to doe. So then, wee see that Ieremie ratified the thing which hee had vttered in the name of God, and that manet of dealing was common among all the Prophetes. Wherefore let vs marke that our Lorders intent here was to declare that he wil not suffer vs to be beguiled, so wee be willing to receiue his worde, and to be taught thereby, and be diligent in discerning betwene truth and falshood. Although there be neuer so many false Prophetes, and that Satan striue continually to turne vs away from goodness: yet shall we euer haue some discretion, that is to say, God wil giue vs some token wherby to keepe ourselues from being deceiued. It is a promise that can neuer faile vs. And therefore let vs holde vs thereto, and seeke to obey our God. His reaching out of his hand is enough for vs: and though there be neuer so many meanes to deceiue vs; yet will he not suffer them to preuaile, according to that that is promised here. Wherefore let vs looke to ourselues. Whereas we haue no Prophetes nowadayes for to retell vs things to come, or y<sup>e</sup> haue reuelations afore: it is of swarte, pestilence, and famine: it is because we

haue greater perfection of doctrine, than the people had in old time. We therefore must hold our selues contented with the Gospell, for it is y<sup>e</sup> fulnes of light. But yet therewithall let vs also haue an eye to the things which are written, and let vs examine the doctrines that are preached vnto vs: and if we finde them to be drawn out of the Lawe, the Prophetes, and the Gospel: let vs be assured of them that they are certain. And if we vse that touchstone continually to try things by: surely God will preferue vs fro all Satans falshoods. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon that text.

Now it is sayd expressly that such a Prophet shall dye the death. And that is a cause also why our Lord sayth, that he wil giue the sayd marke. For it were foule treacherie to iudge & condemne a Prophet without knowing why or wherefore. If a guiltlesse person should bee condemned vnder colour of some euill deed not vttered: it were too great wrong & vniustice to be done to a mortall man. But if a bringer of Gods word be condemned, euen as though he had done amisse in his office, without being found faultie: that toucheth not the creature only, neither is the wrong done to a mortall man alone: but it is an outrage done vnto God also, & that is high treason to his person. Ye see then that the cause why Moses saith here, that God will discouer the false Prophetes, is to the end they should bee iudged, and also to warne folk that they should not couet to be foaded with vaine hope, as I haue tolde you that y<sup>e</sup> maner of the world is continually to doe. The Prophetes had hard hold from time to time with the most part of y<sup>e</sup> Iewes, because they brought nothing but threatnings. These Prophetes (quoth y<sup>e</sup> Iewes) doe trouble vs, & are too importunate vpon vs, they speak of nothing but of Gods wrath & cursings: & should they not as well tell vs of gladfome and pleasant things? Those are the things which the world requireth. Yea but in so doinge we prouoke Gods wrath. We would haue him to be our friend: & wee on our side are enemies to him. If we came to God wth true repentance & sought him as our father: wee should haue no tydings but of peace & prosperitie to delight in. But what? We suffer not God to be fauorable to vs, nor to shew his loue towards vs. For we make war against him as I said afore. Therefore let vs learn y<sup>e</sup> god wil turn y<sup>e</sup> sayings of y<sup>e</sup> false Prophetes to the contrary, so as when they promise folke welfare and peace, mischief shall insue, whereby they shall be found to haue vsed vaine flatterie. Wherefore let vs not desire to be rocked asleepe with mens deceitfull speeches. For what shall it boote vs to be acquit by them y<sup>e</sup> haue no power at all: when we shall be condemned before God? And let vs not tarry till God to our cost doe bewray y<sup>e</sup> lawdnesse of the false Prophetes, & so we be caught in some calamitie. But let vs prevent Gods wrath as soon as we see our sins, & let vs be touched with them. And if there be any y<sup>e</sup> flatter vs, let vs not giue care to them to bee seduced to our confusion.

Now our Lord setteth downe here two sortes of false Prophetes. The one is of th<sup>e</sup> that speak false- ly in his name: and the other, is of them that speake in the name of strange Gods. Then is it not enough for a Prophet to shroud himselfe vnder y<sup>e</sup> name of the liuing God: but he must also execute his office faithfully. Neither is it enough for him to be put in commission by God, except he execute it with a pure and vpright conscience. For we see y<sup>e</sup> deceiuers haue sometimes objected thus against Gods seruants: what? Am not I a Prophet as well as thou? Yes verily, thou art in office: but see how thou dischargest thy selfe of it. Let vs marke then, y<sup>e</sup> all the matter lyeth not in speaking in Gods name: and y<sup>e</sup> doth experience well shewe vs. For the Pope at this day will speake in Gods name; and yet we shall finde nothing but starke abominations in his doctrine: there is nothing there but a gulfe of hell to swallowe vp niens soules into destruction. And therefore let vs make well, that when a Prophet speaks in Gods name, we must examin whether it be truly or no. For if Gods name bee abused, y<sup>e</sup> expressing thereof is double wickednesse. And y<sup>e</sup> is y<sup>e</sup> cause why Moses declareth here, first that if a Prophet bring vs word in y<sup>e</sup> name of y<sup>e</sup> liuing god, we must consider whether the word be committed vnto him or no. That is one point which wee haue to marke here. And because the wretched worlde hath bin beguiled vnder false pretence of Gods name: let vs learne to make narrower search, and not suffer our selues to be seduced at auncature, and so to be led by the noses lyke brute beasts. True it is that Gods name ought to haue such reuerence among vs, y<sup>e</sup> we should all hubble our selues to hearkē to y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> are set foorth or spokē of him. But yet must we hold y<sup>e</sup> meane, as was declared yesterday: which is, y<sup>e</sup> we must not receiue all things indifferently y<sup>e</sup> are spoken; but y<sup>e</sup> our faith must be the tryer of them. For our Lorde hath not left vs his holy Scripture for naught. It is y<sup>e</sup> true touchstone whereby we must try all doctrines, y<sup>e</sup> we may iudge of them aright.

The second sort of false Prophetes which Moses hath set downe heere, is of those which speake in the name of Idols, which abuse except in at length euen among the Iewes. For after that things were once growen out of kinde; All tooke vpon them to be Soothsayers and Prophetes: but that was altogether in the name of Idols, according to the cities wherein they dwelt. Wherefoer there was a Temple: there was a Iewe that said, we haue the foreknowledge of things to come, euen by byrth: and yet in the meane while they folde their Propheties, as these deceiuers doe which trot vp and down the world, and say they can tell folkes their fortunes. And it was a common practise of all the Iewes, as appeareth euen by the prophane histories, when they were once become idolaters. Surely it is a great vnshamefastnesse of them, to make such boast of the gift of Prophecie. And why so? They haue that gift because they be the linage of Abraham, because they be circumcised, because they bee Gods owne people and heritage, and because they haue the Lawe, and looke for their promised redeemer: and yet for all this, they giue ouer themselues to such abominations, that they will needes borrowe the meanes of idolaters. And we see in maner the lyke altogether nowadayes in the Popédome : For the Priestes and Monkes boast themselues to haue the office of praying for y<sup>e</sup> whole Church and yet in y<sup>e</sup> mean while they will sing a Masse of our Lady , and a Masse of such a Saint & such a Saut: and so idols are intermingled with the maiestie of the liuing God. For although y<sup>e</sup> Saints as in respect of theselues, be no idols : yet doe they make them so, which doe so abuse their names. And therefore let vs learne to keepe our selues from both these sortes of fallhoodes, by hearing no man speake but in the name of God. For wee know there is nothing but v<sup>n</sup>vanitie in mans minde , and that we shall be deceiued if we giue our selues to any mortall creature: and therefore onely God is to be heard . Againe , when Gods name is pretended, let vs try whether it be in truth or no : we haue his word, we cannot lye: and hee will giue vs the vnderstanding thereof, if we be lowly and meeke. And if we submir our selues wholly vnto him ; it is certeine that he will neuer suffer vs to be deceiued. Well may we be tēpted, as we haue seene in the thirteenth Chapter, y<sup>e</sup> God wil try vs whether we loue him or no. But if there be such an vpright minde to be found in vs y<sup>e</sup> we wil seeke to serue him purely , & to obey him: surely hee will deliuer vs fro all deceit. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to remember vpon this text .

Now in the end it is sayd , that when a false prophet is found out by tryall, then it shall appeare that he spake vpon presumption, and therefore be not afraid of him. Here are two sayings which import two good and profitable warninges. The one is, y<sup>e</sup> he which aduanceth himselfe beyond measure, speaketh proudly. For is there a more duellish pride, than for a mortall man to thrust forth him self as if he were an instrument of Gods spirit, as though he were an Angel fro heauen, whē in verry deed he is but a lyer , and hath nothing but winde in him : If I take vpon me another mans name, & say, such a one hath giuen me commission: is it not too leawd a fallhood? The partie to whom I haue done y<sup>e</sup> wrong may come and say, Ah thou lyar, how durst thou abuse my name? Such dealing (I say) would be counted great iniurie. Then if a mortall man auance himselfe in the name of God, (as for example, if I step vp into y<sup>e</sup> pulpit & require audiēce in y<sup>e</sup> name of God, & yet notwithstanding doe fal to seducing of y<sup>e</sup> people: y<sup>e</sup> is a pride which passeth al others, as I said afore. For it is not simple lying, it is not single deceit, it is not a simple falsifying of this or y<sup>e</sup>: but a turning of Gods trueth into vnruth, & a wrapping of God in our fallhoods, & an vnhallowing of his holy & sacred name. Therefore let vs mark wel, how it is not for naught y<sup>e</sup> Moses sayth y<sup>e</sup> the false Prophets shall be condemned, yea euen because of their proud & presumptuous dealing, and for their vntollerable rashnes. And hereby as many as haue y<sup>e</sup> charge to beare abroad Gods word are warned to walke warily & circumspectly , & to take heed y<sup>e</sup> in their preaching of y<sup>e</sup> word, they intermingle nothing of their owne: but y<sup>e</sup> they haue a speciaall care, y<sup>e</sup> all their sayings be referred to the true & pure expounding of y<sup>e</sup> which is written, & that they doe nothing else but apply Gods word to y<sup>e</sup> vse of the people: As for exāple, I stand not here to make newe Lawes , nor to forge new articles of faith. What then? Our Lord hath vttered his whole will vnto vs in the holy scripture, & it is not lawfull to ad any thing there to. What am I to do theſewherefore do we preach yea & that continually day by day? To the ende y<sup>e</sup> the scripture should be well vnderstood, that it should be applied to our vse , & that men might know how to benefite theselues thereby; as how to imbrace Gods promises , how to order their lyfe aright, & how to liue quietly euery man after his owne calling. The shewing of these things is to minister force to y<sup>e</sup> holy scripture: y<sup>e</sup> we may vnderstand it and fare the better by it , and be edified therewith. Such (say I) as haue y<sup>e</sup> charge of preaching Gods word, ought to haue a special regard of these things.

Howbeit forasmuch as no creature no not euen y<sup>e</sup> Angels of heauen, are able to execute so high & noble a cōmission: we must pray God to guide & gouern vs, bearing in minde therewithall (as S. Paul sayth) y<sup>e</sup> no man could say y<sup>e</sup> Iesus is y<sup>e</sup> Lord, ( y<sup>e</sup> is to say , no man can giue glory to y<sup>e</sup> sonne of God, ) but by the holy Ghost: & to be short, y<sup>e</sup> he which is aduanced highest to teach others, ought to abace himselfe slowely, for feare least any thing may scape him which hee hath not receiued of God, so as he may safely protest y<sup>e</sup> he hath not aimed at any other end , than the worshipping & seruing of God , euen according to y<sup>e</sup> doctrine which hee hath deliuered heretofore in his holy scripture . Againe the people are to be exhorted to take heed y<sup>e</sup> Gods glory be not defaced. For y<sup>e</sup> Papistes think it an humilitie allowable before God, & a very good & commendable deuotion, to be so brutish as to receiue all y<sup>e</sup> euer is put vnto the. O say they, we must submit our selues to our mother holy Church , yea but in so doing they be guiltie of y<sup>e</sup> defacing of God himselfe & of y<sup>e</sup> bereauing & robbing of him of his authority. For why? The Pope & his cleargie are so full of stinking pride & statelynesse , that they make Lawes & subdue mens consciences to the at their pleasure. Ye see theſe that is an vsurping of tyrannie ouer Gods people. They excommunicate all good doctrine, to set forth their owne corruptions, & so they defile the pure simplicitie of Gods word . Well, they be suffered in these things, yea & maintained & defended in their malignitounesse. And in the meane while God is halfe shaken off , & no account is made of him: for men doe ouermaister him. For as for all them that hearken to false prophets after that fashion, doe they not set vp their diuellish pride to the intent to thrust downe God thereby?

Let vs mark well then, y<sup>e</sup> whereas Moses speaketh here of y<sup>e</sup> pride or ourheadinesse of y<sup>e</sup> deceiuers: it is not onely to make them to be mistyked, punished, and cut off from among y<sup>e</sup> people: but also to warne vs that if a man presume to mingle any of his inuentions with Gods word or goe about to alter any part of the order y<sup>e</sup> he hath set: wee must be no fauorers of such rashnesse. For in so doing we dimittie Gods honor, and become guiltie of the vtter defacing of him of him as much as in vs Iyeth. And therefore all of vs in general, as well the preacher as the hearer, are warned to consider what the plaine reuerence is which God requireth at our hand. It consisteth not in: ceremonies, nor in vaine babblings as men say: but in this, that he onely doe speake and all mens mouthes be kept shut. Not y there should be no Shepherdes, to preach the doctrine vnto vs: but that all should be fetched from him, and he be held as chiefe Maister. The way then to beare down all pride and rashnesse, is that the holy scripture haue his full force, so as men vnderstand that that is the standard vnder which we must gather our selues, and that God will be obeyed by mens submitting of themselves therunto. For without that, there will be nothing but pride and ouertate lyneffe among vs. And so ye see that the deuotion of the Papistes is diuellish, because they haue left God to submit themselves to creatures, and suffer theselves to be led lyke beastes without any discretion.

And in the same respect it is sayd in the end, Thou shalt not be afraid of such a Prophet. He saith not, thou shalt not feare such a prophet: but word for worde it is, thou shalt not be afraid of such a Prophet. For here God meant to arme his faithfull ones with constancie, that they might not be put out of countenance by any faire disguise-ment: but that when they are once instructed in the faith, they should defy all such as vaunt themselves and come to make gay shewes vnder the name of God, as I haue tolde you afore, that sometimes men are too fearefull. In deed there are that mocke at God and haue no feeling of conscience at all, but set as light by the truth as they doe by blasings: & euen at this day, there are that make as much account of the Gospell, as of y abuses of the Popedom: Iesus Christ & the Pope are all one to them. What a sorte of mockers are to be seene, which will needes be counted good Christians because they hold skorne of the popish superstitions; and yet in the meane while are despisers of God and his word: Surely they be but dogges and hogs, without any feare of God or ciuill honestie. And yet is the worlde too full of such corruption and infection. Againe there are other some very tenderharted. Nor y it is not a vertue to stand in some feare: but because they be our carefull: when they be vexed with any scruple of conscience, they wote not which way to turne them. For if an error be put vnto them, they dare not receive it for feare: a gaine on the other side, if the truth be put vnto them, their agreeing to it (if they doe agree) is not with any certaintie. Ye shall see a number y are euer wauering, lyke reedes shaken with the winde. The Masse is holy with them, & the Gospell is holy with them also, and yet they be certaine of none of both. Now our Lord will not haue vs to stand in any such feare. He will haue vs to be sure of his worde; & when his truth is thoroughly pioued vnto vs, he will haue vs to defy the world; & all the diuels of hell; In somuch y it the very Angels of heauen should fer themselves against the Gospell, wee see how S. Paul sayth that we must hold them for accursed and excommunicate. God then will haue his worde honored so highly, that whē we once knowe it & are sure of it, we must not be any more afraid.

It standeth vs in hand to put this lesson in vre nowadayes, because the Popes thundring were able to make all the world to quake, if men were not armed aforehand against him, with y things that are tolde vs here by Moses. The Pope names himself Christs vicar, y head of the Church, S. Peters successor, & the maintainer of the Apostolike sea, so as there is no Church of God but y Church of Rome: nor any Sheppard, or Prelate, if the Pope be not head of all: nor any kingdome of Iesus Christ, other wise than in y Popes person, who hath the keyes of the kingdome of heauen. Woulde not the alledging of all these things make the stoutest of all to shrinke, if we were not armed against them? Yes: but when all these things are pretended, we must consider whether the reporter of the doo discharge his dutie faithfully. For if he speake in Gods name, and yet be found to be a false harlot; hee is y more to blame for abusing so honorable a title. And the more he was esteemed before, y lesse is he to be regarded afterward. Let him thunder his belly full; yet shall all his excommunications passe into smoke, and all his threatninges shall be but mere vanitie. The effect therefore of y things which our Lord ment to say in this text, is y being well assured of Gods word, and hauing examined all doctrine, (howbeit with humilitie,) & hauing vscd y fore sayd touchstone of the holy scripture: we may wel desye all the y cloke themselves vnder y gay mantle of Gods name, abusing their commission & executing tyranny in stead of seruing the Church of God. I say we may defy all y rable of them, & cry out against y Pope & his abhominable wickednesse, & not be afraid of any thing y he can doe vnto vs. For so long as we haue God on our side, we may boldly hold skorne of the whole Popedom, how proude & stately fouer they be there. That is the thing in effect which we haue to marke, y wee be not fearefull where God will haue vs to be stout. But y when we haue his doctrine & truth, we must so profit our selues by the, that what fouer y diuell euer practise, he may not turne vs aside from y way of saluation: but we must hold on our course, according to this saying which we shall see hereafter, This is the way, walke ye therein: and also according to the Prophet Esayes account who saith, This is the rest. Therefore let vs continue therein, and holde on to the marke whereunto God calleth vs: and then can we not doe amisse.

Now let vs kneele downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to inake vs feeble them better thā we haue done, & to strengthen vs more and more by his word, y his kingdome may be aduanced among vs, & we in deuour so to ferue & honor him, as we may be vnder his protection, and he mainteine vs in such wise, that we knowing him to be our good father & Sauour, may take the more courage to giue our selues wholly to him, all our lyfe long. And so let vs all say. Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

When the Lord thy God shal haue rooted out the nations, whose lande the Lorde thy God giueth thee, so as thou arte owner of them and dwellest in their Cities and houses:

2 Then shalt thou set thee out three Cities in the midst of the lande which the Lorde thy God wil giue thee to possesse.

3 Thou shalt prepare a way to them, and diuide the bounds of the land (which the Lorde thy God will giue thee to inherite) into three parts, that whosoever hath committed manslaughter may flee thither.

4 They shal serue for the mansleauer to flee thither, that he may liue: namely if he haue stricken his neighbour ignorantly, and haue not hated him aforesometimes.

5 [As for example] if a man goe with his neighbour to the wood to fel timber, and he casteth backe his hande with the axe in hewing the wood, and the head flieeth off of the helue, and hitteth his neighbour that he dieth: he shall flee to one of those Cities and liue:

6 To the intent that the next of his kinne followe not the mansleauer, while his heart is chafed, and ouertake him if the way be ouerlong, and put him to death though he bee guiltlesse of the other mans death, forasmuch as he hated him not before.

7 Therefore commaund I thee to appoint out three Cities.

Although <sup>40</sup> ſ Lawe that is set down here, serued for ſ commo weale of Israel: yet may we also fare the better for it at this day. For therby god meant to declare what punishment ought to be executed vpon such as commit wilfull murder thorow malice and of set purpose. Also it sheweth that we must not take ſ for a crime, which a man dooth not willingly, but by chauncemedly as they terme it. True it is that such things are not so casual but that God governeth them fro aboute, as is shewed in another place, where it is sayd, that if a man be lopping of a tree, and a bough thereof doe hitte one vpon the head that he dye, it is God that had determined it so. And the holy scripture will not haue vs to attribute the falling out of things to fortune, but that wee should knowe that God directeth all things, to the intent that although we see not his hande, yet wee should vnderstand by faith, that he setteth such store by our lyfe, that he hath numbered all the hayres of our heades, as is sayd in another text. Moreover, to come againe to the matter, it is shewed here that all faultes are willing, that is to say, that men doe them wittingly and of set purpose. But let vs goe forward with the text that is set downe here. God commaundeth the people of Israel to choose out three Cities, vntill he haue enlarged their boundes further. For it behoued them to haue fixe in al as wee shall see in the next lecture, and as is declared in the twentieth chapter of Iosua. Neuerthlesse, vntill such time as the people were in full and peaceable possession of the land, Gods will was that they should appoint out but three Cities of refuge, for all such to flee vnto as had committed any manslaughter by chaunce meddely (as they call it.) Notwithstanding, least any man should abuse that priuledge, hee addeth what maner of mansleauers shoulde haue protection thereby. Such (sayth he) as haue killed their neighbours vnwittingly; and thereof hee allegeth an example. If a man goe to sell timber, and the Axe slippeth out of his hand, and hitteth one so as hee dye, forasmuch as the man purposed not to doe any such deede, hee may flee and haue himselfe in one of those Cities. Now wee must marke that it was not enough for a man to protest that he had done it but by mischance: but it behoued him to haue it well proued, so as the partie that was to inioy the priuledge should bee worthe of it, and the matter well knowne and the truth of all things tryed out how the case stood by iust examination; and specially that there had bin no hatred betwene the parties aforesayd, so as it might appeare that there was none other cause of the committing of the slaughter, than Gods only determination, without any act done on mans behalfe otherwise than of minde to doe well. And the mansleaver that was able to prooue this, should flee to one of those Cities, and there tary till the death of the high Priest: and then hee was to returne home againe, because in that while the heartburning of the deadmans kinfemen might bee appeased.

And hereby God sheweth, first how greatly he would haue vs to abhorre the shedding of mans blood: and it is a point which we ought to marke well. For thereby we perceiue what loue he beareth vs, in that our life is so deare vnto him, and that he is so charic of it. If God made no more account of vs thā he doth of the brute beastes, hee would not fet so much store by our lynes. Therefore must wee needes conclude that he loueth vs with a fatherly loue, seeing our life is so pretious to him. Besides this, euery of vs ought to take knowledge hereby of his own duetie: for wee cannot doe any outrage or violence to our neighbor, but we must offend God deadly. And not without cause. For in so doing wee deface his image, as is sayd in the ninth of Genesis. Forasmuch as God hath printed his image in men; whoseuer hurteth his neighbor maliciously, spiteth God to the vttermost of his power. And so are wee warned to absteyne from all euill dooing, and to liue in such sorte among men as no man bee hurt by vs. And in dedde wee see that the manslaughters which are committed euen of necessitie, cary with them neuerthelesse a kinde of defiling. As for example, when enemies are slayne in battel, although the thing bee lawfull, yet doth God say that it is a defiling of mens handes. Not that hee imputeth it for a crime, but to the intent that the man which is constrained to fight against his enemies, should bee sorry to see the order of nature so troubled by reason of mens finnes, that whereas wee ought to bee as brethren, and to acknowledge our owne fleshe in euery man that is made after our owne lykenesse: yet notwithstanding wee be driuen to destroy them after that fashion. Yee see then how that euen in the time of warre, he y putteth on armour against his enemies ought to doe it, being sorie in his heart, and to bethinke himselfe that such outrage happeneth not but through the great leawdnesse of men. The meaning of all this, is that wee should liue quietly, and euery man induour to maintein peace and concord, and haue our handes tyed for committing of any euill deedes.

And whereas God declareth how greatly manslaughter displeaseth him: let vs marke that (as saith Saint Iohn) before him all maner of hatred is accounted for murder. Then ought we to eschewe all wrong dealing that may be done against men, for if wee haue any rancor or enmitie towards them in our hartes, wee be guld-

tie of murder already afore GOD. Marke that for one point. But here our Lorde acquitteth the parue that shall haue slayne a man vnwittingly. Behold (saith hee,) there shall no iudgement of death passe vpon such a man: for there is none offence in him. Seeing that the heauenly Iudge hath pronounced such sentence: what creature dareth reply against it? Yee see then that such a one is guiltlesse, and so declared to bee before God. Yet notwithstanding hee must bee faine to forsake his owne house and inheritance, and go dwell in a strange place, and suffer many incommodities. And why doth God vexe him so, sith he findeth him guiltlesse? Hee sheweth vs that although the partie be faultlesse, yet is it done for examples sake, to the ende wee shoulde not admit any murderers among vs, but punish them as grieuously as may bee, and vterly abhorre them. That is the cause why the partie that offendeth vnwittingly, shall neuerthelesse abide some punishment, and become as a man that is put to his penance, to the intent that hee may humble himselfe and acknowledge in this wise: Truly, I meant not to doe any harme; and this miscarriage is befallne mee vnwittingly: whereby God warneth mee that I haue great neede to pray him to rale both my handes and my feete. And moreover forasmuch as mans bloude hath bin shed by me; although there were none euill meant on my part: yet must I bee sorie for it, and beate in minde that our Lorde maketh such account of mans life: as he will haue it alwayes to bee had in estimation of vs. Let that serue for one point, concerning this lawe.

And nowe for the second poynt, Our Lord sheweth vs that wee ought to prevent all dangers and occasions, in respect whereof hee addeth that the mansleaver shall flee to one of those Cities. And why? For yeare leas any of the deadmans kinfemen being moued to wrath, shoulde reuenge his neighbors death, and so shoulde the mischiefe bee dubbled. Now then, to auoyd this inconuenience, There must be Townes appointed for refuge. And hereby wee see that (as I sayd afore) the Lorde will not haue vs to tary till the mischiefe light vpon vs, but hee will haue vs to take the remedie of it. It might so fall out that some kinfeman of the deadmans being angrie with the matter would say, hee hath slayne my cousin, or my brother, and thereupon come running vpon the innocent partie in his rage, and kill him; whereby the land should haue bin defiled with blood. Therefore Gods will is that the partie which hath committed manslaughter, should get him out of the sight of those that might bee stirred vp to anger against him. But it is certaine that hee coulde not excuse himselfe, which shoulde so beare malice to the guiltlesse partie. For what coulde he require of him? Lyeth it in man to ouerrule the things that come to passe by Gods providence, which is hidden to vs? Are wee able to withstande it? Needs then must it be too spitefull hartburning and malice, that should so moue a man to wrath

against the partie that neither intended nor thought any euil . But although this commeth of infimitie and of sinne, yet hath our Lorde voulded to remedie that inconuenience. And so wee see that the lawes serue not to bring men to perfection, I meane the politike lawes that are made for ciuill gouernement . They serue not to stablish perfect holnesse among vs, but to remedie the vices whereunto we be inclined . Because wee be not thoroughly clesed, our Lorde is faine to set barres about vs, to the intent that if our hearts incline to naughtinesse, our handes may be withelde from performing the naughtie desires that we haue conceiued in our mindes . Gods lawe is giuen vs to rule our hearts and minds by. For our Lorde not only commaundeth vs to absteyne from all euill, but also will haue our soules ruled altogether by his wil, I meane the moral lawe or ten commaundementes which I haue expounded heretofore . But as touching the earthly policie or outward gouernement, we must vnderstand that Gods intent was to bring his people to honestie, that there might be good order among them; and yet for all that, he restrained their affections that they might not come to effect. As for example, in this place, if we were required to shew what were euery mans dutie and what he ought to do: it might be said that when a man hath giuen a blowe with his hand vnwittingly, so as the same be sufficiently verified: the next friend or kinsman must not steppe to reuenge it: for in so doing he offendeth God in two sorts: first in setting vpon the partie that hath not done him any harme by his will, and secondly in fathering that thing vpon a mortall man which God had ordeined by his owne secret pronouidence: After that maner would God speake, if hee ment to bring vs to a perfect doctrine. But when he maketh a positieue lawe, he thinks it ynough to say that men should haue an eye to the inconueniencies that may insue, and preuent them, and not tarie till the harme be done, but eschew it aforehand, and shut the doore against all occasions. In like case is it whē a manslaughter is committed: the offender must get him out of the way, and saue himselfe in one of y<sup>e</sup> Cities of refuge: that the next kinsmā which is desirous of reuenge, haue none occasion to do it; but that all further stryking may be layed aside, and the pursuer preace not into the citie, to followe the rage of his choler: but that the offender may be pardoned, so as if there bee any fault in him, the same may be borne withal, and furthermore that the partie which is so dealt with may liue in safetie, according as it is sayd in another place that those cities of refuge should belong to the Levites, thereby to shew that God had appointed them there, to bee as protectors of such as came thither for succor: so as if any body came to pursue the quarrel against the offender, the Priests and the Levites should set themselves against him, and take vpon them y<sup>e</sup> protection of the partie. Thus much concerning that text.

Now to bee shorthe wee haue to gather hereof, that God meant not to make such Fraunchises as are deuised in the Popedome. For (to their seeming) God is well honored, when a murtherer, a theefe, or a robber taketh sanctuary in a Church, so as the officer of Iustice may not bee bolde to lay handes vpon him . In deede it is an auncient superstition; but yet it ceaseth not for all that, to be euill . For God neuer meant to hallowe his temple after that fashion . True it is that such as were in daunger, were wont to flee for succor to his Temple: but yet it booted not the parties that were guiltie . It serued for such as being wrongfully pursued by their enemies, thought that the reuerence of God might appease the wrath of their pursuers: and therefore they fled into the Temple . But yet for all that the offenders escaped not vnpunished, neither was it any let that they receiued not a punishment according to their desertes . As for example, Salomon sware that although Adonias had caught holde of the hornes of the altar of the Temple; yet should hee be taken thence and put to death . Salomon was not so blind, that the reuerence of the Temple coulde make him to let the partie scape vnpunished that had deserued it . For why? It is a mocking and scorning of God, when his Iustice is displaced or disappointed vnder pretence of his name and Maiestie. Beholde, God commaundeth vs to punish murthers and robberies: and yet we will make him a bolsterer of them, in so much that if a cutthroate get him into a Church, hee must bee preferred there from the hand of Iustice for the honor of God: and so God should be contrarie to himselfe. Nowe then the bringing vp of such Fraunchises in the Popedome was a fondnesse, I meane before such time as the tyrannie thereof confounded things in such sorte as wee see they be now: and it was done of wicked superstition . True it is that in old time there were certaine kinds of priuiledges: but they were but for the poorer sort that were vexed out of measure . As for example, if a bondman were cruelly handled by his maister; hee might flee for refuge to some image . To say the trueth, the Emperors made themselves idols in so dooing: but yet the end whereunto it was done was not euill. For thereby their case came to examination. If a maister would needs cut his bondseruants throate, or misuse him without cause: he was compelled to sell him away, and to take mony for him: and so the innocent was deliuered from death . But the sanctuaries that were deuised among Christians, was a peruerting of all ciuill order and equitie among men . And in very deede our Lorde helde skorne of that fond kinde of deuotion, and shewed by the effect that hee mislyked it . For in olde time, they that tooke Sanctuary in Churches were those that neuer came at Sermons . Wee see howe complaintes haue bin made thereof by the auncient doctores that haue written thirteene hundred yeeres ago . For thus doe they say, As for them that take sanctuary here among vs;

they bee none of those whome wee knowe , they bee none of those whome wee see dayly , they bee none of those whome wee take for our disciples , and which come hither to receiue Gods Doctrinē : none of that sort do euer take sanctuarie among vs . Who bee they then that are desirous to inioy the priuiledges of the Church ? Vnchristes , despisers of God , and dayly haunters of Tauerne and brothelhouses . When they haue committed any faulte or offence , by and by they take sanctuarie and flee to vs for refuge . And how happeneth that ? No doubt but our Lord hath declared that hee cannot abide any such disorder , that men should make his Church a denne of theeues , as is spoken of it by the Prophet Ieremie . In deede it is otherwise meant : but yet is this a generall ground , that God will not haue his temple to serue for a couert for any euill doers . And therefore let vs note that although the Churches of the Popedom had bin dedicated to God ; yet were they vnhalowed againe by that meanes , forasmuch as they serued to priuiledge offenders , and beside to greue the creditors , and for such other wicked things . Howbeit forasmuch as at this day they be Satans brothelhouses and nothing else but dennes of idols : they may wel haue such priuiledges , & we should not hate them for it . But in the meane while wee see how all manner of disorder reigneth there .

And now for our part let vs marke , that Gods will was not to giue protection to misdemeanors . For on the contrary side it is sayd , That the partie which committeth such a manslaughter shall offer himselfe. (That saying is set downe expressly ) and againe , that the Iustices shall make diligent inquirie of the matter , to knowe whether the partie that hath committed the manslaughter did hate his neighbor aforetimes , or whether he had any quarrell against him or no. Herein our Lord sheweth that no excuse may be admitted . And this discretion ought to bee in all Iudges to beware that they admit not the answere of a man that would couer his owne misbehaviour . For the deed must be looked into , and the truth boulded out . Oftentimes Iudges are contented to bee beguiled and to see and not see when some color is set vpon the matter , and to admit the excuse though it bee neuer so trifling , Tush (say they) hee excuseth himselfe of such a matter . Yea and if the offender may be beleeued , hee will excuse himselfe euer . Therefore must wee make inquirie as God commaundeth vs , and wee must doe it thoroughly . So then let vs marke that when God gaue protection to such as commit manslaughter vnwittingly , he meant not y<sup>e</sup> same should serue for wilfull offenders ; and therefore he hath shewed the meane how y<sup>e</sup> thing being good of itselfe , might be kept from turning into abuse . And hereby wee bee done to vnderstand that if priuiledges bee good and vp-right , they serue not for the wicked : and the graunters of them ought to consider that thing well : and they must haue an eye aforehande to all other respectes , whetely men may from time to time drawe their dooings to euill libertie to the ouergreuing of such as are worthie to be mainteined . But now where-as hee hath made a lawe of vprightnesse , for pitie of such as deserue to bee regarded at his hand : by and by the wicked forte being futile , doe take the aduantage thereof to themselves . Men therefore had neede of discretion in that behalfe , to disappoint such as would abuse priuiledges , which are graued for none but for such as are worthy of them & deserue them . That is the thing which we haue to beare in minde concerning the inquitie which God commaundeth to be made when manslaughter is committed .

And heere wee haue a dubble lesson to gather of this text . The one is for such as sit in the seate of Iustice . They (as I haue sayd afore) must take good heede that they admit no trifling excuses ; but that when any open offence is committed , they trye out who is faultie thereof , that hee may be punished for it . For wee see how God hath commaunded that if a mans body were found dead , the Iustice shoulde make diligent inquisition of it out of hand without any forslowing or partialitie : and that if the murderer could nor bee found , yet if it were neere the boundes of any Towne or Citie , inquisition should be made for it round about , and solcmne protestation should bee made by those Cities that they were guiltles of the bloodshed before God , and that if they knewe the doer thereof , they would bewray him : and after all this , it behoued them also to offer a sacrifice . And there is not anything that can better shewe vs how greatly God abhorreth the shedding of mans blood , than this that wee see that hee willeth the magistrates to come together after that fashion , to doe Iustice for duties sake of their owne accord , though no man require it at their hand : and also to offer themselves before God in the open face of the world , with protestation that their intent is not to concale the misdeed , but that they would to the vttermost of their power auenge it , if it came to their knowledge , without cloaking of it . And yet is not that enough : but they must moreover adde a sacrifice , to craue pardon at Gods hand , forasmuch as it was his will to humble them , by suffering a manslaughter to be committed within their iurisdiction , and in that they were not able to cleare the land thereof . So then let vs learne , that such as sit in the seate of Iustice must bee watchful , to see that no misdemeanor bee fostered . And if it bee concealed , they must looke diligently to it that it may be brought to light . And when they haue prooffe of the matter , they must not bee slacke in punishing of it , vnlesse they will be taken for accessaries before God to y<sup>e</sup> deed doers . Mark y<sup>e</sup> for one point .

And further , in all exaninations of matters let Iudges and Iustices haue their eyes open , to see whether folke deale craftily and couertly or no . And if they did so , there should bee better regard had to prooffes than there is . But they let many thinges slippe , and are contented that they shoulde not come to knowledge . And yet doth God shewe here how men ought to behaue themselves in the examination of offences. Wherein we haue a generall lesſon that concerneth vs all. For although all of vs bee nor ordeined to bee Iuſtices to beare the ſworde for the puniſhing of offenders: yet doth God graunt vs the honor to bee our owne Iudges. Therefore let vs examine our ſelues diligently, when any matter befalleth vs, that wee flatter not our ſelues in our offences and miſdealings. And if we ought to be ſo diligent in examining our ſelues, that although wee feele no remorse or heartyſh of conſcience, yet notwithstanding wee ſhould liſt our ſelues whether wee bee worthy of blame or no: what ought we to do whē we be conuicted by the witneſſe of our owne conſciences, ſo as we perceiue there was ſome euill diſpoſition in vs? Let vs beware that wee can well iuſtifie our ſelues then. And ſo yee ſee how wee may procede from one thing to another: namely that inasmuch as wee perceiue that Magiſtrates are here warned to doe their ducie diligently; wee may gather vpon that particular poynt, that God hath inioyned euery of vs to preferre inditementes againſt our ſelues, and to take good heede that wee flatter not our ſelues in any wiſe.

But now by the way, to come againe to the examinations which our Lord hath ſet downe here: it is ſayd that conſideration muſt be had whether there haue bin any hatred betwene the partie that is ſo ſtriken that hee dyeth of it, and the other that gaue the ſtroke: Let it be conſidered (ſayth he) whether there was any hatred betwixt them or no. Here we ſee yet better the thing that I touched afore, that is to wit, that all crimes are willing, and that wee muſt repaire to that fountaine to know whether it bee a crime or no. As for example, if a man haue committed a manſlaughter, how may it bee known that hee is guiltie of crime or no? By knowing whether hee bare any hatred or malice to the partie or no, ſayth the Lord. And here we haue to marke firſt of all, that forasmuch as hatred or malice is the wellſpring of murder, it is not to bee wondered at, or to be thought ſtrange, that God ſhould denounce all them to bee murderers, which hate men in their hartes, and that he ſhould condemne the rancor though it lye hidden within. For why? when a murderer cometh to examination, is the hand to blame? is the ſworde to blame? or is the ſtroke to blame that was giuen? No. But the blame is in the malice that was conceiued afore, which led the hand and prouoked the man to commit the murder. Therefore marke it for a point, that it is not without cauſe that our Lorde deemeth all thoſe to be murderers, which doe ſo hate their neighbors. And the ſame muſt warne vs to prevent all daungers, that the ſunne go not downe vpon our malice; for in ſo doing wee giue Satan poſſiſſion of vs. Beware my brethren (ſayth S. Paul) that ye giue not place to Satan. And how doe wee giue him place? it is (ſayth hee) by ſuffering the Sunne to goe downe vpon our wrath; for when we ſeede any hartburning within vs, and multiply rancor in our mindes; although wee perceiue it not at the firſt, yet are we caught with ſo curſed affection, as we cannot ouercome it afterward. Seeing then that hatred procureth ſuch wickedneſſe; let euery man looke to himſelfe, and when we be moued to any ill will, although ſome diſpleaſure be done vnto vs, and it may ſeeme that we haue juſt cauſe of reuenge as in reſpect of men: yet notwithstanding let all ſuch thinges be layd aſide, and let vs ſtrive earnestly to ourmaſter our ſclues, that our hartes be not hardened for feare leaſt the diuel doe ſo worke in vs, that the hatred which we haue conceiued to day, do make vs ready to ſlea & kil to morrow, ſo as y<sup>e</sup> hart being inuenimed doe cary y<sup>e</sup> hande away w<sup>it</sup>. Yee ſee then how it is a thing worthy to be marked.

And generally let vs learne, that to examine our fautes well, we muſt not onely haue an eye to the thinges that are done by our hands, eete, eyes, & eares: but we muſt alſo goe to the inward parts & ſearch our thoughts, our wicked deſires, and all the thinges that doe tempt and prouoke vs: for there lyeth the right examination of our ſins. When a man goeth about to iuſtify himſelfe becauſe he hath committed no murder, theft, or whoredome in a ſuall deede, & yet is infected with wicked luſts in his hart: his laboring to acquit himſelfe after that ſort, is in vaine before God. And therefore let vs beare in minde, that to ſearch our ſelues duely of all our offences and miſdoings, we muſt enter into our owne conſciences, & not onely condemne our wicked luſtes, but alſo euen our thoughts wherby we were prouoked & induced to euill, and we muſt vnderſtand that euill that is a damnable ſin alſo before God. Thus yee ſee what we be taught in this text where it is ſayd that inquirie muſt be made whether the man hated his neighbour before or no.

And here is expreſſe mention made of the time that went before. In deede in the Hebrewes it is, yesterday or before yesterday: but it is but their common phraſe of ſpeech, wherby they doe broken all time that is paſt. And hereby our Lord meant to declare, that men muſt not looke onely at the preſent deede, but that they muſt procede further, and ſee whether any miſchiefe lay lurking afore. For if a man alledge circumſtances to cleere himſelfe, and bee not found faultie out of hand; that is not yet enough: an eye muſt be had what went before: the thing may be found out in a moneth which can not be found in a day: and the thing will bee found in a yeere, which is not to be found in a moneth. Now if this ought to be done in earthly Iuſtice: let euery of vs practice it lykewiſe in our owne behalfe. When wee enter into the conſideration of our owne fautes, let vs not looke onely vpon the thinges that are preſently ſalne out; but let vs goe yet further and ſay; How is this befallne me? It is becauſe I haue nourished this vice long time in me, whereas if I had cut it off at the firſt, God would not haue left me ſo much to my ſelfe. But what? I haue ſoothed my ſclie in mine euill dooings, and ſuffered this curſed ſeede to take roote in my heart, without regard ding to repress it, so as it may seeme that I haue bin minded to tempt God wilfully. And therefore it is good reason that I should fall so grossly, sith I my selfe am the cause thereof. Such examination should we make of all our faultes, and not onely condemne our selues for the present deede done, but also proceede further and say; Alas, if I had armed my selfe against Satan or if I had not of long time set open the way for him, or if I had not wrought the means for him to beguile me: God had preserued me. But mine owne negligence is to blame for it, thereof it cometh that I haue yeelded my selfe to this wicked lust, against the which I should haue strived at the first. And so yee see yet againe what we haue to marke when wee be to examine our selues well; and what doctrine wee haue to gather of this saying, y<sup>e</sup> inquirie must be made whether there haue bin any former hatred betwixt the parties that are spoken of in this place.

1 Cor. 11. 31.

Now finally, whereas it is sayd, That there is no iudgement of death vpon such a man, it serueth to proue the thing better, which I haue spoken already: namely that if a man be not guiltie by his own purpose, intet, or will, he ought not to be taken for an offender. God acquitteth him, and therefore he ought not to be condemned by men or by any creature. This ought to serue vs for a further confirmation of the doctrine which I take in hand to expound. Men can alwayes wel grant y<sup>e</sup> faultes are willing. Whē y<sup>e</sup> Hea- then wrate of y<sup>e</sup> matter, they spake after this manner: the Lawe punisheth not the euentes of things, but the intentes of them. And when the Philosophers wrate thereof, they could wel skill to say, there is neither vice nor vertue which proceedeth not of the will. Yet for all this, we cease not to beare our owne eyes, neither doe we thinke our selues to haue offended, vnlesse our handes bee bloody, or that there appeare some euident token to the worldward, or (to be short,) y<sup>e</sup> we be conuicted of the doing of some wicked deed. But y<sup>e</sup> is against my former saying, y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, that all sinnes proceede of the wil. Therefore when wee intend to examine our selues thoroughly, let vs learn to begin at our wils. And if we finde no euil deed in our selues, y<sup>e</sup> is to say neither malice, nor euil will, thē it is no crime. And whereas I say that euil affection is willing, yet for all that I exclude not mens inquiries: for it is not for saught that God hath distinguished sinnes and misdeedes into two sortes; whereof the one sorte are called crimes, and the other sorte are called ignorances. Although then that men haue no intent or meaning to doe amisse, yet is it not to be sayd that therefore they bee righteous. But my meaning now is that there be no wicked affection or desire in vs, so as wee bee not disposed to it of any will, but that the whole matter standeth vpon mischance that insueth. And I call it mischance after the custome of common speech. For it behooueth vs to referre all thinges to Gods prouidence, and not to thinke that any thing can fall out through fortune. Neuertheless it is a common maner of speech among vs, to say that a thing happeneth by chance or fortune, when it commeth to passe on our side. That then is the thing in effect, which we haue to note, in that our Lorde sayth that there shall no iudgement of death passe vpon a man that shall haue giuen his neighbour a deadly blowe, without any malice borne to him before: but that hee shall bee quite, if his stryking of him were without forepurpose or intent of will.

And furthermore we see here in few wordes, how our Lorde meant to forbid vs to be moued to anger one against another, and hath voutsafed to beare with our imperfections so farre, that to eschew greater inconueniences, hee will haue the guiltlesse person to get him out of the way for a time. True it is (as I haue declared heretofore) that his intent is also to shewe how greatly wee ought to abhorre murder. But howfouer the case stand, yet it doth behooue vs to marke well Gods gracious goodnesse, in mainteining peace and concord by all means possible. Were wee such as wee ought to be, there should be as it were but one common league of fellowship among vs: but now are wee faine to be separated asunder; so as euery man getteth himselfe alone, euery man hath his goods by himselfe, euery man hath his possessions severall, and euery man hath as it were a propertie alone: and that is because of our infirmities. And true it is that this Lawe might bee generall: but there are many other means whereby God sheweth vs how he beareth with our infirmities. Is it not a pitious case that two brethren cannot liue quietly together, without contention and strife; and that euen the father and the sonne also should be at the same point? These are shamefull thinges and vterly against nature, so as it may well bee sayd that we be worse than wilde beastes, seeing that euen they which are linked together in so necre and holy bond, cannot beare one with another that they might liue together in friendship. But what? The vices of men are so great, that to eschew greater mischiefes, sometime the parties that ought to be necrest together, are faine to be set furthest asunder. And the same maner of dealing doth God vse in this place. Hee will haue a man to forsake his owne house and possessions, and to goe into a strange place. And wherefore? To the end that the partie which was moued to wrath for loue of his neighbour, should haue no occasion to doe worse, nor bee prouoked by seeing him before his eyes. Now then sith wee see this, let vs briefly marke the goodnes which God vseth towards vs, which is more than the loue of a father, in that hee beareth with vs in our vices, and findeth fit means to keepe vs from slinging out at random, and moreouer giueth vs warning by his owne example to prevent or cut off all occasions of euill. Therefore let vs beware: for the diuell is alwayes watching & will soone take vs in a trip, if we admitt neuer so small an occasion of doing euill. So then let vs bridle our selues short, and be well

aduised, saying thus to our selues : O, if I commit such a thing I may be tempted with such an euill, and therefore I had need to labour to keepe my selfe from it. For why? The diuell is our wyllie for me, and if I cast my selfe once into his nettes, what will become of mee? For God sheweth vs howe we ought to liue, and howe to cut off all occasions of euill, and that if there bee any thing that may leade vs to any euill, we must shunne it aforehande. Seeing then that God hath sung vs such a lesion, let vs take heede not onely that wee absteine from all euill deedes, whereby wee may corrupt and defile our whole life and vterly cast our selues into all disorder; but also that wee eschewe all things that may leade vs to euill by any indirect wayes.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the Maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, that euerie of vs may so be thinke vs of our sinnes, as wee become our owne Iudges and learne to condemne our selues, that wee may obtaine fergiuensse of the heavenly Iudge, so as hee may pitie vs and bury all our transgressions by which we be guiltie before him: and that wee may examine our sinnes narrowly dayly more and more, to the ende that being mortified vnto them, wee may dayly draw neere to his righteousnesse, whereunto hee calleth vs by his worde. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth &c.

8 And when the Lorde thy God shall haue enlarged thy borders, as hee hath sworn to thy fathers, and hath giuen thee all the lande which he promised to giue to thy fathers:

9 (Conditionally that thou haue an eye to all his commaundementes, to doe them, which I commaunde thee this day, and that thou loue the Lorde thy God, and walke continually in his wayes:) then thou shalt adde three other townes to those three,

10 To the intent that innocent bloude be not shedde in the midst of the Lande which the Lorde thy God giueth thee to inherite, and that bloude bee not vpon thee.

11 But if a man haue hated his neighbour, and haue lyen in waite for him, and risen vp against him, and smitten him that he die, and thereupon be fled into one of those Cities:

12 Then the Elders of that Citie shall sende and take him thence, and deliuer him into the hand of the next kinsman, and he shall die.

13 Thine eye shall not spare him: but thou shalt take away the guiltlesse bloude from Israel, that it may go well with thee.

WE sawe yesterday howe it was Gods will to haue the inconueniences prevented, which are wont to be seene when men suffer occasions of euill vncut off. And that is somewhat better expressed in this saying which Moses addeth: Beware (saith he) that guiltlesse bloude bee not shed in thy lande. Then it is not ynough to punish murders after they be committed, but we must also haue the wisdome to prevent them aforehande and to take such order as they may not bee committed. And forasmuch as Satan needes but a small gap to thrust vs out at, let vs be watchfull in this case of preventing occasions of euill as hath bin said afore. Moreouer let vs also marke this saying, that the bloude shall be vpon those that suffer things to slip so. For though a man can protest that hee consented not to the doing of an euill deede, yet notwithstanding if hee suffered it so as it came to pass through his negligence: hee shall be taken as accessory. The olde proverbe is true, y<sup>e</sup> which suffereth a thing to be done and may let it, is the doer of it. And therefore if a Iudge that hath the sword in his hand do suffer euill deede to be done and punish them not: it is al one as if he committed them himselfe. It is not ynough for him to say I would it were otherwise; but hee must shew it by his doings. To bee short, when men beare with such as trouble the order of the common weale, it is al one as if they bolstered them in it. Again, by such examples things are set at a generall libertie, so as custome is taken for lawe. And therefore looke what mischiefe or inconuenience insueth afterwarde, the blame of it is to be imputed to those that remedied it not when time was. That is the cause why it is saide that the bloude shall be vpon a whole Nation, when men haue not bene held short that they might not commit murders.

Gen. 4. 10.

For that maner of speech is verie rife in the Hebrew tongue. And in the same respect also did the Iewes say, his bloude be vpon vs and vpon our children: that is to say, let the blame lyght vpon vs. We must not bring here fantastical imaginations as the Rabbines (that is to say the Iewish doctors) doo, who alledging alwaies their owne dreames, do say that the soules of the murdered doo aske vengeance continually at Gods hande, vntill they haue had Iustice done vnto them. All such sayings are but dotages. For although their blood cry not at all, yet doth God heare them, as he himselfe declareth; and there needeth neither solicitor nor attourney to require Iustice at his hande; hee can tell well ynough howe to doe his office, without any importunate calling vpon him. The very cause why it is saide that bloude crieth, is for that God hath an eye to the euill that is committed, and it is all one with him as if the ease were followed with neuer fo great suite. Worldly Iudges make no greater force of a crime when it is committed, vnlesse they bee called vpon verie earnestly, and that the matter bee stoutly pursued. But God declareth himselfe to be no such, and that his owne seeing of the misdeede is ynough, for nothing can scape him, and therefore it is all one with him as if the whole worlde tooke the quarell in hande, and euerie man followed the suite: of it with tooth and nayle. God then taryeth not for our speaking, but as one y knoweth his office wel ynough, hee can skill to put to his hande when neede is; and therefore let vs tarie his leasure. And surely it is a doctrine of great comfort. For although wee holde our peace when men misse vs; yet doeth not God faile to haue his hande lifted vp to succour vs. Therefore let vs bee patient in our afflictions and wrongs, and whatsoeuer come of it God will not foreflowe: it is ynough that hee seeth me persecute vs wrongfully: let vs content our selues with that: the lesse that wee speake of it, the readier will hee be to releee vs: yea though wee speake not one worde of it: Not that it is not meete for vs to call vpon him, that hee may vouchsafe to pittie vs: but that wee shoulde not bee desirous of reuenge, nor beare any malice to our enemies. If wee holde our peace in that respect, and tary Gods leasure for the succour which it shall please him to sende vs: let vs not doubt but he will doe his office, and therefore let vs comfort our selues with that hope.

Moreouer forasmuch as it is saide that the bloude shall be vpon vs; let vs bee afraid of it: and although wee bee not pursued nor complaind of by men, yet let vs assure our selues our market is neuer a whit amended by it, for God sleepeeth not, but marketh all the misdeedes that are done, and they must all needes come to account. Therefore let vs bee pure before him: and let vs not onely abstaine from euill deedes, but also beware that wee consent not to any euill, for then shall wee bee hld as accessaries, and wrappe our selues in the same condemnation with the deede doers, as it is witnessed vnto vs heere. For God speaketh not onely to the murtherers themselves, but also to all the people. When this Lawe is broken and murthers are freely committed for want of good execution of Iustice, God saith not that hee will require it at the hande of two or three, but at the handes of all in generall. Nowe then seeing the case standeth so, what shall become of those that are in authoritie and reigne in the seate of Iustice, when they themselves are accessaries? Shall not they bee the first that shall answer for it? To bee short, wee haue to gather vpon this text, that when an outrage or wrong is done to any man, not onely the principall shall bee punished, but also the whole Nation in common shall haue the curse lye vpon them, and must come to reckoning for it before God. To our seeming it is ynough when wee can say, that wee woulde faine that men shoulde lue in peace, and yet in the meane while wee see men grieved and vexed before our eyes, and wee vouchsafe not to open our mouthes to succour the innocent, but though wee haue both opportunitie and abilitie, yet wee let al slippe, & we beare our selues in hande that God ought not to require it at our handes: but heere wee see the contrarie. Let vs marke well then, that to the vttermost of our power, wee must set our selues in defence of the innocents so as they may not bee vexed, fleeced or troubled, nor might bee suffered to ouercome right, as they say. Let euery of vs in his degree looke to the remedying hereof. Let such as haue the sworde of iustice shewe themselves stout in this case and not suffer disorder to haue full scope. And as for those that are not of abilitie, let them yet at leastwise doe the best they can to comfort such as haue no body to vpholde them. And when wee see these lustie gallantes steppe vp and take more vppore them than is lawfull; let vs become their enemies, let vs hinder their misdealing, and let vs withstand them. That is the thing which wee be bounde vnto by Gods worde; otherwise wee shall bee helde as accessaries to their misdoings. If wee haue not prevented them, it is a consenting to them, and God must demaund an account of it at our handes.

Heere it is to be noted further, that whereas God saith that the people of Israel shall add three other Cities of refuge, as if their boundes were enlarged: thereby wee bee done to vnderstande, that the more power and abilitie that GOD giueth vs, the more are wee bounde to employ it, to comfort innocentes, and to succour them at their neede. And this ought to be put in vre generally by all men of authoritie and gouernours. The more power then that a Magistrate hath, the more ought hee to thinke himselfe bounde to maintaine the good and guiltlesse vnder his protection, and to be a help to them that they be not troubled. O'times hee that woulde releee good men, is not able: yea and peraduenture he himselfe also shall be oppressed. In such cases wee must haue recourse vnto God, & bow down our sholders, crying till hee haue haue pitie vpon vs, and in the meane while we must arme our selues with patience. But when a man is armed with Gods power; then it shall not be ynough for him to mislike of things, and to bee somewhat sorie for them; but hee must also employ the authoritie that God giueth him, and the same rule ought to be obserued of euery of vs particularly. To be short, forasmuch as God giueth power to Kings, Princes, and all other Magistrates; they ought to employ all that euer they haue, to the defence of those whom God hath committed to their charge, and to deale in such sort as their subiects be not wrongfully molested. Lo heere a rule that concerneth such as haue the sword of iustice in their hand. Neuerthelesse, it behoueth euery of vs to follow the same order. And although we be not armed with the sword of iustice; yet notwithstanding if God giue vs any abilitie or opportunitie, let vs looke to it that we help the good and succour them in their neede. Therefore if a rich man see a poore man suffer wrong; let him helpe him and releuee him. If a man of discretion see a poore man destitute of counsell, so as he knoweth not what to doe: let him giue him his aduise as the case serueth. If a man haue credit where-by he may deliuer them that are in distresse: let him likewise employ it for his part. Thus yee see howe we ought to put this saying in vre, When God shall haue enlarged thy bounds, then shalt thou adde threë Cities moe. Yee see heere howe our Lorde meashureth his ordinance for the reliefe of good men, and of such as were in daunger without deseruing it or without any guilt. Therefore his will is to haue the thing doubled which he had ordeined for their reliefe. And why so? It is to doe vs to vnderstande, that the mo benefites we haue receiued at Gods hande, the more are we bound and indetted both to God and to our neighbours.

But nowe let vs come to that which Moses interlaecthe here, inasmuch as thou shalt obserue all these things which I commaunde thee, to loue the Lorde thy God, to keepe all his commaundements, and to walke in his feare. Heere hee maketh (as yee would say) a kinde of coniuration, as if he should aduise the people after this manner; Looke wel to this commaundement that yee despise it not, if yee loue the Lorde your God and seeke to obey him. As if hee should say, In dede a man would thinke at the first sight that this were nothing: but be you sure that your God wil haue you to obserue such humanitie diligently. And therein hee trieth whether yee be louing and obedient vnto him or no. To be short, Moses meane to shewe heere, that this commaundement is of great importance before God, to the intent that men should not despise it. And heere withall wee haue to marke, that wee cannot omitte any of the things that God commaundeth, without doing wrong to the Lawmaker: for it is an imbalming of his authoritie. And for that cause is it saide that hee which despiseth any of the least things that are contained in the Lawe, and imbreweth men with the like contempt, shall be called the least in the kingdom of heauen; that is to say, shall be vtterly shaken off. Our Lorde then wil haue vs to reuerence his Lawe, and to obserue it without respect of this or that, so as wee must not alledge, This is a small matter, this a veniall sinne, there is no great conscience to be made of it. When GOD hath opened his holy mouth, and vouchsafed to ordeyne one thing or other; becommeth it vs to make small account of it? If a Lorde Great master speake a thing, men say not; is the matter greater or small? but thus they say, the king spake it. And if that that may suffice in mortall creatures; shall wee reple to the contrarie, and make it an occasion of euill doing and of rebelling against the liuing God, when he declareth his will vnto vs? Shall wee say it is a thing of no great importance, and that it is not so grieuous and heynous an offence? In dede there are some commaundementes which our Lorde vttereth more than other some, but yet must wee in all cases and all respectes obserue that which our Lorde Iesus Christ saith: Those things ought to be done, and the other not to be left vndone: so that forasmuch as God hath giuen vs his Lawe, it behoueth vs to keepe it, and not to diuide it, as who should say, I will keepe this point, and let that point alone. Nay, if we beleue God, wee must looke that wee submit our selues to him, yea euen to the vttermost tittle. But nowe let vs consider howe it is saide here, inasmuch as thou obseruesth these things. Here Moses driueth men to the obseruing of the Lawe, when any particular thing is to be done which God hath ordeined. And it is as much as if hee should say, Haue an eye to the Lawmaker which ruleth you. Therefore when wee haue any thing to doe, we must alwayes haue this consideration with vs, to thinke that God declareth his will therein; and that must suffice vs. Why so? For there is but one rule of weldoing; and to call the things in question which are contained in his Lawe, is al one as if we refused to be ruled by the mouth and worde of God. Therefore the Lawe must haue his full course, and we must not go about to separate the things which God hath so knit and vnitid together.

But heere withall Moses bringeth vs backe againe to the thing that hee had treated of afore; that is to wit, which is the true keeping of the Lawe, and to what ende it tendeth. The true keeping of the Lawe is to giue eare vnto God in all that hee saith. Keepe all the commaundementes (saith hee), as if hee should say, wee must not serue God after our owne liking, when things come to passe according to our heartes desire; neither must wee take leaue to dispenche with our selues, when wee meete with any thing that is harde. It is not for vs to parte stakes with GOD after that manner; but wee must call to minde howe Sainct James saith, that he which breaketh any one point is guiltie of the whole law. The reason is the same which I haue alleadged afore, namely that when wee encounter Gods ordinance, wee deface his maiestie as much much as in vs lieth.

Deut. 6. 24-25

Iame 5. 12. 10

True it is that wee can neuer fulfil Gods law, I say there was neuer yet so perfect a man in the worlde, but hee came farre short of the perfection that God sheweth vs, But yet must wee tend towards it: though wee be farre off from the marke, and but halfe way onwarde of our journey; yet must we goe forward still, and not thinke to content God by doing some little peece of it for the loue of him, and in the rest take leaue to behaue our selues as wee list. Let vs not thinke that God admitteth such compositions: but that wee must in all pointes conforme our whole life to his will. And although wee attaine not to the full performance; yet our desire must bee to doe so as I haue declared afore.

And now let vs come to that which hee addeth, namely to what end the keeping of Gods Lawe tendeth, that is to wit that we should loue him. Whereby wee be done to vnderstande, that our Lordes intent is not to drawe vs to a slavish fearefulness, but to haue vs to take pleasure and delight in honouring him, and in doing his commandementes: for it is certaine that without this loue, all our seruice shalbee refused as vnprofitable. In deede this matter hath bene expounded alreadie heretofore: neuertheless it is good reason that we should be put in remembrance of it, as oft as the holy Ghost speaketh thereof: for heere is no superfluitie. And it is a doctrine that wee cannot be persuaded of at the first, that it behooueth vs to serue God freely and with a willing loue. Truly wee must not loue God as our fellowe or mate: but wee must stande in awe of him, not as enforced by necessitie, so as we should grinde our teeth in grudging against him; but as yeelding our heartes to him, by setting all our delight in his Lawe, as Dauid protesteth himselfe to haue done, by which example of his hee sheweth vs also our dewtie. Yee see then howe GOD requireth that wee should serue him of free will, yea and that wee should also loue him. And indeede whence proceedeth true obedience, but of the knowledge of the will of our GOD, and that wee take him for our father, to the end that wee on our side might behaue our selues like childre towards him? Vntill wee be come to that point, it is vnpossible for vs to goe about to serue our GOD with a good will: wee shall haue nothing but stubbornesse in vs, so as (if it were possible) we could finde in our hearts neuer to come at him. But when wee haue once tasted of his goodnesse; then are wee allured to loue him out of hand.

Seeing then that men haue felt God a father towards them; it becommeth them to answere him in like sort againe, and to bee as children towards him. And so wee see heere againe, howe the Lawe may bee duly kept by vs: that is to witte, by louing our GOD. For thereupon it will come to passe that wee shall walke in all his wayes, for God cannot bee diuided from his worde. If we loue him, it is certaine that wee will indouour to please and obey him. And this is scene euen among mortall men: but yet there is a peculiar cause thereof in God. For (as I saide afore) God is neuer separated from his righteoufnesse, which hee declareth vnto vs in his Lawe. Then if we loue him, we must needs like well of his Lawe, and take pleasure in obseruing the same. And therefore if a man say, I loue GOD, I feare him, I honour him, and in the meane while despise his worde, and make no reckoning of it: it is but hypocricie matched with shamelesnesse. For as I haue saide already, it is vnpossible that God should transforme himselfe, to become as an ydoll by surceasing from his righteoufnesse which in verie deede is his owne proper being. So then it is to be concluded, that we cannot otherwise loue our God, than by giuing our selues ouer vnto him, by indouoring to serue and please him.

But now let vs come to that which is saide concerning such as would needs abuse the priuiledge by withdrawing themselves to the Sanctuarie when they had committed a murder. If it happen that a man which hated his neighbour and killed him, doe flee to the place of priuiledge: let the Elders of that place, that is to say the Rulers or Governours, (for it is a name of office): let the Governours and Iudges and Magistrates, take him and fetch him thence, that is to say, let the fetch him from the priuiledged place by strong hand, and put him into the handes of him that ought to reuenge the bloodshed, or of him y demaundeth Iustice, that he may be put to death, and let no thine eye spare him, that is to say, haue no pittie nor compassion on him. By cause we be moued when we see a man lament, and our eyes relent at it: that is to say, if we see a man in extreme heauinesse of minde, by and by wee be moued to pittie his case: our Lorde saith that hee will not haue him to be pittifull, nor in any wise to relent, which ought to execute Iustice. Goe to worke stoutly (saith hee), and let the offender bee punished, notwithstanding his misclaiming of the priuiledge which GOD had graunted for such as are guilelesse and not for such as are faultie. This was declared partly yesterday: but it is well worthie to bee laide forth more at large. To bee shorte, let vs haue an eye to the expounding of Moses wordes, and it will suffice vs: for thereupon wee easily gather a lesson greatly to our behoofe. The wordes are, If a man that hath slaine his neighbour of preposed malice and lying in waite for him, doe see him into one of those franchises Cities. Wherein wee see that the wicked doe alwayes seekte to abuse the thinges that are ordeyned for the succour of good men, and are boldest in taking the benefite of them. The Magistrates therefore must haue an eye thereunto, and beware that the wicked abuse not the thinges that are graunted for the releefe of Gods children: for that is too great a skorning of Lawes. And it is not without cause that our Lorde speaketh of it heere: for it sheweth that the like kinde of corrupt dealing hath bene in all ages: and we must not marvel at it, seeing that the world is not amended since, but rather appeared. Let vs looke well about vs therefore, that if a man which hath committed any misdeede doe go about to hide himselfe or to scape away by some vndirect meanes, it may not auaille him. That is the thing which wee haue to marke in the first place.

And whereas it is said that the Judges shall pull him away: it serueth to shewe that it is not yough for men to make good Lawes & statutes, but there must also be corage to execute them; there must be a stout and constant minde in those that beare authoritie. For although that Lawes be proclaimed by the found of the trumpet, and written of recorde with neuer so great solemnitie: yet are they but deade and all is nothing worth, except that they which sit in the seate of Iustice, haue the constancie that our Lorde inioyneth heere, and be stout in maintaining the things that are enacted, that men may not lugh them to skorne as we see that the wicked sort do, which make but a mocke at them. If a Lawe haue once bene proclaimed, they beare themselves in hande that it will be buried within three or foure dayes after. Yee see then howe it is a good and profitable warning for all such as haue the sworde of iustice in hande, to haue this stoutnesse of minde and constancie. And for as much as it is not to be founde in men, (for it is a speciall vertue attributed to the spirit of God): let such as are in office beseeche God to strengthen them, so as they may vse force of hande when neede requireth, and not be afeaid when they see such troubles as might abash them, but stoutly withstande them, yea and also outstande them. That is one thing further which wee haue to marke vpon this place.

Now this thing is to be applyed likewise to instructing of euery of vs. Ifay let priuate persons also looke well to the repressing of euill doings, and that with such stoutnesse that although they be threatened to put them in feare, yet it may not turne them away from doing their dutie. For what a thing were it if we should be afeaid at euery turne? The lifting vp of a mans litle finger would feare vs; and though we were neuer so willing to doe our dutie, yet if any man stepped afore vs to turne vs from our purpose, euery word of his mouth (as I saide) would be yough to put vs out of hart. But the case concerneth the seruing of our God, wherein we must ouercome all the assaults of Satan, and all the impediments that the world can deuise. Nowe if it behouoe vs to fight so valiantly against Satan & all his indeuors: should we be afeaid of men, or stand in dreade of them? Should they so feare vs that we should leaue our God behind? So the, to the intent we may do our dutie, let vs learne to strengthen our selues. And at one word, it standeth vs in hande to marke wel, that no man shall euer discharge his dutie towards God, except he enforce himselfe and haue such a couragious constancie, as may surmount all temptations: and that is a thing greatly for our behoofe to marke. For a hundred times a day shall we haue occasions to thrust vs out of the way; & we resist them full coldly. Againe, if we be to do any good, we make excuses and say, I would faine do my dutie, but I see such an impediment, and by that meanes I am helde backe. Because that they which are vnder the tyranny of the Pope in these dayes, cannot haue leaue to doe well and to serue God purely, without putting of their liues in hazard: they beare themselves in hande that they bee discharged, when they can make this excuse to say, I would faine doe otherwise, but I am not suffered to do it, it shall neuer come to account before God. And we neede not to go farre for prooffe of the matter. Euen here where there is no perfection to hinder the seruing of God, but rather incouragement to men to do well, yet neuertheless we haue many distresses. For Satan is suttle yough to finde euery day newe inuentions to turne vs from the right way. What remaineth then, but to go to it with force, and to doe our indeuour to serue our God in such wise, that if we meete with any lets to turne vs aside, they may be overcome by the constancie and corage that I spake of, which it behoueth vs to require of the holy Ghost.

Furthermore let vs marke, that the offender must be delivered into the hande of him that is to reuenge the blood, hee, or else of him that demandeth iustice: Whereby we may perceiue that God alloweth no [priuate] reuenges. For wee knowe what rule is giuen vs in the holy scripture: My brethren, (saith S. Paul) forbear reuenge, yea, desire it not: but put it altogether into the handes of the heavenly Iudge, to whome it belongeth. Nay (which more is) wee bee commanded to render good for euill, to pray for them that curse vs, to doe good to our enemies and to such as persecute vs. Sith it is so then, wee must assure our selues, and be fully resolued of it, that our Lorde will haue our affections bridled, so as we desire not any reuenge though cause thereof be ministred; but rather strue to overcome the euill by doing good. Lo whereunto God calleth vs. And why then is it saide heere, that the offender shall be put into the hande of him that requireth iustice? Let vs note that the Lawes which are made for ciuill or outwarde gouernement, serue not to ouerrule mens affections: they be things that go a-funder. Trueth it is that they be not repugnant, neither is there any contrarietie in them: but we must haue the discretion to consider, that when God spake as king of Israell and made statutes but for comon policie; he respected not the spirituall perfection that is contained in the law which is our rule to all holinesse and righteousness. A Iudge therefore may well agree to one that requireth Iustice at his hande; and although he bee ledde with wicked affection, yet ought the Iudge to graunt him his right. And that is for our proficte. For many men beare themselves in hand, that so they vse the ordinary way of Iustice, it is lawfull for them to doe what they can, & they shall not be condemned for it before

God, if their quarrell bee iust. But it may fall out many a time, that a quarrell shall bee iust, and a man shall pursue it by good means; and yet in the meane while hee shall not faile to be worthy of blame before God. For there are three things required. The quarrell must first bee iust and good: secondly the meane must be lawfull: and thirdly the affection must be pure and well ruled. Nowe this third point wanteth in most men. As howe? Some man perchance is misused, and hee hath iust cause to require redresse at the Iudges hand; hee intendeth neither to strike nor to practise any thing against his aduersarie by treacherie, but resorteth to the Iustice: this is a lawfull remedie, it is ordained of God, wee may safely vse it with good conscience. So are there two of the pointes to bee founde heere. But yet this man that hath the iust cause, and seeketh no remedie but by order of Iustice, faileth not somtimes to doe amiss. As howe? If he haue a desire of reuenge in his heart, if hee conceiue such rancour that hee seeketh to bee so reuenged as the partie may perceiue he hath done euill; and cannot bee contented and satisfied till hee see himselfe to haue requited like for like to him y<sup>e</sup> hath offended him: such a man is blameable before God. For he taketh couert vnder the name of Iustice, to be reuenged of his enemie. It is in vaine for him to alledge the goodnesse of his quarrell; for hee doeth but abuse the remedie that God had ordained. What is to be done then? When wee bee desirous to demaunde Iustice, let euery of vs enter into our selues and examine what our affections are, and see that wee bee cleare from all ill will. When there is such soundnesse in vs; then is it Lawfull for vs to pursue offences done against vs, and to require that they may be punished, namely so there be no rancour nor malice in our heartes. Nowe then if a man haue none other respect than the punishing of the misdeede, and that hee hate not the partie ne bee ledde by any wicked desire: then shall hee be allowed of God, and not otherwise. But such examples are verie rare. For as soone as men begin to go to Lawe, by and by enemie bewrayeth it selfe, and such a fire is kindled as cannot be quenched, so as this proverbe is verie true, that suit in Lawe and friendshippe are two things that can hardly ioyne together. Nowe then let vs be thinke our selues, and not imagine that the hauing of good right, and our seeking of it by order of Law, can vtterly excuse vs before God: for our hearts must be cleansed from all euill will, and from all wicked affection as I saide before. Moreouer let vs marke well the conclusion which is added in this place: When Moses saith thine eye shall not spare the man that hath so treacherously murdered his neighbour of set purpose; if a murder bee committed in heate of choler as they say, it shall not bee helde excused, but the lande shall abide still defiled, vntill it be punished. This was declared sufficiently yesterday. Nowe he treateth here of a more heynous murder: which is, that a man hauing conceiued hatred and rancour against his neighbour, lyeth in waite for him, and killeth him wilfully: for that is the terme that is proper to the murderers that are committed of set purpose and prepedensed malice. And that kinde of murder is vnardonable: to graunt fauour in such a case, is to ouerthrowe the whole order of nature, and all lawes written. So then, it is not without cause y<sup>e</sup> God saith here, thine eye shall not spare him. For sometime wee make our market of other mens welfare, of their profite, or of their harmes, according to the common prouerbe, which saith that wee cut large thongs of other mens lether. When a man hath offended, the Iudge, who was not hurt by it, ne suffered any harme, will easly pardon it. What, saith hee? It was a small matter. But if a man had done the like to him: he could finde in his heart that God shoulde thunder downe from heauen for the punishing thereof: and yet [in another mans case] hee doeth make a mowe at it. Tush (saies he) this may well be let slippe, this will vanish away of it selfe. See howe a man shall oftentimes be moued to pittie and compassion towards some one, and deale cruelly with some other: yea he wil become cruel to a whole realme to spare one man. This is dayly seene: O say they, this poore man is to bee pitied. Yea, but in the meane time, if a wicked deede do passe vnpunished, all y<sup>e</sup> whole realme is defiled and corrupted by it, and it is a prouoking of Gods wrath against the whole Nation. Againe, others take example by it to giue themselves to all leawdnesse, when they bee in hope that crimes shall scape vnpunished. Men consider not that such kinde of mercie is the cause of innumerable cruelties, and that it turneth to the common confusion of all men. And therefore whereas our Lord saith that we must not spare him that hath done such euill deedes; it is to shewe that wee must not be mercifull after our owne manner, to ouerthrowe a great number for the sparing of one man; but that we must haue an eye to right and indifferencie.

And herewithall he sheweth vs againe, howe deare our liues are to him, in that hee will not suffer a murder to be committed, without vengeance for it. Herein wee see (say I) his fatherly care ouer vs. Now if he set such store by this transitorie life, and shewe himselfe to be the defender thereof: what will he do touching the life of our soules? Well hath hee shewed by one gage howe greatly he loueth it, and what store he fettereth by it, in that he hath not spared his onely sonne for it. Then let vs be thinke vs heere, that seeing our Lorde telleth vs howe he hath a care of this transitorie life, and vouchsafeth to take it into his custodie, whereby hee sheweth his fauour and goodnes towards vs in that behalfe, in fo much y<sup>e</sup> although our bodies bee but wormes and rottennesse, yet notwithstanding hee vouchsafeth to stoope so lowe as to haue regard of it. We ought to consider well such goodnesse, and to beare in minde that seeing God loueth vs so much, we ought not to bite one another, nor to be as cats and dogs, sith our God will haue vs to be knit so together in y<sup>e</sup> bonde of brotherly loue.

Therefore inasmuch as we knowe Gods goodnesse and fatherly loue towards vs; let vs learne to restraine our selues from doing any harme or wrong to our neighbours. And afterwarde let the same leade vs yet further: that is to witte, that forasmuch as God holdeth vs vnder his protection, and holdeth out his hand to succour vs: we in the mean season must looke vp higher, namely to the heavenly life which he hath prepared for vs; not doubting but that hee will preferre our soules much more then our bodies. Let vs be fully resolu'd of that, to the intent that wee may call vppon him with full boldnesse. And although wee bee beset with infinite dangers; yet let vs go forward still, assuring our selues that our God will strengthen vs, seeing hee hath a care of vs. And moreover, that although no man require reuenge for vs; yet he himselfe will require it. Therefore let vs be contented to bee in such wise vnder his protection, that if any man do vs any outrage, hee will haue his hande lifted vp to succour vs at our neede. Let vs content our selues therewith, say I; and let vs walke on in simplicitie and vprightnesse being patient in all our aduersities, waiting Gods leasure til he prouide conuenient remedie for vs. And as for those that sit in the seate of Iustice, and haue authoritie in their hand; let them also doe their office duly, so as they may yeeld a good & faithfull account of their doings at the last day.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to make vs feeble them better thā we haue done, that we may be drawn more and more to true repentance, and be so cast downe in our selues, as wee may rise vp againe in him & seeke him, and so rest vppon his promises, that through his inuincible power we may fight valiantly both against Satan and all his champions, and also against the worlde: and that although wee bee sometimes hindered to serue him, yet we may go through with our race, vntil wee be come to the marke whereunto hee calleth vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to all people & nations of the earth, &c.

On Saturday the vij. of December. 1555.

The Cxiiij. Sermon which is the third vpon the nineteenth Chapter.

14 Thou shalt not remoue thy neighbours boundes which bounded thy predecessors in thine heritage that thou shalt possesse in the lande which the Lord thy God giueth thee to possesse, 15 Let not one witness alone rise vp against a man for any manner of trespass or sinne, or for any fault that he offendeth in: but at the worde of two or three witnesses shall the matter be stablished.

Or the better vnderstanding of that which is commaunded and forbidden heere concerning boundes or limites; we haue to marke first of all, that God in giuing the land of Chanaan to his people, had ordeined that partitions should bee made, and his intent was the same shoulde continue for euer. For although sales were made; yet behoued it that in the yeare of Iubily, all things should returne to their former state againe. And Eleazer the highpriest & Iosua were to make those partitions, which shoulde indure to the end. Nowe there was moreouer assigned to euery house an inheritance. For the trybes hauing parted the lande after that manner, agreed afterward as touching the heads of their houses; but yet for all that, it behoued the former partition to continue still, and that y<sup>e</sup> others neuertheless should inioy their goods; and that if any sale were made, it should bee vnder such condition, as euery man might afterwarde returne to his owne inheritance, at the time that God had appointed. Now let vs come to that which is said here. Gods wil is that the boundes (which we in this country call limites) shoulde remaine fast, so as no man might alter any of them; and this serued as well for the vniuersall inheritance of the whole body of the nation, as for the peculiar possessions of euery seueral person. And although there was a special reason for the people of Israel (as I haue touched heretofore;) yet did the heathen know well ynough, y<sup>e</sup> if the same thing were not obserued otherwhere also, there woulde bee no vprightnesse among men, but all would go to confusion. And therefore they held it for a crime, when any man altered the land-marks, & it was counted a kind of fallshood euen among the Heathen. And to the intent it should be taken for a holy matter, they made a God of it, according to their common maner, which was to mingle some superstition with their matters to hold folk in awe, when they intended to bridle them. Now it was a diuclish inuention to set vp an ydol for the maintenance of equitie between men. Yet notwithstanding, we see how nature hath alwayes taught vs this principle, that if boundes & limites were not kept and maintayned, there woulde be a horrible confusion among men, and no lawes would be any longer kept. Therefore to benefite our felcs by this text, we must marke two things. The one is not only that the children of Israel had the possession of the lande of Chanaan of Gods gifts; but also that the partitions thereof were made by his apoyntment & authoritie. The other is, y<sup>e</sup> if the like order be not kept among other men; there wilbee neither equitie nor vpright dealing, but al wilbee full of thecurie & quarreling.

Now as touching Gods bounding of the land in that wise; wee may vnderstande thereby what care he had of his people, how y<sup>e</sup> in so doing hee shewed himselfe a father. Againe it was to y<sup>e</sup> end that the trybes should alwayes be leuered, so as there might be no confusion, because the trybe of Leuie was to haue the priesthood, & the redeemer was to come of y<sup>e</sup> tribe of Iuda. In these respects it was Gods will that this order should be kept among his people: the mainteining of y<sup>e</sup> bounds was not for their possessions sake, but for the respects afore mentioned. And wee in these days must aboue all things marke y<sup>e</sup> afore-touched thing, that is to wit, the saide equitie, which cannot be continued betweene man and man, vnlesse their grounds be bounded out, so as euery man may knowe his owne possessions. And this serueth as well for kingdoms & lordships, as for priuate possessions. It is said in the Psalme y<sup>e</sup> our Lord pitched the bounds of kingdoms, at such time as it pleased him that the nation should be diuided asunder. But we see howe the couetousnesse, ambition, and vnfatiable greedinesse of princes hath put all out of order, & there is not so holy a thing that can stay them from in-croaching vpon the bounds of their neighbors & next borderers. For when they seeke so to in-large their own dominions, it is a breaking of y<sup>e</sup> order of nature. Behold, God hath separated one nation from another: and it is to the ende that all should liue, and communicate one with another, and that there might bee no confused disorder. Ye see then how all men ought to hold themselves contented with their own boundes. But men play the loose colts; their couetousnes carryeth them away; al their seeking is to make themselves stil greater. We see then y<sup>e</sup> the wars which are taken in hand vpon ambition, or couetousnes, are as a spiting of God, by peruerting the order which he hath set in nature, & which he would haue kept as most holy. Now then sith we see such confusion, we haue good cause to be sorie; & to think it no wonder though so great a mischief drawe a long taile after it. For when God is so despised, by the peruerting of his order, needs must horrible curses insue vpon it. Thus much concerning the first point.

And herewithal let vs marke, that when men go about to intriche themselves by wicked and vnlawful meanes, it is a plucking vp of y<sup>e</sup> bounds and limits as men terme them: and that is a plain falsehood. What is to be done then: Like as weights and measures ought to bee maintained iustly, & likewise coynes, because that if faithfulness be not obserued in them, there can be no more dealing between man & man: so are boundes and landmarks to be kept & maintained also. If weights and measures be false, there wilbee no more merchandise: there can bee neither bying nor selling: men shall become as wilde beastes among themselves. If coyne bee not lawfull, all must needs turne to thecurie & stetch. The like reason is in bounds & limits. And therefore let vs marke that Gods commaunding of vs to maintaine them is not without cause: but that vnder that one particular kind, he comprehendeth all other things; shewing thereby, that wee must be careful to keepe the things which wee know to be necessaric for the maintenance of y<sup>e</sup> comon weale, & of louing kindnes between man & man. That is the thing which we haue to remember vpon this part of the text.

Also it is expounded allegorically by such as would haue men to hold themselves in al things & in al respects to antiquitie. They be of opinion y<sup>e</sup> God would haue men to direct the miselues by the lawes & ordinances of their auncesters, & that nothing should be changed which had seemed to be good aforesymes. Yea, but we know, y<sup>e</sup> though a thing be ancient, it is not also good, antiquitie doth but increase the culnesse of it. And therefore what a thing were it, if we should be bound to obserue al things without exceptio which our auncestors haue done or said: In deed changes are alwayes to be feared, & we must of chue them as much as we can: but yet are y<sup>e</sup> Papiests so much the more fond & foolish to say, O, we may not alter the boundes which our auncesters haue set: & therefore wee must not now receive any new thing. Truly they misvnderstand the case, in taking vs to bring any nouelty into the world. For what require we, but y<sup>e</sup> gods word which hath bin at all times, should bee set vp againe? Whereas it hath bin troden vnder foote heretofore, & vtterly forgotten; wee seeke to set it in y<sup>e</sup> former state & authoritie. That is all y<sup>e</sup> we desire. But vnder pretence of the ancient boundes the meaning of y<sup>e</sup> Papiests is to maintaine themselves in possession of all their errors, ydolatries, & abhominations, which are so grosse as it would pittie a mans hart to think on them; & euē blind folks may seele them. Seeing the that they be so wilful; it is a flat mockerie to all-age those things in defence of their so long continued errors, which our Lorde hath ordeined here for worldly policie, & to the end y<sup>e</sup> equitie & vpright dealing might be maintained among men.

Let vs marke then, y<sup>e</sup> as touching Gods word, & as touching the doctrine of saluation, we had neede of another maner of antiquitie than the antiquitie of men. In this case it is not for vs to stand vpon the decrees of our forefathers: but God must be he by whom our faith must bee directed. Ye see then how we must resort to Gods euerlastingnes, if we wil make a sure foundatio. Neuertheless, as concerning mennes lawes, antiquitie is to be honoured, so as things bee not changed vpon foolish curiositie and rashnes: for that were to bee euer newe to begin. Therefore let men hold them to the ancient lawes as much as is possible. But when necessitie requieth alteration; there our Lorde wil haue vs to vse the means y<sup>e</sup> he sheweth & putteth into our hands: & the to be wilfully addicted to antiquity, is vetter bestlines. As touching equity, (as Moses saith here) let men beware of remouing their boundes, & let euery man content himself wth his owne, & not inroche vpon his neighbor or next dweller by. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to mark vpon this place.

Now here is another lawe , That one witnesse alone shall not be believed in any criminal case, whether it be trespassse, offence, or forseeit, but that the case shall stand in the mouth of two or three witnessses. Thus law hath beene admitted by men, without knowing that euer Moses spake it. For in very deede our Lord hath printed the things in mens heartes, which he did set forth in writing to his people. Surely it was a speciall grace that he vouchsafed to take vpon him the office of a lawgiuer to the people of Israel. Yet notwithstanding he woulde not haue men so brutish, as to bee without these groundes of equitie, euen as they are contained in the law of Moses. Seeing then that there is such agreeableness, let vs note that God neuer left mankind without some feede of vprightnesse remaining in them. True it is that men are fore blinded by reason of Adams sinne: but yet hath our Lorde left stil a certaine diserection ingrauen in their hearts, and that is but onely to make them vnexcusable, as saith S. Paul in the first chapter to the Romanes. Howbeit, there was this further regard also, that mankind might be maintained, & that there might bee some difference betwene men & beasts. That is the thing which we haue to learn by the agreeableness y<sup>e</sup> is found to be betwene the law of Moses & al the states of government that haue bin among all the Heathen in the world.

Moreouer wee must vnderstande howe it was Gods intent to ratifie the thing among his own people, which was alreadie knowne & obserued of all men, to y<sup>e</sup> intent that it might be of y<sup>e</sup> more autoritie. For not onely the consciences of the people of Israel did prouue it vnto them y<sup>e</sup> there could be no order among men, without y<sup>e</sup> things y<sup>e</sup> are contained here: but also they were taught it by Gods own mouth, & therefore it behooued them to condescend to his saying with all feare & reuerence. Ye see then that the people of Israel had a great aduantage, & so haue wee at this day, inasmuch as wee be succeeded in their roome. But nowe let vs come to that which is said here.

Our Lord wil not haue any one witnesse to be beleued in any case: that is to say, hee will not haue his euidence credited, to giue sentence vpon it. In deede witnessses must needs be admitted. For vntill they haue beene heard, a man can not tell what they wil say. Sometimes it falleth out, y<sup>e</sup> foure or fise witnessses are brought forth in one case, & none of them all deposith according to y<sup>e</sup> parties intent. And men beare themselves in hand, y<sup>e</sup> they haue witnessin their sleue: & yet when they haue brought men forth, all is found to be but smoke. A man the may we take one witnesse alone: but yet must not iudgement be giuen vpon y<sup>e</sup> hearing of him onely. What a thing were it, if one person should be so credited that vpon his bare word a man should be put to death, & be punished by law? Ye see it were too rigorous a thing. So then, it is not without cause y<sup>e</sup> God hath ordained y<sup>e</sup> there should be two witnesses before a case were iudged, y<sup>e</sup> is to say, that a man should be conuicted by two or three witnessses before sentence were giuen vpon him as guiltie, or before he were cōdemned to any punishment. For his speaking of three, is ment of any number about two. But by this expresse number, God ment to shew how it were no reason y<sup>e</sup> any one witness alone should be beleued, & his saying fo stooode vpon, a body should be condemned for it: y<sup>e</sup> that it is meeete there should be a larger & more sufficient proof of the matter. The third witnessse then is not of necessitie, but as it were of ouerplus. It is all one as if he should say, If there bee three witnessses, they bee mo than necede; but at the least there must needs be two. In deed here is no mention y<sup>e</sup> the witnessses should be vnblameable: but our Lord hath shewed alreadie in other places, that inquisition must be made of the hatred & rancour y<sup>e</sup> is among men; which ought to extend to witnessses as well as to other men: for although it bee not spoken of them, yet doth Moses presuppose y<sup>e</sup> the witnessses must be worthie of credit, & such as haue no sufficient cause in them why they should be reiectēd. That in effect is the thing that is contained here.

Now we be taught first & foremost by this text, y<sup>e</sup> if any of vs know of any euil, we must beare y<sup>e</sup> patiently vntill our Lorde do bring it to light.

For we see a number of men led with so vnadvised zeale, that they thinke themselves to haue wrong, if iudgement bee not giuen vpon their bare word. O say they, I know a man y<sup>e</sup> hath cōmitted such a wicked deede, I would therefore y<sup>e</sup> he should be condemned for it. Yea, but he is not yet conuicted of it. I know it, saith he, yea, but we must not pertuēt y<sup>e</sup> order of nature. Let vs keep our selues therefore from running headlong to be both witnessses & iudges in any case: & let vs tarry til our Lorde bring things to light.

And very needefull it is y<sup>e</sup> we should so do. For we see daily ex.amples of great numbers y<sup>e</sup> are straight in a chafe if a man beleuee them nor. Yea, but yet for all y<sup>e</sup>, was not our Lorde wiser than wee?

Then let vs learne to restraine our selues, & remember how S. Paul sayes, y<sup>e</sup> there are some sins which make hast to come to their condemnatiō, as though God did thrust the men forth by the shoulders, y<sup>e</sup> they might come of themselves to discouer their own shame: & that there be some other finnes which God referueth to himselfe, & those lye lurking a long time. And in deed if wee considered how God governeth the worlde; this thing were apparant ynough. But what wee iudge at alauenture, without consideration of our Lords doing. We be not wortheie to reape y<sup>e</sup> benefite of his workes, seeing we haue not y<sup>e</sup> modestie to restraine our selues, & to wait patiently & quietly til God haue performed his worke, at which time we should perceiue y<sup>e</sup> hee was not a sleepe when we were grieued that things came not forward. Ye see then y<sup>e</sup> finnes may bee committed, & some signes & tokens thereof shal come to sight, yea & it may hap that many men shal know of it. Behold there is a wicked man, & his faults are knowne: but yet it is not possible that he should be convicted of them by order of law. This is a sin that lyeth still in court. Now of all this while (as it is said in Genesis) the party may go forth where he wil, & wander in his own affection; but his sin is still at his doore, & watcheth him surely for going out. God then letteth men take their pleasure after that fashion for a time: & afterward bewrayeth the when it pleaseth him. And we see examples hereof as I said afore. There are some other sinnes which come to knowledge at the first puth, as though God had sifted them out. Therefore we must marke this rule, that we may brydle our selues, and not bee too hastie to iudge, but tarrie patiently for the convenient time. Also we haue to follow y<sup>e</sup> rule which our Lord Iesus Christ giueth vs; namely that if any man haue done amisse towards vs, wee warne him secretly; & that if hee receiue not our warning wee take two or three witnesses to vs, that in their mouth the thing may be the better stablished. Nowe it is certaine that in y<sup>e</sup> place our Lord speaketh of y<sup>e</sup> faults that are vnknown: for if there be an open offence giuen, so as the partie may be openly convicted: it is not meant that I should say to him secretly in his eare, Sir you haue done amisse. We see that our Lord Iesus Christs meaning was nothing so. As for those that allege that text nowadays when they haue offended in the open face of y<sup>e</sup> world, and say, Why do ye not warne me of it secretly betwene you & me? [We answer them,] & why did not you hide your self to doe your naughtines out of sight? Thou comest hither to poison a whole streete; & thou wouldest haue mee to draw thee aside into some corner to tell thee of thy fault. Wee see a number of these nyce persons which know not one word of y<sup>e</sup> gospel more than this text; & yet they do falsifie that too.

Our Lord speaketh there of y<sup>e</sup> sins that are vnknown, & whereof they haue no witnesses. Therefore it behooueth vs to follow the order which we heare in that behalf. When a man hath done amisse & there is none to beare witness of it, he must be admonished secretly, & haue his faulte layd afore him: & if hee bee wilfull, then must I take two or three witnesses with me, & proue it to his face: for otherwise it cannot be done. If we were so delt with, we should not be so lustie as we be, at leastwise as a number of vs are: but we would vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> it is our Lordes wil to keepe vs in vne, & that whereas our faults come not to light at the first committing of them, but God seemeth willing to concale them: the same is not without cause. And although it be a temptation that is hard for vs to beare, yet doth God do it to our benefite, to the intent that we should inure our selues to patience, & strue against the euill, though wee cannot discouer it when wee would.

Moreouer let vs marke also, that whereas our Lord punisheth not a number of faultes in the sight of men, he suffereth the to come to knowledge: therby it is his wil to shew vs, that we must walke before him, & that wee must content our selues with his record, although men knowe not what wee be. It is said in the common proverb, that a mans owne conscience is as good as a thousand witnesses: and they that haue saide so, knew neither why nor wherefore. Yet notwithstanding God wresteth that saying out of their mouthes, as if a man should drawe an offender to execution. On our part we must vnderstande, y<sup>e</sup> the reason is, that inasmuch as God enlighteneth our consciences & is the Iudge of them; we haue mo than a thousand witnesses. For our sinnes must be layd open, not only before y<sup>e</sup> Angels of heauen, but also before all creatures. Seeing then that our consciences are enlightened by God, & must answer before him: let vs not thinke it strange that it should counteruaile a thousand witnesses. But now let vs come to that which I spake of. It may bee that I liue honestly & vprightly, so as my desire is to serue God, and to discharge my selfe towards my neighbours also, & al this shalbe ill taken, & no man will cum me thanke for my labour. If it greue mee that men perceiue not the soundnesse that is in me, & therupon do seeke the more to bee known; I receiue my reward in this worlde, as sayeth our Lord Iesus Christ. Neuertheless let vs marke, that God to draw vs to him, will oftentimes not suffer vs to be known of men, but will haue vs to be taken for other than we be. And that is (as I said afore) to the end we should hold our selues contented with his only record, & that y<sup>e</sup> same should wey so much with vs, as wee might desyre the whole worlde, so God allowe of vs. Marke that for one poynt. Again, when men giudge against vs, wee must haue the courage and constancie to appeale continually vnto God, and to take him for our sufficient warrant. Thus y<sup>e</sup> see on the one side what we haue to beare in mind.

Mat. 6. 5.

But in the meane while wee see howe the wicked doe mocke both God and the worlde, & harden themselves in their leaudnesse, because they bee not called forth to Iustice for it, nor are punished for it. For sometimes they be born with, and sometimes also our Lord holdeth them at that stay to increafe their condemnation. Yet notwithstanding let not vs be tempted to resemble them, neither let vs be grieued at their escaping so from the handes of men, and that they be not condemned out of hand by order of iustice. For what shall they gaine by it? So little is their market mended by it, that it shall serue to increafe their confusion before God, as hath bene saide alreadie. If our Lorde bring a mans sinne to knowledge, it will surely grieue him at the first, and when hee shalbe driuen to his shifts, it will make him to looke about him and to thinke thus with himselfe: What though I am false and haue committed this fault? Is it reason that men should come and rebuke mee thus roughly at the first dash? I see such a one haunt these things more than I, and I see such a one offende more grossely than I, and yet they scape vnpunished. I in the meane while haue chanced to make a scape, rather of ouersight than of any euill purpose; and must men bee so rough and fierce vpon mee? Such complaints and murmuringes shal a man heare; or if the partie that is greued make not complaint

Gen. 15. 16.

plaint after that manner before men, yet sayeth he not to repine in his heart. But we regard not the foresaid things as we ought to do. And therefore our Lord perceiving vs to bee in danger of talling asleepe, if our misdoings should be suffered and let slip at the first: putteth vs into the handes of men to bee corrected by Iustice. And his so dooing is for our benefite. For we must alwayes come backe to this saying, that God chastiseth those whome he loueth, shewing thereby that hee hath his eye vpon them as vpon his children, & that therefore hee holdeth them the nearer to him. That is the thing wherunto it would behoue vs to haue an eye. Neuerthelesse if our Lord giue the wicked the brydle, so as they heape sin vpon sin before it come to y knowledge of men, & no countenance is made towards them of punishing them. it is an increasing of their condemnation, by ranceling in their owne payson, & the diuel wholly driueth them into a reprobate sense, vntill they bee come to their full measure. Let vs see what the inhabitants of the land of Chanaan fare y better by Gods bearing with them by the space of foure hundred yeres. They were alreadie malicious and firoward, there was no faithfulness nor loyalty among them, they were extremely cruel: moreover, whoteloine, extortion, & such other like things raigned among them: & for all that, God maketh as though he saw it not. But what came of it: It was tolde Abraham that their iniquities were not yet come to the full. That saying is set down to vs for a general rule. And therefore whe our Lord forbearth to condemne the wicked at the first push, let vs assure our selues that their iniquitie is not yet full ripe. And how so? Is the sinne of Gods children come to full ripenessse at the first day as soothe as they haue done amisse? No: but our Lords intent is to chastice his children in such wise as amendment may insue of it, that his correcting of the may serue for a salue to heale them: whereas his suffering of the wicked folkes sinnes to come to full ripenessse, is for that he punisheth them not but deadly. Thus ye see what wee haue to beare in mind, where mention is made of two or three witnesses.

Furthermore, hereby wee be warned not to make delay till wee bee conuicted by witnesses before men. Let the remorse of our owne conscience be a sufficient rebuke vnto vs: for it is as much as if God cyted vs before him, & made vs to be indyted, & impannelled a queest vpon vs, & condemned vs. Doth our owne conscience speak to vs? It is as much as if God had made great Registers of our sinnes, & wee saw witnesses brought in against vs, not one or two, but a hundred. For (as I haue layd alreadie) our owne conscience is of more force than a hundred witnesses. Ye see how euery man ought to looke necessarily to himselfe, so as wee wrye not our mouthes when wee haue done amisse, vnder colour that no man hath perceived vs, & that there bee no witnesses that can shame vs for it before men. Also let vs make, y inasmuch as our Lord hath sent vs his Prophets and Apostles, they be such sufficient witnesses as shalbe heard before all y private persons that can be brought foorth at this day against vs. S. Paul speaking to the Corinthians layeth, that seeing hee had written to them alreadie, & told them of their faultes, and doth likewise againe the second time: if they amend not, it was all one as if they were conuicted by two or three witnesses. Yea & he vseth this selfesame text, ye know (sayth he) that God hath ordeyned that two or three witnesses shold be credited. Now, I come to you againe; & looke how many times I speake, so many records will it be against you before the heavenly Iudge. I summon you not here before men; neither will God forget the things that I doe towards you: for his stirring of mee vp to giue you warning, is to hold you the more conuicted.

Now let vs apply these things to our selues, & let vs vnderstand (as I sayd afore) that seeing we haue Moses & the Prophets, wee haue witnesses y now. True it is, that they speake not as now before men, they let vs alone and trouble vs not: but yet for all that let not vs fall asleepe, for our flattering of our selues will stande vs in no steede, but to plunge vs the deeper in Gods curse. But forasmuch as our Lorde setteth vs these witnesses before our faces: let euery of vs be think himselfe; & seeing wee haue here our Lord Iesus Christ and his Apostles, let vs be the more moued to make our own inditements and to preuent Gods iudgements. For if wee condemne our selues, it wilbee a meane to obtaine fauour at his hand: and our faultes shalbee forgiven vs, if we craue pardon w vnfeined mistaking of them, desiring to depart quite & cleane from them. And not only y Prophets & Apostles shal be our witnesses before God; but also all y faithful that euer haue bene in the worlde shall reprove our vnbeliefe & disobedience, if wee become not the better by the doctrine that hath been preached vnto vs. And for that cause doth the Apostle in the twelfth to the Hebrewes say, y we must haue a good eye to the great and thicke cloud of witnesses. Hee vseth this similitude there, which at the first may seeme fond; neuerthelesse it is not without cause that hee saith there is a great & thicke cloud of witnesses, after he hath made mention of the Martyrs that had suffered. For we see that the faithful were constant to death, & held out to the vttermost when men went about to turne them away from the lawe of God, so as they could not bee made to swaue or step aside for any torments that were put vnto them. All they (saith he) are witnesses: As if he should say, there needeth none other proces against vs before god, for our negligence in these dayes: in so much that if wee faint for feare, & forsake God & his worde, our proces is sufficiently concluded, & information is already giuen against vs saith he. And why so? For it is not a two or three witnesses onely, but a great cloud of witnesses that stand vp against vs, which are able euen to stop our eyes. Seeing then that the case standeth so with vs: let vs note that it behoueth vs to let our eyes more aduisedly vpō God, & to better our selues in such wise by the things wherewith hee enlighteneth vs in his worde, & by the doctrine which he will haue to bee confirmed vnto vs by such witnesses as hee raiseth vp, & daily bringeth forth, as wee tary not til he thame vs & confound vs before men: but let euery of vs condemne himselfe. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in making comparisons betwixt the iudgements of men and the iudgements of God. Namely that although me do let vs alone, we must not think we haue sped the better, for our inditement is thoroughly framed afore the heavenly Iudge, though our faults were bidden & buried before men, so as neuer any mention or incling were made of them.

Now to make a conclusion of this text, where as he saith that all cases shalbe stablised in the mowthes of two or thre witnesses: it was our Lords will to speake here generally, doing vs to vnderstand that if that were not, there would bee no more order among men. For if men will not be contented with two witnesses, offences must needs be fostered, & there wilbe euery day greater disorder than other, whereby Gods wrath shalbee prouoked against the whole country, as hath bin said before. Therefore is it requisite that all matters shoulde bee stayed & concluded at the mouth of two or three witnesses. That is y<sup>e</sup> drift of Moses in speaking so. Howbeit, men wil allege thus: It is a dangerous matter; for false witnesses may be suborned, & if they be beleued, a mā may soone be oppressed, & he might be wronged in a rightful case. It is true y<sup>e</sup> such allegation may be made, & examples thereof are to be seene. But yet doth it not follow y<sup>e</sup> there should not be some certaine rule for men to direct themselves by, & to hold themselves vnto, whatsoeuer inconueniencies may be alleaged. For we see that when me be minded to do euil, they seeke the darke by all the meanes they can, they founde no trumpet, they call no witnesses to their doings. If it bee a thing that is for their aduantage & profite, they can skill wel ynough to call witnesses: but when they do euil, they hyde themselves: & though they be spied, yet they go about to blear mens eyes. And what would come of it then, seeing there are so many shiftes vsed to conceale euill doings, if two witnesses might not bee admitted in a matter? Neuer could any thing be condemned, but all iustice must needs go to wreck, & we should lue together like brute beasts. Not without cause therefore doth our Lord tel vs heere, y<sup>e</sup> two or three witnesses must be credited, yea euē in all cases; though it concerned a mans life an hundred times, yet ought it to stande for good. But wee see how the diuel hath practised continually to ouerthrow this order. And why? For he knoweth that hee could not deuise a better way to win vs, than by couering our faultes, because that by that meanes Gods wrath is kindled daily more & more, & euery man taketh y<sup>e</sup> greator & more excessiue libertie to do what he listeth: in so much that the nonpunishing of his leawdnes, maketh him to think it lawfull, & so he goeth on from one wickednes to another. Yea, it becommeth a cōmon infection like y<sup>e</sup> plague: if it be not remedied in time, it will poyson all. In like case is it with euil deedes. That is y<sup>e</sup> cause why the diuel hath alwayes practised that there might be no proofe of things, or else that there might be so many startingholes, as mens offences might not come to knowledge, to be cōdemned. And therefore our Lord saith expressly, that the matter must be tried at the mouth of two or three witnesses. It is not Gods wil y<sup>e</sup> there shold be any exemption in that behalf. For they that be in high degree, ought to giue y<sup>e</sup> greater light: & if they offend, the fault is double, & deserueth to be the grieuously punished. Therefore they must hold themselves to that, & there ought to be as great rigor at the least vsed towards them, as towards those y<sup>e</sup> may better be born withall.

And so let vs marke, y<sup>e</sup> seeing our Lord hath tol'd vs that two witnesses ought to be beleued in all cases; it is an ouerthrowing of that good lawe, to alleage that inconueniencies may insue of it, as some alwayes do, raising this doubt & that doubt to bring al things to confusion. O say they, such a thing may come of it. A man may alleage that y<sup>e</sup> clouds wil fall out of the aire. And we haue seene examples therof. For without going any further, when one [was to be punished which] went about here to ouerthrow Gods order, & y<sup>e</sup> things that our Lord Iesus hath ordained by his word: O we will none of that, said some: And why? For such an inconuenience might insue of it. And was that inconuenience seene? No. But a man can not tel what might come. And their meaning was, that Iesus Christ should not reigne by his word. After that manner did they greue God.

And vnder what pretence? For sooth that some inconuenience might ensue of it. Lo here a Iewish wisdome. Nowe then if wee see necessitie pinch vs & hold vs short; whatsoeuer impediment or quarell doe set it selfe against vs, let vs learne neuertheless to follow Gods cōmandement without disobedience in word or deede. And that is a thing which we haue to gather vpon this text, ouer & beside the things that haue beene declared.

Nowe let vs cast our selues downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to hold vs for within our bounds by his word, as that the great number of our vices & imperfections hinder vs not from obeying his holy wil, & from abiding within the listes which hee hath set vs, but that we may be quickened vp by y<sup>e</sup> witnesses which he giueth vs; And seeing hee draweth vs to him by so many means, we may not be so vnthankful as to drag backe when he calleth vs, & to seeke starting holes to hyde our sinnes, & to bury them before men, but rather giue him glorie by confessing them, & conceiue not any other hope of saluation than through his mercie: & that euery of vs may locke to himselfe, as we may be witnesses and Iudges to our selues, y<sup>e</sup> he may receiue vs to mercie, when hee shall see that the euill dislyketh vs, and that we haue not gone about to shrinke away from yeelding obedience vnto him. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Munday the xvj. of December. 1555.

16 If a falsewitnesse rise vp against any man, to beare witnesse against him for any transgression:

17 Then the two men that are at variance shall stande before the Lorde in the presence of the high Priestes and Iudges that shalbe in those dayes.

18 And the Iudges shall make good inquirie, and if it be founde that the false witnesse hath giuen falsewitnesse against his brother:

19 Then shalt thou do vnto him, as he ment to haue done to his brother. And so thou shalt rid away euil from among you.

20 And others hearing thereof shall be afraide, and not doe any such wicked deede among you from thencefoorth.

21 Thine eye shall not spare him: but life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hande for hande, and foote for foete.

Whe haue seene heeretofore after what maner God wold haue all things brought to end: namely by prouing the truth by good record: and yet that no infinite number of witnesses should be required, but y<sup>e</sup> men should hold themselves contented with twain that could beare record of the deede. For as I sayd, offences should abide unpunished, if men should not stand vpon the recorde of two witnesses. Yea and we see how a number of men conceale the truth and foreweare themselves, in so much that when the prooue of a crime committed commeth to triall, a man shall haue much ado to finde one faithfull witness: among three or foure. Therefore if the nūber were not determinate, what a thing were it? Notwithstanding forasmuch as y<sup>e</sup> witnesses doe more in a case than the Iudge himselfe as the common proverbe saith: it behooueth them for their part to be held in awe, and that they haue no libertie giuen them nor gap opened to them to oppresse guiltlesse persons. For if y<sup>e</sup> might be suffered, it were better for men to be in the woods among theeues, than to be in a citie where law is to be executed: for false witnesses would murder such men with their tongues, as could defend themselves from the robbers. And therefore our Lord addeth, if an vnfaithfull witness be falsly depozed; and that the defendant feeling himselfe g. euiled alledge that the record is false and wicked: he shall be heard. Now a man may mislike of the witnesses before they giue their euidence, if there be iust cause, or at least wile if there be some colour: but here it is for the defendant to shewe that the witnessing was false.

And it is sayde, that both of them shall come before the Highpriest and the Iudges that shall in that time, and the Iudges shall inquire diligently of the matter. And if they find that the guiltlesse person is g. euiled, a falsedealer must be punished, & a ch. without any spa-ving: in so much that if he approached his neighbour of a matter of life, his owne life shall answer for it: or if he intended any hurt to him, he shall forgoe eye for eye, foote for foote, hande for hande: that is to say, hee shall be cured of the same fauce himselfe. That is the very effect of our Lorde his meaning in this text. And let vs marke that here our Lord sheweth vs that witnessbearing is a holy thing: and in deede, when witnesses are brought forth, they ought to thinke that it is God whome they come to serue in y<sup>e</sup> deede: True it is that men may well bring the forth; but yet in the meane while, who is the founder of that order? Is not God the author thereof? Then must men haue an eye to him about all. Again, he that bringeth forth a witness, can not say that he is to be examined in his name: But God is there to receiue the oth: & when a man is made to lift vp his hand when he should giue euidence, he is called as it were before God. Therefore to be stout, let vs marke, that whensoever we beare witness in any matter of Lawe, we do as it were a holy deede; in respect whereof we ought to goe to it with the more reuerence and care. For perurie carrieth with it high treason against God: in so much as we blaspheme against the name and maiestie of God; And it is he, against whom the treacherie is committed, and not against a creature. And that is the cause why so greuous punishment is heere expressly appointed vnto it, in so much that God will not haue that witness to be spared. True it is that hee hath an eye to the wrong and wicked dealing which hee offered to the guiltlesse person. Neuertheless his intent is also that there should be a reuerence hadde to the order which he had set downe for the common benefite of all men. And moreover forasmuch as he himselfe beareth chiefe stroake there, hee will haue men to honour his maiestie, and not to dally with him after that fashion. And in deede, we see how men take more libertie in tor-swearing themselves, than in any other misdoings. And why is that? Because they beare themselves in hande, that God will easily forgie it. Yea forsooth, as who should say hee made not more account of his owne glorie than of all that euer concerneth vs. Againe in all other faultes men haue some shame to holde them backe, they be affrayde least it should be prooued by them, or that it should be perceiued. But the wicked for make but a mouth at it when they forswear themselves; Tush (say they) who shal aske vengeance of it? Who shall followe the suite of it? Yea, as who should say there were no GOD in heauen. Nowe then let vs marke, that forasmuch as men take leaue & dispense with themselves so easily in committing of perurie; and that it is not looked vnto of men, but it is let slip without punishing: that therefore God must be faine to referue it wholly to his owne examination, and the crime must be so much the more accountable before his iudgement seate, where it shall be punished double. Marke well therefore what we haue to beare in minde, that euery man may looke to himselfe, and that we may be fully resolu'd, that we be bounde to yeelde recorde to the truth, as oft and whensoever we be called thereto: and that wee defraude both God and our neighbours of that which is due vnto them, when we can help them in any good case and doe not, which is all one as if we robbed them of that which belongeth vnto them. That is an Item to them that conceale and dissemble the truth when they be required to speake it.

Furthermore let vs beare in minde that our coming to doe that, must be as though GOD called vs before his owne face, and did set downe his name there before vs saying, as ye haue any estimation of my name, see that ye beare faithfull recorde, without fauour or hatred: bee not led by any affection, but onely doe what yee can to report what ye knowe, without respect of any person. Were this well obserued, we should see another manner of feare of God in all giuing of euidence than we doo. How great libertie fouer the world take, & although most men passe their boundes without any awe of God: yet must not this lesse be lost: but we must learne to practise it, euen with horrour to beholde the great blackness which reigneth euery where, in that men do so mocke God, and ruff against him with such boldnesse and presumption.

And nowe it is sayde expressly, that the parties must come both into the presence of the Lord, before the Priests and Iudges. Whereby Moses doeth vs to vnderstande, that God is present at the executing of Iustice, because all is done by his authoritie and in his name. And this text is yet verie well worthe to be noted. For when men come before a Iudge, they thinke they haue hyed them well, if they may deceiue him: but there are verie fewe that consider the Iudge to be Gods liuenaunt. In deepe men can finde in their hearts to confesse that Iustice is a diuine thing, and that God beareth chiefe sway therein, it collecth them nothing to lay so: but as for to be touch'd with it to the quicke, and to beare well in minde that when we appeare before a Iudge, God doth presently beholde vs, so as we can not conceale any thing from him, but he writes vp all things in his registers, in so much that although wee be spared by men, yet we must come to account for it before God: wee neuer thinke of that. But yet doth this text warne vs, y<sup>e</sup> we must neuer goe to law, but w<sup>i</sup>nt<sup>e</sup> to demeane ourselues as in Gods presence: assuring ourselues y<sup>e</sup> although nothing in the worlde be hidden from him; yet hee will haue men to acknowledge a certain Ipecciall presence of his maiestie in the order of Iustice. True it is that euen when men be in their chambers or in their beddes, they ought to thinke still that they be continually in the sight of God: and although it be his proprietie to search all things & to examine euen the bottom of mens thoughts: yet notwithstanding, it is his will to haue a notable marke of his maiestie and glorie to appeare in the order of gouernment which he hath set in the worlde, by appointing Iudges to bee as his liuenaunts and officers, and he will haue men to knowe that he himselfe is there, and that hee guideth and governeth the whole action. In the Popedome, because men knowe not that God is present at the executing of Iustice, they haue Puppets and Paintings, and Crucifixes, and I wore not what else. For those beastes beare themselves in hande, that images are laymens bookes as they terme them. But it ought to suffice vs that God telleth vs here with his owne mouth, y<sup>e</sup> he himselfe sitteth in the seate of Iustice where earthly men be ordeined in his name; and that whereas there be Priests and Iudges, he will haue men to knowe that that is not done without him, but that he mainteineth that order because hee hath once established it among vs. When we heare such doctrine proceeding out of Gods owne mouth, must it not needes be that we be too dull, and y<sup>e</sup> the deuil hath made vs starke beasts, if wee be not touch'd with it? Nowe then let vs not looke to haue stockes and puppets set before our eyes to gaze vpon: but let vs haue Gods liuely image printed in our hartes, and let vs consider that seeing it is his will to haue mankind gouerned by that meane: he doth also assist it, and is at hande vnto it, so as the things y<sup>e</sup> are doone there, are guided by him, & ought also to be referred vnto him: And that wh<sup>e</sup> we come thither, it is to appeare as it were before his maiestie, as I haue declared already.

And this serueth, not only for earthly Iustice, but also much more for the meetings y<sup>e</sup> are made to the ende y<sup>e</sup> God should teach vs by his worde. For when we come thither to heare the doctrine of the Gospel, God is much more apparatly present with vs therein than in the order of Iustice. True it is (as I haue sayd already) that when we come before a Iudge, we come before God: but here is the spirituall doctrine whereby we should be lifted vp to heauen, & mens lawes are of no account here; because there is none y<sup>e</sup> speaketh but God. Therefore let vs marke, that when we come to the Church to be taught, or when any of vs openeth the byble at home in his owne house; Iesus christ must needes be there as though we sawe him before our eyes . Not that wee must haue any fleshly conceite of him : but that we must approach vnto him by fayth , and consider howe it is not in vaine that he hath tolde vs , that wheresoeuer two or three meete together in his name , there is he in the middes of them . Then let vs consider that not onely we be heere before the Angelles of heauen , but also that the sonne of God beholdeth vs . And as hee liketh wel of the confession of the faith which we make vnto him ; and of our obedient resorting hyther to knowe the will of GOD his father , and to suffer ourselues to bee governed by him and by his doctrine : so likewise when we come hyther faynedly , so as we make none account of his worde , or beare ourselues in hande that wee be discharged for carrying heere an houre or twaine : wee must come to a reckening for it ; for we vnhalowe the thing which our Lorde Iesus Christ had made holy for our saluation . Wherefore is the doctrine preached vnto vs ? Is it that God hath any prohte by it ? No , but for our benefite . Nowe if the same be disappointed through our vnthankfulnessse ; is it not a trampling of the precious stones vnder our feete which were offered vnto vs ? Is it the foode of our soules , and wee will not eate of it , but will needes fast still : or rather wee be filled with winde , there is no true satisfaction in vs . Of whome is it long but of our owne leaudenesse , that wee thrust away the grace which God did put into our handes ? And therefore , that wee may bee the better disposed to receiue the Gospell , let vs vnderstande that wee must neuer repayre to the Church , but wee must thinke that our comming thither is to offer ourselues into Gods presence , so as our Lorde Iesus Christe may beare such way there , yea and be so present , as it may appaere that the grace and power of his holy spirite accompanie him , that his worde may haue such force as to enter into our hartes , to touch vs to the quick e , and to edifie vs . But if wee haue our eares beaten with the things that are preached vnto vs , and in the meane while our liues bee nothing aunswerable to the same ; but wee continue as colde as wee were before : that commeth to passe because we consider not that our Lorde Iesus Christ is present to make his worde auaylable , which is vnto vs by the meanes of men . That is the thing which we haue to gather vpon this text , where it is sayd that the parties which are at variance must appaere in the presence of the Lord .

And it is added , that they must also appaere before the Priestes and Iudges for the same being . It is an exposition of these wordes of God . And to what ende serueth that ? That folke should not haue an eye to mennes persons ; but rather consider what state they represented there ? Were the priestes made at their owne pleasure ? No . No more were the Iudges . GOD was the author of them both . Nowe then forasmuch as he hath sette them in that office , and gouerneth them by his power : hee will haue men to knowe that he himselfe is there . And Moses will in any wise haue the priestes to be there : not that the ciuill iurisdiction is allotted vnto them , ( as I haue declared heerebefore ) : but to strike the greater reuerence into such as hadde to deale or to doe in matters of so great importance . For if a man be annoyed by iusticewitnesse , hee is as good as halfe dead already . And therefore he was to be succoured by an extraordinary means . That is the cause why God ioyneth the Priestes and the Iudges together .

Yet notwithstanding it is sayde that the Iudges shall make good inquirie of the matter . Wherein he sheweth that which wee haue seene heerebefore : namely that to comforte one man , wee must not greue an other . For it is no small thing to ouertrowe an euidence : I haue tolde you heerebefore howe it is a holy thing . Nowe if any man abuse it , hee must be punished for his labour . But yet on the other side , it must also be well known and verified that such an abuse is committed . Therefore is it sayde expressly , that diligent inquirie is to be made . For it is a sore matter to aler or reuerse a thing that hath passed by order of Lawe . And for the same cause it is sayde , If hee be founde to haue giuen false euidence , and to haue practised to doe his neighbour wrong : let him be punished with the selfesame punishment , and let not thine eye spare him , but ridde away the euill from among you : to the ende that they which haue thereof may be afrayd , and no moe such deedes be committed afterwarde . Heere Moyses noteth the circumstances , which euen the heathen themselves knewe . For we must alwayes come backe to that which is spoken in the eight Chapter of Salomons prouerbes , where it is sayde , Prou. 8. 15. It is through Gods wisdom that kinges reigne and that Lawes and statutes are made thereby . Therefore when as the heathen made Lawes , it came not first of all of their own brayn : for whereas they made sonde and blockish Lawes , therein God gaue them the brydle , and it was to the ende that men should knowe that when men followe their owne wit , they ouershoote themselves pitifull , yea euen in the things that concerne this present life . And what must they needes doe then , when they be to passe beyond the worlde ? In that case men are vterly blinde . God then ment to shewe by some things , that mens wits are too weake to iudge well of equitie and vprightnesse , and yet notwithstanding , that forasmuch as he was minded to shewe his prouidence ouer all mankind ; he inspired those with equitie and vprightnesse , whose ductie it was to make Lawes & statutes . And it is the very same thing which I was aboute to tell vnto you of Salomons prouerbes , that the wisdom of God chalendgeth this to be her office . The heathen knewe that thing well ynough , affirming y Lawes were Gods giifte , and not the inuention of man . And God wrested out that confession fro them , to the intent that their vnthankfulness should be the lesse excusable , as we see heree .

For whereas Moses sayeth , that the partie shall bee punished which hath but euen practised against his neighbour : hee sayeth not simply , against the truth . And thereby he excludeth ouersight , so that if there were any error hee would not haue the punishment to bee so greuous. Againe whereas he setteth downe that the offender should not be spared: his meaning is that if a man spare one that hath procured the death of the guiltlesse, hee is dubble cruell to him that was in danger of his life.

Whereas he sayeth that others hearing thereof shall commit no more any such act: hee sheweth the principall ende, which is also set downe by ciuill Lawes, namely that punishments shoulde be executed for examples sake. The punishing of a theefe is not onely for his misdeedes sake or for the crimes sake: but also to teach others by it, and to holde them in awe, so as they may be ashamed of such dealing and abhorre it. In like case is it with murderers when bloudshed is reuenged. And why is that? Is it onely for the faultes sake that is doone and past? No, but to prouide for afterwarde that murdering and all manner of shedding of mans bloud may be eschued. Ye see then howe punishmentes doe serue for example. And that is a thing well worthie to be marked: for we may gather a dubble lesson thereof. First that such as occupie the roome of iustice, ought to thinke themselves worthie of blame before God and the worlde, for all y faults which they let slip vnpunished. And why? For it is an opening of the gate and a giuing of libertie to all others to do the like. Beholde, one that is founde to be a theefe, a murderer or a whore-monger, is winked at and let slip. And why? because he is pityed. And by that means the offender escapeth scotfree. By reason whereof other become the bolder to doe the like. For why? It is an increasing of the mischiefe, when men see offences scape vnpunished; and the bridle is let loose which otherwise had bin restrained, if euill doings had bin punished without respect of persons. Behold, one aduouty is committed after another, two or three murders are committed together, and three or foure robberies are done one in an others necke. And who is the cause of all this? Euen the Iudge himself; he is the principall theefe, he is the principall adulterer, he is y principall murderer. It is he that hath robbed God of his glory and men of the right which he would haue to be obserued, it is he that hath as it were made open proclamation that offenders should make their hand and scape scotfree for it. Now then let vs marke well, that whereas Moses hath declared that wicked witnesses must be punished, that other men may beware by them, and be afraide when they heare of it, and doe no suche dedde any more: hee sheweth thereby, that if Iudges haue not the sternesse to punish misdeedes without relenting, when they come to their knowledge; they be the cause of all the mischeefes that are committed afterwarde. For they did as it were giue leaue to them, in that they punished not the partie as they ought to haue done, whome they sawe to haue offended. And therefore let them looke wel to their charge vlesse they will be blamed as procurers of horrible confusion about all other men, for want of executing of iustice as they shoulde haue done. Let that serue for one point.

And herewithall we be taught further, that wee must learne to make our gaine of other mennes harmes. The punishmentes of other men for their offences must be a brydle to vs, or else wee bee verie blinde, for they bee as lookingglasses vnto vs. When we see a theefe punished, it is as a warning giuen vnto vs by our Lorde, to put vs in minde that robbetie is condemned before him. The same is to be sayde of murders, of adulteries, and of other like things. True it is that euen without those examples wee ought to be wise ynough to restraine ourselues: but yet if we be so harde hearted and negligent, as not to haue sufficient regarde of the brydling of our selues without warning by such visible examples: at leastwise lette vs learne to fare the better by those things, when they be added for our help. But when a theefe is whipped or hanged, or when a murderer is beheaded, if the sight therof wey no further with vs than to make vs refraine for feare of men or for feare of punishment by order of Lawe: it is a small matter, and we be neuer the better by it. Nay, we must stepe one stepe further: which is, to consider that G O D who reigneth ouer vs in heauen, will haue the punishmentes of offenders to be as liuely pictures to shewe vs that murderers, & theeues, and all such like, shal not scape his hande, but that although they be not punished here beneath, yet they must come at length before the heavenly Iudge. Let vs then consider that: and let vs take such warning by it, as euery of vs may brydle ourselues. For that is the seconde point whereto wee must come, if we intende to receiue good instruction by any of the punishmentes that are executed vpon mens crimes and misdeedes. Yea and lette vs not rarie till men setto their handes: but whensoever G O D executeth his iudgements, let vs awake to thinke vpon them more aduisedly, as Saint Paule exhorteeth vs. Beware (sayeth he) that no man deceiue you: for by reason of such things doeth Gods wrath come vpon the disobedient. He sayeth not that the disobedient shall bee punished by earthly iustice, for manie times iustice sleepeeth vpon earth, and is not executed with such force and liuelinesse as were requisite. But Saint Paul sayeth, that Gods wrath is wont to come vpon the disobedient; and therefore take heede (sayeth hee) that vaine wordes deceiue you not. And in that place hee speaketh of Theft, Murder, Whooredome. O, will some say, It is lawful for a man to reuenge himselfe: and if a man haue done mee a displeasure, I may requite him with the like. Likewise concerning Lecherie, the despisers of G O D and these leaude persons which are not worthie to goe vpon the grounde, say it is but a naturall sinne. But Saint Paul sayeth, Looke well about you, and although euill deedes scape vnpunished in this worlde, thinke not that G O D will therefore omittle his dewtie: all things must come to account before him. Neuertheless, when yee see that he layeth his hande vpon an offender; lette it be as a sommoning to euery of you, and let it doe you to wit, that his granting of you the fauour to see otherfolkes punished before your faces, is to the ende you benefite your selues by his correction . And so yee see what wee haue to make in that Moses sayeth that the punishing of crimes must serue for common example and instruction, yea euen when they be but heard of .

Nowe besides our Lordes chastising of such as haue offended; hee doeth also make vs to heare of his Iustice by his worde, in that the threatens of his Lawe be dayly rehearued vnto vs, and in that we be tolde of the examples which are sette downe in the holy scripture, concerning such as haue beene punished at Gods hande : and are not we too too dulwitred if we take no heede by them? Albeit that GOD spake not at all, but onely wrought in the punishing of murderers, theeues, blaspheemers, periurers, aduouterers, and whoremongers : yet ought wee not to be so blockish as to take no heede by it . But nowe seeing that God by stretching out his arme after that fashion against the transgressors of his Lawe and ordinance, doeth put vs in minde that his fo doing is not for nought, but rather to call vs to amendment: must it not needes bee that we be too too harde hearted, if we continue still in our former state? Nay let vs followe that which Moses telleth vs heere, and learne to open our eares when God speaketh vnto vs, and to marke well not onely the examples of the punishmentes which we see presently executed vpon the wicked : but also all the examples that haue beene since the beginning of the worlde, so as we may apply them to our owne vse, & learne by them to liue in awe, that no such act may be committed among vs. For hee sayeth not heere that the punishing of misdeedes shall be to the ende that men should onely condemne them in wordes: but to the ende that all men should be a fraide and doe no more so . And that is a thing very worthy to be well noted . For we beare our selues in hande that it is enough for vs to haue condemned a crime, and to haue liked well of the Iustice that is executed for it . O (say wee) he deserued it right well . We condemne an other man, and in the meane while wee ourselues are oftentimes more faultie than he . But God will haue every man to be his owne Iudge. Therefore when we see offences punished, let vs be a fraide, and let vs restraîne ourselues, that no such things be done among vs any more. Ye see then that that was one thing more which wee had to remember vpon this text.

And let vs marke, that whereas here is mentioned made of feare, although Moses treateth but of outwarde government, yet must we conceiue a better kinde of feare, that is to wit a reuerende awe of God. To say the truth, the onely feare which we haue of punishment would not suffice. It were too slender a thing, and God should be too ill serued at our hands, if there were none other ende: yet neuertheless, because of our infirmitie, the punishmentes that are executed ought to bee as prouocations vnto vs, to liue in the more awe. Good reason woulde that the loue of GOD should goe before, and that the reuerence which wee beare vnto him, should breed an earnest desire in vs to fashion ourselues all wholly to his righteounesse; but foras much as we be slouthfull and slowe : God vouchsafeth vs this helpe for our weakenesse, that wee may take warning to amende, by all the punishmentes which he executeth . Alas that I should bee so madde as to goe make warre wilfully against GOD. I knowe by such an example which hee hath giuen me, that hee abhorreth such a crime: and shall I nowe runne headlong into it? Were it not an open fighting against him, if I should deale so against all wit and reason? Yee see then howe we ought to be restrained by the chastisements which GOD executeth, and that the feare of him ought to beare such sway in vs, as to make vs in deuour to fashion ourselues according to his righteounesse, and to submit ourselues to his good will.

But nowe let vs come to the punishment that Moses addeth. His saying is that there shall be Life for life, Eye for eye, Tooth for tooth, Foote for foote, and Hande for hande. As if he should saie, that hee which hath gone about to do his neighbour harme, shall be serued of the same lawe himselfe . For when one man practiseth an others death, if he should be but put to his fine, and so discharged of it for a peece of money without answering any further: what a thing were it? Is all the goods of any man able to counteruaile the life of an other? Peraduenture the partie whose life is sought is but a poore man that hath nothing: but yet is hee such a creature as is fashioned after the image of God. There commeth a riche man to oppresse him, and in deede, the poore soule is as good as halfe dead aforehande, if hee bee oppressed by false witnesse.

Nowe if it be sayde, yea, but his aduerfarie is a rich man, hee may well make him good recompence: what recompence I pray you, can be made for a mans life? Therefore our Lorde minding to take away all such shifts, sayeth, that if any man haue practised the death of his neighbour, he himselfe shall dye for it without any pitie or compassion . If hee haue gone about to hurt him in his eye, or in his arme, or in his foote, he himselfe must abide the like punishment in himselfe: that is to saye, if I haue gone about to doe any reproche, or dishonestie to my neighbour; the shame thereof muste light vpon my selfe . We see as nowe whereat GOD aimed . Like as when hee setteth downe the Lawe concerning women with child in the xxj. of Exodus, he sayeth that if a man haue hurt them, and any mischaunce followe thereof, the partie that hath doone the hurte shall be punished for it: so also doeth hee adde heere, eye for eye, tooth for toothe, foote for foote, and hande for hande . As if hee should saye, no recompence is to be admitted in that behalfe: the purse must not be pinched, but the life it selfe muste aunswere for it, at leastwise if the deede concerne life . And so wee see nowe in effecte, howe it hath euer beene Goddes will, to shewe that hee setteth great store by mans life, as he will declare it, yet better hereafter: but yet we haue here a good recorde thereof in the meane while.

Moreouer he sheweth that wee must haue no respect of persons: but that although a man be neuer so welable to forbeare money to saue himselfe withall; yet must not that be admitted in matters of iustice. Let ransoming be let alone for warre matters: But in cases of Lawe, faultes must be regarded as they bee in deede. If the fault bee such as may be punished by fyne or amercement, and that the Lawe will beare it; very well, it is good reason it should be so. But if it be a crime that deserueth death, and that the Lawe it selfe doe iudge a man to death for it: if the punishment of death bee turned into a fine, vnder colour that the partie offended shall become wealthy, or for that it seemeth better that it should be so; y<sup>e</sup> law is by that meane peruerted, and the common order is altered by hauing respect of persons: and so all goeth to confusion. And therefore let vs marke well, that whereas our Lorde hath sayd, life for life, eye for eye, and so forth: hee hath shewed vs that in iudging, there must no regarde bee hadde of the persons that are to be condemned. But if it be not a matter of life and death, but a single misdeed or trespassse (as they terme it) that is to say, a light fault and such a one as deserueth not the punishment of death: it is to be punished according to y<sup>e</sup> qualitie of the offence, and according to the Lawe prouided in that behalte. But if it bee a deadly crime, the Iudge must shut his eyes as in respect of the person, and deeme simply of the crime and deede it selfe: accordingly also as it is sayd here, that no pitie must be shewed in that behalte. For the alleadging of mercie and pitie toward offenders, is a thing that alwayes deceiue many men. What, say they? Should we not bee pitiful? Would not God that wee should resemble him? Seeing it is sayde, that if we be his children wee must be kinde hearted and inclined to pitie and compassion; is it not a barre to all rigour? Yes, but though it be sayde that wee must pitie the partie, yet is it not ment that the fault should be vnpunished. If a malefactor be brought afore a Iudge sitting vpon the bench, the Iudge may well be sorrie to see a poore creature that is shap'd after the image of God, to go to destruction. Yea, he must be moued therewith, and haue pitie and compassion of him. But yet for all that, he must also looke to his commission, what charge he hath receiued, and he must doe iustice. Hee sitteth vpon the bench to punish offenders, it is not now for him to shewe pitie, or to alleadge any such thing. Nowe then it is Gods will here to cutte off all by shiffes of pitie and compassion that can be alleadged; and to shewe that iustice ought to haue his course, so as in examining of crimes and misdeedes, the Iudge must be blinde as in respect of persons, and haue both his eyes sette fast vpon the deede, and vpon the deserte of the case. Yea and to the ende there should be no gamesaying; let vs marke that heere God hath vsed a worde wherin there is some shewe of vertue, saying: Thine eye shall not spare him, neither shalt thou haue any pitie on him. Howe so?

It is sayde that our eye ought not to spare him, nor our heart to pitie him. And what is to followe then, but such extreeme rigour as is next coulen to crueltie? In deede lo will men thinke. But yet is this rigour acceptable to GOD. For we must call to minde howe Salomon sayth, that he which iustifieth the wicked is as faultie before GOD, as he that condemneth the innocent. Is it not a great and ougly abomination, that a sillie innocent should be condemned to death? Yes: and yet if an offender be let goe, God misliketh it as much as the sheading of guilelesse blood. So then, let vs not deceiue our selues any more, vnder the shadowe and colour of any of these faire pretences that are made at aladuenture. There are that abuse the holy scriptures by wresting them euery way; and this pitie is alleadged continually though they wote not why nor wherefore. Nowe then let vs vnderstande, that as GOD commaundeth vs to be mercifull, so he sheweth vs after what maner and howe farreforth hee alloweth our mercie: that is to wit, so farreforth as the course of Iustice be not letted. Yea and let vs looke vpon ourselues. Is it gentleness to be cruell to one man for the sparing of an other? Beholde, there are two men, both of them be my neighbours, we be all three created after the image of God, we bee all of one nature, they bee my fleshe and my bone as wel the one as the other: one of these playes the false witnesse of purpose to haue his neighbour put to death, and it is not long of him that his neighbour is not dead already: Here vpon one comes vnto me and sayes, O sir, ye must haue pitie vpon him. Very well: I shall be pitifull to the one and cruell to the other. Yee see howe the poore man which was at deathes doore is preferred by miracle, and shall I nowe goe sell away his life for good cheape? Is it not an horrible matter that mercie should be pretended after that sort? Yes. But if wee were well aduised and had good stay of our affections: surely wee would neuer pitie any such crime, for any mans vpbaying of vs with crueltie. But it is yet farre worse when a false witnesse steppeth vp against his neighbour: for that is much more than the oppressing of some one man priuily, that is false in his daunger. For if the sillie soule bee- ing so falsely accused, had bene executed: by whose hande had he bene punished? The Iudges had bene halfe accessarie, Gods wrath had bene prouoked against the whole countrey, and morcouer a gappe had bene opened for the like inconueniences euer after. A false witnesse therefore sinneth not against one or two, nor against two or three: but first against his aduersarie, secondly against the Lawe, and thirdly against his whole Countrey, in that hee pronoketh Gods wrath against it. For his intent is to deface iustice, and (as much as in him lyeth) to put all things to hauocke. Nowe then if the Iudge haue pitie vpon him; hee sheweth himselfe to beare neither loue nor feare vnto GOD, nor reverence vnto iustice. For hee ought to thinke thus with himselfe: Of whome had it beene long that I had not beene guiltie of manslaughter, if I had iudged an innocent to death? Indeede I had not done it wittingly: but yet had I not bin excusable for al that. Then was I in danger to haue beene guiltie of murder, and in what case were I then, if I shoulde suffer such a fault to scape vnpunished: Now then if a Iudge bethinke him not of these things: it is a token that he hath no feare of God in him. Therefore it behooueth vs so much the more to marke well this saying of Moses, that y<sup>e</sup> Iudges eye must not spare the partie that hath done a fault worthie of punishment. For it is but crueltie to vse such wrongfull mercie, as maketh vs to runne headlong to the breaking of al order set by God, and of all vprightnesse among men.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our sins, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we may be drawn to true repentaunce, and learne more and more to repaire vnto him, not tarying till hee hale vs thither by force, but seeing hee vouchsafeth to allure vs so gently by his worde, let vs come willingly vnto him, and prouoking our selues forward, become our owne iudges, y<sup>e</sup> in condemning ourselues we may seeke to be acquit by his mercie: And that it may please him to guide vs in the meane time, as that being rid of our wicked affections, & cares that holde vs backe from comming to him, we may shewe by our deedes that we be his true children, and that we beare the marke of his holy spirit. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The Cxvij. Sermon which is the fifth vppon the nineseenth Chapter, and the first vppon the twentieth Chapter.

19 Thou shalt doe vnto him as he meant to haue done to his brother: and so thou shalt rid away euill from among you.

20 And others hearing thereof shalbe afraid, and not doe any such wicked deede among you from thenceforth.

21 Thine eye shal not spare him, but life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foote for foote.

The twentieth Chapter.

WHEN thou goest forth to warre against thine enimies, and thou seeest horses and Chariots, and a greater multitude of people than thy selfe, be not afraid of them. For the Lorde thy God which hath brought thee vp out of the lande of Egypt, is with thee.

2 And when yee come neere to giue battell: then shal the Priest come forth and speake to the people,

3 And say vnto them: Harken o Israel, now that ye be come hither this day to giue battell to your enimies, let not your heartes faint, be not afraid, neither be ye discouraged or abashed at the sight of them.

4 For the Lorde your God goeth with you, to fight for you against your enimies, and to preferue you.

E saw yester day what punishment God ordeined for such as practise mischefe against their neighbours. And that concerneth Iudges and such as laue the sword of iustice in their hande. But as for vs, we for our parte ought to suffer the wronges patiently that are done vnto vs. Or else if we pursue them that they may be punished, it must not be done of malicious spite, nor with desire of reuendge: but to the intent that the partie which is to be punished, may be kept from offending any more afterwarde; and also that no outrages or violent dealings may be suffered, least others shoulde growe bolde to doe, so too; but that all men may be made to stande in feare, by beholding the example of him that is punished. And by this meanes we see howe the doctrine of our Lorde Iesus Christ, agreeth verie well with the doctrine of the Lawe. For hee relleth vs that wee must not resist euill.

The Lawe commaundeth that hee which procureth the death of his Neighbour, shall be put to death, and not bee spared. Nowe at the first sight heere seemeth to be some contrarietie. But wee must consider to whome our Lorde speaketh, when hee sayth that the offender must bee punished: namely that hee speaketh to those whome he hath put in authoritie. When hee saith, resist not euill with euill: hys meaning is that euerie of vs should liue quietly, and put vp wronges patiently, rather than require like for like. And that is the cause why hee sayth in the fifth of Mathewe, yee haue heard howe it hath bene saide to the men of olde time, An eye for an eye, and a hande for a hande: but I say vnto you, if a man strike you on the one cheeke, turne him the other also: and if a man take awaie thy Cloake bee willing to giue him thy Coate too: or if hee take away thy Coate giue him thy Cloake too. We see howe the Iewes abused the saide Lawe. For vnder pretence that G O D woulde haue no iniuries to scape vnpunished, they bare themselves in hande that euerie man might seeke to bee reuenged of his enemies. But wee must in aniewise put a difference betweene the lawes of policie, and the Lawes of G O D, which require a perfection, and serue to rule our heartes and affections by, so as it is not Lawfull to procure harme to anie man, though hee haue deserued it. The ciuill Lawe and earthly policie giue men leaue to seeke amends of the wronges doone vnto them; and the Iudge is bounde to satisfie their demaunde: but yet for all that, if the partie that is wronged haue a malicious hearte, and his accusing of his enemies is to bee reuenged of him; hee is not excused before God. Although hee haue right ministred vnto him before men, and they say that his cause is good and lawfull; yet for all that doeth G O D condemne him. And why so? Because (as I tolde you before) wee must bee patient. For what vertue is it, to bee friendly to such as loue vs, and to wishe no euill to such as doe vs pleasure and seruice? Doe not the heathen as much? But if men vex vs and put vs to shame and trouble, and wee beare with it; endeavouring to ouercome their euill by doing good: then doe wee shewe our selues to be Gods children, and followers of his example who causeth his day sunne to shine both vpon good and badde. Therefore let vs first marke this foretouched difference betweene the Lawes of policie and the Lawe of G O D, which is spirituall, and serueth to rule all the affections of a mannes hearte. Nowe in policie, there is no more to bee looked for, but that no man attempt anie thing agaynst his neighbour, that men doe one another no harme, that men worke no displeasure one to another, neither in goods, nor in person, nor in name, and that whosoever offendeth, bee punished.

But when G O D sheweth vs howe wee should liue, hee saith not onely refrayne your selues from euill, and let him that offendeth bee punished: but hee telleth vs also, that it is not lawfull for vs to looke vpon a woman with fleshely lust of desiring to committe vnclennesse with her: nor to hate our Neighbour any more than to murder him. Yee see then howe the Lawe of G O D mounteth higher than the earthlie policie. God will haue vs to walke before him in all purenesse. In so much that, besides that it is not lawfull for vs to assaulte our Neighbour, or to hate him without cause: Nay not then, when wee haue iust cause and couerture for the same to the worldewarde. For wee must euen then not onely forgie the wronges that are doone vs, and not require like for like; but also pray for our enemies: and although they speake euill of vs, and could find in their heartes that wee were perished a hundred times; Yet must wee worke their welfare to the vttermost of our powers. Marke that for one point.

Indeede it is a verie harde thing to bridle our affections after such a sorte, as to desire the welfare of our enemy when hee hath goons about to doe vs harme: but yet must wee strayne our selues to doe it. For though wee feele a gainstuiuing in vs, yet will not that serue vs for an excule: neyther must wee doe as the Papistes doe, who perceyuing this to be cleane contrarie to mans nature, haue gone aboute to salue it with this glose, that it was a counsell, and not a plaine and expresse commaundement: and that is a manifest blaspheming of God. For hee saith, that if wee will bee taken for his children, wee must fashion our selues after his goodnes in pardoning those that haue offended him. Therefore let vs not haue an eye to our owne strengtheys, nor to the inclination of our owne nature: but if wee feele anie heartburning in our selues; or bee desirous of reuenge through heate of impatiencie when a man hath vexed vs: Let vs resort to our G O D, praying him to ouermaster the excessiue passions that are in vs; and to giue vs the spirit of meekenesse when wee bee in such heates, that wee may become patient, so as the harme or iniurie bee not too harde and cumbersome for vs to beare, but that wee may passe it ouer mieldele. After that manner ought we to deale. And therefore let vs learne to beware that wee beguile not our selues with vaine colours.

Seeing that our Lorde hath giuen vs a good Lawe; Let vs not turne it vpside downe by pretending our owne wicked and corrupt affections for an excuse: Yea and let vs marke, that mannes nature is so frowardlie disposed, that if they looke not verie narrowlie to themselves, they shal alwayes abuse the name of G O D. The Lawe which I expounded Yesterday, namely that the partie which shall haue practised the death of anie innocent person, is not to bee botne withall, is verie rightfull.

rightfull. But yet for all that, is it meete that wee shoulde haue leaue to auenge our selues? Should the bridle be layde loose in our neckes to requite euill for euill? No surely. And yet doe men make it their excuse. Wee see then that naturally we should be euer inclined to abuse Gods name: and therefore wee haue so much the more neede to be watchfull, and to consider at what ende God aymed in saying this or that, that is, that wee shoulde not be blinde therein. For it will not auail vs at all, if wee make as though wee sawe it not. And therefore let vs first and foremost correct our vices, and lay aside all our wicked affections: and then may we vse the lawes that are good and holy. As for example: If a man deale by order of lawe, and in the meane while haue his heart full of rancour, so as he seeke to ouerthrowe his enemy by crooked meanes: It is a wicked manner of proceeding, and condemned of God. Yet notwithstanding, it is almost an ordinarie custome. For there are few that goe to lawe, which are not enemies one to another, according to this comon said sawe, that suite in lawe and friendship doe seldome match together. And yet for all that, if a man haue anie such hartburning, he offendeth God. Yea, but hee vseth the meane of iustice; and is not that lawfull? Is not that manner of dealing permitted? Yes: but it woulde behouue vs first of all to haue our wicked affections subdued according to this saying, that all Gods creatures are good to such as are of a pure and cleane heart. Saint Paul speaketh there of meates; but wee may applye the same saying to all other things, namely that whensoever God appointeth any thing to our vse, the same is good and behouefull; yea verily, so wee on our side defile it not by our wicked affections. If wee haue any filth in vs, by and by all that euer wee touch becometh filthie out of hande. Ye see that the order of iustice is a holy thing, appointed of GOD to our vse and benefite: and yet if I haue a spitefull heart, and beare anie malice to mine aduersarie; then do I defile y thing which God had dedicated to a holy vse, and which was pure and cleane of it selfe. And therefore let vs learne to reforme our wicked affections. When wee haue done so, then may wee say that the thing which GOD hath ordeneed, is good and profitable to vs: For wee turne it not contrarie to his meaning and will. That is the thing which wee haue to remember in effect concerning the Text that was treated of yesterday.

Nowe let vs come to that which GOD addeth concerning matters of warre. When thou goest out agaynst thine enemies ( sayth hee ) be not afraid nor dismayed at them, though thou see them more strong than thy selfe, though the number of their people be farre greater than thine, and though they haue both chariotes and horses: that is to say, Although they be better furnished and stored of all things than thou art; yet let not thine hearte shrinke for all that. And hee addeth the reason: For thy God ( sayth hee ) goeth with thee, and it is hee which brought thee out of the Lande of Egypte. Therefore put thou thy trust in his goodnesse and might. Nowe, wee must presuppose, that in so saying GOD giueth not leaue & libertie to his people to make warre when they list at their owne pleasure: but onely vpon iust cause. As for example, when the Iewes entered into the Lande of Chanaan, they made no warre but by the expresse commandement of God in so much that they were forbidden to saue anie of the people of that countrie aliuie, and it behoued them to put all to the sworde sauing the young infants and women which were referred to make slaues of; but as for the men, they were all appointed to the sworde; for God had giuen that iudgement vpon them, and not without cause. For it was a great matter that he had borne with them so long a time; and yet that they continued stubborn and vnreformable still. Besides this, when the people of Israel had once made a full conquest of the lande of Chanaan which was giuen them to inherite: then might they sitte at rest; and they might not make any inuasion vpon their neighbours vntill they were troubled by them, as in deede it fell out afterwarde: yet is it true that the people of Israel neuer possessed the whole Lande that was giuen them. And that was through their owne faulte and vnthankfulnesse, so as they were euer in trouble and vexation vnto the time of Dauid. Did Dauid subdue all his enemies? Did he set the people in full possession of the heritage that had bene promised them? If hee had done so, then was he to make warre by and by vpon his neighbours: howbeit not by picking any quarrels to them, nor to seeke to enlarge his kingdome by conquest. But he was prouoked vnto it; and therefore hee was to maintaine the state of his owne people. And so let vs marke that this text treateth of such warres as GOD alloweth, as when a Prince is vniustly assailed, then may hee withstande his enemy by force. For why? The man that enterpriseth to trouble another bodie possession, or the territorie of a Citie, or the prouinces of a countrie; is no better than a robber. True it is, that men indeede call them Kings and Princes, but yet are they but honourable theues in deede, which doe so abuse the power that GOD hath giuen them, and are not contented with their owne bounds, but will needes enlarge them without iust cause or title. Such then are but Robbers. And as a Iudge ought to punish a theefe or a robber: so likewise they that haue the power ordeneed of God, may enter into armes against all such as fall to troubling and vexing of their subiectes; and such manner of warres are not onely lawfull but also of necessitie to be vndertaken by them. It is not without cause then that God doeth encourage his people, saying that they must not be faint hearted and cowardly when they goe to warre against their enemies.

That is the thing which wee haue to marke first of all, least wee might furse that Gods will is to helpe such as maintaine an euil cause:

for then shoulde he renouce himselfe. And therefore whensoever he promiseth to bee with his people; his meaning is that their quarrel must be iust and reasonable. And hereupon wee may gather by the way, that it is lawfull to make warre vpon necessitie, conditionally that the war be to none other end than to procure peace & to obtain it. There are some fantastical persons which imagine that this serueth but for the olde testament, and that the case standeth not alike in these dayes. But we must make this a general rule, that whereas God grauntheth to succour his people against their enemies; his promising to do so, is not for once only, but for euer. Indeed it is promised that vnder the reigne of our lord Iesus Christ, swordes and speares shall be turned into Plowshares and Coulters, and that there shall be no more anye enee nor violence. That is verie true as in respect of such as shall be truly conuerted and reformed by the spirit of God. For if we will be Christians, we must become as Lambs. In somuch as it is said expressly, that the Beare and the Lion shall dwell together, & that a litle babe shall rule them both. This must be vnderstoode of such as God shal haue changed and renewed by his holy spirit. But we see that so farre off is it that the worlde is conuerted to God, when the gospell is preached, or that all of them change their manners; that many of the become worse and worse, and other some more and more inueniomed, hauing heard Gods word; and therefore worthe are they to bee deliuered vp to Satan through a reprobate sense, because they haue hardened their hartes against God, & haue manifestly despised him; by refusing the grace that is offered them. Is it not reason (y<sup>e</sup> premisses considered) that God also shoulde turne away from them, and y<sup>e</sup> Satan should drawe them and carie them a way into all euill? Marke I pray you how a number of people become worse and worse after they haue heard the preaching of y<sup>e</sup> Gospell. All then are not conuerted as to become Lambes; but rather their rage is inflamed more & more. And therefore forasmuch as there are wicked men continually in this world, yea & the Princes themselves are so caried away by their own ambition, couetousnes, and other wicked lustes, that they keepe no measure in their doings, but wil needs turne all things vpside down, and make hauocke of all, for y<sup>e</sup> satisfying of their owne wicked wils: God hath left the vse of the sword to men of autoritie, & ordeyned y<sup>e</sup> they should bee strong handed, as S. Paul declarcth. Whereupon it is to be concluded, that if a war be lawfull, this promise of Gods standeth in force. For otherwise what a thing were it: True it is that we ought to possesse our soules in patience, as our Lord Iesus Christ saith; but yet doth it not follo w, y<sup>e</sup> therefore the office of the magistrates should cease, & that his arming of them is to no purpose, & that they should be but as idols. Nay rather they ought to hazard their liues so far as God mableth them, whensoever their subiectes are assailed & tormented, and for this cause I haue stood the longer vpon this text, to the end we might know that faithful Princes haue Gods promise full at this day, that he will be their guide in the time of war, and take their part when they be to fight with their enemies, & giue the victory to the intent they should assure the selues of his helpe, and alwaies flee to him for refuge. And so ye see how that is one point which wee haue to marke vpon this text.

Neuerthelater we must vnderstand also, that there is no warriust, vnlesse God be the author of it. For if we intend to be armed with y<sup>e</sup> strength of his hand, we must also aske counsel at his mouth: & his spirit must be the ouerruler of the aduise which we haue taken; for we see that al interprises are accursed, which men do take in hand vpo their owne head, without inquiring of his wil. As for example, when the Iewes made leagues with the Realme of Egypt, or entered anie other familiaritie with them, Cursed be those (saith he) which weaue a webbe, but not by mine aduise. And by and by hee addeth the exposition, yea (saith hee,) for yee determine vpon matters without taking counsell at my mouth; that is to say, without considering by my worde whether the thing be lawfull or no. Ye will not hold your selues to my wil, nor suffer my spirit to be your gouernour, or to haue the ouerruling of you: Wo to you therefore, saith he. And the Realme of Egypt shall be as a Reed y<sup>e</sup> wil breake vnder you if yee leane vnto it, it shall serue but to breake your neckes; yea and it shall pricke yee like a sharpe reede that runnes into the hande of him that leaneth vpon it. Then let vs marke, that if we intende to be succored by our God, we must fashion our selues wholly to his wil, and not attempt any thing which is not permitted by his worde, or which we be not sure that he alloweth. And then may wee throughly assure our selues, that he will bee on our side, and that wee shall be so fenced with his power, that we shal get the vpper hand of al our enemies.

But it behooueth vs to wcy well the words y<sup>e</sup> are set downe here. Although you see that thine enemies are stronger than thou (saith hee) and farre better furnished with hoyses and Chariotes, and that they haue a greater number of people: yet bee not afraid. Hereby hee sheweth (as king Iosaphat declared) that we must not measure Gods power by the things that are seene with our eyes, for it is no harder matter with him to discornise an host of an hundred thousand men, than to discornise an handful, or to giue victory to a dosen perses as well as if they were a great army. The thing y<sup>e</sup> mouth vs is this: if we be well furnished of worldly strength, then we think y<sup>e</sup> God helpeth vs and faouereth vs; but if we be bare & naked, and our enemies too strong for vs; then are we dismayed. And why? Because we bind God to these inferiour meanes, and we beare our selues in hande that he can do nothing, vnlesse he tel aforchand how and wherew<sup>e</sup> he wil doe it, and that he giue vs a good pawne of it as they say. But that is too great an imbaing of his mightines, and a turning of al order vpside downe. For how shal God be honored at our handes? Euen by continuing vndymayed, though our cnenyes bee too strong and mightie; for God needs no more but to blowe vpon them , and by and by all their power is dashed. The thing wherein God sheweth himselfe almighty, is that the creatures which seeme to be of most power are able to do nothing at all, but God maketh euerie whitte of it to vanishe away. If God coulde doe no more but say, I wil be a let to men that they shal not aduance themselves, I will take away their courage and scatter them: it were a small thing; but he hath diuerse wayes to succour those that are his. Sometime he setteth our enemies on such a fire, that they be as madde folkes against vs, or elie they haue all things in a readinesse against vs: and sometime when they haue practised to ouerthrowe vs, hee letteth them haue heartes like Lions, by meanes whereof they be enraged with such furie, that by all likel-hoode they must needs beare downe all things before them like thunder. Hath hee permitted all this?

 Yet when it commeth to y<sup>e</sup> vnder push: then shal they haue no strength at all, in somuch that the things which they had purposed, shall vanishe away. Although they come onward so terribly at the first, as that they make all things to quake againe: yet will he strike the sworde out of their hand, so as they shal not be able to put anything in execution: to be short, they shal slide away like water. Therefore let vs marke here, that in such cases wee must wey well the power of God, not doubting but that when hee shall haue suffered men to aduance themselves, and all things to be fully furnished according to their desire; he will dash it all vnder foote. Marke that for one point, True it is that when wee fall to the considering of our owne state and condition, we must not imagine that God is not merciful towardes vs., so wee haue our recourse to him. Yet notwithstanding, nowe and then to giue the greater glorie to his owne goodnes and power, he will suffer vs to be in some distresse: in somuch that when we looke about vs, we shall cry out alas, howe shall I doe, what will become of mee? We shal not knowe to whome wee may betake our selues: and when wee haue made all the shiftes we can, we shall be as folke halfe vanquished afore hande. But our God hath wherewith to supplie all our wantes: onely let vs tarie his leasure and say with Iosaphat, It is easie for our God to giue victorie to a smal number against an infinite number, as to giue vic-torie to a great armie against a fewe folke: all is one with him. So then, let vs trust in him, let vs stay our selues vpon his strength, and let vs not doubt but hee will giue vs wherewith to withstande all temptations that shall be laide afore vs. And specially when Satan goeth about to weaken our courages, and to cast vs into des-paire: let vs resist that. Thus ye see what wee haue to remember vpon this saying here, that although our enemies be neuer so strong, and neuer so able to ouercome vs: yet wee must not be dismayed at it.

And indeede, wee must take this for a generall rule, that the welfare of the Church consisteth neither in horses, nor in Chariotes, nor in Speates, nor in any manner of armour or artillerie; but in the power of God, as is oftentimes auouched by the Prophetes. And it is a lesson which is more than necessarie for vs: For if we shoulde triumph to the worldward, and were of such power as were glorious to see too: what a thing were it? Gods glorie shoulde be diminished among vs, and wee woulde surmise our selues to be preferred by our owne means, so as wee woulde not call earnestly vpon God as were requisite we shoulde, but our calling vpon him woulde be but in way of Ceremonic, or rather our heartes would be puffed vp with pride and ouerweening. Nowe because we be so giuen to this ouerlosinesse, God bringeth vs lowe. And for the bringing thereof to passe, his will is to haue vs to be as sheepe among wolues, destitute of all force and furniture, and hemmed in on all sides with such enemies, as are armed, furnished, and fenced in all points: so as by all likelhoode we be as sheepe that are dragged eueryday to y<sup>e</sup> slaughterhouse, and haue the knife setted continually to our throate to kill vs. Sith we be in such state, let vs vnderstande that our Lorde will be glorified by vs, and that hee calleth vs to him, to the ende that we resting wholly vpon him, and putting all our trust in his goodnesse and protection, shoulde cal vpon him, when we see the necessitie pinch vs, as they that shoulde not know where to become, if he shoulde not reache out his arme to helpe vs. Thus ye see after what manner wee ought to put this lesson in vre, where it is saide that in considering the power of our enemies, we must not be discouraged at it, be it neuer so great.

And let vs marke howe Moses vseth manie wordes here; the cause whereof is, that we can not by and by ouercome the feare wherewith we be caught when any perill seemeth to be towardes vs. Thou shalt not feare it saith hee; thy heart shall not quayle, nor shrink; thou shalt not be dismayed at it; thou shalt not be afraide of it. See howe hee vseth foure fundrie termes, to be-token one onely thing. And yet it is no superfluetie of speech. Whereat then did he looke? Let euerie of vs examine our owne heartes, and we shall find y<sup>e</sup> God doth not without cause stand so much vpon this point, namely y<sup>e</sup> we must not be afraid, nor astonished, nor dismayed, nor out of heart, nor discouraged, when we see the force & puissance of our enemies. Truth it is that as long as wee are farrc from blowes, we can sleepe soundly enough, and a man would wonder to see howe blockishe we be: and we beare our selues in hande that neuer anie daunger can come neere vs. But if it come to good earnest, and that wee be once pinched: then it woulde pitie ones hearte to see howe farre we be out of countenance. Let GOD com-forte vs, and let him encourage vs neuer fo much, and all will not cherec vp our hearts.
 For why? we be forepossessed with fearesulnesse which beareth such sway in vs, as wee cannot be releued of our discouragement. Wee see in what taking Achaz was, when he sawe the Citie Ierusalem at the point to be besieged.

Albeit that the Prophete Esay beeing sent vnto him, promised him deluerance in y name of God: yet was he still like the leafe of a tree, as the similitude likeneth him in the same place, inſomuch that he was in vnquietneſſe and vexation of minde, yea and quite beſides himſelfe for feare. True it is that hee went about to repair the bulwarke of the citie: but yet neuer theleſſe he quaked ſtill for feare. Be of good courage (ſaith the Prophet to him) and feare not. 10 Indeede thou haſt two mightie Kinges againſt thee: for the king of Syria had alied himſelfe with the king of Iſrael. Well, well, in deede it is their meaning to burne vp all: but yet for al that they bee no better than a cuple of ſmoking fire brandes that doe nothing elſe but ſmoke. There is ſome likelihood that they ſhoulde make haucke of all thinges: but all this is nothing, God will ſet a ſtoppe in their way, bee thou quiet and ſtill. Yet notwithstanding, this wretched man 20 was ſo fore afrayde, y he could not take any cōfort. True it is that he did ſet a good face vpon the matter, and he played the hypocrite ſo ſtoutly, that hee woulde not aſke a myracle when GOD offered it him. Demaunde ſome token of thy God, ſaide the Prophete. What, ſaide hee, ſhall I tempt my GOD? And yet neuertheleſſe, hee tempted him through his vnbeleefe. And the Prophete Esay ſaide vnto him, Is it not enough for you to tempt the Lorde, but yee muſt alſo greue thoſe whome he ſendeth vnto you, O you houſe of Dauid? Ye royall and holy houſe, ought there to bee ſuch hypocriſie among you? Nowe ſith wee ſee ſuch an example in the ſucceſſor of Dauid who was a figure of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, let vs be- 30 thinke our ſelues well, and vnderſtande that when we bee ſo aſtoniſhed, there is no way nor remedie to chere vp our heartes agayne, but by Gods owne working after a maruellous faſhion. And the caſe ſtandeth ſo with vs, that wee haue ſuch a roote of vnbeleefe in vs, that vntill ſuch tyme as wee be grounded in GOD and in his promiſes, euery ſiſking of a flie before our eyes wil make vs by and by afrayd, accordingly as it is ſaide that the wicked ſhall tremble for feare when no man purſueth him. And wee ſee that among other curſes of the lawe, God threateneth ſuch as leane not vnto him, that they ſhall 40 bee euer in a maze, not knowing where to become. Seeing then that this infirmitee is ſo rooded in vs by nature, let vs learne to arme our ſelues againſt it.

And moreouer, let no feare ſo ouermaiſter vs when wee come in danger, but that we may wade out of it agayne. And that wee may ſo do, let vs make howe it is ſayde here, Be not dismayed, let not your heartes faint, be not discouraged. When as our Lorde vſeth ſuch maner of ſpeech, it is all one as if hee ſaide, Goe to, If I ſaide no more to you but bee not afrayde: it ought to ſuffice you. But I ſee well that yee will not ceale to bee afrayde, euen when ye bee aſſured on my behalfe. Nowe therefore plucke vp a good heart, and gather newe ſtrength to you, and ſtande to your tackling ſo ſtoutly, as yee 50 may in the ende get the vpper hand of all temptations that come before you. And hereby wee be doone to vnderſtande in fewe wordes, what we haue to doe when wee feele ſuch trouble of minde in our ſelues, that wee cannot bee comforted againe out of hande. If one promiſe of God be not enough for vs; let vs goe to another: and ſo forth to a thirde: yea and let vs enforce our ſelues to get the vpper hande of all diſtreſſes, ſo as the ſeede of vnbeleefe may bee vtterly rooted out of our heartes. After that manner muſt wee deale. When a man hath heard one of Gods promiſes, if his minde bee ſtill out of quiet, let him ſtriuē with himſelfe, and be- 10 thinke himſelfe thus: Although I be weake, yet muſt I not ſeede mine owne follie, but I muſt ſtrengthen my ſelfe in God. And howe may I doe that? Indeede I am too vnthankfull if I quiet not my ſelfe with any one promiſe of his. Is not the very opening of Gods mouth enough for mee? Am I not too too forward, if I beleuee not his ſaying? Yes: but for aſmuch as this curſed vnbeleefe raigeth in mee, I muſt fight againſt it: and the harder that the battell is, the more muſt we enforce our ſelues. Then muſt God be 20 honoured at my hande, euen in deſpite of the misbeleefe that is in mee; ſo as his promiſe may preuaile and I perceiue the fruite thereof in me. And howe ſo? [If one promiſe will not ſerue,] we muſt take a ſeconde. It is not once only that my God hath ſaide, I will helpe thee: but all the whole ſcripture is full of ſuch promiſes. Agayne, when wee ſee that that doeth not yet ſufficiently auaille vs: we muſt proceede further and take holde of another of Gods promiſes, and reſolue our ſelues by that. To be ſhort, we muſt heape them vp one vpon another, ſo as Satan may be beaten backe. And if we be not able to wreſtle with him hande to hande, let vs 30 make vs a foretreſſe, or bulwarke of Gods promiſes, yea let vs make a Rampyre and a double Ditch of them, ſo as the enemy may by no means come at vs, but that we may boldly deſie him. Thus yee ſee that the thing which wee haue to gather vpon this texte, where Moſes doeth ſo oft repeat, that wee muſt not bee afrayde of our enemies; is, that wee muſt firſt 40 conſider the diſeaſe that is in our nature, namely that we be afrayde as ſoone as anie danger appeareth: and ſecondly that wee muſt ſecke the remedie thereof, not by taking ſome ſmall taſt of Gods promiſes as it were at a glance onely; but by ſetting our mindes vpon them, and by exerciſing our ſelues dayly in them.

After this here followeth the reaſon. Because thy GOD goeth with thee: yea euen thy GOD which brought thee out of the Lande of Egypt. Here Moſes ſheweth vs y there is none other meane wherby we may overcome the feare of our enemies: but only by hauing recourſe vnto God. For as long as we ſtand weying of our own ſtrength, and ſtande gaſing about vs: alas in what taking be we: Needes muſt we be continually tormoyled with a number of terrours and carefull thoughtes. Therefore if we will haue good aſſiſtance & ſtoutnes of courage, let vs learne to 50 reſort

resort simply vnto God, and to keepe our selues close vnder the shadow of his wings. And heereby we be warned, that all the hardnesse which men do build vpon themselves, is accursed. If wee put our trust in this or that, because wee haue maintenance and aide to overcome our enemies: if wee tie our trust to that, wee to vs. True it is that for a time wee may be puffed vp with winde, and we may beare our selues in hand that nothing can daunt vs; but in the end God will laugh such malpeartnesse to skorne, & shew howe it was no better than smoke. And that is the cause why I said that the foundation of true stoutnesse, courage, and constancie, is to haue our eye vpon God, and to assure our selues that he is on our side. Notwithstanding, it is not in vs to fend it; but we must embrace y<sup>e</sup> promise which he maketh to vs. Thy God (sayth he) will goe with thee. Yea verily, so wee attempt not any thing without the warrant of his word, as I haue sayd afore; and y<sup>e</sup> we runne not a head: For God will not be our tennis ball to trotte wheresoeuer we will send him. But when we doe him the honour to take him for our Captaine and king, so as we fight vnder him, and enterprise not any thing which is not permitted vs by his woord; but yeeld him the whole soueraintie ouer vs: we shall neuer be destitute of his helpe. Now then, whensoeuer we be feared, and there is any occasion to make vs a frayde: let vs learne to cast our eye vpon God, and embrace the warrant that is giuen vs heere, which is that he will be euer at hand to succour vs at our neede. Yea verily: for he hath not only taken vpon him y<sup>e</sup> tuition of vs; but also telleth vs y<sup>e</sup> he will be an enemy to our enemies. Is it not a singular priuiledge, that besides that our God auoweth himselfe to be the maintainer of our welfare, he telleth vs also that if men vex vs and goe about to doe vs any harme, they fet themselves against him, and he putteth himselfe as a shield betwixt them and vs? The holy scripture is full of such similitudes. Sometime God is called our Rampyre, sometime our high tower, sometime our bulwarke, and sometimes our shield. Againe, when he will shew howe greatly he loueth vs: he that toucheth you (sayth he) toucheth the apple of mine eye, which seeleth or perceiueth all the harme that can be purposed against vs. Seeing it is so then, that wee haue this warrant that God watcheth for vs; let vs not doubt but he is strong ynough to confound all our enemies. And therefore let vs yeeld him his deserued honour, in making no account of all the force of the worlde, forasmuch as wee knowe that all that cuer men can bring of their owne, is but vtter vanitie and leasing in comparison of Gods arme. So then, it is a speeche of great importance when as Moses sendeth folke vnto God, saying, My friends, Neuer stand musing what yee be of your selues, but know for a certaintie that yee be able to doe nothing. Though yee had neuer so great furniture for the warres, yet haue your recourse still to your God, and be strong in him, and take courage there.

out of the Land of Egypt. Whereby he meaneth that they had found already by experience, that God was ynough for them, and that they ought not to be astonished at the power of men. So long as God is on your side and maintaine your parte, neuer be afraid. For when the people came out of Egypt, what lykelyhood was there of their safetie? When they were come to y<sup>e</sup> Red sea, was it not like that they should haue bin vtterly vndone? The sea was on the one side of them, and on the other side was Pharao with such a power, as it was vnpossible for them to haue scaped his hand. True it is that the Isralites themselves were a great multitude of people. But what? Were they inured to seates of armes? No verily, they were as a flocke of sheepe, which had a rout of wolues harde at hande. There it appeared howe God wrought for them. And therefore Moses putteth them in mind of the things which they had felt and knowen before. As if hee should say, your God hath shewed you sufficiently already by his doings, that yee shall not be disappointed if you hang vpon him. And his power is no whit abated. For asmuch then as yee knowe that it is ynough for you to be vnder his protection, hold your selues still therunto. Now the removing of the Isralites out of Egypt, was a putting of them in minde that God had giuen them a president after what maner he would maintaine the state of his Church: that is to wit, after such a maner as passeth the reache of mans capacite. And let vs marke that euen at this day we must haue the same rule still. For (as I haue alleaged already out of the Prophetes) the welfare of the faithfull consisteth not in the multitude of horses or of Chariots, or in the strength of armour or men of warre; but in the goodnesse and helpe of God. And this is to be referred most peculiarly to our state vnder the raigne of our Lord Iesus Christ. For it is the Christian Church which the Prophetes speake of, when they vse such kind of speeches. Sith it is so, let vs assure our selues that the wonders which God wrought in bringing his people out of Egypt, are a sure warrant vnto vs that hee will maintaine vs. So that, although it seeme vnpossible to men, and although we be dismayed when wee behold the power of our enemies and the weakenesse that is in our selues: yet will God worke aboue our capacite and vnderstanding. That is one thing which we haue to beare in minde.

Againe, let vs also marke therewithall, that all the experiences which God hath giuen vs afore, must assure vs the better of our saluation, and make vs to trust the more vnto him, for his former succouring of vs. And let vs gather thereupon, that he can well find other means which we neuer thought of: and moreover, that his goodnes diminisheth not, and that he is alwaies alike strong. Let vs conclude that he is able to saue vs, so we resorte vnto him. And therefore let vs bethinke vs of the gracious goodnesse that God hath extended towards vs aforesimes, and of the succour that hee hath giuen vs. And in considering those things, let vs not onely giue him thanks for his shewing of himselfe to be our preferuer heretofore: but also let vs take further matter and occasion to trust to him afterward, and to resort boldly vnto him, and not to doubt but that he will continue as he began, vntill he haue brought our saluation to full perfection. Nowe if this bee spoken concerning our bodily enemies: much more reason haue we to apply the same to Satan, to sinne, and to al other things that fight against the endlesse saluation of our soules. But I cannot as nowe make any larger discourse of this matter. Let it suffice vs for this time to make our benefite of this doctrine: which is, that if we resort vnto our God, he hath promised to preferue vs, so as euen wee bee hemmed in on all sides, and wee seeme to be out of al hope, and men seeme to haue the vpper hand of vs, yea euen y<sup>e</sup> vnbeleueers whose onely desire is to ouerthrowe vs: yet euen then we may boldly and safely keepe on our way. For why? We passe not what wee ourselues bec, nor what wee can doe: but forasmuch as God telleth vs that he will be at hand with vs, and haue pitie vpon vs, and that he loueth vs in such wise that he will vtter his wrath against our enemies, and bee so inflamed at them as if their dealing were immediately with himselfe, and take the quarell vpon him as though the dishonour were offered to himselfe, and that defiance were made to his owne person: forasmuch (say I) as we haue such promise at his hand, let vs trust boldly vnto it, and walk on still in feare and reuerence, praying him to vouchsafe to giue vs peace, and to maintaine good agreement among vs. And although it bee his will to giue bridle to the wicked, so as they doe what they can against vs: yet let not vs cease to resort to him, forasmuch as wee bee sure that if wee put our life into his handes, he will shewe himselfe a good and faithfull keeper of it.

But now let vs kneele downe before y<sup>e</sup> Maiestic of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feeble them better than we haue done; and that when we once know the wicked affections that are in vs, it may cause vs not only to mislike of them and to condemne them, but also to resort to the remedie of them, and to pray him to reforme vs so according to his own image, as our whole desire may bee to shewe our selues louing and gentle to all men, and to seeke peace and to procure it as much as we can, remouing all occasion that any man may haue to doe vs any harme. And moreover, that it may please him to receiue vs so into his protection, as we may be bold to proceede in our conuersation: and that seeing he sheweth himselfe to bee our defender a forhand euen in this bodily and transitorie life, we may not doubt but y<sup>e</sup> he watcheth ouer vs to defend vs against Satan and all manner of sinne, and that wee may be more and more confirmed with assurance of his goodnesse, in such sort as wee may not liue any more in our selues, but to him, as good reason woulde that our life shoulde bee dedicated vnto him, seeing that hee vouchsafeth to take the care of it. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

2.3.4. And when yee come neere, &c.

5 And the Officers shall speake vnto the people and say, Is there any man here which hath builded a new house, and not dedicated it? Let him goe hence and tarry at home, least he dye in the battell, and another man dedicate it.

6 What man is there that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not gathered of the grapes? Let him goe hence, and returne home, least he dye in the battell, and another man gather the grapes.

7 And what man is he that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her? Let him depart hence, and goe home againe to his house, least he dye in the battell and another man take her.

8 Moreover the Officers shal speake to the people and say: What man is he that is afraid and faint hearted? Let him get him hence, and goe home to his owne house, that he make not his brothers faint hearted as well as himselfe.

9 When the Officers haue made an ende of speaking to the people, they shall set Captaines of the Armie ouer the people.

Ec sawe yesterday what exhortation God commanded to bee made to his people when they came in danger, and I told you shortly that forso much as vnbeleefe is hard to be corrected in vs by reason of the deepe roote which it hath taken in vs, our Lorde would that a much more vehement kinde of speache shoulde bee vsed towards vs. And thereupon I sayd that wee haue greatly profited, when we haue once ouercome the fearefulnesse which turneth vs away from our trust in God, and from abilitie to call vpon him with assured faith. Now remaineth the applying hereof to our spirituall batells. If we haue any enemies that trouble vs, and seeke to destroy vs; wee must resort vnto God, and assure our selues that seeing he hath taken vs into his protection, he will not faile vs at our neede. And if this perswasion take place in the daungers of this present life which are nothing; what must we doe in cases concerning the saluation of our soules which are much more precious before God? Thinke we that he will sayle vs in that behalfe? And therefore let vs so apply this promise where it is sayd that our Lorde will goe with his people to helpe them in their neede, as our soules may be governed by our God. And if the diuell assault vs roughly, and we fall into so great perplexities that we wote not where to become, so as to our seeming we be vtterly sonke: Let vs hope still that our GOD hath not forgotten vs, but that he goeth still with vs, that is to say, that he is so nere at hand, that his fauour and power shall still succour vs. And this is a thing more than needfull. For we see how feeble wee be to encounter against Satan, and against all the assaults which he maketh against vs: If wee be not afraid, wee be too blockish: for there is none other remedy for vs, but to flee to our God for refuge, and to depend vpon the succour that hee hath promised vs. For if wee seeke our helpe in our selues for the withstanding of Satan and of his spirituall batell: we shall be disappointed of our hope, and God (as good reason is) will laugh our ouerweening to skorne. Therefore there is none other way for vs, but to seeke in God that which wanteth in our selues; and vpon the knowing of our owne weaknesse, to looke for strength at his hand. And when he hath once strengthened vs, let vs not doubt of our deliuerance, but let vs extend the same deliuerance to our whole life, yea euen to our death. For it is not ynough for me to hope y God will helpe mee for the present tyme: I must be thoroughly perswaded both for to day and for euer after. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this text, where God comforteth his people, and fortifieth them to be astonished, fainted, fearful, or dismayed. His vsing of so many words that web that although wee haue neuer so much cause to misdoubt, to be afraid, to be agast, or to be dismayed; yet must Gods promises come alwayes to our mind, that wee may make a buckler, yea and a rampyre of them to resolute vs through: that our Lord will helpe vs howe euer the world goe, so as we shall be succoured by him, and be sure of victorie in the ende, and be recovered by his mighte and inuincible hand, how great extremities so euer we be fallen into.

And now we haue to note, how it is not vnto our cause that God would haue this doctrine vttered by the mouth of the Priest. It may seeme that it was ynough to haue the Law written and proclaimed, and that euery man ought to haue minded this lesson by himselfe. But yet it was Gods wil expressly that the Priest should be there present, to speake in his name and by his autho-ritic. True it is that our esteeming of Gods word must not depende vpon the persons that bring it: for then shoulde it bee of verie small authoritie among vs. As for the Preachers of GODS will vnto vs, what are they but frayle vessels of earth? To bee short, all that euer they coulde saye vnto vs were to no purpose, if wee shoulde haue an eye but to their persons. But when wee once knowe their office or Commission, then is it not for vs to gaze vpon the creatures, but wee bee to looke vnto GOD himselfe, who hath commaunded his woorde to bee preached to vs by persons chosē and pycked out for that purpose. Therefore when wee heare them, it is a meane to wake vs that wee may be the readyer to heare GODS woorde, assuring our selues that he which speaketh is not brought in by himselfe, ne thrusteth himselfe in on his owne heade: but that GOD hath set downe that order, and will hate it to be obserued in his Church. Nowe then, if any man preache vnto vs the thing that is for our soule health, although the partie that speaketh were a litle Babe; yet doeth it behooue vs to receiue with all reuerence, the things that wee knowe to come of GOD. The truth must neuer bee euill intertayned, neither must wee make an excuse of the partie that speaketh. For whose euer hee bee that commeth and bringeth vs the truth: hee is as a Messenger of GOD. And if wee despise him, it is a dishonouring of his Master, and wee doe him wrong when wee will not receiue that which is brought from him. Notwithstanding, because wee bee so colde and slowe to bee edified in the doctrine of our saluation: GOD hath giuen vs this helpe, that there shoulde bee men appointed to represent his person and to speake in his name. Therefore whensoever a Minister of GODS woorde that is chosen in the Church speaketh: let vs knowe that GOD wakeneth vs, and giueth vs as it were a preparatiue, to the ende wee shoulde giue the better ease to the things that are tould vs. Wee will take yet a more particular Example. When a poore man is in anguish of mynde, thinking himselfe to bee as good as forlorne by reason of the finnes which hee knoweth in himselfe, so as hee is cast downe and woteth not where to become, because of the vnquietnesse that vexeth him through remorse of conscience: if a faithfull man come vnto him and set the mercie of GOD before him, and tell him that in the holy scripture sillie sinners are called to mercie, and that GOD neuer refuseth them when they seeke him in fayth and with repentance; it is a raising of him vp agayne, and hee hath cause already to taste of GODS goodnesse and to thinke thus with himselfe; Alas, I haue bene as it were in hell, and GOD is come to seeke me heere, by sending me this man which speakes not as of himselfe, but bringeth me things which God himselfe hath giuen me. Thus the poore sinner hath cause to reioyce, and to be discharged of the sorrow that ouerwhelmed him before. But if the doctrine be vttered by one that is a Shepheard, and hath publike charge: therein we haue yet a better assurance. For it is sayd that they be sent to preache the forgiuenesse of finnes. The Prophet Esay speaking of the raigne of our Lord Iesus Christ, and of the state of the Christian Church, sayth that the office both of Iesus Christ and of all those that preache the Gospell in his name, is to hearken the fearefull, to heale the diseased, to asswage the sorrowes of them that are in anguish of minde, and to let out them that are in prison. And this is declared yet more plainly by the mouth of Gods owne sonne where he saith, Go your waies, whatsoeuer ye binde vpon earth shall be bound in heauen. To whome I speake the lie: To his Apostles. And he presupposeth that they will preache the promites of saluation in his name. For he ment not to set vp heere a tyrannic as the Pope beareth vs in hand, who taketh couer vnder that text, and wickedly desyleth the holy Scripture. And that (as ye see) is a diuclish shamelesnesse. But our Lorde Iesus Christ will surely authorise the message of his Gospell, specially when it is brought by the mouth of his Shepherdes, and of such as he hath called to the like state. Therefore when wee see a man that is chosen of God, to preache the forgiuenesse of finnes: it is as if a bargaine were passed by a publike and sworne Notarie. That then is the cause why God in this text hath expressly communded the Priest to come into the Armie and to speake those words. Why so? To the ende they should bee receiued with the greater reuerence.

Hereupon let vs gather, that we haue neede to haue the Gospell preached vnto vs, to confirme vs in the strength of our GOD, and to giue vs full assurance of his succour, so as he can neuer faile vs. And let vs not bee as these fantasticall folke are, which thinke it ynough for them to reade the word at home in their houses, and absent themselves easily from the common doctrine which God will haue published to all his people: assuring our selues y<sup>e</sup> the same is no superfluous order. And seeing that our Lorde woulde haue the Priest to open his mouth to speake to the people, that they might not bee afrayde of the daungers of this present life: much more reason is it that wee should neede to bee taught that our Lorde Iesus is alwayes readie to succour vs, and that wee shall bee deliuered by his strong hand as in respect of our soules, and therefore that wee must leane vnto him. Wee haue neede (say I) that these things should bee pronounced by the mouth of those whom God calleth, and vnto whom he committeth the charge of teaching in his Church: so as our faith must thereby growe double, and wee must gather our wittes the better about vs, as if wee should say, Truly it is God that speaketh, though it be but a child that vttereth the wordes vnto vs. For he hath an eye to our rudenesse, and beareth with it, in that he so qualifieth the persons of them that beare the name and tytle of Shepheards, and that they be as his Angels. Nowe then let vs so much the more receiue his word, and giue the better heede to it, and be the more touched with it, knowing that our Lord offereth himselfe the more liuely vnto vs, and therefore let vs not pretend any moe excuses. For he sheweth himselfe the more exprefly, in that hee vouchsafeth to haue a man chosen thereunto. Wherefore let that man speake; and let vs receiue his sayings as though God himselfe spake them to vs after a visible maner, as we haue seene already heeretofore in the cyghteenth chapter. Thus ye see what we haue to remember as touching this sentence.

Nowe let vs proceede to that which Moses addeth. Hee sayth, that before they goe so battell, the Gouernours of the people shall giue leaue to depart, so such as had builded newe houses, and had not yet dwelt in them; so such as had plantid vineyardes, and had not yet gathered of the fruite; and so such as had betrothed themselves to wives, and had not yet maryed them to take them home into their houses. Heere are three kind of men to whom God giueth leaue to depart, whome hee will not haue compelled to goe to warre against their enemies. And afterward in the end he sayth, that if there bee any fearefull or faint hearted men, those also must bee sent home againe to their owne houses, not hauing like lybertie as the other sortes, but as men cast off in way of reproche. And hee setteth downe the reason; namely least they shoulde discourage the hartes of their brethren, and make them lyke themselves. This being doone, His will is to haue Captaines set ouer them: not as though they should then demaund truce or respire of their enemies for the appointing of their Captaines: but his meaning is, that when warre is to bee made, the cheefe point is not to haue men of great experience and skill: What then? Aboue all things to trust in God, and to resort vnto him first; and then to proceede according to the order which hee alloweth. When all this is done, then may Captaines and officers of skill be chosen. But if men think to strengthen themselves with worldly ayde, and in the meane while forget God; so as they resort not to him; it is an abuse and they shall find themselves beguiled. That in effect was the meaning of Moses.

Nowe as touching that hee giueth libertie so such as had newly taken wives, and had not yet maryed them: so such as had plantid vineyardes, and had not yet gathered the fruite of them: and so such as had builded houses, and had not dwelt in them: it is to shew that there is a kinde of vpright dealing to be vsed, to the ende that those of whome any regard was to be had, should not bee constrained out of measure. Therefore vnder these three sortes God ment to shewe, that albeit there bee great neede, yet ought such to bee spared as are worthy thereof. For it were a kind of crueltie to hale out a man to death, before hee had taken the benefite of dwelling in his owne house, and of gathering the fruit of his vineyard, specially whē there were other men ynow besides him to goe to battell. Againe they bee euen naturall grieues also. For this cause Moses exempted such persons persons from the warres by Gods commaundement . But yett wee cheefely come backe to this point (as I sayd,) that although necessitie pinch vs and constraîne vs : yett must we vse some gentleness in bearing with such as are meete to haue some priuiledge and freedome more than other men.

Morcouer whereas hee speaketh of dedicating of houses : although it signifie to dwell in them : yett was it not Lawfull for the Iewes to settle themselves in their houses , before they had made a kinde of dedicating of them , that is to say , till they had vsed some kinde of Ceremonie of blessing the house in the name of GOD . That Ceremonie was obserued vnder the Lawe : howbeit that as nowe it is not any more in vse among vs .

But yett the instruction thereof abideth vnto vs , that is to say , that it is not Lawfull for vs to vse any thing without thanks giuing , and without praying vnto GOD that all may be pure and cleane vnto vs . Saint Paule sayth that our meate and our eating and drinking are sanctified : And howe ? By prayer and by the woorde .

The bread (as yee see) is a creature whereunto GOD hath giuen vertue to nourishe vs : and yett if wee eate thereof without regarding him that feedeth and susteyneth vs by it , wee defile it . When the thing that GOD had created for our sustenance , is peruerted by our defiling of it , it is treason agaynst GOD .

And therefore there is none other meane for our foode to become pure vnto vs , than to acknowledge GOD to bee the giuer of them , and to yeeld him thanks for the same , praying him to guide vs as his children , that wee may Lawfully receiue the benefites which hee bestoweth vpon vs .

For although the wicked and the faythlesse be fedde in this world as well as wee , and haue the same Sunne shyning vpon them which we haue , and eate of the same bread that wee doe : Yett notwithstanding , all despysers of GOD , all vnbelecuers , all Cormorantes that fall to their meate like swine and Asses , without praying vnto GOD or without lifting vp their heartes vnto him , are all theewes ; and they eate not one bite of bread whereof they shall not yeeld an account .

And why so ? For there is none but Iesus Christ that is vniuersall heire of this world , as he is named . And wee must bee his members , or else wee can haue no parte in any of GODS benefites .

And howe may wee bee members of our Lorde Iesus Christ , except wee bee grafted into his bodie by fayth ? Wee see then howe all our meates are vnclane , and that wee on our part doe defile them , vnlesse we yeeld thanks for them vnto GOD , and pray him to gouerne vs as his children , that we may receiue sustenance for our lyfe at his hande as at the hand of our father .

In lyke case is it with apparell and with all other thinges : GOD must be faine to blesse them to our vse . For to that condition is our apparell , sustenance , and dwelling tyed . Now then , when a house is to bee dwelt in ; we must not vse the olde figure of the Lawe in dedicating it : but yett must the partie that is to dwell in it , acknowledge that it is GOD which lodgeth him there , euen as hee hath lodged vs alreadie vpon the earth , making the waters to with draw by chemselfes , that wee might haue some roome to dwell on heere beneath . Also let euery of vs thinke thus with himselfe : although I haue but a litle cottage , yett notwithstanding seeing that our Lorde hath placed mee heere , it becommeth mee to acknowledge it : and although my house bee of myne owne purchasing , or that I haue it by inheritance , or by lease , or by any other tittle whatsoever ; yett am I alwayes the tenant of the Lorde my God . Let vs haue an eye to that , and let vs call vpon the name of God : for that is the right hallowing of thinges , and to shall Gods fauour dwell with vs , by cause wee defyle not our houses at our coming into them , but acknowledge that GOD hath had pittie vpon vs , and that it is hee which hath giuen vs the commodities of this lyfe .

Thus yee see to what ende this Ceremonie of the Lawe tended , and what wee haue to gather thereof at this day .

Nowe it is sayde on the contrary part , that a vine is vnhalloed or made common , when the fruite thereof is gathered , by cause it was not lawfull to gather the fruite of their vines vntill the fourth yeere . It behoued the first crotte thereof to bee common , and then the Owner thereof was to take the benefite thereof afterwarde . In that respect therefore it is said that the Vyneyard was to be made common . But we haue no such custome nowadayes . For we be not bound to the yoke of the Lawe , since the tyme that our Lorde Iesus Christ deliuered vs from it .

But howefoer the case stande , although the bondage hee past away : yett must wee holde fast the instruction that commeth by it , that is : That wee must enter into an account of the benefites that GOD bestoweth vpon vs , and giue parte of them to such as want . The riche must vnderstand that hee is a detter to such as haue neede : and although hee be not taxed and seised , as who shoulde say thou shalt giue thus much of thy goods : yett ought it to suffice vs , that GOD putteth them into our handes with condition to bee as his receiuers , and that our inioying of the goods which wee possesse through his goodness , is in such wise , that wee bee bounde to succour them that haue neede .

Thus yee see how the old figures are profitable to vs still at this day ; not that we be bound to obserue them , but for that the truth of them belongeth vnto vs . To be short , we see how in all the commodities of this present lyfe , we be taught first of all to magnifie the goodness of our GOD , for that hee hath a fatherly care of vs , and prouideth vs all things that are requisite for vs .

And we must also haue a regard of our neighbours , & of the Communion or fellowship which our lord commandeth . Not that there should not be any ciuill order , or that no man myght keepe that which is his own ; but that euery man should strain himselfe to be liberal of the things y God giueth so as the needy may be succoured by vs. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to remember as touching the exemption that was giuen to the three sortes of men spoken of before.

Nowe let vs come to that which Moses addeth. He saith that if there be any fearefull and faint-hearted fellows, they must be sent home to their houses, least they discourage their brethren likewise. Here our Lord declareth y<sup>e</sup> he would haue the wars which y<sup>e</sup> Iewes were to make, to be made in his name. And therefore hee woulde haue souldiours that should goe to it with a franke courage. For if a man bee afrayd, it is a token that he hath not trust in GOD: for faith hath power to ouercome and to kill all fearefullnesse. Not that wee should bee without feeling; for although wee rest vpon the fauour of GOD, and call vpon him not doubting but that hee heareth vs; yet are wee not senselesse so as wee should shewe no token of infirmitie at all, but wee shall alwayes get the vpper hande of it. Then if wee bee ouertaken with fearefulness, it is a signe that wee haue no trust in GOD. And howe should hee helpe vs, when we do him not the honour to trust vnto him? And if we be not hardy hauing his promise; whom may we blame but our selues, that wee obtaine not the victorie? Nowe then if wee trust not to that which our Lord hath promised; then is it meete that hee should withdrawe himselfe from vs and giue vs ouer. Thus yee see why expresse commandement is giuen to Governours in this text, to send home fainthearted and cowardly souldiours. I haue told you already howe it was not lawful for the Israelites to enterprize warres vpon ambition or couetousnesse; as wee see men doe nowadayes, who vpon an eager desire of bearing rule in the worlde, become vnstatiable gulfes in making warres and in shedding of mans blood: but the warres which the people of Israell made, were vpon necessitie, and GOD auowed them and blessed them in so dooing. And because it was so, hee woulde haue the souldiours to looke vnto him, and thereby to assure themselves of his helpe. Therefore such as were weake-hearted were not worthy to bee in the hoste of GOD: for they should but haue bred confusion, and that two wayes. Moses noteth the one here to bee that they should haue discouraged their brethren. But there was this more, that it was as a nomising of GODS curse, when such men were mingled with those that ought to haue their eye vpon the banner or standard of GOD displayed before them. And this reason is to bee well weyed, where Moses saith that they might discourage the heartes of their brethren; and that as their owne heartes faynted, so they might make the rest of the people afrayde and dismayed too. And (as I sayde) this reason is to be marked well: for we haue experience of it in all things. Let vs looke vpon any other businesse: if there be but one loytering lubber, he is a discomfort to all the rest of the company. For one giueth courage to another: and when men goe lustily to their worke, there is no labour nor occupation so harde, but it is gone through with: and it not halfe so much payne to them, when they doe their indeouour with a good will. Contrarywise when any one falles to loytering, hee makes al the rest of the company to droope. But that is not all the ill yet. For besides that such a slouthfull body will not straine himselfe to doe his duetie: he will cuer finde some occasion to cloake his shame, and he will fall to murmuring and grudging, so as a man were better to haue but two or three lustie fellows that are well disposed to take paines; than to haue two dosen of lither loyterers, of whom one is ynough to marre all his fellowes. This is manifestly seene. If there bee any trouble, what is commonly the cause of it? It is, that if some disordered person thrust himselfe into a companie of men, hee is as a firebrand to kinde such a fire as cannot easily be quenched. He falleth to sowing of his Darnell, which sprcadeth so farre from one to another, that at length the trubble and disquietnesse growe so great, as they cannot bee appeased agayne. This is to bee seene in all our lyfe throughout. And when yee come to publyke offices, if there bee six skooore persones moe or lesse well disposed to gouerne the people, and there bee but a two or three that drawe backe: those few shall bee able to doe a hundred fould more harme, than all the rest to doe good. As for example, in drawing of a cart; wee see howe one reitie Iade shall hinder foure or fise good horses, which woulde haue gone away roundely with the load, if that naughtie beast had not bin among them. Likewise if in a common Council or in a great companie there bee but one or two ill disposed persones, which shall goe about to ouerthrowe all good order: You would wonder to see howe vntowardly things will fall out. And although a man woulde make an account of the contrarie because the greater parte seeme willing to doe good: yet those two or three are ynough to ouerthrowe all, and to put al to haucke. So then it is not for nought that GOD woulde haue all such to bee cutte off from his armie, and that if men intended to haue GOD to beare sway among them and to shewe his power in giuing them victorie, they shoulde at their going to warre, shake off al that rabble, which are good for nothing but to marre the rest by their mistrustfulness and leaud behaiour. Wee see howe Gedeon went to worke: and his example is notable about all others, because that then GOD shewed himselfe after a most visible manner, and by myracle more worthie to bee had in remembrance than cuer before. And in deede, it is not without cause that the Prophet Esay speaking of the deliuerance which GOD woulde worke by the hande of the Redeemer: sayeth that it shall bee as in the day of Madian, that is to say in the victorie that was giuen against the Madianites by the hande of Gedeon. For when hee had assembled a great multitude of men: in the ende hee was commanded to send

send home the most part of them againe, because GOD intending to giue the greater glorie to his owne power, woulde haue but a small number of men to doe it withall. And who were they whome Gedeon referred for that purpose? GOD gaue him a token to know them by, which was that when they came to drinke, as many of them as lapped the water or kneeled downe to drinke, should be sent away; and that those which tooke vp water in their hands to drinke as they passed by without staying, should goe on agaynit the enimies. GOD gaue that marke. And to what end? To doe them to vnderstand, that he would haue none to bee of his Crewe, but such as were thoroughly disposed and well willing to go to battell agaynt their enimies. For that thing could not proceede but of an assured trust that GOD was with them. For howe coulde three hundred men haue fought agaynt a great armie, specially with pitchers, Lanternes, and Lampes, (as though they had caryed bladders full of pease made for little children) to scarre their enimies withall? Woulde they euer haue gone that way to worke, if they had not all of them bene certainly perswaded in their heartes after this manner? It is GOD that gouerneth and directeth vs, and therefore if wee goe forward according to his wil, shal we doubt y he is not able to succour vs at our neede, and to discomfite the infinite multitude of the Madianites when they shall set themselves agaynt vs? So then let vs marke howe our Lordes intent was to thewe hereby, that all such as goe a warfare, must marche as it were vnder his standard, and put their trust in him; and that the stoutnesse which he requireth in them, must bee as a record of their faith.

Nowe let vs apply this to our owne vse. In dedee this doctrine ought to be put in vre nowadaies by the princes that cal themselves Christians. And when they goe a warfare, they should consider first what reason mooues them thereto, whether their warres bee rightfull or no: and then ought they to followe the order which GOD sheweth them here. But they seeke no further nowadaies than to blynde themselves with vaine ouerweening. In dedee when they goe to their warres, they make professions to their Idolles, But all is but flat mockerie, I meane euen of their superstitions, when in they bee as deuoute as they that knowe no diuinitie at all. For wee see howe they bee blynded in their couetous desires, and all their trust is in their owne force and furniture. They haue thus many footemen, thus many horsemen, thus much attillerie, such and such intelligence, such and such alyances, and such and such I wote not what. True it is that all these things are necessaie for the warres: but yet ought they to begin at another ende, which is, to walke in the feare of God, and to rest vpon that poynt, and to referre themselves to him that hath all power in him, and not to stay vpon their owne strengthes, but to waite altogether vpon God who giueth the victorie. But there is none of all this.

Nowe haue wee a more generall doctrine, in that wee bee all souldiers of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and that our state is such, that we must fight, not for one day onely, but all the tyme of our lyfe. Wee cannot serue our GOD othertwyle than by fighting. Sith it is so, let vs apply this doctrine to our instruction. As how? Let vs take an exposition of it out of the hundred and tenth Psalm. It is sayde there, that in the day of the Musters which the King shall make whom GOD hath set ouer vs, (that is to say our Lorde Iesus Christ) the people shall come vnto him willingly and with a free courage. The marke then which Dauid attributeth to all Christians, whereby they may be knowne to bee Christes good souldyers, and bee auowed to bee of his armie and company; is that they must present and offer themselves to him, with a pure and free heart, not as folke that come by constraynt, or enforced as slaues; but as they that offer vp and dedicate themselves wholly to him. That is the true practising of this doctrine, I meane as in respect of all private persons. In dedee this doctrine ought to beare sway among the faithfull in the necessitie of warre: and without that, it were better for them to suffer their throates to be cut a hundred tymes, than once to drawe a sworde in their owne defence, vnlesse they goe to it with a pure conscience, acknowledging after this manner: God alloweth and admitte vs, and for as much as we fight vnder his guydance, hee will surely bee on our side. If a man haue not this: it were better for him a hundred thousand times to perish, than to stirre one finger towards the sauing of his lyfe, as it were in despite of GOD, hauing no leaue nor licence of him to doe it. Therefore in necessitie of warre, the faithfull shoulde bee armed with this doctrine, of stengthening themselves in GOD, and of calling vpon his name without doubt or feare. But wee (as I sayde afore) haue a continuall warfare all our lyfe long, because Satan neuer ceaseth, and wee haue sinne fighting agaynt vs, yea and euen within vs. Wee neede not goe farr to incounter with our enimies: for looke howe many thoughtes and affections wee haue in our nature; so many enimies haue we agaynt GOD, which procure the destruction of our soules. Then it standeth vs in hande to bee disposed to fight. And how may that bee doone? If wee knowe not the succour that GOD vouchsafeth to giue vs, surely wee shall bee put to the foyle at euery tyme. For why? How great is our weakenesse, as I saide afore? Needes must wee bee astraught or rather vtterly blockith; for wee are not able to make any resistance. Besides this, our enimie is Prince of the world, sinne holdeth vs as it were in his bondes and cordes, and wee cannot scape from him except GOD set vs free. So then let vs learne that our Lorde calleth vs to himselfe, to the ende wee should be confirmed, and fight valiantly vpon assurance of his helpe. But doe wee so? Can wee call vpon our GOD? Can wee assure our selues that hee will assist vs? Wee ought to resort vnto him with a pure and free heart, and to choofe to be beseged with infinite perilles, and to indure sore assaultes: rather than to bee at rest and to haue him farre from vs, so as hee should not bee our head, nor our Lorde Iesus Christ be our King. Therefore although it bee a hard and painfull state to the fleshe, yet let vs choofe this condition, namely: to fight vnder Christes Standard, and to appeare at the day of his musters rather than to sit idle at home and to doe him no seruice. Nowe this day of musters is all the tyme of our life, yea and also of our death. For looke howe oft we be exercised by diuers temptations; so oft doth Iesus Christ make his musters in vs. It is not for naught that Saint Paule sayth hee was set as vpon a scafould, to bee seene by the Angels of paradise. Hee speaketh of himselfe and of his companions. But yet doth the same concerne euery one of vs, namely that GOD will haue vs to bee here as it were to make our musters before the Angels of heauen, that we might knowe that his looking so narrowly to vs after that manner, is to the end we should hie our good example one to another. Seeing it is so, let vs learne to offer our selues to God with such obedience, as wee may be accounted of the number and company which Dauid speaketh of in the fore-alleged text, that is to wit, of such as offer themselues to their King with a free courage, vnconstrained and not forced.

Nowe then forasmuch as the state of the Church is a warfare: we know that first of all it standeth vs in hand to gather such as are of a good courage, and that if we see any weakelings, wee must bee well ware that wee match not our selues with them: for there is infirmite ynough in euerychone of vs, without procuring any more s<sup>o</sup> elsewhere. Though no other body intice me ro naughtineffe, or make me cold in goodnesse: I am Lazie and colde ynough of my selfe, vntill God doe heate mee and strengthen mee. And therefore what a thing is it when I shall bee furthered in euill by my companion, and bee made the weaker by him? Seeing then that wee be to liue in this world, yee see howe it standeth vs in hand, to take heede that wee m<sup>o</sup>ddle not with such as may discourage vs. Why so? Because we be subiect ynough of our selues to our owne lustes, and foreward ynough to all vanities and delights, and ready ynough to shrinke away from the seruing of God: al of vs (say I) are too much inclined to euill of our selues, without further prouocation. But now if I match my selfe with drunkards and gluttons, with whore-mongers and swearers: what shall become of mee? Whereas I haue the seede of vice and sin in mee already: will it not bee an increasing of it, if I seeke occasions of euill? Is it not a tempting of God, and a casting of my selfe away? And yet yee see we doe it ordinarily, insomuch as we may seeme to seeke occasions to mischeefe our selues, and if any body goe about to drawe vs from wicked companie: wee grate our teeth at him as though he did vs great wrong. But contrariwise wee ought to put this les<sup>o</sup>n in vre, by thinking thus with our selues: God hath graunted me the grace to be of his campe, & will haue me to fight against sinne, against the world, against all mine own lustes, yea and euen against Satan himselfe. In dee<sup>o</sup>de it is a very harde encounter: and when I haue gotten the vpper hand one day, I must enter into new battels againe the next day. What will become of mee therefore, if I be not minded to play the valiant champion? Seeing I not onely find such a number of impediments in mee as is pitie to thinke on, but also doe vtterly faint afore hand: what shall become of me, if my God strengthen me not? But hee hath promised mee to doe it, and therefore I will call vpon him. Againe, when I see great numbers of stumbling blockes, and impediments that may hinder me or put mee to trouble: I will looke to the helpe which God giueth me, and that will bee ynough to make me ouercome all dist<sup>o</sup>resses: specially if I be guided by his holy spirite, that will suffice to repulse all feare, and all distrust that myght discourage mee. Were we then wise and well aduised, wee would thinke better vpon these things than we haue bene wont to doe: and euerye of vs woulde followe such as are of good courage, and shewe vs good example by marching on before vs, and haue bene tryed afore in the seruice of GOD. With such would wee keepe companie, and with such would wee haue familiaritie, knowing that nothing is better than to linke in together one with another, and to keepe our selues occupied in that exercise, seeing wee haue such neede thereof. Thus yee see howe <sup>we</sup> ought to put this sentence in vre.

But yet it is then to bee doone most specially, when the case concerneth them that should shewe the way howe to fight, as those that are in publi<sup>o</sup>e office, whether it bee of government and execution of Iustice, or of preaching Gods woorde: for if saynthearted and cowardly men be put in those places; what shall they doe but ouerthrowe all? And therefore men ought to make better choyce than they doe, when officers are to be appointed in the house of God, so as they must not goe and choofe at a aduventure without considering who bee meete and fite for the purpose, or without regarde whether they haue a good will and bee rightminded to serue God and to imploy themselues as they ought to doe or no. And no maruell though oftentimes things be out of square in the world, and that all things are seene to be out of order: for men refuse the meanes that God offereth them. And when they so forsake him: it is good reason that they also should bee forsaken of him, and that they should finde themselues to bee forlorne. But yet must wee aduise our selues the better to followe the rule that is giuen vs here, and euery of vs must haue a regarde of himselfe to gather courage: and if we be fainthearted, we may bee sure that it is not for vs to be of the armie and companie of GOD. What is to bee doone then? The Ministers must doe as the Prophet Esay commaundeth them, that is to say, they must strengthen the weak<sup>o</sup>e knees, and encourage incourage the weake heartes . For the right vse of Gods woord is , that when wee see mens handes quake and their knees shake , wee must rayse them vp and strengthen them againe by our liuely encouragements . And haue the Ministers once doone their dewtie , euery other man also must do the lyke , as the Apostle sayth in the Epistle to the Hebrewes . For this text of Esayes is alleaged there , to shew that not onely such as haue the charge to preach Gods word must strengthen the weake : but also that euery man must doe the lyke towardes himselfe . Therefore let vs examine our owne weakenesse . And where as wee see our selues so feeble : let vs knowe that God hath giuen vs a good helpe by his woord . Let vs applye his promises to our vse , that when wee feele our knees shake wee must quicken them vp , and when our handes quake wee must strengthen them , and our hearts must be so fenced with constancie and courage , as wee may not bee afrayde to offer our selues to the incounter , as they that are sure that our Lorde goeth before vs , so as wee shall be backed by him , and his grace shal neuer fayle vs : and that moreouer our neighbours bee led to him by our example , so as wee may with one common accorde bee strengthened to fight against Satan , hauing Christ for our head , who guideth and gouerneth vs in all incounters and assaults which we haue to indure ; vntill he haue taken vs vp into his heauenly rest .

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulcs , praying him to make vs feele them better , & to forgiue vs them , and to gouerne vs hencefoorth in such wise , as wee may bee the better disposed to fight vnder him and vnder his hande , vntill wee haue gotten the victorie against all our enimies , and haue inioyed the fruite of our victorie , being gathered all together vnto him . And so let vs al say , Almighty God heauenly father , &c .

The Cxxviij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the twentieth Chapter.

10 When thou commest neere any Citie to fight against it, thou shalt offer it peace.

11 And if they aunswere thee peaceably, and open vnto thee, al the people that is in it shall bee tributarie vnto thee and serue thee.

12 But if they will not make peace with thee, but make warre with thee : then shalt thou lay feege to it.

13 And the Lord thy God will giue it into thy handes . Thou shalt slea all the males in it with the edge of the sword.

14 But the women, the children, and the cattel, and al that is in the Citie besides, and all the spoile thereof thou shalt take to thy selfe: and thou shalt eat the spoyle of thine enimies which the Lord thy God giueth thee.

15 After that manner shalt thou doe to all the Cities that are farre off from thee, which are not of the Cities of this nation.

16 But of the Cities of the nations which the Lord thy God giueth thee to inherite, thou shalt not leaue any soule alieue.

17 But thou shalt vtterly destroy the: namely the Hethites, the Amorrhites, the Chananites, the Pheresites, the Hiuites and the Iebusites, as the Lord thy God hath commaunded thee:

18 Least they teach you to doe according to all the abominations which they haue done to their gods, and so you sinne against the Lord your God.

T might well seeme at the first blushe, that wee haue no great need to haue y doctrine expounded to vs which is conteynd here, by cause it declareth howe men ought to bechaue themselues in warfare . But when all is well looked vpon, wee shall finde that wee may gather good and profitable fruite to our instruction, of the thinges that GOD hath commaunded his people heere . For first wee see what a care hee had to teach those of whome hee had taken charge, that they myght knowe howe to behaue themselves in all thinges . Nowe seeing that GOD hath such a care : let vs learne to walke in his obedience , not doubting but wee shall finde sufficient instruction in his worde, whereby to rule our whole lyfe well. I say that all they which yeeld themselves teachable vnto GOD, and are ready to fasthion themselves after his will, shall finde sufficient in his worde wherewith to guide themselves aright without any want at all; inso much that whereas men are disordered in their dealings, and knowe not what to doe: the cause thereof is, that they submit not themselves wholly to GOD, but take counsell by themselves, and runne gadding here and there, whereas all they that seeke to be taught by Gods worde, as well in matters of state as in priuate matters, and as well in time of warre as in tyme of peace, shall finde a perfect doctrine and such as is fitte for them. The thing then which wee haue to marke vpon this text, is that GOD woulde not faile them in any one point, whom he had taken into his tuition.

But there is yet more . For it may well seeme that where open warre is, there all thinges should bee put to hauocke . But our Lorde ment to shewe, that all his seruantes must alwayes brydle themselves, yea euen where they seeme to haue most excessiue libertie, to breake the bondes of all humanitie and vprightnesse . GOD sheweth that such as belong to him must euen in those cases keepe and mayntayne themselves vndefiled; so as howe soeuer the worlde goe, they must stande in continuall awe, that no extremitie may driue them beyond their bondes, but that they holde them still to this ground; Wee must obey GOD . True it is that euen the heathen coulde skill to say, that euen in tyme of warre it was not Lawefull to assault or beseege a Towne, vntill they had offered it conditions of peace . But yet wee see there was nothing but furie and crueltie: for as soone as they were entered into armes, they bare themselves in hand that it was Lawfull for them to beare all thinges downe before them without sparing . GOD then ment to shewe heere, that his people ought to bee so courteous as to spare their enemies, euen in tyme of warre . That is the thing which is conteyned heere . A man shall finde in the booke of the heathen, that they also commended this vprightnesse, that although there was iust cause of warre; yet the shedding mans blood was to bee forborne; but this rule was not well kept . And howe soeuer the case stande, our Lorde hath heere separated his people from all the rest of the worlde, shewing that they which are led by his worde, must looke more straitely and narrowly to themselves, than they that followe their naturall inclination, and are not taught as they should be.

And nowe let vs come to the doctrine that is conteyned heere . It is sayde, When thou comest to a Ciitie to beseege it, thou shalt offer them peace : and if they yeeld or bee willing to fall to composition, thou shalt receiue them to mercie, so as no blood shall bee shedde . The inhabitants shall but onely bee subiect to thee and pay thee Tribute.

In so saying GOD sheweth that although there bee iust cause of warre, yet must not men bee so whor and stie at the first dash, as to put all to the sward and slaughter: For howe soeuer the worlde goe, men are created after the Image of GOD: and there must we beholde our nature . Wherefore it must needs bee that wee are caried away from all reason, if the same withhold vs not, and that wee haue no pitie of those which are our owne fleshe and bones, and which beare the marke of our GOD, euen of the same

GOD which hath fashioned vs after his own lykenesse . If this (say I) bee not able to aswage our passions, which myght carie vs away to crueltie: it must needs be sayde that wee bee bereft of all reason, and woofe than the brute beasts, which knowe their owne kinde, and doe not so deadly pursue one another. That is the thing which wee haue to marke in the first place. And hereof we may gather a good lesson expedient for vs all. For heere God speaketh of those against whom he armeth his people. But we cannot say the like of our enemies. If a man haue done me all the wrong that is possible, yea and haue euen sought my death: yet doeth not that arme me to be auenged of him: God doeth not giue mee leaue to requite like for like, but I am commanded to render good for euill. Howbeit the case standeth otherwise with Princes and Magistrates which haue the sword: for God hath fet them in his owne stead to execute vengeance. Ye see then that heere is a people armed with Gods authoritie, as if God had sayde, draw your swords, for I dispenche with you at this tyme, so as ye may slea your enimies, and it shall not be layde to your charge for a crime . When a warre is rightfull, and God giueth men leaue: it is a permission or priuilege which he granteth them . And yet for all that he will not haue men to goe to it at alauenture, but that they shoulde seeke peace, and abstayn from shedding of blood if it be possible, so as no man may be hurt or wounded in his person. Seeing that God wil haue men to brydle themselves after that manner in the tyme of warre, I pray you what is to be doone where our handes are so tyed vp, as it is not lawfull to giue our enimie a phillippe, but to loue them rather, that haue grieued vs or wrought vs any wrong or iniury: Ought we not to offer them peace, & to be al ready to receiue them to mercy when we see them willing to be reconciled to vs?

So then, seeing that euen in the tyme of warre, when all thinges seeme to be lawfull, our Lorde will haue vs to offer peace to them that haue dealt amisse with vs and haue desired to be punished in their bodies: Seeing (I say) that God will haue vs to seeke meanes to saue them, and that wee should not deale rigorously with them: much more ought euery of vs in our owne priuat cases, to be inclined to beare with our aduersaries. If we be troubled and molested, so as we haue iust cause to the worldwarde to pursue the iniurie doone vs: yet ought wee rather to fall to composition, if it be possible: And if we doe not, what excuse will there bee for vs? If those whom God hath armed against their enemies, may not strike one stroke at them vntill they haue assaiend to make peace with them: what shall become of vs who ought to be men of peace, and to loue our enemies; if we be vnreconcilable, fierce as Lyons, harde as Steele, and such as can be brought to none atonement: Must it not needes be said that we haue shaken off all feare of God? Yes: and yet we see howe men doe sooth themselves in this case. In somuch that if a man be grieued; he is so far off from warning y<sup>e</sup> offender of his fault quietly, to bring him to good atonement againe; that (to all lykelyhoode) he will rather turne the whole world vpside downe, than he will by any meanes be reconciled. Wee see that this wilfull stubbornnesse is vtterly past amendment in most men. And so wee perceiue now what fruite wee ought to reape of this text: namely that although he speake of warre, yet he giueth good instruction to his people and to euery of vs.

And therefore let vs remember, that whensoever any man hath offended vs, wee must as much as in vs lyeth indouour to fall to agreement with our enemyes. As howe? By warning them of their faultes. For reconciliation presupposeth that the offender shoulde vnderstande his offence and mislike thereof, and that wee shoulde bee ready to receiue such as are so minded, so as wee shoulde bee desirous to bee at one with them as with our brethren, notwithstanding that they had beene as enemyes to vs before so much as in them lay. And if wee ought to yeelde this courtesie towardes them that haue broken the bond of all peace and brotherly vnitie: howe much more shoulde wee maintayne peace and concord with our neighbours that haue not doone vs any wrong? And so wee must come by degrees, euen to the procuring of our peace with all men as much as wee can possibly, because it is Gods will that all men shoulde bee linked together in one bonde; as in verry deede the nature y<sup>e</sup> is common to vs all, ought to bee as a common kinred to vs all. Nowe then, seeing it is so that wee ought to maintayne peace and brotherly loue among vs: let vs see that we offer peace to all men, not onely in wordes, but also in such wise as our life may beare record that we be desirous of nothing more than to be friendes to all men, in somuch that if there happen any quarell, wee must not minister occasion therunto, nor kinde the fire on our behalfe, but so refraine our selues, as wee prouoke nor our neyghbour to enmitie. Thus yee see howe after the order afore mentioned, wee must come to the doctrine which the holy Scripture sheweth vs in other places: That is to wit, that it must not bee long of vs that wee bee not as brothers to all men, and that wee communicate not together, without any iarring or disagreement. That (say I) is the meane and maner to offer peace accordingly as GOD commaundeth. And nowe let vs proceede to that which followeth.

When a Citie will not receiue peace, God giueth his people leaue to destroy all the men, reueruing onely the young Children, the women, and the Castell. True it is that although a Citie fall to composition, yet will hee haue it to become tributarie. For (as I sayde afore) hee presupposeth that the warre must bee rightfull, and allowed by him, as made in his name and by his authoritie. And therefore it is not to bee wondered at though he lay tribute vpon those that submit themselves. For why? It is as a penaltie. Lyke as in Ministracion of Justice, men punish the offenders according to the Lawe; and when the case requireth not the punishment of death, there is some other chastisement or amercement layde vpon them for a penaltie: Euen so our Lorde giueth leaue to such as haue iust tytyle of warre, to lay some correction vpon those whom they shall haue vanquished and subdued. And here in wee see howe we ought to take good heede, that wee giue no cause of warre. For where as wee see our Lorde hath giuen his people leaue to lay tribute vpon others, it is all one as if hee shoulde say that all such as minister occasion of trouble, are to bee punished, and that if they bee borne with, it is but of fauour and courtesie: but yet are they worthy to haue some correction for all that.

Therefore let vs learne heereby to bee so peaceable, as wee moue not any trouble or discord on our side. For by setting downe such a Lawe, GOD hath shewed that whosoever soweth any discord among men, or procurth any trouble, deserueth alwayes to bee punished; and that although hee bee spared, yet hee is to bee chastised after some sorte neuertheless. And although warre bee not made against vs, nor any tribute bee layde vpon vs: yet notwithstanding wee must not therefore omitte to acknowledge our selues faultie before GOD. For if a whole Nation bee not spared: what shall a priuate person bee? I see that GOD condemneth a whole Citie or a Countrie: and what will become of mee, when I shall haue kindled the fire of discord, and giuen occasion of enmitie? Am not I much more worthy to bee condemned? Is it mee that I which am but one man, shoulde bee more borne with than a whole Nation? This therefore ought to bee a good warning to vs, to liue in peace and to maintaine my selfe denesse, so as no man bee troubled or vexed by vs. For sith wee see so sharpe execution, that God giueth leaue to put the men to death, and to referue y<sup>e</sup> women to bondage and slaucerie: is it not a thing that ought to make vs afraide? Yes: and this doeth vs to vnderstande, that when swoordes are once drawn, there must needs be horrible confusion, and it is not possible to remedie it. For it is GOD that speaketh heere, and hee setteth downe the best order of government among his people, that is possible to bee founde: and yet so horrible is that kynde of dealing, that when a Citie is assaulted and taken by force, all the men must bee destroyed. Surely such shedding of bloud ought to make the hayre to stande vp vpon our heades. And yet for all that it is GOD that speaketh it, and (as I sayde afore) hee intendeth to fet downe heere the perfectest Lawe of armes that can bee among men. Then let vs conclude, that if warre bee once kindled, there is no remedie to appease it. And therefore it behooueth men to haue the more staye of themselves beforehande, and to consider thus: What a thing is it to come to battell, wherein so manie murders are to bee committed, and so manie slaughters are to bee doone, as though the whole world shoulde goe to confusion, and all bondes of nature were to bee forgotten, and men shoulde shutte their eyes wilfully to the intent they myght not see whether the folke whom they so murder bee men or no? Ought it not to bee a good brydle to vs, when wee see so great enmities insue thercof? Let such as take warres in hande looke well to themselves, and bethinke them thus: What Peraduenture I must come to the lacking of a Citie: and so from one to another, and battell vpon battell shall bee fought. What a number of poore widowes and fatherlesse children shall bee made thereby? What a heape of confusions will insue thercof, so as ye would thinke that the worlde should bee turned vpside downe? And shall I bee the cause of all this? If Princes considered that they shoulde fall into such extremities by taking warres in hande, surely they would deale much more myldly than they doe.

But if they benefite not themselves thereby, yet let vs looke to our selues, and consider that the mischief which our Lord sheweth vs to bee in warre, may also befall to priuate persons. For when two men fall at variance, and runne out into heates of euill speeches, strypes will ensue of it, and when swoordes bee once drawn, bloudfied doeth lightly followe after. And in this case there is no lawfulness at all: it is not as when God giueth men leaue to kill their enemies in battell: for whosoever sleaeth a man for any priuate quarrell, is a murderer. So then, wee must looke neererly to our selues, and eschewe quarels and debates the more, knowing that it is a giuing way and an opening of a gappe to Satan, that hee may raygne among vs, whensoever wee seeke occasions of quarelling, or when wee shunne them not as we ought to doe.

Yee see then howe the warning which wee haue to gather vpon this text, is that seeing

GOD hath giuen leaue (as it were of force and necessitie) to kill such as resist the assault of a Towne: it behooueth vs to take good heede, that quarels, troubles, and contentions proceede not so farre through our faulte, as there is none other remedie but the shedding of bloud. For if wee be slaine in any such fray, vohappie bee wee; and if wee chauce to slea our aduersarie, vnhappy bee we so too. For wee see that GODS spirit beareth not the sway in that case. True it is, that if a man that is assaulted, doe slea him that assaulteth him, hee shall not bee punished for it, neyther ought hee to bee: but yet is hee not excusable before GOD. For why? Who is hee that can so brydle himselfe, that hee is not inflamed with choller, or with some excessiue and inordinate passion? Seeing then that such things doe raige in vs, wee bee blame worthe though wee haue iust cause to doe it. For it is not ynough for vs to haue a good cause; but it must also bee well ordered, that is to say, it must bee done with a quiet minde, so as wee proceede not into such extremitie as to commit manslaughter. And therefore let vs learne to preuent Satan, and to seeke meanes of attonement, that our quarels may not proceede into shedding of bloud.

Besides this, wee haue also one other lesson together, namely that if there bee any agreement among vs, or any meane of reconciliation whereas wee were deadly enemies before: the cause thereof is, that God stablisheth a holy brotherhood among vs, by calling vs to him, and by adoping vs to bee his children. And in that respect is the Gospell called the message of peace. For why? Whereas wee bee at warre with GOD, and he must needs hate vs in as much as wee be corrupted, and there is nothing in vs but vtter curfiednesse: hee vouchsafeth to become our friend, and receiuing vs as his owne children, promiseth to forget and to burie all our faults. The Gospell beareth vs recorde hereof. And therefore not without cause is it called the doctrine of peace, seeing it vnitheth vs againe to our GOD. Sith it is so, wee ought in dede likewise to bee at one among our selues. For howe is it possible that GOD should acknowledge vs for his children, if there bee not vnitie and agreement among vs? And if wee receyue not the sayde message, then must greater warre bee proclaimed against vs than euer there was afore. And therefore our Lord Iesus Christ sayde to his Disciples, Into whatsoever house yee enter, grette the same with peace. For (as I sayde afore) it is the property of the doctrine of saluation, to shewe that God is minded to come vnto vs and to receiue vs to mercie though wee bee not worthe thereof. Therefore all the Ministers of his word are commaunded to beare witnesse thereof: and to tell men that if they refuse it, cast it off, and make none account of it; there is a harder battell towards than this is. For the case concerneth neth not the destruction of their bodies onely, but also of their soules. It is not onelic the males that shall bee slaine for it; but both males and females must passe vspared. Not the greate ones onely shall beare the punishment, but both great and small shall feele the whole weight of Gods vengeance. Nowe then, if men accept not your peace, gette you out from among them, and shake the dust off your feete. As if hee should say, Such folk are so accursed, that yee must not haue anie thing at all to doe with them. But for asmuch as they carrie nothing about them but infection; yee must shewe by outwarde tokens, that yee woulde faine bee separated from them, euen as it were into another world. Thus ye see how the things that are spoken here concerning the law of armes, ought to be applied in way of similitude to the peace which our Lorde sendeth vs by the preaching of his Gospell. For there was enmitie betwixt him and vs before: by nature (as I haue said alreadie) we be all strangers to our God, and we cannot but set our selues againt him. Yet for all this, hee seeketh atonement with vs. Vpon what condition? Not that we shoulde pay him tribute, as though hee were minded to enrich himselfe with our goods. True it is that hee li-keth wel to haue vs to serue him: but yis for our benefite and welfare, and not for anie aduauntage to himselfe. For hee hath nowant of anie thing, neither needeth he to be enriched: but by possessing vs, he would that wee likewise should inherite him. And that is as amiable a condition as can be. Nowe what is to bee doone, but to receiue his peace? Yea verily: and therefore let vs not tarie til God inforce vs; but let vs preuent him, by embracing the inestimable prerogative which he offereth vs in vouchsafing to forgive vs all our finnes. But if wee be so wretched as to refuse to great a benefite: let vs mark that wee bee not onely cast vp as it were to the spoile, and that GOD shaketh vs quite & cleane off: but also that his wrath must needes bee vttered vpon vs, because of such vnthankfulness and churlishnesse, in despising our G O D so wilfully and stubbornly, that wee had leuer to haue him our deadly enemy than our protector.

 Seeing then that his intent is not to haue vs as subjects that are conquered by right of warre, not to raise tributes vpon vs to increase him selfe with all; but to reigne ouer vs for our welfare; and yet wee will not abide it, but shake him off vterly and pursue him still with a venomous heart to prouoke him to anger: is not our deserving such as hee may iustly bee so rigorously vnto vs, as to commaunde his seruantes to withdrawe themselves from vs, and to shake off the dust of their feete? As who should say, wee bee not worthe to treade vpon the earth, because wee defile it. The vertie thing therefore which wee haue to marke, is that wee cannot prouoke Gods wrath any way more, than by refusing the peace that is offered vs by the Gos-pell, so as wee vouchsafe not to hearken to it.
 For then, because God findeth vs past grace, God also is faine to arme himselfe with terrible and dreadfull vengeance againt vs, and not onely to punish vs in our bodies, but also to ex-tende his vengeance vnto our soules, and so to roote vs out quite and cleane, in which behalfe women are no more to bee spared than men. For when as God calleth vs all in Christ Iesus, there is no difference of male and female (as saith Saint Paul,) but saith reconcilet vs all vnto God. Likewise vnbeleefe and stubborn-nesse make vs enemies to God, both men and women, the punishment whereof extendeth both to great and small. For seeing wee are become traitours and rebels to our God, it is good reason that all our whole ofspring should perish with vs: because Gods curse lies vpon the wicked euen vnto the third and fourth generation, as the law auoweth & we haue seene heretofore.

 Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to remember vpon this text.

And let vs marke herewithall, that seeing God doeth so preuent vs aforeshand to seeke atonement and to sende vs tydings of peace: we also ought to seeke meanes to bee friends with such as haue offended vs, and to followe the example of our heavenly father, as it wee should say, What shall become of mee who am but a worme and rottennesse, if I continue wilfull, and holde skorne to come to atonement with mine enemy when he hath once offended mee, so as I chaw vpon my bridle still and will not by any meanes bee pacified, when in the meane time my God seeketh mee? Beholde, my GOD is wel contented to stoop vnto mee which am but rottennesse: and shall I not withstanding refuse to be reconciled to him that is my fellowe and brother? Although he haue offended mee, yet can I not renounce mine own nature: yet can I not bring to passe but that he is still a humane creature shaped after the image of God as well as my selfe. So then let vs learne to meeken our stomackes though they bee neuer so stout, and let this example of God induce vs to greater ge-nerousnesse and compassion than wee bee wont to haue.

Here vpon Moses addeth, *That this lawe serueth but onely for the Nations that were saue off.
 For as for those nations (saith he) whom God giueth you now presently, as the Chananites, the Heibites, the Amorrites, the Phereisites, the Henites, and the Iebu-sites; all these you must utterly vtterly vtter out, and inherite their lands, howebeit hauing first purged it cleane from all abyses.* Here wee see howe the lawe which I haue expounded alreadie, serued for the time then to come when the Israelites should haue any newe warre againt such as had not bene their enemies before. But as for the people of the Lande of Chanaan which God had promised for an inheritance to the Iewes: it was his wil that they should bee vterly rooted out, which thing at the first sight might seeme ouerharde as I haue saide therof herebefore, [but it was not so indeede.] For to the intent that men should not accuse God of crueltie, it was shewed why hee vsed so great rigour. But for-asmuch as all of you [perchance] vnderstood it not; it is requisite to declare againe wherefore our Lorde commaunderd all those Nations to be rooted out and to be put to sword and hanocke without any mercie at all. For they were no such enemies as had doone any speciall wrong to the children of Israell, but they were enemies to God, yea and enemies already condemned euen by the space of foure hundred yeares afore. True it is that the children of Israell had iust cause of warre against them, because Abraham came into that countrey by Gods appointment to dwell there. And although G O D did not yet put him in possession of the soueraigntie thereof which he had giuen vnto him: yet was it his will that hee should be an inhabitant of that lande. But they draue him from place to place: so did they also to his sonne Isaac, and likewise to Iacob, inso much as they euen denied them water. Nor that they went about to borrow water at their neighbours pits: but that their neighbours stopped vp the pittes which they had digged, and draue them from them without all humanitie. Howbeit there was yet a much higher respect: which was that God knowing the excessive wickednesse of all those nations to be vtterly vnrclaimable, determined to take them quite and cleane out of the world, and yet would not that their lande should be wast without inhabitants: and therefore hee appointed it for an inheritance to his owne people. Here therefore wee must behold Gods speciall iudgement, to the ende wee accuse him not as I saide afore, ne dispute as a number doe, which presume to replie and to say, why was G O D so seuer? What cause had he so to do? To the intent therefore that wee may honour God in his iudgements, acknowledging him to be vp right, and iust, yea without fault in all things: let vs marke that the condemning of this people here is not without cause. Might not God (if he listed) wipe vs out of the world euen at the first? And what should we gayne by pleading agaynst him or by going to Law with him? Nowe if hee may so destroy vs at the first dash, and yet we may not complaine thereof or goe to Law with him therefore, but that he shall continue righteous still in his punishing of vs: what may hee doe to vs when we be past grace, when he hath borne with vs long time, and patiently taried for vs, and yet wee growe euer worse and worse, and cease not to increase his wrath still against vs? If God finde vs so hard-hearted, is not our wickednesse then ripe? Is it not come to the full growth, as hee speaketh of these Nations here? Yes verily is it. For we see how these people were so wicked long aforehand euen in the time of Abraham, that it would greue ones hearte to thinke on it, so as they were not to be borne with anie longer. They sawe what befell to Sodome and Gomor, which were their Neighbour cities; and yet they became neuer the better for it, but continued still in all manner of outrageous wickednesse. Yet notwithstanding, it was Gods will to holde his hand, and not to punish them at the first. And howe long a time did hee waite for them? Not a tenn or twentie yeares onlie:

but he saith, I have condemned them, and giuen definitive sentence vpon them; and yet will I giue them, foure hundred yeares respite, so as I will not execute my iudgement till then. God (I say) deferred the execution of his iudgement against those that were worthie to haue bene rooted out of the world at the verie first. And yet for all his long delay what cometh of it? Did they amende? Did they bethinke them of their fautes to mislike of them and to craue forgiveness at Gods hande? No: But they grew still worse and worse; inso much that the thing which God had foretolde to Abraham fell out to be true: namely that the wickednesse of the Chananites was not yet as then grown to the full. As if hee should say, Indeede the measure is full enough already: but yet there must be such an ouermeasure, as they may come to destruction of themselves, and their owne wickednesse may be their overthrow.

Sith we see that God did so refrayne himselfe and vs so mielde a kinde of proceeding towards these Nations: what shall wee say, but that wee haue good cause to glorifie him, and to confesse him to be so kindehearted towards mankinde, as yet notwithstanding wee must not dallie with him, but liue in his feare: But if God beare with vs, wee take occasion to mocke him for his labour, and we thinke our selues escaped when hee hath delayed his punishing of vs. But beholde, G O D on the one side is loth to giue vs anie cause to complaine of ouer great rigour: and therefore hee is patient and long-suffering, as hee termeth himselfe in the holie Scripture. Howbeit forasmuch as wee abuse his goodnesse, and become the bolder to doe euill: hee sheweth vs that wee must come to a reckning for it in the ende, and that hee will pay the most vnrule sorte of vs for the arrages that he is behinde hande with vs. The thing then which wee haue to remember at the sight of this fayre looking glasse which wee haue in the Amorrhites, Hethites, Chananites, Pherezites, Iebusites, and their like; is to consider with our selues, that if G O D anie time do let men alone as though hee had layde the reins in their necke, and do wincke at them, and make no countenance at all of punishing them: it is no consequent that therefore hee acquitteth them, and that nothing is requir'd vp before him, and that their finnes shall scape quite and cleane vnpunished. No no: but hee waiteth for them with patience, and in the ende they must come to their account. And therefore let it not trouble vs when we see y our Lord punisheth not the wicked at y first dash; neither let it spite vs to see them ruffle it out in the meane while, & to make good cheere: for their triumphing shall cost the right deare, because they haue despised God; yea & euen falsely abused his grace, in making it a shrowdingheete of their noughtinesse. Therefore let it not be a meane to drawe vs to follow their example: but let vs patiently abide Gods leisure till he worke, & vntill the conuenient time be come: for him to execute his wrath: and that will serue vs for a double lesson.

For on the one side, when wee see that G O D punisheth not the wicked: we woulde by and by take part with them; if we be thought vs not of this threate. Well though G O D shewe not his arme to day, yet doeth it not follow but that hem ay doe it to morrowe. If wee were not restryed by this feare, wee woulde soone be out of all order, and the verie Angels woulde be corrupted by the example of the duelles. Marke that for one point. Againe, wee must bridle our affections and lustes that carrie vs away because wee bee amased yea and astonished, to thinke howe G O D leaue those vnpunished which haue offended him so fore: and that on the contrarie part, whereas he letteth them alone, yea and giueth them full scope to doe what they list in this worlde: in the meane time hee seemeth to forget vs as though hee had no regarde of vs at all. [Whereupon we thinke thus with our selues:] If wee be his children, where is the pitie that he hath promised vs? Such complaint doe they make, which haue not an eye to Gods long-sufferance. And so the seconde lesson which he should receiue, is that seeing wee perceiue that our Lorde taried so long a time for those nations which had offended him as highlie as could be, and we see him delay their punishment so long a time, that their sins seemed to lie buried by the space of four hundred yeares, and that yet neuertheless God executeth his sentence at the end of those fower hundred yeares, which was foure times beyonde the remembrance of men: Let the beholding hereof make vs to feare the rigour of our God as farre off: and though no tokens of his wrath appeare; yet let not vs sayle to foresee them by faith. As for example; when Hebr. 11.7. y Apostle speaketh of Noe, he saith that he foresaw the flud by faith. While men were sotted in their delights, and gaue themselves to feasting; Noe behelde the fludde. And howe behelde he it? For it was yet faire weather, and curie man tooke his pleasure and pastime. Yet did hee see all the worlde drowned and destroyed: For hee sawe it by faith, because God had threatened that it should be so. Nowe, the same threate haue we, and therewithall wee haue the prooffe of it also, euen in this, that our Lorde punished these nations that are spoken of here, at the end of four hundred yeares, when they thought not of it, ne tooke anie heed of it, in so much that if a man had then threatened them any such thing, they woulde haue blurred out their tongues and shaken their heads at him. But their indremment was framed in heauen, iudgement was giuen vpon them alreadie, and the Iudge had power & might to put it in execution in spite of their wilfull stubbornesse. And therefore let the sight hereof make vs to stand in awe of our God. And when he letteth vs alone in quiet, and spareth vs, let vs not thinke our selues to be escaped his hande; but let vs enter into account, and curie man quicken vp himselfe; and looke into his owne faults, and that in such wise as we may preuent his wrath, and let vs not tarie till he be armed against vs to proclaime war against vs, but let vs preuent the rigor of his iudgement, that by comming vnto him, whereas we shoulde else finde him our Iudge in the end, wee may finde him to be our pitifull and kinde hearted father.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them continually more and more. And for asmuch as there is none of vs which hath not prouoked his wrath exceedingly, so as we be all guiltie before him; let vs seeke to returne to the refuge of his mercie. And seeing there is no meanes to come at him except he reach vs out his hande and drawe vs by his holy spirit: let vs not refuse to goe to him when he calleth vs, nor tarie till y gatc be shut against vs: but let vs vse the opportunitie of the time when he causeth his Gospell to be preached vnto vs, and let vs imbrace our Lorde Iesus Christ with the peace which he offereth vs, resorting to his death and passion, that we may haue him for the gage of our righteousnesse, and the verie ransom where by to come in fauor with our God againe, so as all our finnes may be buried through his mercie, and we labour to drawe others also vnto him, that all of vs with one common accord may tend vnto our God, and he be serued and worshipped of al me. And for the bringing hereof to passe, it may please him to raise vp true and faithfull ministers of his worde, &c.

On Fryday the xx. of December. 1555.

16.17.18 But of the Cities of &c.

19 When thou shalt haue beseeged a Citie a long time, in fighting against it to take it, thou shalt not marre the trees thereof by putting an Axe vnto them: for thou maist eate of them, and therefore cut them not downe: for the life of man is the tree of the feelde to come with thee to the seege.

20 Onely thou maist destroy and cut downe the trees which thou knowest to be no trees to cate of, and thereof thou maist make bulwarkes against the Citie which holdeth warre against thee, vntil thou haue wonne it.

Yesterday was shewed why God gaue so rigorous sentence against the Nations that had dwelte in the Lande of Chanaan: It was tolde you that hee had borne with them ere that time, and suffered them till such time as they were condemned: and thereupon that we must benefite our selues by such examples, partlie that wee abuse not Gods patience when hee spareth vs and delayeth the execution of his iudgements; giuing vs leasure in the meane while to returne to repentance: and [partly] that when wee see him execute so extreme rigor vpon men, we should assure our selues it is because hee knoweth them to be vtterly past grace, and haue heaped vp such condemnation vpon their heads a long time afore hande. Now remaineth to note that G O D appointed the Iewes to be the executers of the saide sentence, so as the Chananites and such like were to be rooted out by the hande of the Iewes, And why? It is saide expressly in the Text, As the Lorde thy God hath commaunded thee. Then was it not for the Iewes to enterprise it on their owne heade, except they had had Gods worde for their warrant: for it is not lawfull for vs to attempt anie thing, vlesse it be our duetie, and that God haue commaunded it. And it is a generall rule for vs to beare in minde and to obserue all our life long. For men may doe goodly and commendable thinges, which notwithstanding shall not be reputed for vertues before God, when they passe their boundes, that is to say, when they holde not themselves within the listes of that which God hath vttered vnto them. For if a man shoulde say, It were good to doe thus, and therefore I will applie my selfe thereto; and yet in the meane while God calleth him not to it, neither hath he anie word<sup>y</sup> commands him to deale so: his vnadvised aduerting vpon things after that sort, shall alwayes be condemned at Gods hand. If we alledge that the deede is good and excellent of it selfe, that is not enough: for god will be obeyed at our hands whatsoeuer come thereof. And therefore let euery man haue an eye to himselfe & consider how farre his duety wil beare him. If a man that hath but a little household to gouerne should take vpon him the office of a magistrate: what were to be saide vnto it? There would be verie great confusion in that. Likewise if he that is a seruant in a house should take more vpon him than belongs to him, yee see that all were out of order. Again if the wife shoulde ouermaster her husband, and make him her vnderling; honestie of nature were quite goone. So then, it behooueth all men to holde themselves warily within their boundes, and to followe what way soeuer God calleth them. And when we haue Gods commadement, we must not be helde back nor letted by men. If God bid vs goe, we must goe, & though all the worlde should set themselves against vs, yet must wee not turne head, but goe on still. As for example, in these dayes the Magistrates & ministers of Iustice haue the sworde in their hand, and that nor in vaine (as saith Saint Paul) for God wil haue them to punish offenders. Now if they do nothing therein, and yet in the meane season will needes alledge some excuse to God: they deceite themselves. For in asmuch as our Lorde hath set them in office, he hath tolde the also that hee will haue them to be stout and full of courage in maintaining their state. And so looke what commaundement was giuen to all the Iewes in olde time for the rooting out of the Pheresites, Amorrhites, Chananites, Iebusites, and their like, the same is giuen to all ministers of Iustice at this day: namely that they must rid the earth of all such as do nothing else but bring vp all maner of infection. As for vs, it is not saide to vs that wee shall roote out and put to death such as may put vs to any plunge: and therefore let euery of vs looke to the rooting out of our owne vices, for we shall haue an encounter hard enough there.

And besides this, let vs beware also that wee haue not to doe with such as may corrupte and marre vs: for we be but too forward of our owne nature. For like as it was saide to the Iewes, you shall put the Chananites to death: so let vs thus the companie of such as wil intice vs to nothing but euill, nor can doe aught else than prouoke vs to naughtinesse. For wee bee as frayle as is possible, and the least occasion in the world will thrust vs out of the way, and make vs to leaue God behinde vs, as hath bin declared not long since afore. And moreover, let vs to the vttermost of our power in deuoer to rid Gods Church of all such as could finde in their hearts to overthrow the order of the Church and Gods seruice, and all honestie. As for example, when S. Paul saith, rid away the euil from among you, he commaundeth not the Corinthians to vse the material sword for the punishing of such as haue committed anie crime: for they were not in estate of Magistrates: but he meaneth excommunication, so as if a man be found to be a whore-master, a drunkerde, or a swearer, he should not be borne with all. For why? It were a corrupting of Gods church which ought to be his holy temple, & it is a making thereof a swinnetie. Should filthines lie there? & what a dealing were that? Therefore wee must cut off all such folke as leade a wicked and lawelesse life. And that is the lesion which wee haue to gather vpon that Text. For wee haue not the sworde in our handes to kill the despisers of G O D and such as leade an vnrule and disordered life. But yet must we cast them out from among vs, and

and therewithall remember the warning that is giuen vs in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. Take good heedde (saith the Apostle) that there growe vp no roote of bitternesse among you, least it be a meane to infect all the rest. Experience sheweth that there needeth but a verie little corruption to marre all, by reason of the infirmitie that is in men. And therefore let vs learne to remedie the matter, that wee bee not an occasion to feede vice still. The way then for vs to bring to passe that the Church of God may be mainteyned in all purenesse of his seruice, is that stumblingblockes bee not nourished and mainteyned, and also that euerie of vs indeuour to roote out vice in all men, sparing the persons themselves, and doing the best we can to drawe them to saluation. Whereas the Iewes were commanded to kill the Chananites: what ought wee to doe insteede thereof? I see a leawde man running into destruction; & yet notwithstanding he woulde bee borne withall, and flattered, and haue neuer a worde spoken to him. Against such a one I must vie rigor, And how so? To bring him to shame? No, not if it may otherwise bee. Truly if hee holde on, and continue stubborn aginst God, hee must needs become the more vncusfable, and wee must procure his soulehealth euen by rebuking him sharply, as it were by letting of him blood, or by ministering some loothesome medicine vnto him. Thus yee see how wee must spare mens persons and yet kill their vices to vttermost of our power. And in that respect doth Saint Paul liken y<sup>e</sup> doctrine of the Gospell to a sworde wherewith wee bee sacrifice d<sup>t</sup>o God. For the mortifying of our wicked affections is an offering of sacrifice vnto God: and whereas wee were vnholie before, thenceforth we be dedicated vnto him when we be so brought downe, that we haue no more after our owne lustes, but doe vterly renounce our selues. Yee see then that that is one kinde of death, which is not wrought vpon our persons, but vpon all the vices that reigne in vs. And after that maner ought we to deale for the rooting out of sinne.

Nowe if it bee demanded heere, whether it bee not lawefull to bee conuertant with the wicked and frowarde to winne them: I aunswere, yee verilie, vntill a man finde them to bee past remedie. For to giue ouer a man at the first dash when hee hath doone amisse, or when hee is as it were in the high way to destruction: is a furthering of the destruction of the wretched soule that was redeemed by the bloodshed of our Lorde Iesus Christ. So then, a man may well labour to bring them backe agayne which are strayed out of the right way: but yet must wee not hazard ourselues. If I knowing my selfe to bee weake, doe ouerthrowe my selfe with him vnder pretence of winning my neighbour that is misleaded: what winne I by that? And yet wee see it fall out so continually. And therefore let vs beware how we tempt God in that behalfe, and let euery of vs look narrowly to himselfe, and not deale after his owne imagination, Notwithstanding let vs herewithall put in v<sup>r</sup>e the saying of the Psalme concerning the hating of all such as despise G O D, yea and of hating them in such wise as we cannot by any meanes abide them, but that forasmuch as wee see them despise God after that fashion, wee bee so forie and greued at it, that wee separate our selues from them, and vterly shunne their companie, refusing euen in good earnest to haue anie conference with them: according whereto it is saide in the next verse of the same Psalme, that wee must beare a perfect hatred againt all such as doe so make warre againt God, so as we become their deadlie enemies to the vttermost of our power, not in respect of their persons, but in respect of their vncouerable wickednesse.

Besides this wee must also maintaine the order of the Church. For if anie one bee cast off as a rotten member, and wee goe and keepe him comp<sup>n</sup>ie still: is it not a separating of our selues from the bodie of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and of all the faithfull? Haue we not made a Rent (as much as in vs lay) to shewe that wee list not to be members of the Church? When we bee so familiar with those that are so cast off, and wee fall to rubbing of our selues with them: is it not a sherning of all Gods children, and a letting of them goe, as though we had nothing to doe with them? True it is that (as Paul saith in another place) wee must not take euen those for enemies, which are cast off by the Church, but wee ought to warne them still as brethren. Yea verily. Notwithstanding, when men doe haunt their companies familiarly, and to enter so farre into friendship with them as to be partakers of their naughtinesse: it is a token that they bee willing to intangle themselves with them, and they bee woorthie to receiue like condemnation with them. Thus yee see in effect howe wee ought to put this lesson in v<sup>r</sup>e nowadayes, namely that the Magistrates ought to bee verie careful to rid their Landes from all corruptions, and to vse the sword which is committed vnto them, in the punishing of all crimes, euil deedes, and disorders: And moreover, that euery man in his owne behalfe doe looke to the keeping of the same order, and yee neuerthelesse that euery of vs doe learne to keepe this rule among vs, that if there bee any stumblingblockes in the Church, they bee not borne with, but that such as serue to infect the rest of the flocke like scabbed sheepe, bee thrust out; and that although they bee not killed with the materiall woorde, yet they bee cast out of the companie of the faithfull, so as they may bee ashamed of themselves, and other men may beware least they desile themselves with them, that they may be made after such a sorte to knowe themselves to bee despisers of G O D, as that men can not away with them, nor abide their acquaintance, but that they be to be spunned as deadly plagues. That is the second point.

The third point is, that we must labor to roote out the vices, and yet to saue the parties themselves.

felues: and y when we see wretched men misadvised we must bring them back againe into y way of saluation if it be possible. But yet in the mean while wee must sacrifice all their affections vnto God; that is to say, wee must mortifie all euill in them, for the bringing whereof to passe, wee must vse the sworde of Gods worde, as indeede the preaching of the Gospell ought to haue that power, as I haue saide afore. And afterwarde, let euerie man enter into himselfe; for it is not enough for vs to haue rooted out the vices that are in our neighbours, but the cheefe point is to amende and reforme our felues, and to beware that the mischeefe settle not in vs: for it will be no time to remedie it, when we bee once hardened in it. Therefore wee must preuent it.

And here it is to bee noted also, that seeing God speaketh here of Idolatrie, wee may see thereby howe greatly hee mislikerh the corrupting of his seruice. Truly this point hath bene expounded alreadie heretofore: but yet we haue neede to bee put in minde thereof oftentimes. For manie of vs will neuer stickie thoroughly to the foundesse of Gods seruice, that is to say, to the Religion that is well ordered according to his worde. Wee haue alwayes some sonde deuotions of our owne, which carie vs away: and whatsoeuer wee thinke well doone doeth like vs so well, that to our seeming, God doth vs wrong if hee allowe it not too: and that is a deuclifh offeruencing. For it becometh vs, if wee will serue God well, alwayes to beginne at obedience, that is to say, wee must not attempte any thing which is not according to his wil & agreeable to his worde. Nowe then as God hath declared heretofore that hee abhorreth a'l superstition and Idolatrie: so he confirmeth it againe in this place, euen in the worde Abominations, which is as much to say, as things loothsome, yrkesome, detestable, and such as hee reiecteth and cannot away with. When wee see God so stirred, and his wrath so prouoked by our superstitions; alas what thinke we to doe? Therefore let vs holde vs to the pure doctrine that G O D hath giuen vs, and whensoeuer he is to bee serued, let vs not swaue aside one way nor other, as I haue saide herebefore: but let vs hearken to that which God hath saide, and imbrace it with all singleness of minde. Let that serue for one point.

Again let vs mark on the otherside, that whē God saith, Least they seduce thee, and teach thee the abominations which they haue done to their gods. Herby hee sheweth that naturally we be easily misseledde in this behalfe. True it is (as I haue declared not long since) that as touching vices, wee will soone be ouerthrowen if the bridle bee slacke neuer so little. Whoredome will raigne to the vttermost, and so will theft, and so will drunkenness and all manner of looseness, and so will blasphemie. For as it is harde to bring vs into the right way; so on the contrarie part we bee soone turned from it, inso much that the whisking of a flye will make vs streightwayes to runne astray, so as wee can no more skill of seruing G O D though wee were well entered therein before. And that is the cause why wee see so fewe holde out in weldoing. Many make faire wether for a time, so as yee woulde thinke them to bee marcellous good men: but in the turning of a hande all is marde. Other some are not so soone peruerted, but yet in proccesse of time yee would wonder to see how they bee changed, and howe they haue turned their backs against God: And what is the cause thereof? Euen for that (as I haue saide afore) wee take not heede to our felues, ne consider howe fraille wee bee, ne therewithall watch in praying vnto God, ne seeke to preuent the occasions of wickedness. And because men trust so much to their owne steadiness, and thinke themselues well able to withstand euill: they ouerthrowe themselues headlong, and God punisheth such presumption, because it is not without a kinde of selfewcening, and consequently is the cause that wee lue not in the feare of God, ne resorte for refuge to the grace of his holy spirit. Let vs learne therefore that wee be so ealie to be led to all vices, but specially to Idolatrie, as is pitifull to see. And why? For euerie man keepes a schoole of it. Although wee haue no example of superstition, yet can euerie one of vs forge it in our felues. If the little children, which neuer wist what the filth of poperie meane, were let alone and not held in awe by Gods worde; when they came to age euerie of them woulde haue his deuotion by himselfe, with such a thing and such a thing were good. Our mindes are so ticklish, as is piue, and our wittes are verie subtle to inuent superstitions & Idolatries. And what wil become of vs then, whē we shall haue sowers of Darnel among vs, which shall say, I haue seene such a thing, and such a thing was wont to bee doone? The mischeefe shall be nourished continually. Without going any further, ye shall see that these olde panyers of Idolatrie which are among vs, doe alwayes keepe still some of their olde filth, and they haue euer some wicked roote of their former superstitions remaying within them. And if they might haue their scope, wee shoulde soone be caried back againe into the dungeons that wee bee come out of. Nor without cause therefore doeth our Lord say that the faithful must keepe good watch, that they bee not misteraught by such as haue bene used to superstition. For our nature will bee overcome by and by, if the mischeefe be not preuented. The meane [of redresse] that was appointed to the Iewes, hath no place as in respect of vs, noweadayes. For the sworde is not put into our hands to put Idolaters to death, I meane of vs which are priuate persons: but we must eschewe the companie of all such as seeke to intangle vs in their diuclishness. And the remedie thereof is (as I saide afore) to acknowledge but one G O D, and to knowe his will, and (for asmuch as hee separateth vs from all the defilements that men forge to themselues): Let vs holde our felues to the pure doctrine of his worde. That is the vnfallible rule, let vs follow it.

And now let vs go on with y which Moses ad-

deeth. He saith that when a Citie is besieged long time, men may cutte downe some sortes of trees to besiege is withall, if neede be; for men of warre haue their Artillerie. And in stead of our Gunnes, they had in those dayes certaine engines to breake the walles. Therefore if they had neede of timber, they should not cut downe the fruittrees, but the trees that bare no fruite, and serue their turne with them. As for trees that beare fruite, and whereof foode may be gathered, those were to be preferred. Yee see then howe heere is a commaundement set downe. Howbeit the meaning of the sentence is somewhat darke, and therefore it is expounded diuersly. And indeede I will somewhat stay vpon it, howbeit but as in passing ouer it. Word for word it is thus: Man is not the tree of the field, so come to the seege before thy face. Nowe, some take it that heere God meane to skorne such as destroy the trees after that fashion. [As who should say.] What?

Are y trees as enemies to thee, to come against thee and to resist thee? Then if men heawe downe the trees and waste the Countrey: it seemeth to be a childish kinde of reuenge. Yee see then how some men haue vnderstood this text, that it was our Lordes meaning to make those men ashamed which make such waste, and destroy the foode of the inhabitants. They bee not your enemies. Against whome make ye your warre? Against the trees and things that haue no life? Surely yee bee valyaunt men. Some perceiuing that this construction is somewhat streyned, say: The tree of the field is mans, that is to saie, is for man. Whereas GOD hath giuen fruitfulnessse to a tree, hee hath appointed it for the nourishment of men and of the inhabitants of the Countrey. For if the people bee our come, they haue whereof to liue when they bee brought in subiection, and wherewith to pay tribute to their conquerours. Other some vnderstande these words, (to come to the seege before thy face) thus: to helpe them that besiege the Citie: for what can they doe if they want foode? When a Citie is besieged, they must needs depart thence, if there bee not wherewith to susteine their armie, which turne the trees will serue. Our Lorde then (as they vnderstande it) reprocheth it as a great folly roge and disappoint themselves of their owne sustentance. Howbeit forasmuch as the Hebrewes doe commonly supplie the similitude, it may be taken thus: Man shall bee in steede of the tree of the field to come against thee in the seege. And this construction is verie fit and naturall, and I will make no long scanning of it, because it were but lost time: but I will holde that sence which may serue for all men, and whereof all men may take profite. GOD then hauing forbidden to heawe downe fruittrees yea euen in time of warre, addeth the reason: namely that seeing the men ought to be in stead of the trees of the field, therefore they ought rather to set themselves against them and to vtter their rage there, as against those that are professed enemies. For why? The men may come to the seege, yea and to the shoocke of the battell against thee. To bee short, our Lorde (as I saide afore, howbeit that I speake heere of another literall exposition, though all comes to one end) meane to declare that in time of warre men must not wreake their teene vpon the trees but vpon their enemies, because their enemies seeke to annoy them, and therefore those are they that are to be resisted.

Nowe let vs come to consider what this Lawe profiteth vs. It is saide in time of warre wee must not cutt downe the fruittrees. Heere wee haue to note, that although our swordes bee drawn, yet it is not lawfull for vs to vse all manner of crueltie at our owne pleasure: and yet notwithstanding GOD speakeh heere of rightfull warres, such as hee himselfe alloweth, where hee giueth leaue to flea men, and yet hee will haue vs to keepe some kinde of humanitie, that we lay not the Countrey vtterly waste. Let vs marke then that warres are not lawfull in such sorte, as to beare downe all before vs and to make vtter hauocke of all things. But wee must beare in minde, that although men bridle themselves as much as is possible, yet there will bee too much euill committed. If there shoulde bee but one man slaine; alas, yet doe wee see that an image of GOD were defaced. But when it cometh to the killing of a greate multitude whereby are made so many widdowes and fatherlesse children; what a thing is that? Besides, though the goods and possessions of men bee spared, yet are many men thrust out of their houses, and being ill handled die some for colde and some for want and penurie: And what a pitifull thing is that? Therefore although men deale as indifferently as is possible in time of warre: yet mult there needs bee manie disorders, in respect whereof men ought to streine themselves the more to abstaine from all manner of crueltie and euill dealing. For if our Lorde woulde haue such euen hande kept among enemies, euen when hee had giuen leaue before to kill: what is to be done among vs which shoulde bee friends, for whom it is not lawfull to liue vp a finger, nor the tippe of our tongue to speake amisse of them that haue offended vs? For although a man spyte vs and vex vs; yet doeth not our Lorde giue vs leaue to bee at warre with him, but will haue vs to possesse our soules in patience, and to strue to ouercome the euill by doing good.

Nowe if it behooue vs to maintaine friendship with those that doe vs wrong and iniurie, and to procure their welfare, so as it is not lawfull for vs to greue them in any manner of wise: I pray you is it to bee borne with, when wee practise to annoy those which neuer did vs wrong or harme, nor neuer procured vs any losse? So then, yee see howe this Lawe concerneth not onely men of warre: but also that our Lorde will haue it to bee a common lesson to vs all, to keepe so euen a hande to the vttermost of our power, as no man may complaine

Rom. 12. 21.

that hee was indomaged by vs. And so yee see howe wee ought to applie this Lawe to our instruction. Againe, if it behooue vs to spare the fruite trees, which notwithstanding are things without life: howe much more ought wee to spare mens persons? Truly this is not spoken in fauour of the trees themselves, but in respect of men which are fedde and sustained by them: and surely trees are not to be pruiledged any thing at all in comparison of men. 10
 What a thing then is it, when men shalbe put all to the sworde without sparing? Is it not as good as a desying of God? That is a seconde point which we haue to beare in mind. Now let vs proceede.

Whereas it is false heere, that there must no wast bee made: it is to shewe, that men ought alwayes to maintaine the ordinance of GOD: specially sith wee knowe his goodnesse and fatherly loue towardes men. Behold, God hath giuen the earth to men to dwell and rest vpon. 20 Nowe when wee fall to making of hauocke, and thrust out the poore indwellers thereof, so as euen in the time of peace when euery man may returne home againe to his owne house, yet they finde all things wasted and the land made barren, and whereas heere to fore it had bene well husbanded, it is nowe become as a wilderness, so as there is not one tree left to gather an apple of: is it not as good as a defeating of Gods goodnesse which hee had vttered towards mankinde? Must it not needes bee that wee be starke blind in our rage, when we fight so against Gods grace, yea and against such a grace as ought to soften our hearts though they were harder than stone: Ye see thep how here is a general rule for vs: to marke well, namely that as oft as wee be tempted to make any waste or spoyle, we ought to bethinke vs thus: Goe to, our Lord hath placed vs all in this worlde, and prouided vs of the things which hee knewe to bee necessaric for this lite: nowe if I will needes spoyle the ground of the things which God hath giuen it for the sustenance of man, I doe the best I can to defeate Gods goodnesse which hee hath vttered to mankind, that it might no more appeare.
 And am I worthe to bee sustained on the earth when I doe so abolish Gods gracious goodnesse which serued as well for my neighbours as for my selfe, not suffering it to haue his course and to reigne any longer? Am I not as a very monster? This is a thing (say I) which ought wel to restrain vs. When wee be caried with any malice, and are become so mischeeuously minded as to waste the trees, Houses, and such other things, let vs bridle our selues with this consideration: yea, but who is it against whome wee make the warre? It is not the creatures, but the partie himselfe who euen there doeth shewe forth his goodnesse, and that not towards any one man alone, but towards all men, in the which number euen we our selues also are com-prehended. Were this well considered, warres shoulde not be vndertaken so vnadvisedly now-adayes as we see they bee, neither shoulde countries be waited euery where without sparing. But nowadayes this kinde of crueltie is farre greater among them that beare the name of Christians, than it hath bene in times past euen among the Infidels. For nowe there is nothing but burning of Countries; and that is worse than the cutting of mens throates. For what shall the poore inhabitants doe, when their Countrie is burnt vp a tenne leagues round about? They must needes goe die vnder the hedges and bushes, or lye pining away vpon the plaine ground: but it were a greater point of mercie to dispatch the by death out of hand. And yet notwithstanding it is a lawfull thing nowadayes, because it is a custome so to doe. And whence cometh this custome, but that men haue not regarded Gods word, by reason wherof they haue vtterly alienated from him, and in the ende are become starke beastes? And so it is an horrible thing to see, that they which name themselves Christians, and Catholikes, and the vpholders of Christianitie, are nowadayes so farre out of order, y<sup>e</sup> barbarousnes reigneth most fully among them. In so much as they hold not themselves contented with the wasting of their enemies landes, but they doe also flea euen their owne subiectes without sparing. Nowadayes the lawe of the Turkes reigneth among the Christians: which is, to make no conscience of the wasting of their own countrie, so men may keepe the so-ueraigntie of the same. For if they doubt that the enemy is like to haue the forhande, they burne vp all before his comming. And what doe they burne? The poore subiectes whom the Prince himselfe hath vnder his protection.

 It is said, Thou shalt bee a couet in the storme accordingly as is spoken of the office of a good king in the person of Ezechias. The Prophet Esay saith hee shalbe a place of harbrough and refuge for his subiectes. When a storme cometh, so as all things seeme likely to goe to wrecke; the king shall haue his wings stretched out to couer his subiectes, and to defende them, in so much that he ought euen to hazarde his life for them. After that manner ought a prince to maintaine his subiectes. Contrariwise yee shall see a prince so blinded, that hee commaundeth all to be burnt and wasted, that there may not so much as one graine of corne be leste. Yea, but thereby the poore people are starued. There is no remedie, nothing must bee spared, but all things must be borne down, to the intent I may reigne like a conquerour.
 Needes must God bee forgotten, when men proceede so farre. Wee neede not to goe seeke examples of threescore yeares hence, neither neede wee to heare our auncestors speake. For we haue seene as much within these last twentie yeares, and not farre hence. And the mischief not onely continueth but also increaseth still.
 For why? they bee the fruits of the contempt of Gods worde. So a Prince doe striue himselfe, and bee assoyled and make a Crosse vpon his backe, it is ynough: Hee shall haue Ceremonies ynoue. When hee hath performed a sort of counterfaite seruices, hee is quite and cleane assoyled. But if a man shoulde come and

and shewe him his dutie by Gods worde: hee cannot abide to heare of it . To be tolde what he oweth first vnto God and then vnto men, hee can abide much lesse . To bee tolde after what manner he ought to take warres in hand, and howe hee should holde himselfe within his bounds and listes , without attempting any further than God giueth him leaue: he can no skil at all; it were a derogation to his maiestie; it is ynough for him to mocke G O D with a sort of pelting trifles, as though hee were to please a young babe. But let vs on our side consider what is Lawfull for vs , and not meddle with those which prouoke Gods wrath and curse vpon their heades after that fashion . And seeing that God hath ridde vs from so great confusions, let vs yeelde him thanks, and not followe them any more, least we prouoke his vengeaunce to bee the more horrible against vs.

Nowe, howsoever the worlde goe , although wee bee priuate persons yet must wee put this lesson in vre , of not making any waite , forso-much as wee knowe that our Lorde hath appointed the earth to bee as our foster-mother . And seeing shee openeth her bowels after that sort to sustaine vs ; wee must vnderstande that it is all one as if God should reach vs his hand and offer vs the testimonies of his goodnesse. If wee bee of that minde; then will this doctrine auaille vs, not onely in time of warre , but also in time of peace . And would God that it were well regarded . But nowadayes men are set altogether vpon euill doing . Infomuch that although wee haue our cares beaten dayly with such matters , yet wee minde them not: where-of the examples are too euident . Yea and there are which had leuer that their corne should bee made in their Garners , and bee eaten with vermine , and rotte where it lieth, rather than to sell it in time of neede . For they could finde in their hearts: to hunger-starue the poore people . And is not that all one with cutting vp the fruitetrees ? Behold, the corne is gathered in , and our Lorde hath powred out his goodnesse and blessing to the ende that the poore folke shulde bee suiteyned . Nowe, it is hoorded vp in Garners, and it is kept fast vnder locke and key , till it rise to so great a price that folke cri out for hunger, and are no longer able to abide it . And what becomes of the Come in the meane whyle ? It soyresth and rotteth . Indeede our Lord doth nowe and then mocke them that thought them selues to haue gained much , and shewe them that that is not the way to doe it . But yet for all that, they to the vttermost of their power doe burie Gods grace , as though they fought against the goodnesse and fatherly loue which hee vttered towards all the people . And in so doing they peruert the whole order of nature, as if they went to cut downe and to destroy the fruitbearing trees . What is to bee done then ? Seeing that our Lorde woulde haue a certaine humanitie to bee obserued euen among enemies : forasmuch as it behooueth vs to liue fellowlike together in peace and brotherly loue ; let vs looke that wee endeavour to liue in concord and friendshippe as much as in vs lyeth . And when God shall haue bestowed his spirituall giftes vpon vs , ( which are much precioufer than all the worldly thinges which wee can receiue ) let vs endeavour to make our neighbours parteners with vs, and not through our malice disappoint them of the good which God doeth vnto them . For if wee ought to behaue our selues with such discretion in the vse of temporall benefices : what ought wee to doe in the spirituall blessings, which concerne the saluation of our soules ? Then let vs learne not to stubbe vp the fruitetrees . But rather seeing that Gods worde is the seede of life; let vs endeavour to spreade it abroade euerie where, that it may take good roote: And that when it hath taken roote, it may not bring forth a barren tree, but a tree that beareth good fruit . Thus yee see what wee haue to gather of this text, if wee intende to profite our selues duly thereby, yea euen in such wise, that although wee be not in warres, yet notwithstanding forasmuch as G O D hath chosen vs for his people , hee hath shewed vs here such a point of uprightnesse , as ought to continue with vs all our life long.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the Maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, so as we may be yet better settled in true repentance: and that therewithall wee may mourne and mislike of ourselues when wee see the infirmities that are in vs , and pray our good G O D to vouchsafe to holde vs in awe, that although wee see the worlde nowadayes to bee vtterly out of order, and our selues horrible beset rounde abo it with al manner of stumbling-blockes, yet wee may bee helde still vnder his banner . to followe him whithersoever hee listeth to call vs, that by that meanes hee may bee glorified in vs, and wee also rightly glory in him for that wee be his people , and hee hath shouled vs out to doe him seruice . That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant people from the superstitions and ydolatries wherein they are helde: that so hee may leade them to the knowledge of his truth: And that for this purpose it would please him &c.

When a bodie is found flaine lying vpon the ground in the Land which the Lord thy GOD giueth thee to possesse, and it is not known who killed him:

2 Then shall thine Elders and Iudges come forth, and measure the Townes that lye rounde about the flaine man.

3 And when they perceiue which of the Townes is nearest to the flaine man, then shall the Elders of that towne take a young Hekfar from the droue, which hath not bene labored nor hath drawn in the yoke:

4 And the Elders of that Towne shall driue the young bullocke downe into a harde valley, which hath neither bene plowed nor sowed, and they shal strike off the bullocks neck there in the valley.

5 Also the Priestes the children of Leuie shall come forth, for the Lorde thy God hath chosen them to minister vnto him, and to blesse in the Lords name: And at their worde shall all cases and euery plague be determined.

6 And all the Elders of that towne shall come to the deade man, and wash their hands ouer the bullocke that is beheaded in the valley:

7 And protest and say, Our handes haue not shed this bloude, neither haue our eyes secne it.

8 O Lord, be mercifull to thy people Israel whom thou hast purchased, and lay not the guiltlesse bloud among thy people Israel. And the manslaughter shalbe forgien them.

9 And so shalt thou take guiltles bloud from among you: for thou shalt do that which is acceptable in the eyes of the Lord.

Haue spoken of this Law already heretofore, and declared briefly what godment in the ordaining of that Ceremony: name-ly that wee should abhorre the shedding of blood, and murders, and outrages. He had spoken heretofore of the law of armes. And now he addeth that the killing euen of one man is a defiling of the whole countrey, vnlesse the remedie be sought by praying vnto God to forgieue the fault, and by protesting that none of them is guiltie thereof. Wee see then that mens lues are deare vnto God, sith hee will haue so solemne a redresse to be made of a murder committed, yea euen when the doer thereof is not known, nor the truth can be founde out. If a man had bene murdered, and the doer thereof known: then woulde not this ceremonie haue sufficed. For God commandeth the crime to be punished: and if a murderer be suffered to scape, the Iudges and all the people become guiltie of the fact. But when it is vnknown by whom a man is flaine, then GOD thinketh it not ynough for euery man to protest for himselfe: yhee is neither partie nor priuie to the matter; but he will also that the towne where the deede was done, or which was nearest to the place where the deede was done, should be examined for it. For wee knowe that a partition of the townes & villages was made to euerie tribe. In somuch that euerie Citie had the Countrie about it, and the townes and villages in it were called as it were the daughters of that Citie. Yet notwithstanding, in this case our Lorde will haue them to make a newe suruey and measuring of the distance of places againe, and that the Citie which is found to be nearest to the dead bodie, shalbe at the charges to make a solemne sacrifice, whereat hee will haue the Elders, Iudges, and Priestes, to be present. And he setteth downe the Priestes by name, as wel for sacrificing as also because it was their Office to make the purgations: whensoever there befell any blotte, so as the people were defiled before God; it was the duetie of the Priestes to make them cleane againe towards God. And that was the cause why that order was required in this case.

And

And therefore Moses addeeth, that God hath appointed them to serue him, and to blesse in his name, and that it belongeth to them to iudge of Leprosies and all other like things, and of all other kindes of vncleannesse wherewith the people might be defiled. In attributing this office vnto them, he declareth to what purpose their presence ought to serue in this act. Also there was prayer to bee made, and the priestes were injoynd thereunto. And because the whole order of them was a figure of our Lorde Iesus Christ: they blessed in Gods name, as I haue declared heeretofore, and as I shall shewe somewhat more hereafter as I passe ouer it. And therefore our Lorde appointed them to make the solemne prayer that is set downe heere. Nowe wee see whereto this Lawe tended: Namely that our Lorde hath shewed howe precious mens liues are vnto him, that wee on our part might bee the more prouoked to take him for our father. For what an vnthankfulnesse is it, that God should haue so great and so fatherly a care of vs, of vs I say which are but Cattyons: and yet notwithstanding that hee should nor bee honoured of vs as of his children, nor finde any obedience at our handes? So then, forasmuch as wee see our Lord vouchsafeth to haue a regarde of our life; let vs bee the more moued to honor him, and to yeeld him all reuerence.

Heerewithall it is shewed vs also, that wee must maintaine our neighbours as much as in vs lyeth, and abstaine from all violence. For if murder bee so hatefull to G O D, that although the doer thereof bee vnknown, yet it behoued a solemne clearing thereof to be made: what will become of vs if wee spare not our neighbors? Is it not a setting of our selues vtterly against God? Here then is a bridle to restraine vs from all violence and outrage, so as vnlesse wee will bee hatefull to our God, wee must liue in concorde and brotherly loue with all our neighbours. Nowe I haue tolde you heretofore, that whereas murder is forbidden vs, it is not meant thereby that wee should but onely forbear the drawing of our swordes to slea men, but also that forasmuch as all they which hate their brethren euen in secreete, are murderers; we should beware to haue our heartes as cleane as our handes, and abstaine from all hatred and enmitie. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember in the seconde place of this Lawe which is set downe heere. For it is not ynough for vs to loue our neighbours and nor to haue stepped out into any iniurie or violence: but wee must also (to the vttermost of our power) bee a let to the annoyance that is done to others. Indeede it is a great thing to be peaceable: but God requireth yet more of his children, namely that they should procure peace towards others. Therefore whensoever any man fals to quareling or offereth wrong to his neighbour, let vs looke that wee set our selues against him as much as wee can. I knowe that euerie man is not armed with the sworde, neither may euerie of vs take vpon him to redresse wrongs:

but yet let vs haue an eye to that which G O D permitte, so farre as our duetie will beare, and as occasion is ministred to deale: And therein wee shall thewe our selues not to consent to any outrage, but rather that wee bee willing to succour the innocent that is oppressed and wronged, whom let vs looke that wee help to our power and abilitie. That is the third point which wee haue to gather vpon this text.

Moreouer let vs marke, that Iudges and Ministers of iustice are warned heere to doe their dueties. For it is not ynough for them to protest that they haue not supported nor fauored any euill: neither is it ynough for them to bee able to say, they haue yeelded euerie man his right when they were complained vnto: but they must also inquire diligently of misorders, and although no man speake to them or moue them, yet must they of their owne selues bee vigilant in making serch. And if they finde any fault committed: they themselues must followe the suite of it. But this is ill obserued of most Iudges. For they thinke themselues to bee come to the full perfection of vertue, and that they be greatly to bee commended, when they haue not refused to giue men the hearing. If a man that is grieued doe come to complaine to them, and they heare him and make countenance to helpe him: they thinke they haue acquitte themselues verie well. But our Lorde is not contented with that. Although then that the partie which is hurt doe holde his peace, and patiently put vp the wrong: yet notwithstanding the Iudge or the Magistrate that is in office must not forbear to doe his duetie for all that. And therefore it is a sonde allegation to say, there is no information, no man complains of it. Yea: but yet neuerthelesse the euill is committed, and God seeth it, and hee hath commaunded that it should bee punished; hee will haue all misdeedes redressed, and that no libertie bee giuen to the stronger to beare downe the weaker. And shall the Iudge in the meane while holde his peace? Let vs marke then, that God will not haue the ministers of iustice to winke at mens misdeedes: no not euen though there be no informer, protector, aduocat, attorney, or plaintife to moue the therunto. For they bee bound to punish crimes euen of themselues, though no man prosecute any suite in Law. And what ought they then to do, when they be sued vnto, and when the partie that is misused cometh forowing and declaring his grieffe? If hee bee not hearde, or if hee bee scorned for his complaining, or let alone, or peraduenture so vexed that hee is enforced to giue ouer his right, and in the meane while the offender goeth vn-punished: shall such trecherie be excusable before God? Yet notwithstanding, wee see oftentimes, that if a man which hath bin wronged doe come to demanda iustice; hee shall be trayned on. In deede hee shall not bee driuen away with a kugdell, it shall not bee saide vnto him that hee doeth burlose his labour: but hee shall bee so driuen off with shifts and delayes, that the poore soule is forie that euer hee attempted any iustice, and and is faine to leaue off to his great griefe. That is the common cource which is kept in executing of iustice on the earth. But wee see heere that such persons as haue so abused their authoritie, must come to account for it. For the heauenly Iudge will haue them not onely to heare mens complaints and to releaue them: but also to make inquisitions, and to search out matters to the verie bottome, though it be not known that any fault is committed, or that any man is wronged, yea and euen though no man open his mouth to complaine. And when men haue done the best they can, yet will he haue them to offer Sacrifice, as though some blame lay vpon the countrie it selfe, vntil forgiuenesse of the offence were desired.

So then, let vs learne on our part, that our Lord watcheth ouer vs, so that although we be oppressed and haue all the outrages in the world done vnto vs, yet our Lord ceaseth not to haue a care of vs. True it is (as I haue said afore) that Iudges and Magistrates haue heere a good les-son, and that they ought to consider that they shal not scape the hands of the Heauenly Iudge, when they haue bin negligent in maintaining good men that are troden vnder foote. If they passe not to defende them, they must make a reckening for that loose dealing of theirs. For it is al one as if they themselves were confederate with them. And therefore we must vnderstande, that seeing God hath such a care of those that are deade, it is much more of consequence, that our Lorde beholding all things would we should resort boldly vnto him for refuge, when we pine away in this worlde, suffering many troubles & vexations, though we speake neuer a worde, ne finde any defence or helpe at all among men, in how great extremitie so euer we be. For although he shew not himselfe by and by neere at hand: yet must we not thinke that he hath turned his backe vpon vs: for hee marketh all the wrongs that are done vnto vs, and our teares: (as it is saide in the psalme) shall come vp before him. For Dauid saith that the teares of the faithfull are put vp as it were into bottles, as men put vp sweete waters into glasses, and oynntmentes into vyoals. And so our Lorde keepeth the treasures of such as make their moane to him, and resort to him for refuge. Hee keepeth all those teares of theirs, to be reuenged for them in time conuenient. But we must passe yet further. For if God succour them that are departed; it is a token that we be not as the brute beastes. For (as is shewed in S. Luke) hee is not the God of the deade, but of the liuing. Therefore let vs conclude, that when wee be gone out of this world, we shall haue a better life and be in the hand of God. Loe what a recorde of the immortall life here is vttered in the marke that God giueth vs here, namely in that if a man be found murdered, solemne sacrifice must be made to cleanse the Lande from the defiling whereto it was subiect. For thereby hee witnesseth that after our decease we liue with him, and that wee must not thinke our selues to be vtterly done away and come to nothing, when God taketh vs out of this worlde; but rather that it is but a passage whereby to goe into the seconde life which hee promisseth vs. Seeing that this was spoken in the Law, we ought the more to assure our selues thereof nowadayes. For we haue the holy scripture more at large. Wee haue the heauenly life shewed vnto vs much more appariantly in the newe Testament, than it was shewed to the fathers of olde time before the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And therefore wee ought to be so much the more assured of it, and not be like the vnbelievers, who quake when they heare death spoken of, as though all were fordone with them, and as though they shoulde vtterly perish. But wee must vnderstand, that when God gathereth vs to him by death, wee cease not to liue still to himwardes. Although a mans bodie rot away, and become a Carion like the bodies of brute beastes: yet is God a faithfull keeper of our soules, so as they be preserved in his hand & by his power, wherein hee giueth vs hope of the last resurrection, in the which we shal be wholly restored againe. For whereas we be nowe corruptible, and tende to corruption by death: we shall then be clothed again with such a newe nature, that y thing which is now corruptible and transitorie in vs, shall become newe and vncorruptible, when we be renewed after y likeness of our Lord Iesus Christ. Thus yee see what we haue to remember yet further, in that God sheweth him selfe to haue such care of them that are deade.

As touching the things that are spoken here concerning the priests, we neede not as nowe to stande verie long vpon them: but it will suffice to speake a word or twaine thereof. Moses saith that they were ordained to blisse in Gods name, that is to say, to make publike prayers. True it is, that wee at this day haue the same office of making praies in the name of y whole church, and that the people must say Amen, (as S. Paul saith in the xiiii. of the first Epistle to the Corinthians) but there was a speciall consideration of this matter in the tribe of Leuie, & in the priests of the Lawe: namely, that they bare the figure of our Lorde Iesus Christ who is our aduocate, and our mouth, as it were. For as much then as it belongeth to our Lord Iesus Christ to offer vp our requests to God our father, because they can neuer be acceptable to God but for his sake, neither are we worthie to prece vnto God, except hee leade vs and make way and meanes for vs: Therefore in the time of the Lawe, the Priestes blessed the people, that is to say, they made the publike prayers for them. Againe there is another thing, namely, that their blessing of y people was a witnessing of Gods fauour and loue towards them. And that also belongeth to our Lord Iesus Christ, howbeit that the same pertaineth not to himselfe alone, but also to al the preachers of the Gospel. Whē we preach Gods mercie, the blessing of God is vpon al them that haer-ken to vs. For it is al one as if God himselfe came to declare his fauour towards vs, and y for asmuch as wee be reconciled vnto him, hee intendeth to take vs into his keeping. Seeing then that the doctrine of the Gospel importeth such things, wee see that all the Shepherdes of the Christian Church, doe bleſſe the people. But this is not becauſe they are figures of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, but becauſe of the charge that is committed vnto them. They doe in deede repreſent his perſon as his officers; but in the time of the Lawe, this was of force that the Prieſt during the continuance of thoſe ſhadows, did atter a ſorte ſupply the roome of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt vntill hee was come. That then was meant by bleſſing the people in the name of God, as we ſee our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt himſelfe hath declared. For hee bleſſed his diſciples by laying his handes vpon them. Therefore let vs reſorte to him as oft as wee thinke vpon our owne curſedneſſe: that is to ſay, for ſo much as we knowe our ſelues worthe to bee reſected of God, and to bee as it were accurſed, becauſe there is nothing but vter wickednes in vs: Let vs flee to our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. For if God gaue that remedie to his people vnder the Lawe, of being bleſſed by the prieſtes who were but mortall men: ſhall wee miſtruſt that our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt hath not ſufficient power to doe away all our accurſedneſſe, ſo as God ſhall looke favorable vpon vs, and receiue vs as his children? Then let vs hardly giue care hereunto, and reſt vpon it with full truſt. And when wee bee about to pray, let vs aſſure our ſelues that wee haue an aduocate, who will make vs to finde fauor. And let vs not alledge as the Papiſtes doe, I am not worthe to pray to God; but let vs be ſure that our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt calleth vs to him. True it is that wee ought to perceiue our owne vnworthineſſe: howbeit not to make vs to raunge away when we pray vnto God, or to cauſe vs to ſeeke long windlaſſes, as who ſhoulde ſay, Such a Saint ſhall bee mine aduocate, or ſuch a Sheefaine ſhall bee my patronneſſe: but to direct vs to him which is giuen vs of God his father, namely to our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. Thus much concerning the bleſſing.

Psal. 56.7.

Now the ſeruing of God imported the ſacrifices and all the reſt of the ceremonies. And at this day, they that are appointed miniſters of Gods worde, haue the adminiſtration of Sacramentes, becauſe it is an appurtenance to Gods worde and doctrine which they bring: but our Lorde Ieſus is hee that hath made the onely and euerlaſting ſacrifice whereupon we muſt reſt. And herein wee ſee the fooliſhneſſe that is in the Popedome; for the Prieſtes will needes counterfeit his ſacrifice, ſaying thus: O beholde the tribe of Leuie was appointed to ſerue God. Yea, but we muſt conſider what manner of Sacrifice God requireth and alloweth at this day. Will hee haue vs to ſlea Bullockes, Sheepe, Lambes, and ſuch other things? No verily. But Saint Paul ſayth that the ſacrifices which the Shepherdes of the Church muſt offer to God, are mens ſoules whom they winne by the preaching of his worde. Thoſe doe they dedicate vnto God, and that is the ſeruiſe which hee lyketh of. This is a part of that ſeruiſe of God, which is ſpirituall. And therefore let vs marke that wee muſt let Ieſus Chriſt alone with that which the holy ſcripture referueth vnto him: Namely the offering vp of himſelfe once for all, to purchaſe vs euerlaſting forgiuenneſſe of all our ſinnes, and the making of vs cleane and pure yet ſtill before God. Now then, there remaineth nothing but this onely, that wee be confirmed in the power that is brought vnto vs by his death and paſſion. And howe may that bee? By the vſe of the ſacramentes. When we receiue the Supper, wee make not a newe ſacrifice, as the Papiſtes were wont to doe in that diuiliſh abomination of their Maſſe: but we proteſt that God is at one with vs, when we are grounded in the death and paſſion of his onely ſonne, and that we be partakers thereof; and our preſent receiuing of the bread and wine that are giuen vs, is all one as if we were fed with his body and bloud as with meate and drinke. Thus ye ſee how we ought to apply the things to our inſtruction, which are ſpoken here concerning the ſacrifices that were to bee offered to GOD by the prieſtes of the Lawe.

Now let vs proceede with that which Moſes addeth here. He ſayth that the Prieſtes ſhall reſort thither with the gouerners and Iudges of the Citie, and take a yoting Heckſar (or Bullocke as they terme it here); and cut off the necke of it, yea and that in a valley (ſayth he) is in a ſecret place, and namely in a valley that is barren, and vntilled, as in a deſert place. This circumſtance is ſet downe to moue the ſtanders by to the more terror, when they ſaw the cutting off, of the Heckſars neck, and that they were come as into a ſecret place. For it is certeinly God paſſed not for the bloud of the Heckſar. Hath God a care of Oxen or kine (ſayth Saint Paul), as though he regarded them? His ſpeaking of them is for mens ſakes. And therefore let vs marke how God poynted out a valley, yea and a barraine valley, to the end that they which were there preſent, ſhould conceiue a certein terror in themſelues. Whereat? At the ſmiting off of the bullockes head, as who ſhould ſay; Muſt wee come to this deſerte place for ſuch a matter? And what a thing is it that a man which is ſtaped after the image of God ſhould be ſlayne, and that ſuch a crime ſhould be committed? Shall not the Sunne, and the Moone, and all the ſtarres of the ſkye cry out for vengeance to God? Shall not the largeneſſe of the earth frame an inditement as though it were written in paper or parchment? Thus ye ſee what we haue to conſider, in Gods appointing out of the place ſo with ſuch circumſtance.

Nowe afterward followeth the proteſtation. Our handes haue not done this deede, neither haue our eyes ſene it. When the Iudges & gouerners ſay, Our handes haue not done this deede; they meane the whole people as well as themſelues. For it is not enough that the rulers themſelues be cleere of the murder: but they ſpeake in the name or behalfe of the whole bodie of the people whom they repreſent. And hereby it appeareth, that if the Magistrates suffer any wickednesse to lie lurking in any citie or countrie, they themselves are guiltie thereof, and it is as much before God, as if they had giuen their consentes to the dooing of it. Therefore let men marke well this saying, Our handes haue not done this deede: namely that such as are in authoritie must answer for the whole bodie of the people, so farre as lyeth in them: that is to say, that wicked dooings haue not bin referred to nestle by their slouth and negligence: but that they haue searched them our diligently, and done their dutie in that behalfe: otherwile it will be in vaine for them to say, I was not the doer of the deed. No, but thou diddest represent the whole people, thou wast put in commission by Gods appointment, and therefore sith thou hast suffred leawdnesse to be committed within thy Iurisdiction, it is at thy hand that God will require the account. And in very deede, wee see how it is Gods will, not onely in this place but also throughout the whole holy scripture, that when any trespasse was committed in any trybe, the Elders should stand forth as it were to confesse the peoples offences in their persons. For inasmuch as they were set in authoritie and place of honor, it behooved them to know that their charge was so much the more hard and weightie. That is the point which is to be noted here.

And he addeth Our eyes haue not seene it. And hereby we may knowe (as I sayd afore) that it is not enough for vs to haue our handes cleere: but it is required also that we should not be priuie to any euill: For if we cloke it knowing of it, to whom is it to be imputed? Truly we may well washe our hands of it (as Pilate did) before men, as who should say, I did it not, I am guiltlesse of it: but God admitteth no such mockerie. Therefore whensoever we be examined or deposed vpon any matter, let vs not imagin that we shall scape skotfree before God because we haue nor done the actuall deede: For we must to the vttermost of our power find meanes that the mischiefe may be redressed, so as one man may not be trodden vnder foote, and another be bolstered and borne out, and consequently common robbrie be suffred to reigne disorderly among men; but that right and euen dealing may be maintained among men: and let euery man further the same on his owne behalfe. And as concerning Iudges and Magistrates, let them also learne to haue eyes, that they play not the blinkards and blinde folkes when euill is committed, ne thinke to escape when they can say, As for me, I haue no such thing. Yes, but such as are in authoritie of Iustice, must know that God hath set them aloft as it were in a watchtower to discover things as farre off. If the Magistrates themselves doe set a watchman in a high tower, and he excuse himselfe saying, I sawe nothing: will they hold him excused? No, For hee was set there to looke about him, and that was his charge. Euen so our Lord ordeineth Magistrates to keepe good watch. And if they notwithstanding doe that their eyes, and make as though they sawe nothing at all: shall it serue to acquit them? What an excuse were that? Were it not too fond and trifling? So then, let vs marke well, that Magistrates must open their eyes and bee watchfull, that they may see what their duetic is. And if they will be taken for guiltlesse, they must looke to it that they may be able to vie this present protestation in trueth, Our eyes haue not seene it, neither haue our handes done this deede.

But yet besides this, Moses sheweth that the citie or towne where a murder is committed, is not altogether cleere of it, and therefore that they must bee faine to craue pardon at Gods hand. Surely this seemeth to be with the extremest. What? Seeing we haue not consented to the euill, but woulde haue punished it, if it had bin done in our presence, and wee protest that wee our selues did not the deede, neither doe wee knowe the doer of the deed that wee might punish him: ought not God to be contented with all this? Nay, there is yet a further thing, namely that the committing of such a fault, is as a defiling of the whole countrie, and a warning giuen vs of God to looke narrowlyer to our selues. True it is that he will not take vs for murderers: but yet for all that, his suffering of such an offence to be committed, is as though he should shew vs with his finger, y he is gone fro vs. For when God blesseth a countrie, he preferueth it from all defilement. And the falling out of any defilement, is as a turning of Gods backe vpon vs, as if hee should say, I haue no more care of you, I let you alone, I giue you ouer. The nation therefore that perceiueth God to giue any signe of his displeasure, haue good cause to humble themselves. And that is the cause why hee commaunded the Iudges and gouernours of the citie where a murder was committed, to thinke earnestly vpon it, as if they should say, Lorde haue pittie vpon thy people Israel, and take away this guiltlesse blood from among vs, and let not this deed be imputed vnto vs.

Now if it be so, and y there be no remedie to be found but only to flee to Gods mercie, and to craue forgieuenesse not only for y fault, but also because men ought to feele y he is angrie with the whole Citie: What is to be done when the misdeede is apparent? Ought not men much more to make supplication to God, and to flee to his mercie, at leastwise if they were well aduised? Yes; but wee see what hardnesse or rather blockishnesse is nowadayes in most men, yea and well neere in all men. For when a misdeede is committed, who is hee that regardeth it? True it is that if an outrageous wickednesse be committed, men will perchance say, hee is a wicked man. But they consider not that God warneth all folkes generally to say euery man in himselfe, Alas how happeneth it that such an enormitie is committed among vs, that all of vs should be defiled with it before G O D? For that this is come to passe and wee neuer wist it, is a token that wee haue euill profited in Gods worde. For wee thinke not that his giuing of such examples vnto vs, is for our instruction. But although wee sleepe, yet dooth not G O D cease to doe his office. Wee heare what hee sayth when there is no iustice nor vpright dealing in a citie. They be princes of Sodome, they be theeues and murderers. Hee sayth this to Iudges. Not for that they had cut mens throates that were traueling: No; but because they had not maintained the good and guilelesse. Therefore he saith, Beholde, it is a citie of bloud. The very citie of Ierusalem it selfe, which God had chosen to be his royall pallace and Temple, is called a citie of bloud and a denne of theeues. And why? Because many outrages and disorders were there committed, and many poore soules were trodden vnder foote without succor, and iustice was become as an open robbie. So then, let vs learne to resorte to our God when any offence is committed, and let euery of vs thinke with humselfe, Alas, our Lorde doeth vs to vnderstande that he is angry with vs, in that such things are hapned, and that such enormities are committed among vs. And therefore let euery of vs craue pardon of them, and also thinke thus with our selues: Of whom is it long that I am not lyke one of them, but onely of Gods preferring of me? And let vs also beware for the time to come. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to beare in minde, as in the respect of the things that are spoken here concerning murder.

There was also the striking oile of the Hekfers heade, to make men the more afraid: as who should say, that the beholding of a poore beast slayne after that sorte, doth moue men the more. And what is to be sayd then of a man, which is shaped after the image of God? Wee see then, how our Lord meant to teach the Elders and Iudges that were present at the sacrifice, that they might the better learne the horriblenesse of all murders. For if wee bee afraid of a beast: it is good reason that wee should bee touched much more to the quicke without all comparison, for a humane creature. As touching the washing of their handes, it is added to doe the people to vnderstand, that they were after a sorte defiled, or rather that they should declare both before the Angels and before all creatures, that they might washe themselves from it. And this serued for the time of the ceremonies of the Lawe. But wee must vnderstand that it was not our Lorges meaning to foade his people by such signes in counterfeiting and hypocricie. What gayned Pilate by his washing of his handes? Was hee cleared from the death of Iesus Christ? No, that washing of his was a token of his desiling, Whereof washed he his handes, but because hee knewe himselfe guilty of the death of Iesus Christ? Whereof hee thought to cleere himselfe by a drop of water: and that was too great a dalying with God. And that is the cause why I sayd that his washing ingraued his sinne the deeper before G O D, and made him the more vexcusable. And therefore had the people come distemblingly to washe their handes; it had bin but a further charging of themselves, and a making of themselves the more faultie. But Gods will was that the Elders should vse such ceremonies, to doe vs the better to vnderstand, that wee be fleshly, and consider not our sinnes vlesse they bee as it were pointed out with the finger. Wee conceiue nor Gods wrath, except wee haue some signe of it before vs. God then meant to declare, that when there is any such offence, wee bee defiled, so as there is nothing but filthinesse in vs, but God mislyketh of vs, & we cannot preceue vnto him without prouoking him to wrath. Marke that for one point.

And therewithall hee meant to thewe vs, how we ought to apply our indeuour to cleanness. And this cleanness is not compassed with corruptible water; but it must bee first in our consciences, and afterwards in all our members. Wherefore let vs learne to looke to it, that our handes bee not bloody, as the Prophet Esay termeth the hands of those which did wrong to their neighbours: and let not our feete runne after bloud, neither let our members bee defiled, nor made instrumentes of vnrighteousnesse, as Saint Paule speaketh of them in the sixt to the Romans. When we indeuour after that sort to keepe our selues vndefiled to Godward; then do wee obserue the washing that was vnder the Lawe, to reterne the trueth and substance thereof. And at this day whereas we haue baptisme, the water be-tokeneth the lyke; not that it is sufficient of it selfe, nor that it is of force to washe away our sinnes, for what should then become of our Lord Iesus Christs blood: It were too grosse a blasphemie for a man to put his trust in a visible signe: we must lift vp our mindes higher. In lyke case is it with the Lorges supper; In somuch that when we come to the table of our Lorde Iesus Christ, if wee thinke to finde our soule health in a bit of bread or in a droppe of wine; wee bee very brutish, and there is neither reason nor vnderstanding in vs. But when wee be led further, so as by eating of the bread we conceiue that Christ is our very sustenance, and that although wee bee spiritually dead in our selues, yet we cease not to liue in him: then doth the sacrament turne to our benefite. And to that vse must we apply the doctrine that is set downe here.

And for a conclusion let vs marke further, that although the men that are murdered doe no more speake vnto vs, because they be dead: yet the blood of them cryeth out for vengeance against vs. See wee not what proceeded from the blood of Abell? Hee needed no man of lawe to pleade his case: for his very blood cryed vnto God as is reported thereof. Whereby wee bee done to vnderstand, that although the parties whom we haue misused doe forgue vs, yet will God euer be a Iudge to vs, vntill we haue acknowledged our faults, and indeuour to amend the. In somuch that although his wrath appeare not towards vs, & that our wrong dealing haue lyeen long concealed, so as it seeme to bee starke dead & quite forgotten: yet notwithstanding, the rememberance thereof is alwayes fresh before God. Let vs consider this, and let euery of vs in true repentance rebuke himselfe and amende his misdoings, inordering to liue quietly & without doing any harme. And for the doing thereof, let vs thinke vpon the outcrie whereof the Apostle speaketh in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, saying that the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ cryeth much better than did the blood of Abell. Not to aske vengeance of God against vs, so we receiue him in such wise as our sins bee washed & clenfed away. For to that purpose was that holy blood of his shed. True it is that the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ shall cry out for vengeance against all the faithlesse and froward sorte, & against such as haue refused the doctrine of y<sup>e</sup> Gospell & troden it vnder foot, & made a skorn of it, & al prophane folk, for al such shall be guilty of the blood shed of our Lord Iesus Christ. But when we receiue his blood by faith, & know y<sup>e</sup> it ought to serue vs as a purgatio<sup>n</sup> to make vs righteous and innocent before God: let vs assure our selues y<sup>e</sup> the same blood hath his cry. And in deed we see how the Gospell soundeth and ringeth in our eares to y<sup>e</sup> intent we should know the vertue of y<sup>e</sup> blood of our Lord Iesus Christ. For it is no dead thing: but it is euer fresh, as the Apostle speaketh of it in another place. Yea & it is so fresh y<sup>e</sup> it hath his luelly force continually, to reconcile vs vnto God. Therefore let vs rightly weigh this inestimable benefit, & receiue the peace of the Gospell, whereby God witnesseth vnto vs, that he admitteth the blood of his sonne for our washing, that we may appeare before his maiestie with full hope.

Now let vs cast our selues downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgedmet of our faults, praying him to make vs perceiue the more and more. Yea and let vs confesse, not onely the faultes which we know by our selues, and which we perceiue, & whereof we ought to be ashamed before men: but also our ignorances & our secret finnes whereof we be now guiltie. And foras much as we know how there be many vices and infirmities in vs, let vs moune for them before God, and let it make vs to proceede more and more in true repentance. And in the meane while let vs not continue wilfull; but let vs take courage to turne vnto him; and let vs not looke to haue a bullock or a brute beast to answere for vs nowadayes, as though the blood thereof should serue vs for a sacrifice: but let vs referre to our Lorde Iesus Christ, that seeing hee hath offered vp the onely and euerlasting sacrifice, in his death and passion once for all, to let vs free from all our debtes, and that hee calleth vs daily vnto him by his Gospell: wee seeke not any other meane to serue God withall, but proceede in all purenesse vnder his hand & guiding. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

10 When thou goest to battell against thine enemies, and the Lord thy God hath giuen them into thy hand, and thou hast led them into captiuitie:

11 Then if thou see a woman among the prisoners that is faire to looke vpon, and thou fall in loue with her, and canst finde in thy heart to take her to thy wife:

12 Thou shalt cary her home to thine house, and there shee shall shau her head and pare her nayles:

13 And thou shalt stripp her out of the apparell wherein shee was taken prisoner, and keepe her close in thine house, and let her bewaile her father and her mother by the space of a moneth. And after this thou shalt goe in vnto her, and so be married vnto her, and shee shall be thy wife.

14 And if it fall out that shee like thee not, thou shalt let her goe where she listeth: but thou maist not sell her for money, nor make marchandise of her, because thou hast humbled her.

Ad the Iewes held theselues within the rule which God gaue them, they should rather haue taken them wiues of their owne tribes, that they might not in any wise haue intermingled theselues with the idolaters. But forasmuch as mens lusts can hardly be bridled, God graunteth here a toleration, that when a man which hath taken a heathen woman prisoner by the law of armes, and is minded to take her to his wife: ere he so doe, hee shall cause her to moune for her father and her mother, as though they were dead, to the intent shee may forget both her countrie & kinred whereof she came, as though she were made new againe, and grafted into the body of the people of Israell.

Therefore let vs marke that in this text GOD meant to restreyn the lustes of such as had no hold of themselues in the time of war, but would needes take straunge women, that had had serued idols afore. Now the woman was (as I haue sayd afore) that the women should bee (as I haue sayd afore) that the women should bee as it were changed, so as they might no more remember their former life. And that is the cause why hee sayth that they should shoue their heades, and pare their nayles. Some translate it, and make their nayles, (for so is it word for word,) that is to say, let them growe that they might become greate, to disfigure them. And they thinke that by that meane God meant to bring their husbands in mislyking of them. But it is cleane contrarie. For lyke as in French, they say commonly to make heere, and to make a beard, [when they meane the powling or rounding of the hayre, and the shauing, clipping, or trimming of the beard:] so doe the Hebrewes vse the selfesame phraze of speech, And Gods appointing of this ceremonie to be vsed, was to take away all vnclaneas: as who should say, that if it were possible for them to scrape off their very skins, they should doe it, to the intēt they might no more be the same that they were before, but rather vtterly renounce their own byrthright, & become lewes to serue y god which gaue his law by y had of Moses. To the same end also tended the sorrow which they were to make in mourning for their fathers and mothers. Thus we see now to what end this Lawe was giuen.

Now remaineth to gather the instruction that is contened therein. For we see what libertie me take. When they haue any worldly prosperitie, then their lustes increase and boyle more and more, so as they cannot easily be quieted. When men haue taken a Citie, or made any conquest, they cannot stay theselues frō taking too much scope. If the lewes had taryed quietly at home in their owne houses, and euery man followed Gods ordinance in taking a wife of his owne kinred; (not the brother the Sister, for that was forbidden by the Lawe: but I meane of the lynce of Abraham, which was the lynage that God had chosen out of the whole worlde): they had bin preferred from defiling themselues with the Infidels. For it was a kind of defilement whē a lewe married a Heathen woman, which had bin nuffled in superstition all her life long. They should not then haue ranged abroade. But had they once any warre, and y God gaue them the victorie ouer any people, then their licentiousnes braust out beyond his bounds. Wherby we see howe it is not alwayes for our profite, that our Lord should giue vs too much aduantage. For if we growe too strong: our headines becommeth vtrollerable. If we thinke ourselues able to make our part good: by and by we set vp our bristles & our combes, as the common saying is: and it is seene by experience. Therefore if God deale not with vs after our owne lyking, let vs assure our selues that his humbling of vs is for our benefite, to the end we should alwayes continue in some sobrietie and mildenesse. Yea and euen when he increaseth vs, we must learne to hible ourselues willingly. For whēsoeuer we aduaunce our selues our pride shal euer be punished & beaten down. And if we be stricke, God must needs strike vpon vs with maine blowes. Such as submit theselues of their own good will, and passe not their boundes, are comfōrted of God. But as for those which will needs win him by stoutnes; they must needs feele his hand the sorer and heauier vpon their heades.

The thing then which we haue to note in the first place, is y men abuse Gods blessings & gracious gistes. Insomuch y if he send them worldly prosperitie, they take occasion to glory too much therein, hardening their hearts and following their lustes so licētiously, as though (to their seeming) all things were lawful for them. We see it too much: so that if men haue obtained a victorie, they beare theselues in hand y they may vse all maner of pillage & rauishing, so as nothing is spared. When we haue any superioritie aboue others; at what point be we? We could finde in our hearts to make the our vnderlinges, & to set our feete vpon their throates. Sith we see it is so, let vs vnderstā y our Lord hath good cause to hold vs at a low stay, to the end he may y better weald vs, and make vs to beare his yoke quietly. And therefore let such as haue any worldly prosperitie, looke wel to theselues, y they be not puffed vp with too much pride, knowing for a certaintie y our nature is disposed thereunto, and that it swayeth too much that way. Wherfore let euery man suspect himselfe in the time of prosperitie, and be weladuised to hold himselfe within the boundes of modestie.

And now we haue to treate of marriage: & to shew why our Lord did so straitly will and command y lewes, y they should not marry with y heathen & infidels. S. Paul not wout cause lykeneth our matches in marriage to yokes. For like as when a cupple of Oxen are yoked together, if y one goe, y other must needs follow; & if the one draw awry, y other canot but sway aside too: euen so fareth it in y familiaritie betweene man & nian. True it is y we may be couerfant among y heathen, wout matching with the: for else (as saith S. Paul) we should be faine to get vs out of y world, if we would come in cōpanie of none but good men & Gods childre. But there are meanes to trafique man with man, & yet y must be done but in maner of wayfaring. He y buieth of a mā, would not inquire of his good behauiour, except he feared y he should be decieued by him: Only he buieth his ware & goes his way, & yet for all y he is not in any couenant w him with whome he bargained. But if he once enter into familiar cōuersion, and fall to eating and drinking with him; and there groweth such acquaintance betwixt them, that they liue commonly together: then becommeth it a yoke saith S. Paul. Now we knowe that marriage is the holiest kind of companie in all the world: in somuch that a man shal leaue both father and mother to keepe companie with his wife. Therefore it is vnpossible for a man to contract marriage, without coupling himselfe with his wife, so as eache bee made priue to others minde, will, and purpose in all things. For we see what hath happened; how the parties that haue giuen themselues ouer in that wise, haue in the end bin vtterly mard, & God did as it were cut the off from his people, so as they became as rottē members, and all through the counsell of Balaam. For whē he sawe that God opened not his mouth to curse the Israēlites, but rather that when as hee had conspired to vtter curses, hee was enforced to speake the cleane contrarie: for his last shift hee gaue counsell, that they shoulde let the Iewes enter communication with the heathen women, that they might deceiue the Iewes hearts, & corrupt them with Idolatrie, whereby they shoulde prouoke Gods vengeance against them, & that should turn to their confusion. Nay if there were no mo but Salomon, his example were enough to make their hayre stand vp vpon their heades, which did well consider wheremto he fell. Surely he was an excellent man: It was Gods wil to set him forth as a looking glasse, or as a peereles pearle, & he was indued wth so excellent wisdome, that all men wondered at him, yea & he was euen a Prophet of God. Yet for all this, the heathen women deceiued his hart, in so much that hee suffered idolatrie to haue full scope, & to reigne in the countrie which GOD had reserued & dedicated to himselfe, so that he builded Temples vnto idols. When we see that such a man (who was an Angel of heauen) did fall downe to hell, & that God gaue him ouer to a wicked minde; by means whereof he became so beastly that he ouerthrowe<sup>d</sup> y<sup>e</sup> seruice & religion of God: how shal they doe which are far off from profiting so much as he? So then we see it is not without cause that God so strictly forbade the Iewes to take wyues of forraine nations, & specially of the countrie of Chanaan. But generally his meaning was, that they should not match themselues with idolaters. For why? It is a making of an entrie & an opening of a gap to Saran that he may put all to hauock, & bring all things to disorder & confusion. God therefore ment to prevent that. True it is y<sup>e</sup> at this day now that y<sup>e</sup> Gospell hath bin preached ouer all the world, there is neither Gentile nor Iew any more: wee haue no more any such distinction as was vnder the Lawe. For the separation wall (saith S. Paul) is brokē downe, so as we must now link together in brotherly concord, forasmuch as God will be called vpon of all nations, & that all men should call him father: and therefore we must knit our selues together. Yea, but there are which separat themselues through vnbeleefe, & wil not be of y<sup>e</sup> bodie of the Church, but refuse y<sup>e</sup> God which is declared to vs by Iesus Christ, & wil not be partakers of the adoption which hee offereth to all men both great & small. Vnto such we must not cleaue, at leastwise if we intend not to alienate our selues from God & from the way of saluation. Whosoever the matcheth himself wittingly & wilfully with the vnbeleeuers: dooth as much as in him lyeth to banish himself from the kingdom of God. And for that cause doth S. Paul vse this exhortation, that wee should not beare the yoke with vnbeleeuers, telling vs that the things which were spoken in olde tyme to the Iewes, belong also vnto vs, so as it behooueth vs to seee far from all superstition, & frō all such as intangle vs therein. And why? For we not only beare the materiall vessels of the Lordes Temple, but also are his very Temples wherein hee dwelleth by his holy spirit: and therefore wee must offer both our bodies and soules in sacrifice to him, that we may be wholly dedicated vnto him. For seeing he hath chosen vs to be his childrē, ought we not to be clenfed frō al corruption both of bodie & mind, as hath bin declared?

Seeing it is so then, let vs learne that when a man is to marrie, he must (as neere as hee can) chooseth him such a wife as may further him in the seruing of God purely. For why? We be fraile enough of our selues, without being corrupted of other folkes. And if a man be in a good way, and be neuer so wel minded and desirous to doe well: he shal soone be marred by euil companie. And the world sees it. If a man doe but fall to drinking with a leawd fellow or a naughtipacke: he is in daunger to turne backe and to become euery day worse than other; so that yee woulde wonder to see him become a very diuel. Now if a little tipping doe this; what wil insue when a man shall be faine to keepe companie with his wife as long as they liue? Truly it is a manifest emptying of God, when a man throwes himselfe headlong downe after that fashion, and stoppeth his eyes at the taking of a wife, hauing no regard of his choyce; y<sup>e</sup> he might be helped by her, so as they might beaue themselves holly & according to Gods will with one common consent. That (I tell you) is a poynt which it behooueth vs to marke wel. And what is the cause that now adayes so many mariages come to ill end, but that men haue not an eye to God, but mens mindes are set vpon their lustes and pleasure, or else they seeke for wealth? God then is not accounted of, & therefore he is faine to reuenge such contempt, and so doth hee as experience sheweth. So much the more ought wee to marke well how it is sayd in this text, that if a man will marrie a straunge woman, (that is to say an Infidel) which hath not bin brought vp in the feare of God, nor bin instructed in his word,) he must looke that shee be cleane changed, before hee euer come at her. For a wife is as a deadly poyson, vnlesse she haue first forsaken her former conuersation, and professed to liue thenceforth to Godward, and to sticke purely to his word, & haue put her old bringing vp quite out of her minde, yea & euen cast her slough as they say.

And furthermore, whereas it is sayd here, that the woman must shauē her head, pare her nayles, put away her [old] apparell, and moune as though she had forgone her father and mother: in deed thole ceremonies serued for the Iewes, and wee be not to vse those figures now adayes. But yet must wee haue an eye whereunto the same tended: namely that the women (as I haue sayd afore) should be as it were changed, y<sup>e</sup> they might be brought into y<sup>e</sup> body of Gods Church. This is a ground therefore, y<sup>e</sup> when a man intēdeth to take a wife, he must looke y<sup>e</sup> she be reformed aforchād & that she know God & his word, so as the ioyne herself thereto, & be ready to giue ouer al idolatrie. Vntil a woman be at y<sup>e</sup> point, it is not lawfull for a Christian man to take her to his wife.

And if he take her before, and graunt him the grace to reclaim her afterwarde, yet must hee vnderstand that he hath done amisse. And looke what is saide of men, concerneth women likewise. For as women haue their inticementes to allure the hearts of men: so men may easily tempt women to turne them from the right way of saluation, and to ouerthrowe them as the world seeth. And therefore when a woman doeth of her owne will go take a husbande [that is a despiser of God, a wicked and loofcliuier, a lawlesse person, a drunkarde or a swearer: it is all one as if shee forsooke God, and banished her selfe out of his Church, and shee deserueth to haue all manner of cursednesse to light vpon her head.

And where as this is tolde vs concerning wedlocke; let vs vnderstande it likewise of al other things that may thrust vs out of our way: and let vs learne to bee conuersant with such companions, that wee may cuer bee edified still to the better. For wee haue neede of such folke as may amende vs, because that euery of vs is frayle of himselfe. And therefore let vs seeke to match our selues with such as haue the feare of God, and leade a holy & honest life: & let vs shunne such as go about to intangle vs in their abominations. When wee see a malicious and frowarde person, a despiser of God, or a lustie Gallant that passeth not to be an offence to all men: let vs esteeme him as a plague, and let vs vtterly eschue him. For why: whosoever comes nye him, shall surely be infected by him out of hande. And that is apparant. So then, let vs beare well in mynde, that here our Lorde intended to shewe, that wee must haunt such companie as is fit to teache vs to doe well, and that on the contrarie parte, wee must shunne all occasions of euill, because of the infirmitie that is in vs, and wee neede not much to turne vs away from weddoing.

Also it is to be noted, that seeing God hath ordayned so many ceremonies for the women which were to renouce their owne kinred: therein hee meant to doe vs to wit, that wee must forget our owne nature, if wee will serue him purely and as hee commaundeth vs. Therefore when wee haue had any wicked trayning, and haue bene nussed in any euill custome; it is not ynough for vs to be tolde that such a thing is euill. For although wee fee it is so, and haue it throughly prooued vnto vs: yet do we not cease to be steyned with it still. It is so deeply rooted in vs, as it cannot bee plucked vp at the first dash. And this ought to be throughly knowen vnto vs, that when a man hath bene naughtily brought vp from his childhood, and hath dwelled in a house of disorder till hee come to twentie yeares of age: although hee take paynes all the time of his life after, to forget the corruptions which hee had seene, and wherewith hee had bene imbrowed before: yet can hee neuer bring it to passe, but that hee shall alwayes retayne still some spot or blemish. And hereby wee see howe gracious God is to such as are so well brought vp, that they haue seene none other but good and honest examples, whereby they haue learned to serue God and to honour him. It is an inestimable priuilege, when God graunteth vs to haue such bringing vp: and ynhappy bee they which abuse it. And this ought to bee so much the greater prouocation to fathers and mothers to nurture well their children, and to take paynes in the good bringing of them vp, because there is such corruption in men, that when they haue once bene imbrowed and infected with vices, they can hardly refrayne them with great payne. This then is that which in effect wee haue to remember vpon this text, to the ende that all men shoulde be vigilant in bringing vp their children in true religion and vertue.

Again, on the other side let children on their parte be wellware that they disappoint not the grace of God, but rather that they make it auaylable, that by their good bringing vp, they may fare the better all their life after. Also fathers and mothers must take good heede, that they suffer not their children to runne at routers: for wee see howe it is ynough to marre them out of hand, and to bring the poore soule to vtter vndoing. Specially when wee our selues haue bene euil brought vp, that is to say euill taught; let vs doe the best wee can to weede out the infections that are in vs. And let vs not thinke it an easie thing to do, so as wee shoulde neede no more but to shake our eares at it, as a number doe, who when they haue played the naughtie packes, thinke themselves to be the best reformed men in the worlde, so long as they rush not out into all extremities, when yet notwithstanding they faile not to retaine still some parte of their former corruptions, and all the worlde may see still the markes of their euill bringing vp in them. For why? They consider not howe harde it is for a man to resourme himselfe, which hath bene naughtily brought vp. And aboue all things, let this be obserued in religion. For as for those that haue bene brought vp in poperie, I meane which haue bene nussed in it, that is to say, made beastes, (for one of the holyest poyntes of doctrine that is taught and esteemed among the Papistes, is that men should be without wit and without reason, and not discerne any thing themselves, but rather suffer themselves to be led by the noses like brute beasts;) when, I say they haue bene nussed in such ignorance, although they come afterwarde to the purenesse of the Gospell, yet notwithstanding they keepe still some dregges, vnlesse they take marueylous great payne to ridde away all their former corruption, as euery of vs syndeth by experience in himselfe.

True it is that many sillie soules perceiue it not in themselves. For when it is tolde them that the Masse is an abomination, that diuerse things in it are of Satans deuyfing, & that they must holde themselves to Gods worde: very well say they, all is one to mee, I will forebare the Masse, and shrift, and all the things that I haue seene in times past, I giue them ouer. And why? Because they bee no longer in vse. Therefore they bee now layde asleepe. But if an altar were set vp againe, a man coulde not so soone turne his hande, but they woulde by & by bee gadding to Masse, as fast as they flocke nowe to Sermons. And their comming to sermons is not to bee edified; but rather the word of God serues to condemne them, and to make them vnexcusable. And as for such, they were not what it is to fight against popish superstitions. But such as are well wakened and touched to the quicke with the feare of God, when they examine themselues, will thinke thus: Go to, I haue yet still this smatch of my wicked bringing vp in my chyldhood remainyng in mee. A man which is duely touched with the feare of God, and desirous to profite in Gods worde, shall finde at tenn or twentie years ende that there remaineth still some roote thereof behynde, and must bee sayne to fight against it. Every man sees this in his owne case. For looke howe much one man hath bin deeper plunged than another in those cursed meetinges or assemblies, so much the more nourishment of them doeth hee retayne still euer after. In so much that euen those which haue profited best in Gods schoole, if they haue once benee drowned in these Munkeries, 30 or in the hellish dungeons of Poperie, do feele in themselues I wote not what dregges thereof remainyng in them euer after. And our Lorde holdeth them downe, and by meanes thereof giueth them as it were a Whetstone to sharpen them to the incounter, that they may the better knowe their owne vyces, and bee the fitter to teache others. But howeouer the case stande, wee may well assure our selues that wee shall not by and by haue rooted out the corruptions which wee haue receuyed by our euill bringing vp in our chyldhood. And that is it which our Lorde meant by the figure which hee setteth downe: heere, namely, that the women must shake off their hayre, pare their nayles, put away their accustomed apparell, and bee quite and cleane changed, if they will dwell among the people of God: so as they must asier a sorte bee made newe againe, and haue vterly renounced their owne kinred. Wee see nowe howe such as haue benee trayned vp in euill, and plunged in superstition, must fight all their life long against their vices, that they may reclayme themselues fully vnto God.

But wee must goe yet one steppe further, and put the thing in vre which is sayde in the fuen- and forth Psalm, agreeing vnto that which is sayde heere: Harken my daughter, forget thine owne people, and thy kinred, and thy fathers house. There it is spoken concerning Salomons wife: but vnder that figure it is shewed vnto vs howe Gods Church is marryed spiritually to our Lorde Iesus Christ: namely vpon condition that shee forget her father and her kinred, and all her former trade of life, and all the customes of her country. And I tolde you that this text concerneth the things that are contayned heere. For why? Shee was a woman of a straunge countrie, and had benee an ydolater all the tyme of her life: and therefore it was sayde vnto her that shee must forget all the tyme past, and put her bringing vp out of her remembrance, to the end shee might dedicate her selfe to GOD, and then the king woulde loue her becaue. As if it were sayde, that king Salomon ought not to take any pleasure in his wife, nor haue any delight or liking in her, vntill shee had protested herselfe to bee desirous to bee wholly vnto Gods people, and had separated herselfe from all the abhominations of Egypt. And I haue tolde you, that herein wee haue a general rule for all men, of what kinred or country so euer wee bee. For why? It is the sonne of God that is our true Salomon, who contracteth holy wedlocke with his Church, and will haue vs to bee as a wife vnto him. And to the same ende serueth the preaching of the Gospell, as sayeth Saint Paul in the eleuenth Chapter of the seconde Epistle to the Corinthians. I must narre you (sayeth hee) as chaste virgines vnto Iesus Christ. And therefore let vs marke, that whensoever the Gospell is preached vnto vs, it is all one as if Christ wooed vs to marrye with him, alter the same manner that men sue vnto women when they woulde match with them in wedlocke. And so our Lorde thinks it not ynough to take vs as his souldiers and seruants: but hee will also haue vs to bee incorporated into him, and to bee as neere vnto him as the wife is to her husbande. But vpon what condition? So long as wee continue in our own nature, we cannot be ioyned vnto him, neither can he take any pleasure in vs: and therefore we must forget our owne stocke, & our kinsfolkes; that is to say, we must become new creatures. For what haue wee so long as we hold of our father Adā, or any thing at all that is of man? what haue we (say I) but vtter frowardnesse? Wherefore let vs marke well, that this figure must serue vs for an instruction at this day: namely, that whereas vnder the lawe, our Lorde willed heathen women to pare their nayles, to shake off the hayre of their heads, & to put away their former apparell & attyre; it is all one as if hee shewed vs in a liuely picture, that we cannot bee of the body of his Church, nor of the houtholde of faith, nor admitted into his fauour, except we bee stripped out of our accustomed apparell, that is to say, except wee forsake our olde maner & trade of life, and bee so changed, as wee may shewe openly that our desire is not to bee wedded any more to our selues, but to be gouerned by him, & to forsake all that we haue of our own nature, & al y euer we haue learned by euill custom. Now we see howe beneficial this lesso is for vs, & that God spake it not for y Jewes only, but y he ment to giue vs also a profitable instruction if we can skill to put it wcl in vre.

bewaile her father and her mother : it is not meant that women should be forie to come to liue after Gods worde: but here our Lorde hath done vs to vnderstande that the naturall affections cannot bee mortified at the first chop, without some struing against them, as we see too much by experience: insomuch that euen after a man hath bene trayned vp in Gods worde, although hee bee desirous to behaue him selfe as becometh him; yet shall hee finde great gainstryings and contrarieties in himselfe, so as hee must be faine to enforce himself. And it is not for one day, but for all our life long, that our lustes and fleshly affections strue against Gods spirite which dwelleth in vs and stirreth vs vp and prouoketh vs vnto good. Wherefore let vs marke that whereas our Lorde speaketh heere of forrowing, it is all one as if hee had sayde, that although a woman mourne for her kinned and be greued with her sinful and corrupt affections; yet notwithstanding, her lamenting must be after such a sort, that in the ende shee thrust them vnder foote and forget them. And hereby wee haue to note, that our seruing of God, must not be alonely when things fall out after our lyking and after our heartes desire, so as wee bee nothing pinched in the dooing thereof; but also euen when wee bee vexed and stoong with our wicked lustes; In so much that although it bee harde for vs to frame our selues to the obeying of Gods commaundementes, and wee feele it as a bitter medicine: yet must wee not therefore bee out of heart. For it is much better for vs to weepe in sorrowing for our sinnes and offences, and to forsake them; than to bee merry and to laugh, and in the meane while to haue this threat sounding in our eares, that our laughter shall bee turned into weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Matt. 8. 12.

And therefore let vs marke well, that heerein our Lorde ment to put vs still in minde, that whatsoeuer infirmities bee in vs, yet must they not make our heartes to quayle, but wee must still so enforce our selues to amendement, as wee may alwayes goe on forwarde, howsoeuer wee fare. And if Satan cast stoppes in our wayes, to make vs retye or turne head; wee must thrust them backe, and strayne our selues to ouercome them. Although then that wee be driuen to mourne as though wee bewayled our kinsfolkes and friends; yet must wee still holde out in renouncing worldly things, that we may giue ouer our selues vnto our GOD, and that Christ may haue the possession of vs quietly, and wee faithfully keepe the promise of the sacred & spirituall marriage which he contracteth with vs by the Gospel.

And it is sayde, vnto this must bee done by the space of a moneth, during which time the man shall keepe her in his house without touching her, yea, or without comming at her. Hereby wee see, that (as was sayde at the beginning) God in this place did somewhat beare and dispence with the Lewes, because they were too greatly giuen to their owne lykings: howbeit that was but with a moderation. And thereby wee bee taught (as I haue touched already at the beginning) to eschewe the occasions that might deceiue vs by their intycementes. For wee can no sooner open our eyes, but Satan hath some meane or other to dash them in such sorte, that hee will draw them to him by and by. And hee hath his snares so layde aforehande, that wee shall bee caught ere wee bee aware. What will become of vs then, when wee seeke occasions asfarre off? Wee had neede to betake our selues to God both early and late, as the holy Ghoste him selfe doeth vs to vnderstande where hee sayeth [in our behalfe:] Lorde, turne away mine eyes from all temptations. As much is sayde of our eares and of all our other senses. For all of them are but as messengers of lecherie and leawdnesse, vnlesse our Lorde put to his hande, and rule vs by his holy spirite. Therefore let vs learne to shunne the temptations that might serue to intyce vs to further naughtinesse; and let vs so eschewe them, as GOD may quietly haue the fruition of vs. And when soeuer any temptation happeneth vnto vs, let vs seeke to cut it off out of hande, and not to feede it: neyther let vs be too hastie to followe our owne lykings, which is the last poynt that wee haue to marke here.

Psal. 119. 31.
Psal. 141. 5.

To conclude, whereas it is sayde, that the woman whome a man intendeth to marrie, must bee kept close by him at home in his house, a whole moneth before hee come neere her: therein our Lorde hath shewed vs a remedie that is more than requisite and needefull for all such as haue so whotte and headie lustes. Wee see that when any lust is once entered into a mannes heart, it letteth him on fire at the first brunt, and carryeth him away after such a sorte, as hee can take no rest. In respect whereof our Lorde giueth men heere a brydle, telling them that he which will take a wife after that manner, shall not goe in vnto her, vntill hee haue first giuen her a monethes respite to mourne and to forsake her owne native people.

True it is (as I haue saide afore) that this ceremony continueth not now any longer as in respect of the vs thereof, but yet it must serue vs still for our learning: That is to witte, that for as much as the diuell driueth vs after our lustes, and that as soone as any toyce takes vs in the head, by and by wee runne gadding after it, so as wee breake all bondes and brydles; wee must consider thus with our selues: But yet must thou brydle thy selfe in this case spite of thy teeth; and if thou beest a woode beast, thou must bee subdued by strong hande to the obeying of thy GOD. After that manner ought every man to fight against him selfe, and wee should put this lesson in practise daily. For when so euer wee bee tempted to euill, if wee endeavour not to reprocue our selues, wee bee overcome immediately, and the diuel hauing once caught holde, will not let vs goe againe, for hee hath seised vpon the pray that is his owne already.

But if wee through Gods grace, and by the power of his holy Spirit, doe striue to beat backe temptations, and take pleasure in mynding the things that God commaundeth vs; and whereas Satan seeketh to surprize vs, and indeuoureth to make vs turne our backs to al good doctrine and admonitions, wee on the other side conclude with our selues, saying, Nowe must I gather my wittes to mee and bebinke mee of that which I haue learned, and whereunto God calleth mee: If we (I saye) take such aduisement to subdue our lustes: Satan shalbee ouer-come, and our Lorde wilbee so gracious vnto vs as to turne the euill into good, and to inable vs to vse his benefites in such wise, as they shall notbee marred by our taking of any inordinate libertie. The thing then which wee haue to remember yet further vpon this text, is that although Moses speake here of none but women; yet wee must apply the doctrine to all other temptations which befall vs, that wee bee not wonne by them at the first brunt, but that wee behaue our selues so stayedly, as God may in the ende reigne ouer vs, and wee not attempt any thing which is not permitted vs by his worde.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the maiestic of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, that beeing glory for them wee may bee so cast downe and grieued in our selues, as wee may bee readie to renounce all that euer is of the worlde and of our owne nature, and to giue ouer and consecrate our selues more and more to him that hath called vs to this state, that wee bee a holy people to him, according to his adopting of vs by Iesus Christ, the members of whose body hee woulde haue vs to bee. And so let vs all say, Almighty God, heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the xxx. of December. 1555.

The Cxxij. Sermon which is the third vpon the one and twentieth Chapter.

15 If a man haue two wiues, the one beloued and the other hated, and they haue brought him forth children, as well the hated as the beloued, and the first childe is the childe of the hated:

16 And the time is come that hee will diuide his goods among his children to inherite: he may not giue the title of eldership to the sonne of the beloued, in derogation of the hated womans sonne which is the first borne.

17 But he shall acknowledge the hated womans sonne for his eldest, in giuing him double portion of all things that he hath. For he is the beginning of his strength, to whome the right of the first begotten belongeth.

Ere wee may see howe harde it is to keepe men in good order, by reason of the naughtinesse and rebellion that is in them. For the lustes of our flesh are like madde beastes that cannot bee tamed. And therefore the lawes which Moses setteth downe heere, serue as it were to fetter men when they will not bee ruled quietly. If any thing bee to bee counted holy and inuiolable among men, it is marriage. For it hath a testimonie that God would haue it stablished in his name, euen to liue and dye therein. And yet men sticke not to breake so great a bonde. And so wee see that the brute beastes are easier to rule than men bee, for all the reason and vnderstanding that God hath giuen vnto them: for they set all their wittes vpon euill.

It is not for vs to finde faulte with the lewes in this behalfe, as though they were a harder-hearted people, and wee were not the like: but wee ought rather to beholde our selues in their persons, and to consider that wee bee no better than they. The text speaketh heere of a woman that was taken prisoner, howe that when a man had married her, hee ought thence forth to keepe the same rule with her which our Lorde hath set downe for all others: namely, that hee forsake both father and mother, and cleaue to his wife. God sayeth that if he be wearie of her, he shall let her goc franke and free, and not sel her as a slaue. Surely God meant not to giue a married man leaue to put away his wife: for that is against the order of nature, and against the first institution or ordinance of marriage, which ought to continue to the worlds end. But it is all one as if God tolde vs, that men cannot behaue themselves cuenly & vprightly, & that they presume vpon many things which are not permitted to the And therefore like as men put shackles vpon euill conditioned horses; euen so to the intent y men also should not ouershoote theselues too far, God setteth them a barre to stop at: not that he correcteth their vices altogether, but that he maketh some restraint of them. If wee haue an eye to the perfection which God requyeth, whosoeuer hath once married a wife, must keepe his faith and troth towards her to the vttermost, that is to say, euen vnto the death. And although there be faultes to be founde in her, yet must hee beare with her as with the weaker vessel. Likewise the wife must behaue herself so quietly towards her husbande, that to the vttermost of her power shee must frame herselfe to his disposition. The thing then which marriage requireth, is that the two parties liue together with one consent in the obedience of God, and that neyther of them drawe aside by themselves, but that if there be any faultes in the one or in the other, they beare with them & passe them ouer as I sayde afore. If a man put away his wife whome hee tooke as a prisoner among his enemies, although hee doe not hold her still in bondage, yet is the marriage broken thereby. Yea verily: and yet is not that putting away made lawfull by God, as who should say hee had set men free at their owne choyce. Neither must men soothe themselves or thinke themselves acquit, because they be not blamed by earthly iustice: but Gods intent was onely to shew, that although a man be so leawd as to breake his faith, yet must hee not presume so farre as to play the tyrant too, and to sell his wife as though shee were his bondslaue still for cuer. For he hath dishonored her.

Wee see then (as I haue touched afore) howe mannes wickednesse is so great, that it cannot bee reformed, and that it is much if hee can bee brought to some measure. And therefore wee must put a difference betweene humane policie and the lawe of God which serueth to rule our life, to the intent wee may walke as before him. Humane policie keepeth a certaine meane. It is no such perfectnesse as can acquit vs before God, though wee haue not transgressed the lawes thereof. But our Lorde draweth vs yet further in shewing vs the way to liue well. Hee resteth not vpon the thing that is possible in mannes sight; but sheweth vs what is due to himselfe, and wherein wee be bounde vnto him. Why bee not mannes lawes perfect in all poyntes? Because that in them respect is had what is possible to be obtained. Lawes are not made in respect that it is good that men should do so: but to the ende that men might liue together one with another. But when our Lorde giueth vs his doctrine, shewing vs the way to liue well and holily: hee respecteth not our abilitie [to perforce me.] For can wee loue him with all our heartes, with all our strength, with all our soule, and with all our reason? Alas, it is much if wee did take paines about it, and enter into the way, and in deuour to set forward. Although wee were still farre from the marke, yet had wee profited very much. But yet doth not this barre God from demanding his right. You must loue mee (sayeth hee) with all your heart. If a man reply, that it lyeth not in vs to doe it, it is nothing to the purpose. Wee must tende thereunto whatsoeuer come of it. He will haue vs to be cleere from all euill affections, & from all wicked lustes of our flesh: and is that possible? No. And yet are wee bounde vnto it, and the lawe requyeth it. And for that cause did I say (according to my treating of the same matter heretofore) that it standeth vs in hande to discern the well the spirituall law whereby God governeth our soules, from all that cuer is set downe in the lawes of this worlde for the ciuile ordering of this present life. And herof wee haue examples in this present place. For (as I haue declared before) what meaneth marriage, but that a man should holde himselfe to the companie of his wife euen vnto the death, quietly maintaining her and bearing with her?

But God seemeth here to giue a man leaue to put away his wife. It is no giuing of leaue, as I sayde afore. For the bonde standeth still in force, that hee which putteth away his wife is accused, because hee hath broken the order which God hath set, and sanctified. But yet as in respect of worldly gouernement, such a man was not punished among the Iewes. As for nowadayes, that libertie is not permitted. For it is good reason that Christians should vse a more perfect kinde of gouernement than the Iewes had, considering that our Lorde Iesus Christ hath shewed himselfe in the worlde, and vttered the will of God his father vnto vs more fully. Therefore wee must not take such libertie nowadayes, as the Iewes did in old time.

Nowe let vs come to the seconde lawe that is set downe here. It is sayde, If a man haue two wives. What? Is this agreeable to the order of marriage? Nay, it is cleane contrarie to it. A man cannot breake wedlocke more, than by taking two wyues. It is sayde that they shall be two in one flesh. It is not sayde there, that they shall be three or foure. But our Lorde created onely one woman, to the intent shee should be the mannes companion. And before he created her, hee sayth not, it were good for a man to haue many helpees. Let vs make him one helper (quoth hee) to bee with him. Now seeing that God thinketh one helper to be ynough for a man; surely whosoeuer goeth beyonde that rule, turneth all things vpside downe, & it is al one as if hee would disanul the ordinance of God. Yea verily. For who is the author of marriage? Hath not God spoken the thing that ought to stande inuolable, namely y they shall be two in one flesh, and that a man shall haue but one helper? Now if notwithstanding this, a man will needes take two wiues, is it nor an open defying of God? Yes verily. And therefore our Lorde sayeth by his Prophet, that it were more tolerable for a man to put away his wife by giuing her the leaue that was permitted vnder y<sup>e</sup> lawe, than to haue two wiues at once. And there he fendeth such vnrlly persons backe againe to the creation. Behold (sayeth hee,) God created but one man. And the very same thing doth our Lorde Iesus Christ meane in saying that at the beginning it was not so. For God created but one man: namely male and female created he them. Nowe the Prophet Malachie in alleaging this, sayeth further that God had sufficient abundance of spirite in himselfe. And therefore what shoulde haue letted him to haue created two wiues for Adam, if he had thought it good? But God thought one to bee ynough. Therefore it is to bee concluded, that he which coueteth to haue two wyues, marreth all, and regardeth not the keeping of wedlocke in such sorte as God hath ordeyned it. Then is it whordome and not wedlocke for a man to desire a seconde wife after that fashion. Yet notwithstanding, this vyce hath bene of olde tyme, & thereby a man may see & iudge what certeinie there is in grounding our selcus vpon custome. Thus say wee, it hath bene so in all ages, it hath euer bene wont to bee so. Yea, but that will not serue to discharge vs before God. For this Polygamie as they terme it, that is to say, this hauing of many wyues at once, shoulde haue a very goodly couer for it, if it might rest vpon custome and antiquitie. But what? Gods institution or ordinance went afore custome, and ought to continue vnto the last ende. Wee see then that it was too disordered and vnrlly dealing, when men rooke such scope and libertie to haue many wiues at once. And yet the thing fell out euen in the Patriarkes themselues. Whereby it appeareth that men doe but deceiue themselues when they ground themselues vpon men, though they bee the holiest that euer were. Yee see that Abraham who is the father of the faithfull, had mo wiues than one. Yea, but hee sayed not to bee condemned for it. In all the residue of his life hee was a mirror of Angelicall perfection; but in this case he ouershot himselfe. Therefore let vs holde our selcus to Gods pure worde, and not pretende that any thing is lawfull for vs, except it be ruled after the same. Thus much concerning the hauing of many wyues at once, which is spoken of heere. In so much that if any man haue two wyues, hee doth contrary to the order which God hath set. By reason whereof the men that doe so passe their boundes are neuer the more acquit, though they bee not punished for it by the lawes of men; but they must alwayes come backe to this poynt, that God hauing an eye what might bee obtained of mennes infirmitie, ordeyned it as a lawe of policie. And this is no impedimēt at al to the perfection that is contayned in Gods worde, whereto it beho-ueth vs to aspire. And if wee swaue neuer so litle from it, wee bee guiltie before him by and by. And well may wee alleage this or that; As for example, men require nothing at our hands; yet must wee come to account for it before the heavenly Iudge.

Mal. 2. 15. &
 Mat. 19. 8.

It is sayde heere expressly, If a man hate the one and loue the other. Whereby it is shewed vnto vs, that the hauing of many wyues at once, proceedeth of a corrupt affection, in that a man beareth not such loue to his wife as he ought to do. For if a man loued his wife chaitely, as hee is commaunded; his heart will neuer bee withdrawn from her to desire a newe marriage. Then must a man needes bee corrupted and infected in his heart, and conceiue a mislyking of his wife, so as hee is loth to yeeld his due tie vnto her, before hee can long for a seconde marriage. It is sayde; Yee husbands, loue your wiues: for no man hath euer hated his owne flesh. The same matter is alleaged concerning all men by the Prophet Esay, because wee haue one resemblance of nature common to vs all. It is sayde there, thou shalt not despise thine owne flesh, and it is meant euen of the furthest straungers in the worlde. But betweene man and wife, there is another respect: for (to speake properly) they bee both but one man. And so doth the Scripture terme them, saying: They shalbee two in one flesh; that is to saye, in one person. Nowe if any man hate his owne body, must it not needes bee that he is worse than mad? Hereupon Saint Paul concludeth, that if a man loue not his owne wife, hee is as a monster. True it is that wyues will oftentimes giue their husbandes cause to hate them, and that there bee some of them such fendes as were able to vexe euen the Angels of heauen, and to put them out of patience. That is true. But yet must a man fight against such temptations, and overcome them howeouer hee fare, by the power of Gods spirite. When he is once matched with a wife, hee must not thinke it to bee by haphazarde, but that it was by Gods will. And therefore hee must brydle himselfe, in so much that although it bee right harde and grieuous to do, yet must hee take paynes to reforme the vyces of his wife that is so euill disposed, and yet in the meane while beare with her and vse her as gently as is possible for him. To that poynt must a man come. Hereunto Saint Paul addeth the example of our Lorde Iesus Christ, besides the inward vnderstanding which we haue of nature. Marke (sayeth hee) howe Iesus Christ loueth his Church. For hee hath giuen him selfe to death, to make vs cleane from all spottes, euen vs that are fowle and full of vncleannesse. If our Lorde Iesus haue not spared his owne bloud for the washing of vs; what ought a mortall man to doe for his wife? But wee knowe that wedlocke is as a liuely picture of the sacred vnion which our Lorde Iesus vouchsafeth to haue with vs. Therefore when so euer the husbande is displeasid or greeued at his wife, though hee bee neuer so angry with her, let him haue an eye to

Ep. 5. 28. 29

Eia. 58. 7.

Eph. 5. 25.

this example. Beholde, the sonne of God offereth me his owne blood to wash me withal, shewing mee thereby that I must brydle my selfe in this behalfe, and performe my duetie thoroughly towards my wife, howsoever the world goe. So then let vs marke, that a man will neuer couer a seconde wife, except hee haue first falsified his faith and troth towards her whome he putteth away. For if he loued her truly, soundely, and rightly, hee woulde leuer dy than let his minde runne vpon any seconde mariage. Let vs marke well (I say) that heere our Lorde ment to bring vs backe to the wels head of the mischiefe, to the intent that euery of vs should examine his owne vices, and specially the vices that are hid from men vnder this wicked roote that is within vs. He that forsaketh his wife to marrie another, shall perhaps bee condemned by the common iudgement of men: but to iudge thereof as is meete, we must goe to the wel spring thereof, and then shall wee finde that the greatest euill is euer inwarde. Now then, if the hauing of many wiuues at once be a wicked thing, and that God finde fault with it, in so much as he had leuer that a man should put his wife away, than y marriage should be broken and the order thereof ouerthrowen: let vs assure our selues there is yet a greater mischiefe, namely secret hatred, when a man loueth not his wife, but is inflamed with a wicked desire to haue an other beside her. And so yee see that the greatest wickednesse that can be, is this vnfaithfulness wherethrough marriage is corrupted, and men haue no more care to followe the order of GOD and nature, and to frame themselves thereafter.

Furthermore, as touching the worde Hate, let vs note that it is taken heere for ouer colde lo- uing. For inasmuch as the Lawe punished not a man for putting of his wife away, if he had hated her in deede, he would surely haue thrust her out of his house and companie. Therefore in keeping her still, he shewed plainly that hee hated her not as we meane by hating in our common speech, and yet doeth God account it for hatred and not without cause, which is a text well worthy to be noted. For if a man hate not his wife deadly, so as hee woulde kill her with beating, or wish her in her graue: he will beare the world in hande that although he loue her not, yet he doth not vtterly hate her. But heere yee see how God speaketh farre otherwise. For he sayeth and auoweth, that if a mans heart be not whole and sounde towards his wife, it is to be taken for hatred. Therefore let vs imbrace this saying, That a husbande must loue his wife as himselfe, euen as his owne person. If hee doe not so, yet shall this sentence of God alwayes take place. And this lesson ought to serue, not onely for the mutual loue betweene man and wife, but also generally for the loue towards our neighbours. When a man hath an offence committed against him, if he seeke no reuendge, if he practise no wicked wayes, if he intende not to murder him by sword or by poysoning, if he goe about no wicked conspiracie against him: he will say, As for mee, if I would him any euill, let it light vpon my selfe,

I wish him nothing but his benefite and welfare. That is true: but yet in the meane while there is a secret rancour lurking within. And wee must not thinke that God acquitteth vs when we haue such heartburning in vs, bearing in minde the offence that hath bene committed against vs, so as we be loth to pleasure the partie, and could rather finde in our heartes that euill might befall him. On the other side, some man is so far reconciled, as hee can not finde in his heart to commit any wicked dede by trecherie or vnfaithfulness, nor by any maner of violence: and yet he thinkes with himselfe, such a one is mine enemy, he hath gone about to vndoe me, yet will I forgiue him so farte, that I will doe nothing against him. But yet if some mischaunce might befall him, he would be glad of it and say, O, it is well bestowed, for what had he purposed against me? When we keepe such backshops, it is a token that our heart is not rid quite & cleane. The hatred appeareth not openly, but yet it abideth lurking still within. And he y hateth his neighbour in his heart (sayeth Saint Iohn) that is to say in secret, is a murderer before God. So then let vs marke, that loue consisteth not onely in wishing none euill to our neighbours, but also in seeking their welfare as much as we can, and in reioycing at the welfare of our enemies. And specially, if a man intende to discharge his duty towards his wife, he must not loue her slenderly, but he must accept her as his wife, that is to say, as the partie whom God hath linked to him, and therefore he must beare with her and maintaine peace and concord with her as much as he can possibly. That is the thing that Moses meant in saying, If a man hate his wife. For else a man might say, as for mee if I hadde hated her, I woulde haue bene diuorced from her, and not haue kept her still. For what a thing had it bene for me to haue kept her still in my house? Yea, but wherefore hast thou taken an other wife to her, but because thou diddest mislike of the first? All the pretences which thou canst alleadge are to no purpose; vaine are such excuses. For God who is y Iudge of mens hearts, telleth thee that if thou beare her not a right and pure loue, thou hatest her.

Now Moses addeth, When he hateth she one and loueth the other, if he haue children by them both, he may not make the childe of the beloved, his heire by giuing him the prerogative of double portion among the rest of his children. But the birthright must remaine to him to whome it belongeth by nature, though the mother of him was not so well liked of her husbande as the other. That is the thing in effect, which Moses commandeth in this text. And as touching the birthright of the firstborne: it was verie auncient euen before the Lawe, yea euen before the going of the people into Egypt, there was a regard had of the birthright. For although Iacob was in Egypt when hee dyed: yet spake hee as of a thing growen already into custome and helde for a common rule, that is to wite, that there should alwayes bee a kinde of preheminnence in elder ship, so as y eldest brother should bear chief sway in the house ouer his brethren. And we see it in very dede in the blessing y<sup>e</sup> Isaac gaue vnto Iacob, taking him neuertheless to haue bene Esaw. For he maketh him his eldest sonne, with prerogatiue of Lordshippe and souerignitie ouer all his brethren, that is to say, ouer all his kinred. Yee see then howe it is an aunci- ent prerogatiue, inso much as a man may say, it came as it were by inspiration, & that it was not of mens inuenting, but of Gods owne appointing, though we haue no recorde thereof, we can proue the thing otherwise than by single coniecture. Yet notwithstanding, this serueth not to excuse the ambition of such as will needes giue al that they haue to their eldest sonne, to the intent to maintaine their houses in greate estate, which we see is the mark that men haue shot at. Whereof comes it that in many countreyes, the elder brother hath all, and the younger brothers as good as nothing, and that men doe giue them a morfell of breade as though their fathers had layde the wallet vpon their neckes to bid them shift for themselves? Whereof comes this, but of a pride, that they will needes haue their houses to continue in their name, and not be diminished? Yea, but our Lorde telleth vs that we must passe through this worlde as wayfarers. And wee knowe how the prophet skorneth those that will needes plant their names vpon earth after that fashion. In the nine and fortieth Psalm he declareth that they must needes be very dulwitted sith they see that they must goe to the graue like sheepe, and that their life is as fickle as can bee, and yet notwithstanding will needes (as it were in despite of God) haue an euerlasting monumēt here belowe, where all things are transitorie. But yet doeth this madnesse continue alwayes, as he sheweth anon after. Wee see with our eyes how God mocketh such beastlinesse of men, and yet their aftercommers continue still hard hearted and wilfull, following the madnesse of their fathers. And when there be Lawes that giue al the substance after that fashion to the eldest brother, and leaue the rest of the children vnprovided: let vs assure our selues that those Lawes are vnrightfull and wicked. And why? For (as I haue sayde afore) we must goe to the roote; and when we will iudge of things aright, wee must haue an eye to the original from whence the same proceedeth. For although God put men neuer so much in minde of their frailtie, yet is there such an ouerweening in them, that they will needes be abiding still in this worlde, and leaue an euerlasting remembrance behind them. Againe we see that this kinde of dealing is contrarie to all naturall affection. For ought not a father to loue all his children? Yea, but this is my firstborne. And what are the rest? Wilt thou leaue them to the wide worlde? Wilt thou haue no regard of them? He that careth not for those which are of his owne householde, is worse than an Infidell (sayeth Saint Paul) and hath forsaken the faith. Euen the very heathen had this grauen alwayes in their hearts, that howsoeuer they themselves sared, they had especiall care of their children. Although a mannes children be not worthie to be beloued, yet ought nature to ouer- rule in that case whatsoeuer come thereof. Nay, although you yourselfe be enill (sayth our Lord Iesus Christ) yet do ye not faile to procure good to your children. Therefore as for thē that haue vterly done away all naturall affection, they shewe themselves to be worse than the heathen, and more corrupted than they. So then, we must alwayes holde vs to this rule, that a father is bound to provide for all his children, and that the eldest must not be as a gulfe. Againe, the birthright which was allowed of before the Lawe, and also put in vnto the Lawe, allowed but dubble portion to the eldest. And that was reasonable, because the eldest is commonly put to the greatest charges: and when his brothers are left fatherlesse, hee must be faine to be their guyde, and to be as a head and a father to them all. Moreouer, he is as it were the strength of his father aboute all the rest. And it is the reason that is set downe here, which reason we see that Iacob also vseth, saying he is the beginning of my strength. God bestoweth a kinde of dignitie vpon men, when he maketh them fathers: for hee imparteth his owne name vnto them. All kinred proceedeth from him, and to speake properly, there is no father but he, I meane as well of the body as of the soule. And yet notwithstanding, the same title is attributed to men, euen because God vouchsafeth to ycelde them that honour. Nowe when God honoreth a man so much, as to make him a firstbegottē, and to giue him pre- eminence about his brothers: if he abuse it, he casteth away the grace that God bestoweth vpon him.

Neuertheless, we see it is not so perpetuall a rule, but that an elder brother may be dispossessed of his roome, as we see befell to Ruben, who was Iacobs eldest sonne. And the Testament that Iacob madewas not after the common manner of men, as though the matter had bene to haue bin ordered after his owne liking: but God spake by his mouth, so as there scape him not any one worde, which was not a prophesie. And therefore he sayth, Thou Ruben my firstbegottē which wast y<sup>e</sup> flower & beginning of my strength, thou oughtest to haue bin innobled in my house, but nowe thou hast bene sorrowe and heauines to me: Thou must then vanish away and be bereft of the honour that belonged to thee by nature. Thus was Ruben dispossessed and after a sort banished from his birthright. For he hadde committed too too wicked a dede, & too deadly a crime. And although God forgave him, so as he dyed not for it: yet was he noted with endlesse infamie, both he & all his offspring, because of the incest which hee had committed. The right then of the eldership is not a thing so peremptorily assured, but that a child may be dispossessed of it for his misbehaviour, or for some other lawefull cause. But that a man shoulde be suffered to peruert the order of nature for one wifes sake whoe hee loueth better than an other, that were no reason. Nowe then let vs marke in fewe wordes, that God ment to make a brydle to restrain men withall, least they might be won by their wiuēs allurements to conuey away the right of their children from one to another: God ( I say ) ment to prouide a remedy for it aforehande.

And first of all let vs marke , that the affectiōs which we bring naturally with vs from our mothers wombe, are vtterly corrupted in vs by, I wote not what a kinde of lustes . And if it be so in them, what is it in the rest? As I sayde afore, ye see howe the loue of a father is common to all men by nature . It is not a vertue peculiar to the faithfull, as it were for that they be willing to obey God, and haue an eye to his commaundements: but although a man were neuer taught it, ne euer wist what the seruice of G O D ment; yet shall he well vnderstande that it is but ambition and pride , to defraude the rest of his children of the portion of his goods , for the aduancing of his eldest sonne . True it is that he is the beginning of his strength : but what for that? should a man be so bewitched with the liking of a woman, that he should vtterly forget what nature it selfe teacheth vs , and which ought to be printed in all men euen from their mothers wombes? Therefore we haue here a good and profitable lesson, to put vs in mind that we must fight against our lustes, as though they were enemies inflamed against vs with all rage , and that we must inforce ourselues in this caic, for we shal neuer bring it to passe with ease . And the hardnesse therof must not discourage vs, but although we see it to be a verie difficult and troublesome thing to be able to ouermaister our lustes ; Yet let vs goe forwarde with it still . In deede we must not presume vpon our owne strength ; but we must acknowledge our owne weakenes & flee vnto God, who in the ende will giue vs a happie victorie.

Furthermore , to knit vp this matter , let vs mind the thing that I haue touchēd afore: which is, that although we be not punished before men for our faultes and misdeedes, yet must not that serue to lull vs a sleepe . For why? God keepeth still his iudgement in store: and before him wee shall not be quit . Nowadayes if a man can say that the Lawe can finde no fault in him, he thinketh himselfe to be an Angell . Yea, but if a man do cocker himselfe vnder that pretence , should God also cease to doe his office therefore? Then let vs learne to order our liues after such a sorte, as our eye may not be aloney vpon men . For the ciuill Lawes (as I haue told you already) serue but to deale with vs according to our power and abilitie : but the righteousnesse which God commaundeth vs in his spirituall Lawe is a perfection whereunto we are tyed and bounde . And although we be not able to performe it : yet must wee holde on still towards it , by setting our mindes therupon, & by streyning all our powers to the vttermost . And when we finde any thing amisse : we must bee sorie for it , and condemne ourselues . For although men require nothing at our handes; yet shal we be ever guiltie before God. Thus ye see what we haue to remember, to the intent we be not so blinded as to beare ourselues in hande , that because wee be scaped the handes of men, therefore we be also acquit and discharged before God . Let that serue for one point.

And therupon let vs learne further, that wee must not imagine as a number of fantastical persons do, that all the thinges are allowed of God, which were not punished in the commonweale of the Iewes : For our Lorde executed a dubble office among that people . Hee gaue them an earthly order of gouernement , after the maner of the Lawes which we haue: and also he deliuered them a rule whereafter hee will haue vs to beaue ourselues as his children . For if we intende to haue a sure recorde of Gods will , wee must resort to the tenne cōmandementes, wherein is comprehended the summe of all holines and righteousnesse . He that frameth his life according to the tenne comaundementes, may wel say that he hath the perfect righteousnesse . But forasmuch as we come farre short of it , and can by no means come neere it so long as wee be clothed with our flesh : let vs acknowledge ourselues to be wretched sinners , and resort for refuge to the mercy of our God, fighting manfully in the meane season against our owne vices, and indeuouring continually to cutte off all impediments, vntill we feele ourselues to haue profited: and there must be none ende of this battell, vntill our Lorde haue throughly reclaimed vs to him, which will not be before he haue taken vs out of this world. Thus much for the first point.

Secondly let vs note, that whereas God discoouereth the frailtie of such as forget themselues, as of husbandes that loue not their wiuēs : the same ought to serue vs for a brydle , to make vs to bethinke ourselues the better . For if a man put away his wife, the bonde which God hadde made is broken . And to who is the wrong done? Not to a mortal creature, but to God the author of marriage, who is offendēd therat . And wherof cometh it but of this , that the husbande is not rightly minded towards his wife, to thinke with himselfe, God hath giuen her to me to be as a part of mine owne flesh , and therefore it becometh me to maintaine her as mine owne person . When men haue not this consideration with them , they be blinded with beastly lust to put away their wiuēs. Forasmuch therefore as we see that Gods order is in so dooing confounded and ouerthrowen: let vs bee ashamed to suffer ourselues to be tossed to & fro after y<sup>e</sup> fashion by our leauid affectiōs, specially when we fall to the considering of y<sup>e</sup> which is sayd here, namely that if a man haue two wiuēs. As how? God hath created but one wife for one man : hee hath sayce it with his owne mouth , that it was ynough for a man to haue one helper . He had sprite sufficient ynough to haue created a hundred women if he had listēd : but hee gaue vs to vnderstande that a man ought to holde himselfe contented with one wife, and that it is the order which hee made at the beginning . Nowe then it ought to make vs to quake , when wee see men fall to pushing with their hornes after that fashion against God, breaking the bonde which ought to be holy and inuioable . Againe, when wee see that a man hath so vnhalloved wedlocke by his roffing to and fro: it is a meane to make vs bethinke ourselues. If a man haue a wife, be shee once dead, it is lawefull for him to marrie again: but yet the worlde sees that the second wife will be gathering for her owne children, yea euen with filching & stealing from her husband. And that is a token of Gods curse, & of the wretched nesse that is in vs by reason of sinne. But if a man haue two wiues at once in one house, what a braule will there be? He shall finde himselfe to be as it were drawn in peeeces, doe the best hee can. Wee see what befell to our father Iacob.

 Now then, seeing we knowe all these thinges, let vs learn to submit ourselues to God, trusting that his blessing shall be vpon vs, if wee liue soberly, mildly, and chastly, as he commandeth. If a hulbande liue in peace & concord with his wife, & loue her as God commandeth him to doe: God will surely blesse him and all his issue after him.
 We may well hope (say I) that God will make vs to prosper after that manner, if we liue so in awe vnder his brydle. But contrariwise let vs looke to be cursed of him and to haue all maner of cō-fusion come vpon vs, if wee will not obey Gods ordinance, as we see that men are hardly subdued, but that their wicked lustes and affectiōs do carry them away continually. Neuerthelesse let vs be afraid, and let vs learne to beholde ourselues in the examples that are shewed vs heere.
 The way (say I) to preferue marriage vniuolated, to maintaine loue and concord betweene man and wife, is to beare in mind that God hath knit them together in one, and that he hath therewithall promised to be the gouernour of maria-ges, and to powre out his blessing vpon the; and if we also do put our trust in him, & haue an eye to him; it is certaine that he will rule vs, and subdue all our wicked affectiōs. Let vs be diligent in doing our duetic, euery man in his calling, & then shall we not only liue in peace and concord during this present life, but also our temporall mariage shall leade vs further both men and women, that is to wit to the holy vnion betweene the sonne of G O D and vs, not onely which he hath stablished already by his bloodshed, but also which shall then come to perfection, when wee be vnited to him in the kingdome of heauen.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God and father, praying him to rid vs dayly more and more of our flesh and of all the corruptions thereof, and to make vs so to feele our sinnes, as wee may at leastwise bee sory that we haue offended him, and desire to be ridde of them continually more and more, proceeding still forewarde in the doctrine of repentance, vntill we be fully brought home vnto him, and that he will vouchsafe so to beare with vs, as in the meane while we may by his holy spirit, be draw-en vnto him, euen vntill we be come altogether home vnto him. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only vnto vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewfday the last of December. 1555.

The Cxxij. Sermon which is the fourth vpon the one and twentieth Chapter.

18 If a man haue a sonne that is stubborne & disobedient, so as he will not harken to the voice of his father, nor to the voyce of his mother, and they haue chastised him, and he will not obey them:

19 Then shall his father and mother take him, and bring him to the Elders of their Citie, and vnto the gate of their place, 20 And shall say to the Elders of their Citie: This sonne of ours is stubborne and disobedient, and will not harken to our voyce, he is a ryottour and a drunkard.

21 And all the men of that Citie shall stone him with stones vnto death. And so shalt thou rid away the cuill from thee, that all Israell may be afrayde when they heare thereof.

Eere first of all is shewed what their charge & duetic is which haue children: and secondely that when children growe past amendment by their fathers & mothers, they must be rooted out, by cause their doing is against nature, and it is such an infection as prouoketh Gods wrath vpon the whole COUNTRY. Nowe as touching the first point, it is sayde that if a man haue a fro-ward and stubborne sonne, and that he haue done his indewour to reforme him. Here God presupposeth that the father and mother doe performe their duetic; for their children are giuen them with con-

condition that they must yeelde account of them. If a man haue layde the brydle vpon his childes necke, and let him playe the loole colt: he is worthy to haue his eyes pickt out by him, and all the euill that the childe doeth is to be imputed to his father, because he was negligent in correcting him. Therefore wee see heere (as I sayde afore) that Moses doeth here warne fathers and mothers to bee diligent in nurrting their children. And if chastisement will not preuaile, their children are to be taken for vtterly vnrecoverable. Wherefore, that wee may benefite ourselues by this text, let vs marke well, that he to whome G O D giueth children, must haue a speciall care to bring them vppe well: for, that is a singular treasure, which ought to be preferred before all the goods in the worlde. Then if a man be slothfull, and suffer his childrent to runne at randone: is it not an vnthankfulnesse that offendeth G O D greuously, seeing hee despiseth the benefite and honour which hee had vouchsafed vpon him? Must it not needes be that men are starke blinde, when they make more account of some other thing in their house, than of their owne children? Some haue more care of their kine, Oxen, or Horses, than of their children. Euerie man makes account of his wares, of his Lands, and of his Medowes: and in the meane while they let the chiefe thing alone. Worthy be they to bee sent to schoole to a certaine Heatben man, who being in a houle where all things were as finely furnished and dressed as could be deuised, & finding the good māns sonne to bee a ranke slouin and euilnurtured, did spit in his face, saying: I must needes spitte vpon this filth that is left heere. As for those which are so diligent and watchfull about their marchandise, their reuenewes, their possessions, yea and their Cattell, inso much as they take more care for their dogges and horses than for their children; accordingly as wee see howe greate Lordes sette more store by their haukes and houndes than by their children: Doe not such blinde wretches bewraye their beastlinesse, that men may abhorre them as folke tooo farre voide of all witte and reason? Yet notwithstanding our Lorde telleth vs heere, that if men or women haue children, they must looke to the bringing vppe of them. True it is, that chiefly it is the fathers duetic: but yett must not the mother also be barred of her right. If a childe be so lustie as to say, my mother is a woman; he must goe and finde fault with G O D. For wee see heere howe the authoritie is giuen as well to the one as to the other, so as God will not haue the father alone to haue the gouerning of the childe, but that the mother also should haue part of the honour and preheminnce, and that y child which will not obey his mother, shall be taken for past grace, & be condemned to death. And therefore both of them ought to do their endeuour to the vttermost of their power. For seeing that G O D hath honoured the mother, it is good reason that shee on her side should streyne her selfe to doe her duetic. And it is not ynough for fathers and mothers not to giue their children leaue to doe euill, or not to traîne them thereunto: but they must also nurrure them and intruēt them in goodnesse, as nature it selfe sheweth. If a father say, As for mee, I vpholde not my sonne in this euill, I mislike of it; but I can not doe withall: it is a very simple excuse, and it is not meete to be admitted or to be taken in account. For it may be sayde vnto him, thou art a very blocke; for seeing thou art set in that place, and he will haue thee to bee the maister of thy childe: thou art but a dolt in that thou makest no countenance when thou seest him doe amisse. So then, lette vs learne that heere G O D requireth a carefulnesse in fathers and mothers, that they should take paines to teach their children, and haue an eye to their behauiour and dispositions: and that if there be any fault in them, they correct it, and be very diligent in that behalfe.

Nowe if onely negligence be so condemned though fathers and mothers allowe not of their childrens faultes: what will become of them when they bolster them in their euilldoinges, and cloke them as much as they can, and arc offended when any other bodie goes about to bring them into the right way from their vnthriftinesse? And yett we see that parentes doe so. Truly, negligence is tooo common a thing: for fathers & mothers haue no further regard of their children, than to receiue some seruice at their hands. In deede they coulde well finde in their heartes that their children were taught: what to doe? To thinke vpon their housshould businesse and dealings, or to occupy some trade that they might put them to no cost when they came to age, but rather that they might reape some profite by them. For these wayes there is commonly care ynough. But as for the feare of G O D, honestie of conuerfation, and all other vertues: they neuer thinke vpon them. For (as the prouerbe sayes,) there is no likelihood that those things will bring gryt to the mill, and therefore a father can finde in his hart to winke at y vices of his child, so long as he sees no disaduantage to inisue of it. But there is malice also matched with it: inso much that if a man goe about to reforme their children, they will steppe vp against him, and fauour their children, and maintaine them euen against G O D. And our Lorde payeth them the wages which they haue deserued. Wee see howe the veriest pinchpennies in a whole Citie or countrey, and the veriest niggardes and vilanes, which would gnawe off their fingers endes for a pennie, or for a dodkinne to white their teeth wihall: haue whoremongers to their children, who can nor but picke their fathers purses: for a harlotte will alwayes be crauing. The child therefore becomes a robber of his father, and yett the father is contented to maintaine him, and will be angry that any body should chastise him for it, spewing soorth his poyson like a diuell as hee is. In deede this is no newe thing, for it fallies out so in all cases; and likewise also in this behalfe. Nowe when such things are to be seene, ought we not to beholde Gods vengeance also? Thou art a pinchpenny, thou art so giuen to couetousnesse y<sup>e</sup> thou pinest vpon the ground, thou darst not eate one bit of breade but with greefe: and yet in the meane while thou hast a Sonne that filcheth and stealeth from thee to maintaine his whoredome. Because thou art a despiser of God, and a wicked keytife, and wilt needes haue thy sonne to resemble thee, and thy mainteyning of him after that fashion, is a furtherance of his sinne and wickednesse: Therefore doeth God recompence thee according to thy desert. For thou art worthy to haue thy goods deuoured, and to be mocked at of the whole worlde, so as all men may beholde thy shame, & thou thy selfe neuer perceiue it. Here in we see Gods manifest iudgement. Whatsoeuer it be let vs beare in minde this lesson, that if fathers and mothers be negligent, they be as blameworthy before God, as if they had giuen their children leaue to doe all maner of wickednesse. But if they be offended at other men for correcting them, & for indeuouring to bring the backe into the right way: they shew themselves to be become starke diuels, and y<sup>e</sup> God hath giuen them vp to a reprobate sense. Therefore let euery of vs for his owne part take warning, to discharge ourselues of his duetic. And let such as haue children take paine to teach them, howbeit not for the reaping of any earthly profite by them. Truly, that may well be an accessarie to it: but it ought not to be the chiefe point. Whereunto then must they haue regarde? For: smuch as God hath done them the honour to set them in the degree of fathers: they must do their best to yeele vnto him their children whom he hath put vnto their hands, & to make true sacrifices of them vnto him, that there may alwayes remaine some good seede to honour him withall. For we see howe? scripture telleth vs oftentimes that Gods name must flourish from generation to generation. And that is to the end y<sup>e</sup> hauing serued him all the time of our life, we should indeuour to the vttermost of our power, that there might remaine a good ofspring after our decease so as Gods glory might not be quenched nor buried, but y<sup>e</sup> his praise might indure for euer. That (say I) is the marke whereat fathers & mothers ought to aime: in so much that euen they y<sup>e</sup> haue no children, ought to haue the same minde and desire, yea and to shewe it also by their doings as much as they can possibly. What ought he then to doe, who is bound to it by some speciall reason? When he seeth a mirrour of Gods grace in his house, it is the blessing which the scripture doth so highly commend as who would say, I haue my yong children about me, & God sheweth me as it were with his finger, y<sup>e</sup> he loueth me & hath a care of my house. He hath created mee here yong children of my seede, after his own image, and they be baptised in his name, to the intent I should bee the more moued to dedicate them to him, & to frame them to the obeying of him. If a man haue such a teaching, and such a marke to set his eyes vpon, and yet is neuer the more prouoked to doe his duetic: must it not needes be that he is worse than a block? So then let this respect bee well marked, and let men beare it in mind, that it may stirre them vp to do the thing that is tolde them heere, namely to bring vp their children faithfully if they haue any. And moreover when they see any euill touch or vice in them; let them labour to reforme it, so as the father and mother may protest that they haue done their duties.

10 Nowe moreover, heere is expresse mention made of stubbornnesse. For as concerning peculiar faultes, a father and a mother ought to indeuour continually to bring their children into the right way. True it is that God ment not to haue other faultes to goe vnpunished. When a childe hath any way offended hauing a father or mother alie; it is not meant that hee should be exempted from punishment, vnder colour that he is vnder correction of his father and mother. But heere God speaketh of an other case, which is, that fathers and mothers should bring their children before the Iudge to haue them put to death. Lo, heere is a great extremitie. We knowe well what a heartbreaking it is to a father to see his sonne punished by Lawe, euen though it bee by some other bodies meane. Then is it not possible for a father to deliuer his sonne to death, vntill he haue assayed all the remedies that can bee: for otherwise it were against kinde. Therefore not without cause is heere mention made of so great pride and stubbornnesse, that the father hauing streyne himselfe and done what hee can to the vttermost to reclayme his childe, perceiueeth that it booteth him not to doe any more, and therefore that he must bee faine to deliuer him into the Iudges hande to be put to death. And so wee see that fathers and mothers must proceede in chastising their children, vntill they see them vtterly past hope of amendement. And I adde this, because that parentes are so out of patience sometimes when their children will not be reclaymed at the first choppe, that for very spyte they let them alone: and so their children fall into all excesse. But they ought not to deale so. Howe then? Vntill they finde by experience that their childe is out of measure stubborne, and sheweth himselfe to bee of so frowarde and illdisposed nature, that hee can not be reclaimed: the father and the mother ought to proceede still with that nurturing of him which God commaundeth heere. And parentes ought to bee patient in this case: for mildenesse is a vertue right requisite in this behalfe, because that if a father trust to his owne courage, he shall marre his children if he finde any hardenesse in the teaching of them, forasmuch as it is alwayes a painefull thing, and yet GOD will haue men to occupie themselves in nurturing of their children, notwithstanding the painefulnesse thereof. And if they can not frame their children according to their desire, but that they will needes take the brydle in their teeth: truly it can not but turne to the great griefe of the parentes. What say they? Ought not onē worde to serue to the childe? Ought he not to be a shamed med if there were any droppe of honestie in him? After that manner might a father speake. But howsoeuer the worlde go, yet must not the creature be left at randon, without regarde of winning him to God. Wee must rather vse patience still, as Saint Paul counselleth vs in speaking of corrections. In decde hee telleth vs that we must vse sharpnesse and rigour to moue such as be ouermuch hardened in their naughtinesse, but yet hee woulde haue it matched with meekenesse and patience. Nowe then, what ought fathers to doe? Should they bee so far out of patience, as to giue ouer the correction of their children? No. And therefore let vs learne that in this text fathers for their parte are warned to haue a stay of themselues, when they see their children giuen to lighnesse & vnconstancie, and to misbehaue themselues: and that although they cannot winne them at the first, nor bring them to such meekenesse as to make them take y<sup>e</sup> right way of their owne good will; yet they must consider with themselues howe it is Gods will to keepe them occupied in that kynde of paines taking; and to trye their patience after that manner. Thus yee see one other poynnt more which wee haue to marke in this text, where mention is made of such vnretormable stoutnesse and stubbornesse as fathers and mothers doe finde to bee past remedie, in respect of themselues, and therefore are saue to resort to the Iudge.

Nowe let vs come to the euidence that is to be giuen by the father and the mother. It is said, that they shall come to the gate; for that was the place of iustice in olde tyme. So then they shall repaire to the seate of iustice, and there say, This sonne of ours is stubborne against vs, & froward: wee haue assayed to reforme him & cannot preuaile with him: He is a riotour & a drunkarde: and therefore wee put him now into your handes. Gods will is that vpon this euidence, the chyld shall be stoned to death. And it is not without cause y<sup>e</sup> he giueth such autoritie to fathers and mothers. For it is not likely that men wil be so cruell as to spill their own bloud: that were vtterly against nature. Therefore it is good reason that y<sup>e</sup> father & mother shoulde bee beleued without further learning or siting of the matter, seeing the case concerneth their own children. For it were a shaming of the father & mother, to driue them to bring witness against their own children, & then dealing by ordinarie maner of inditement should be a derogation to the degree wherein God hath placed them. And seeing such prerogatiue is giuen to men, they ought to haue the more regard of their ductie. But Gods will is that the father and the mother should be beleued. And why? Because hee hath printed & ingrauen such an affection naturally in their hearts towards their children, as that they had leuer to dye than to do them wrong. Nowe if a man bee fowlicked and beastly, as to practise any thing fallily against his owne chyld, and to shewe himselfe voyde of the louing kindnes which our Lorde hath printed in mankind, and whereof some footestepes and sparkes are to be seene euen in the brute beastes: what a thing is it, that a man should so farre ouerhoote himselfe? And therefore parentes see here what honour God doth them, in making them to be beleued against their children: which thing ought to make them to inforce themselues the more to loue them, and to bring them vp with all gentlenesse, yea, and (euen in their chafcing of the) to vse the rule that Saint Paul giueth vs, which is, that parents shoulde not put their children out of heart by their ouergreat rigour. For dyuers tymes it falleth out, that a chyld is put out of heart, because he sees his father vse no mildnesse towards him, nor any reason or loue in his doings. Therefore must discretion be vsed in this case. And to bee short, let vs note, that the more honour G O D doeth vs, the more are wee bounde to doe our duties. As for example, such as are aduanced to any degree or state of honour, ought to consider that G O D hath bounde them exceedingly, and that they ought to strayne themselues the more to doe their ductie: and this belongeth generally to all states. But it is sayde here expressely, concerning fathers and mothers. And therefore such as haue children, must looke that they loue them after such a sorte, as they may well keepe themselues from abusing the power and autoritie which they haue of God: for it is not committed to them to that end.

Also it is declared heere further, that the father and the mother may not accuse their children judicially, vnlesse they finde them vnreformable. I haue tolde you alreadye that this place speaketh of punishment by death. For if fathers and mothers fall to putting of their children to death, before they haue vouchsafed to take paynes with them to see them well instructed: ought they not to bee coupled with them, as causers of their destruction? A father perchance will say, I haue not consented to my sonnes lewdnesse, I haue let him alone. Yea, but shouldest thou haue salne asleepe, when as God appoynted thee to keepe watch? Thou shouldest haue guyded thy chyld, so as hee shoulde not haue stepped one pace, but thou shouldest haue bene at hande to direct him; Thou wouldest haue guyded a brute beast, and hast thou made no reckening of thine owne feede? Thou lettest the creature alone which is formed after the image of God, whereof notwithstanding thou wast appointed to bee the keeper; and thinkest thou to scape by so tryng an excuse. Then if fathers and mothers come to this plunge of shewing their children to haue bene sturdie and vnreformable, if they can not first protest that they haue done their duties in chafcing them, that they themselues also shalbee taken for guiltie, forasmuch as it is apparant that it was long of themselues that their children did leaudly, because they did suffer them to runne at randon. By reason whereof if a man bee punished by lawe, it may well bee inquired howe hee hath bene brought vp, and what teaching hee had in his fathers house: and when the mischief procedeth from that spring, the father ought no more to scape scotfree than the sonne. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in mynd.

And here is mention made of two vices. Our sonne is a riotour & a drunkard. Doth this import that other vices ought not to be corrected? No, but vnder these two kyndes, God ment to shew that fathers & mothers ought to bring vp their children in all vertue and honestie: For vnder ryoting and drunkenesse, hee meant to comprehend all loosensse of life. If ryotousnesse bee punished, what is to be doone to other much heynousier things? What shall become of whoredome, theft, and periurie? What shall become of such other like things? God then restreyneth not this lawe to these two vyces, but intendeth to shewe generally that all fathers and mothers ought to haue a vigilant eye to the conuersions of their children; and that if they finde any misbehaviour or vnthriftines in them, they must do their indeuour to reforme them, and to bring them back againe from their euill trade. Thus much for one poynt. To bee short, it is all one as if hee had sayd, that if there bee any priuie faultes in children, their fathers and mothers must haue a vigilant eye vpon them, and reclaime them againe, that they growe not desperate. For what a thing were it if a man should marre his chyld, by bearing wth him in some particular fault? One euill woulde drawe on a hundred mo after it: and so the chyld should bee lost and vndone. Men therefore must take good heede, and preuent the danger, that their children growe not worse and worke, and that the forgiuing of one fault make them not to fall into another, and so they become euery day worse than other. For if men suffer ryot or drunkenesse in their children, those vyces are iyl ynough of them selues already: but yet in the ende a ryotour becomes a swyne, and wil be altogether vnprofitable. And though there were no more in it but the vntemperance in y<sup>e</sup> abusing of Gods creatures: foolishly it were too much. What is drunkenesse? It is a kynde of beastnesse, that bereaueth men of the grace which God had bestowed vpon them in nature. A ryotour being an ydle and vnprofitable lubber, and hauing spent all vpon bellyfare, must needs fall to stealing when he wanteth wherewith to furnish out his excessse. But a drunkarde is yet worse. The worlde sees these euill inconueniences. Therefore wee had neede to preuent them, and to lay aforhand that such mischiefes come not to passe. Notwithstanding it is shewed vs herewithall, howe men tumble out of one euill into another, vntill they come to deadly ruine. If a chyld bee a glutton or a drunkarde in his youth; well, men will say they be euill touches: but yet shall they be bornwith, and they wil not be thought to be deadly sinnes. But wee see to what poynt children come by y<sup>e</sup> means. If that ryotousnesse bee not reformed in them, but that they continue still in their stubbornnes: at length they must bee deliuered into the hande of the Iusticer, and bee put to death. See ino it is so, let vs beware that wee flatter not our selues; but whensoever there is any vyce in vs, let vs assure our selues that if stubbornnes be matched with it, we shall grow euery day more wilfull and hardhearted than other, in so much y<sup>e</sup> a fault which is counted but small before men, and as it were a veniall sinne, wil become an intollerable cryme. Now it is God which saith so. Therefore let vs learne to examine our selues, and when we perceiue any vyce in vs, let vs doe our indeuour to amende it, for feare least it throwe vs downe headlong alongither, and finally sinke vs in such sorte as they remaine no mo punishentes but the last, that is to say, the mortall and deadly punishment. Thus much concerning that poynt.

Nowe let vs treat of the duetic of children towards their fathers and mothers. In deede it were to bee wished afore all things, that children were of themselves so wyfe and weladuyfed, as not to vexe their fathers and mothers in teaching them, and specially in chaestyng them for their faultes. And soothly, were our nature so well ruled as it ought to bee; a chyld woulde not tarty till hee were rebuked or compelled: but rather hee woulde thinke, alas, to what ende lue I in the worlde? And on y<sup>e</sup> other side hee woulde consider thus, God hath set thee heere, to be serued and honoured by thee, & againe to obey my father and mother whome he hath giuen vnto mee to that end. Contrariwise if they reape nothing but sorow by my means, it had bene better for mee to haue dyed before I was borne, y<sup>e</sup> the earth might haue swalowed me vp. After that maner ought a chuld to thinke. But forasmuch as youth lacketh discretion; & childre are not so reformatible of themselves as were requisite: at leastwise let them suffer themselves to bee gouerned by others. And if their father spye any vyce in them, let them acknowledge it when they bee put in mynde of it, and not onely confesse the misdeede, [but also reforme it.] For it is but hypocrisie when a chyld holdeth on in his vnthriftinesse, after hee hath made pretence of repentance, by humbling himselfe before his father. If hee change not his conditions, but continue still in his vnthriftinesse, it is a lying before G O D, and mocking of his father. Therefore if a chyld haue done amisse, or see himselfe subiect to any vyce, and God is so gracious to him that hee hath a father or mother: Let him consider thus with himselfe: Go too; God reacheth thee his hande in this behalfe: for what are my father and my mother but the handes of God, and his instruments wherewith he intendeth to serue his turne, to guyde thee into the way of welfare? For when I see my father and my mother goe about to correct my vyces: I must needs set my selfe against G O D, and desye him openly; if my stomacke bee not abated and pulled downe, to receive their correction. And surely, children ought to vnderstande that this superioritic ouer vs is the amiablest in all the worlde: I meane the superioritic which our fathers and mothers haue ouer vs. For although Kinges, Princes, princes, & magistrates be to be reuenced: yet is not that kind of superiority so amiable. A man wilbe ashamed to be corrected by his prince, or by his superiour that weeldeth the sword of iustice: but if a father speake to his sonne, yea and smite him too, it is no shame at all for the child to stoope to him, though the father doe him wrong, or reuile him saying, thou villaine, thou stretchalter, thou gracelesse knaue, what wilt thou doe? When thou hast killed me with greife and sorrow of mind, thou must needes cal down Gods vengeance vpon thee. When the father vseth such roughnesse towardes his chyld, and the chyld humbleth himselfe vnto him, and becommeth as it were dunne without replying at all against him; it shalbee a great honour to him to haue receiued correction at his fathers hande, and to haue bene touched by him after that fashion. Now then, sith wee see that this superiortie which God hath giuen to fathers & mothers, is a thing which wee ought euen naturally to haue in estimation: if a chyld nod his head at all the warninges that are giuen him, shewing himselfe brazen faced and viterly past shame, so as hee regardeth not what his father and mother say vnto him, but wrings his groyn at them for their putting of him in mynde of his faultes: is he not quyte & cleane past grace? What can a man say more, or hope for at this hande? Now then, let children haue regarde hereof, and let them note also that the honouring of their father and mother is the first commaundement that is giuen in the seconde table, and the onely commaundement of the law that hath any promise, I meane speciall promise, as S. Paul declareth. And hereby wee bee put in mynd, that such as holde scorne to honor their fathers and mothers, doe not only despise God, but also shewe their vnbeleefe in mocking at all his promises; and in refusing and casting away of all his blessings wilfully; as if they should say, I passe not for prospering by Gods grace, I will none of that meane. And for prooffe that it is so, God hauing sayde that we must honour our father and mother, addeth, To the ende thou mayst liue long in the lande which the Lord thy God giueth thee: as if hee should say, Looke not that I should prosper you or blesse you, but vpon this condition, that yee obey your fathers and mothers. Nowe then, as for those that harden themselves, do they not shewe that all is one to them whether they bee deprived of Gods grace and blessing, or no? And that is an intolerable vnthankfulness.

Moreouer, let vs mark also, that wheras God speaketh of the honouring of our fathers & mothers, hee meaneth not of ceremoniousnes; but that children should thinke thus with themselves, God hath giuen mee a father and a mother to the intent I should be ruled by their hande, and liue vnder their direction. The honour then which a chyld oweth to his father & mother, consisteth not in pretending some ceremonious and counterfet humilitie: but in behauing himselfe meckely, in suffering them to haue the gouernment of him, and in being tractable to bee reformed when his parentes tell him of his faults. Those bee the things that children ought to regarde, but specially religion. For often times fathers and mothers deserue well to bee disobeyed at their childrens hands. And in deede, they can no skill of seruing God, otherwise than by disobeying their fathers and mothers. If there bee any man so wicked, that hee would haue his sonne giuen to craftinesse, to leaudnesse, to vnthankfulness, to periurie, and to trecherie: what a thing were that? And yet wee see a number of fathers, which haue bene despyers of God all their life long, and all their seeking is to bring vp their children in their owne schoole. A father will say to his sonne, I renounce thee if thou bee not like me. Such cursed wordes shall we heare men speake. In so much that hee which hath bene a whore-monger and infected a whole countrey with his filthinesse all the time of his life, or a blasphemer, or a drunkarde; will needes haue his sonne to bee like himselfe. Nowe in such cases children must disobey their parents: for otherwise they cannot obey God. And therefore S. Paul speaking of the honor and obedience that children should yeeld to their parentes, addeth this exception or after speeche, in the Lords. For God must euer haue the vpper hande. And for the same cause also did I say crewhyles, that the honour which is required in this commaundement of the law, ought then chiefly to be put in practise, when fathers and mothers doe their induour to trayne vp their children well, and to correct their vyces. Then must the children in any wise obey, assuring themselves that if they admit not both the warninges and the chastisements of their parentes, and reforme themselves thereafter when they heare their vices so condemned: they shewe themselves to be disobedient both to God and to the order of nature. Notwithstanding to the intent that children excuse not themselves, and beate themselves in hande that it is a light fault to disobey their parentes; heere God condemnech such disobedience to death. It is God that giueth this sentence, and not man. And hee sayeth that it is an vnpardonable fault, when a childe is sohard-hearted, that his fathers and mothers correctio cannot preuaile with him. For why? wee must euer come backe to this point, that such a one is as a monster: and whatfoeuer is against nature wee ought to lothe & abhorre it. And no doubt but Gods curse & vengeance would bee kindled against vs, if we should suffer the thing that is against nature. Nowe if a child wil not heare his father and his mother, when God vouchsafeth to giue him gouernours at home to tell him his faults: his despying of them is a manifest despying of God. For why? God hath printed his marke vpon the father and mother, in so much that if there bee any religion, the same must be acknowledged in the person of the father and of the mother. Euen the very Heathen had a comon saying concerning the obedience which they yeilded to God and to their parentes. As if they should say, (as nature had taught them) that fathers & mothers beare the image of God in this world, & y<sup>e</sup> which hath any religion in him, & acknowledged zeth any soueraine maicltie & submitteth himselfe therto: must also needs obey his father & mother. The verie heathen spake after y<sup>e</sup> maner, it was their common stile. Nowe then, if we receiue not this instruction, must it not needes follow, y<sup>e</sup> wee be too delittute of wit? Greatly ought we to be ashamed, to be taught in the schoole of the Heathen, to know our dutie. Therefore (as I saide afore) let children knowe that it is no light fault nor easie to be pardoned, when they be disobedient to their fathers and mothers. For why? They had the instinct of nature, which they ought to haue followed. And therefore it is an vnardonable crime to disobey a mans father & mother, according whereunto it is sayde in another place, He that smyreteth his father or his mother, shall dye y<sup>e</sup> death without fauour. If one strike another man: well, he shall be punished for it. but if he beate his father or his mother, it is as much as if hee had killed a man: else there were no order or reason in nature. And why? For let vs alwayes haue an eye to the grounde which God hath set downe in nature: namely, that it is all one as if a man would confounde heauen and earth together, when hee setteth himselfe so against his father and mother. And this serueth to hold children in awe, if they haue any sparke of myldnesse in them, and that they bee not vtterly vnreformable, so as Satan possesseth them wholly. That is the thing which we haue to remember more vpon this text.

Eph. 6. 2.

Exo. 20. 12.

Eph. 6. 1.

Howbeit, forasmuch as the time wil not suffer mee to speake so much thereof as were to be spoken; wee will nowe come to the conclusion: which is, that if the disobedience which is committed against the fathers of this worlde, be so grieuouly punished by Gods lawe: what shall become of men when they will not heare the voyce of their heauenly father? True it is that heere God speaketh of the corrections which proceede from himselfe: for when a man nurturcth his chyld, he is Gods minister in that behalf, and his voyce is not the voyce of man but of God. But yet when as God declareth after a more manifestt fashion, that it is hee which gaue his lawe, so as wee haue his holy writte, where wee may heare his heauenly voyce: that is a voice of more authoritie, than the speaking of a father or a mother at home in their house. Againe, wee come to the Church, where Gods worde is preached vnto vs, and God hath dedicated that place and the pulpit to deliuer out his worde to be heard, as though he were there in his owne person. Seeing then that Gods worde is so set downe vnto vs in the holy scripture, and so preached vnto vs: are they not to be reiected as monsters, and in no wise to be suffered, which disobey the same and make no account of it? And if men beare with them, is it not a procuring of Gods wrath? When it hath lurked neuer so long among vs, in the ende it must needes bewray it selfe, and wee must feele out our coit what it is to haue maintayned cuill willingly and wittingly. So then, let vs alwayes make this comparison. Seeing that God wilbee acknowledged in his creatures according to the degree which hee hath giuen to euery of them: and seeing also that hee will haue those to be obeyed which are in preheminence, so as the rest must receiue their correction and submit themselues to them: it is much more reason, that hee himselfe shoulde be heard and obeyed, when hee speaketh with his owne holy mouth, which thing hee doeth when wee reade the holy scripture, and when we heare his word preached. For inasmuch as he hath set this order in his Church, that they which preache his worde shoulde represent the person of his sonne: can wee fay it is a light fault to haue despised Gods maicltie, and to haue made no reckening of the hearing of his worde? Then let vs looke well to it.

Finally, let vs marke how it is said here, Thou shalt roote out the euil from thee, and all Israll shall heare thereof and be afraid. Here our Lord repeateth that againe which wee haue heard afore, y<sup>e</sup> is, that when outrageous crimes are fostered among vs, it is the next way to infect vs, & we see there needeth not much leauen to make fower a whole lump of dow; besides that we be tolde it by Gods word, experience also doth shew it vs. And therefore let Magistrates bee vigilant in rooting out wickednesse, yea and in punishing mennes faultes as they deserue. If there be neede of mannes correction, let it bee had, and let this extremitie of putting men to death bee alwayes preuented. But if the crime be vnardonable, then must seueritie and rigour be vsed. For if wickednesse bee willingly fostered, men shall see in the ende what they shal haue wonne by it. Also let vs take warning there withall, to benefite our selues by the examples which wee see before our eyes; that when any punishment is executed by order of lawe, wee may vnderstande that God teacheth vs at other mennes cost, and therefore wee ought to haue regarde thereof. Moreouer if Magistrates and Iudges bee called here of God, yea, and expressly commaunded by him to punish the disobedience that is committed against earthly fathers and mothers: let vs mark, y<sup>e</sup> whensoever there is any manifest contempt of God, any irreligioufnes, or any withstanding of his worde, those things are much lesse to be suffered: and that if they be borne with; it is rank treason to Godward, which he will not leaue vnpunished. And therefore let all Magistrates and all such as are set in place of gouernement to execute iustice, vnderstande that God commendeth his owne honour to them about all things, and that they must bee vigilant in that case chiefly, yea, and that after such a sort, as al of vs together may shew by our doings, that our whole desire is that God should reigne among vs, & that we would not haue his worde to be despised and scorned, but rather reuerenced as it ought to bee. Wherefore let vs shewe this zeale, if wee will haue our Lorde to blesse and prosper vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe so to tame vs, that whereas wee bee inclined to much wretchednesse and corruption, at leastwise wee may not become swardes and vnrreformable: but that when wee bee warned by his worde, wee may euery of vs humble our selues, and quietly take the yoke which hee layeth vpon our shoulders, and patiently beare the corrections which he layes vppon vs by men, specially by those to whome hee hath giuen the charge to guyde and gouerne vs, so as euery of vs acknowledging himselfe to bee subiect to his superiours, may yeeld God his due obedience, and in no waye rary till wee bee compelled, and spurred, but receiue the warnings that are giuen vs, (from whence so euer they come) as the warnings of God, knowing that all truth is of him, and that by that meanes also hee procurerth our saluation. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all nations and people of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the first of Ianuarie 1556.

The Cxxiiij. Sermon which is the fifth vpon the one and twentieth Chapter.

22 If a man haue committed an offence worthy of death, and is put to death for it, and thou hast hanged him on tree:

23 His dead bodie shall not hang all night vppon the tree, but thou shalt burie him the same day: For the curse of God is on him that is hanged. And therefore defyle not thou the land which the Lorde thy God giueth thee to inherit.

THE lawe that I haue rehearsed here, containeth two parts. 30 The one is, that when an offender is executed by order of lawe; men must not bee ashamed of the hanging of his bodie. Why so? For a witness that his death is a thing neither against God, nor against right: but rather that for the maintaining of euil government among mankynd, it is requisite that misdeedes should bee punished, as wee haue seene already that the cull must bee rooted out from among the people. And the seconde parte is, that the dead bodie (for all that) shall not hang vppon the gibbet about one day, because it striketh a horror into men and niaketh them dismayed, to see a mannes bodie so hanging in the ayre. God therefore willed that men shoulde content themselves with it for one day in respect of iustice, and that afterwarde the bodye shoulde be buried. In deede it is true that this lawe was peculiar to the Iewes, and that at this day wee bee no more bounde to it than to the ceremonies: it is now set at libertie. But yet doth the doctrine thereof continue still. The vse of the lawe is vterly abolished: but yet must wee haue an eye to the ende wherefore God commanded it, and apply the same to our learning.

First of all then let vs marke, that although it bee a dreadfull thing to put a man to death, because hee is created after the image of God: yet notwithstanding, when it is done vppon iust cause, and by those to whome God hath committed the sworde of iustice: it must needs bee done, and wee must not esteeme it, as an vnkindly thing. For what a thing were it, if faultes shoulde scape vnpunished? It were better for vs to bee wyld beasts. So then, seeing that mankynde cannot bee maintayned, but by rigour of iustice, and by the punishing of such as haue disturbed the common order: it must not bee taken for cruelie or for a defacing of Gods image, when a man is put to death. All such manner of allegations must bee set aside. For God him selfe speaketh and telleth vs, that wee ought to bee so little ashamed to put an offender to death; that his body must bee layde out to the sight of euery man, and thereupon God is to bee praised, for hauing so great and so fatherly care of men, as to roote out the person that is a disturber of the peace, and to cut off those as rotten members which might marre all the residue, that the rest might abyde in safetie.

To bee short, wee haue here a maintenance of the iustice that is executed by magistrates, in punishing mennes faultes and misdeedes euen vnto the death. Iustice is not to be abhorred or misliked, because a man is sent to the gallows. Well may wee bee afraide when wee see such examples before vs: but yet must wee also commend and reuerence iustice. For why? Yee see here howe God alloweth and vpholdeth the punishing of offenders, as a thing acceptable to him; and that he will haue the verie heauen to bee a witness thereof, by hanging vp the body vppon a gibbet, and hee will haue all the elementes to bee there also, to saye; No, no, yee must not spare them: God hath appoynted that this execution should bee done, and commanded the same, and therefore you ought to obey him. For if that were not, wee shoulde come to vtter confusion: and God hath shewed vs that wee ought not to bee so wise as to encounter his will. I tell you this is a lesson verie behoofefull for vs in these dayes.

Although this lawe was but for the outwarde man; yet was it Gods will that the instruction thereof shoulde indure for euer. And in very deepe it hath continued among men, euen by nature. For the Heathen, ( who had not the lawe of Moses ) sayled not to followe the same order: insomuch that whensoever any man was executed by iustice; it was set forth for an example. Whereby wee may perceiue, that God had grauen this principle in mennes heartes, that the executions which are done by persons of authority, and by such as are in office & haue the charge committed vnto them, are not to be euil spoken of, but rather that wee ought to commend them for obeying God, and for doing the thing that belonged to their degree. For if a Iudge being armed with the sworde, doe spare the partie that hath committed a wicked deed: he is as blameworthy before God, as if hee had condemned a guiltlesse person, as Salomou auoweth. And this serueth to ouerthrowe the fantasticall opinions of such as say that among Christians no man ought to be put to death, because the like rigour is not as was vnder y<sup>e</sup> lawe. Verily as who shoulde say that God had changed his mynde and resigned his office: for wee knowe that hee is Iudge of the worlde for euer; And although hee reserue the execution of that office till the last iudgement, and haue committed that charge to our Lorde Iesus Christ: yet is it his wil that there should be some resemblance of iustice euen in this earthly life. True it is, that it shall not come to perfection heere, and that the most parte of such as shall be condemned at the latter day, shall in this worlde scape the hands of the earthly Iudges: but yet for al that, howe focuer the worlde goe, God will not haue inordinate losenesse to teigne, to as men might do what they list, and al crimes scape vnpunished. Therefore his wil is that vengeance should be executed by those into whose hands hee hath put the sworde of iustice, as sayeth S. Paul in the thirteenth of the Romanes, where hee telleth vs that Gods arming of them after that sorte is not for naught, hee will not haue them to beebut as a shadowe to feare babes, and to bee vtterly voyde of power: but hee will haue Iudges to knowe that they bee bounde to punish misdeedes. And so farre off is it that their fo doing shalbe imputed to them for euill or sinne; that God hath shewed by this ceremonie of the lawe, that all the Elementes of the worlde accept it and allowe of it as witnesseth to God, as who shoulde say that the body hanging in the ayre is as a solemne Record that such execution is not to bee condemned, neyther ought the magistrates to bee desirous to hyde it as though they were murderers of such as they cause to bee put to death, but rather to set them out for an example, as who wolde say, wee haue done a sacrifice vnto God, it is our office, it is our charge, thus behoueth it vs to doe: for if wee shoulde spare men in this behalfe, wee shoulde sell that good cheape which is none of ours, that is to saye; Gods iustice. For it is committed vnto vs vppon condition that wee must yeeld account thereof. Thus much concerning the first poynt.

Nowe there is also a seconde poynt, which is that the body must not hang in the ayre aboute one day. And that is, because such sightes doe in truth make men afrayde. Also it was Gods will that one dayes recorde shoulde suffice among his people, & that they should not keepe the corps there any longer. But I haue told you alreadye that wee be no more bounde thereunto by necessitie. In some countryes they haue deused certaine br otherhoods, who should goe and take down the bodies from the Gibbets & burie them. And truly that was a fonde deuotion, for they knewe not wherefore they did so. The Iewes also were so bewitched with their owne dotages, that they thought that the buryall of them commaunded in this place did concerne the welfare of their soules. Likewise the Heathen imagined that the soules of men went wandring and straying heere and there, vntill their bodies were buried. But these are dotages of the diuels owne deuyfing, to turne away men continually to a multitude of lyes. Gods care is rather of vs which are alieue, as though hee meane to set a meane betweene the rigour of Iustice and the gentleness which ought to bee among vs. This meane therefore is well worthe to bee marked; for wee euer swaue aside to some extenuation. In shunning crueltie, wee be come cowardly, and haue no more regard of Iustice, but woulde haue all faultes forgiven, and that men might haue free leaue to do all manner of mischief without correction. On the other side, in mynding to bee seuerer, we run in daunger of being too leuener. God therefore appoynteth a meane: which is, first of all, that we should punish the offences that deserue death. And secondly to the ende that Iustice should bee had in honour, and that we shoulde not surmise any reprochefulness in it; hee will haue the offenders bodies hoysed vp into the aire for men to looke at, as it were in way of warrantie y<sup>e</sup> wh<sup>e</sup> a magistrate punisheth an offence, he offereth vp a sacrifice acceptable in heauen, & consequently which ought to be well taken on earth. Yet for all this, hee will not haue vs to be too hardhearted, but alwayes to reteine still some pitifullnesse and compassion. And when Iustice is so approoued, he will haue the body to bee buried, yea, euen remoued from of the earth as an infection. For why? So long as a mannes body hangeth vpon the gallows, there are two things seene: the one is, that God hath well provided for mankinde, in orderyng the execution of Iustice, and that malefactors should not bee spared. That is one poynt. Another is, that men may say thus with themselves, Lo here is a wicked deepe done: for these are tokens that the Land hath bin defiled. Therefore when a bodie is so hanged vp, it is a signe of the defying of the lande by the committing of some roberrie, murder, or other haynous crime. When it is so, let this also bee euer marked. God therefore intendeth to shewe that where Iustice is executed the fault is forgi-

forgiuen, and the countrey standeth no longer charged therewith, but his wrath is pacified: And as though the misdeede had bin spared, he will haue the body buried. Thus yee see howe the executing of iustice vpon offenders and wicked doers, and the cutting off of leaudenesse, is a warrant that Gods vengeance shall not light vpon the Lande. Nowe then wee see in effect what God ment by his Lawe. Also wee see howe the instruction continueth still vnto vs, though we haue not the vse of the Lawe it selfe, because the Lawe commaunded a thing whereunto wee be no more bounde since the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. So to be shorte, this doctrine is not vnprofitable: for wee knowe Gods meaning, which concerneth vs as well as the Iewes.

But nowe must wee come to the chiefe point that is to be gathered of this text. For whereas our Lorde Iesus Christ was hanged on tree, it happened not by happe hazarde. Truly the Iewes desired that he might be crucified, which in those dayes was the most horrible, reprochfull yea and painefull death that could be. For the hanging of Christ vpon the tree, was not after the manner that is spoken of here. Such as were stoned among the Iewes were also hanged vp vpon a gibbet after they were dead: and although they were not strangled, nor beheaded, but ouerwhelmed with stones: yet were their bodies taken and hanged vpe, that all others might take example at them. But our Lorde Iesus Christ was crucified, yea euen as though hee had bene a cutthroate, after the same manner that men lay murderers nowadayes vpon the wheele. And (as I sayde) that was a verie cruell kinde of death. Neither was it done by the Lawe of Moses, but by custome of the Romanes who reigned at that time in Iewrie. Yet notwithstanding, the sonne of God was hanged on tree. And the Iewes regarded it not, but cryed out to haue him crucified. Also when Pylate condemned him thereto, his meaning was not to put him to it, as in respect of the reprochfulness thereof before God: but God governed it in such sort by his secret prouidence, that Iesus Christ was accused when hee hung vpon the crosse, according to that which had bene spoken of him afore. And that is Saint Pauls meaning. For in telling vs that we be sette free from the curse of the Lawe, hee sayeth that our Lorde Iesus bare it in his body by being hanged vpon tree. Also it is the same thing that Saint Peter ment in saying that he bare our finnes vpon the tree. And otherwise this saying of the prophet Esay had not bene fulfilled, that the chastisement of our peace was layde vpon him, so as hee was faine to beare our punishment, whereby we might be reconciled vnto GOD. And in the foresayde text which I alleaged out of Galathians, S. Paul treateth of two things, He sayeth that because wee can not attaine to righteousnesse, but by fulfilling the Lawe in all pointes, and by being discharged before GOD: it behoued our Lorde Iesus Christ to be subiect to the Lawe, to the intent that his obedience might nowe be imputed vnto vs, and God accept thereof as though we brought the like obedience of our owne. When we speake of being iustified before God, howe is that to be vnderstood? Verily that we should obey the thinges that God commaundeth vs in his Lawe. For the righteousnesse that hee speaketh of is, that he which doeth those thinges shall liue thereby. Then must our life be ruled altogether after the will of GOD, and then shall wee be taken for righteous before him. Is there nowe so much as one man to be founde, which commeth anie thing neere this obseruation of the Lawe, and that with such vncorrupt foundnesse? No. The holiest Saintes that euer haue bene, were farre off from such perfection. Then are we all disappointed of righteousnesse, so as we can not in any wise stande in Gods fauour. But yet are we righteous in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And why? For he becing the soueraigne king in whome there was no bondage nor subiection, did willingly submitte himselfe to the Lawe, and beare the yoke thereof for vs: for we knowe that he performed the will of GOD his father in all pointes to the full. And so by that meane we be taken for righteous in Iesus Christ. Why so? Because hee was obedient. Yea and that obedience of his was not for himselfe; there was no subiection in him, neither was hee bounde to any thing: for he is altogether about the Lawe: therefore it followeth that he was obedient for vs. And therefore when wee flee to him for succour, our heavenly father admitteth vs as if wee brought perfect obedience with vs. For looke what is wanting & missing in ourselues, we go to seeke it like poore beggers in our Lord Iesus Christ, and it is applied vnto vs by the vertue of faith. Marke that for one point.

But Saint Paul addeth, that forasmuch as we be all accused by the Lawe, our Lorde Iesus Christ was faine to beare our curse. And he bare it (sayeth he) for he was hanged vpon tree. And whereas the Lawe of God had sayd, Cursed shall he be that hangeth on tree: the same was verified in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And S. Paul had an eye both to that which hath bin, and to that which we shall see hereafter, namely, Cursed shall the man be which performeth not all the things y<sup>e</sup> are written here. Ye see how God hath declared his will. Therupon he prometh that whosoever keepeth his Lawe, shall be taken for righteous and obtaine the endlesse life. But yet on the contrarie part he telleth vs, y<sup>e</sup> if a man faile in any one point, hee shall be cursed and forlorne without remedie. Now let cury of vs looke into himselfe. Was there ever any man y<sup>e</sup> hath not failed many wayes? It is sayd y<sup>e</sup> no man shall be founde righteous in his sight. And againe in an other place, Lorde, if thou looke strictly vpon sin, who can abide it? Who is able to shew himselfe before thy iudgement seate? Needes must all men be confounded: and not for some one sin, but for a number of wicked deedes shall we be put to shame, if god do once enter into account with vs. Then are we all vndone & damned as in respect of the Lawe, there is no more remedy.

remedy, Cursed shall he be which doeth not all those things. Alas, we be neuer able to doe the hundredth part of them. I say y<sup>e</sup> although God giue vs vnto goodnes by his holy spirit, yet do we faile through our owne infirmite, and there is cuer great want in vs, Ye see then that we be yndone and past hope of recouery, vnlesse the curse be abolished. And that was done in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, who as he hath performed all righteousnesse, so hath he also receiued the curse to himselfe which lay vpon our heades, & he hath borne it in his person, to the intent that henceforth we should be free from it. As how? For he was not hanged vpon tree without the prouidence of God his father: wee must alwayes looke backe to y<sup>e</sup> point. For as for these rascals which goe about to deface Gods prouidence, they shew that they neuer knew what religion meaneth; nay they be mastiue dogges, yea and much worse than dogs, beleeuing no more in God than brute beastes, as the worlde knoweth. Notwithstanding forasmuch as God hath giuen his sonne to death, as the scripture beareth witness, that he hath so loued the worlde that he hath not spared his only sonne, but hath deliuered him to death for vs: Let vs assure ourselues that God ment to shewe vs to our faces, that he layde vpon him the curse due to vs, so as the thing which we hadde deserued was layde vpon the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Therefore when wee beholde Iesus Christ hanging on the tree, wee knowe that hee hath taken our bondage vpon him, euen to the intent that wee should not be any more bounde to the curse of the lawe, but free, and that the sayde threate should no more take place to condemn vs, Cursed shall hee bee which performeth not all those things. For why? When wee flee for refuge to the death & passion of our Lord Iesus Christ, our finnes are wiped out, God layeth them not any more to our charge, they be quite & cleane done away. And why so? Because the curse lyeth not any longer vpon the transgressors, when they trust and rest vpon the satisfaction that was offered vnto God the father, by him that was ordained to that office.

Here it might be demanded, whether Christs hanging vpon the tree, and his being accursed before GOD, was not a derogation to his maiestie? Surely so farre off was it from diminishing or defacing of his glorie; that it is rather the chiefe thing wherefore wee are to magnifie him. For we ought to be euen rauished at the inestimable loue of God towardes vs, in that he vouchsafed that his sonne, who is the heade of the Angelles, before whome all knees ought to bowe, and vnto whom all creatures ought to do homage, should so humble himselfe euen to the lowest depths, and beare our curse. When wee see that our Lorde Iesus Christ hath so forgotten himselfe, and had so litle regard of himselfe; that for very feruent loue which he bare vnto vs, he tooke vpon him the curse wherewith wee were all overwhelmed, receiuing it wholly to himselfe: is there any heart so harde, which ought not to claue at the sight thereof? Againe, how ought we to be inflamed to glorifie our Sauiour, who hath abaced himselfe so farre to saue vs? Moreouer, let vs marke also, that hee ceased not for all that, to be blessed of God, according to the common title which was giuen among the Iewes. And in very deepe hee is so named in the hundredth and eighteenth Psalm [where it is sayde], Blessed bee hee that cometh in the name of the Lorde. It was a prophetic concerning the redeemer of the worlde that had bene promised. Nowe seeing that God auoweth him to be blessed; howe comes it to passe that hee is accursed, and that the curse should take place in his person? These two agree very well. For whereas Christ became as it were accursed; not onely before men but also before God: it was because he was our suretie; and represented vs, setting himselfe in our steede. Yet neuertheless he retained full the thing that was due to himselfe, to wit; to be the blessed of the father, who will haue him to be knowne so to be, and that all the worlde should beare witness of y<sup>e</sup> blessednes. For the same should haue bene spoken by the people, euen as wee see that the children did sing the same song at the entrance of our Lord Iesus Christ into Ierusalem. Then was it requisite that this blessing which was peculiar to himselfe, should be knowne to the whole worlde. And so our Lorde Iesus Christ was not made fo accursed, as y<sup>e</sup> the blessednes which was giuen vnto him could perishe, and not continue alwayes vnappaired.

Moreouer we must come to that which Saint Paule sayeth to the Colossians. For there hee setteth out the crosse of our Lorde Iesus Christ vnto vs, as a Charyot of Tryumpe, saying that our Lorde Iesus hath defaced and cancelled the handewriting that was against vs, and finally, nayed it to his crosse. The Lawe hadde shewed Gods wil: And by meanes thereof it behoued al men to knowe themselves to be indangered vnto God, and to feele themselves to be accursed as I haue shewed before. But what remedy was there to comfort poore sinners? In deepe God ordained sacrifices and washings and such other like things: but were they able to doe the deepe? When men came to doe sacrifice, it was tolde them in deepe that their signe should be wiped away. Yea, but that was not by the power of the brute beastes which was offered at the Altar. Could the bloud of an Oxe, a calfe or a Heckfer cleanse away the spotted of the soule? We knowe that the bloud of such things is not onely corruptible, but also filthy. Therefore it could not iustifie Gods Iustice, it came farre short of it. Againe, when a man washed himselfe, it is true that he hadde a promise: but was that promise tyed to the water? We knowe that water is a transitorie element, and can not attayne to the soule to cleanse away the filth thereof. To be short, both the Sacrifices and the washings which GOD hadde ordained in the Lawe, were a kinde of renewing of the bond which all sinners haue ingrauen in their consciences. Like as if an offender should be taken and made to confesse all his misdeedes, and haue haue all his former confessions rehearsed vnto him, to the intent to put him in minde of them:

 euen so was Gods meaning towards the Iewes in willing them to take water at their going to the Temple, as if they should haue sayde, wee acknowledge and protest before heauen and earth, that we be defiled so as there is nothing but vtter infection in vs, and y<sup>e</sup> we haue neede to be washed. Againe, came they once at the Altar: there a sacrifice was offered vp, an innocēt brute beast was put to death, and that was as a looking glasse to sette before our eyes, that wee bee worthie of death, and not of bodilie death onely, but also of euerlasting death before G O D, and to be plunged into hell. Ye see then howe the sacrifices and such other like things were as matters of recorde and authoritie, to assure all folkes the more of their sinnes, and to con-uict them of the same, and to make them the more to abhorre their misdeedes. But was Iesus Christ hanged on tree? Saint Paule sayth that in so doing he tooke vpon him the bonde that was against vs, that is to say, all the things whereto the Lawe bounde vs, all the fetters, all the condemnations, and all the sentences that serued to put vs to shame, and to bewray our leawdennesse. All these things tooke he vpon him, and cancelled them, as if a man should take a handewriting and teare it in peeces, to make it of no force by defacing it after that fashion, and euen so delt our Lorde Iesus Christ, with vs. And Paule addeth there immediatly, that Christ tryumphed ouer all our enemies, so as the deuil was ledde in tryumpher. As howe?
 Ye see that Iesus Christ was put to the vttermost reproch that could be in being hanged vp on the crosse, and (as the prophet Eiaie sayth) he was so disfigured that folke vouchsafed not to acknowledge him for a man, but all men abhorred him. And where is then this try-umpher? Although the sacrifice which he offered vp imported a curse in it at the first sight: yet ceased it not to yeelde a verie good sent before G O D as the scripture termeth it. And therefore our Lorde Iesus tryumphed against Satan, against Sinne, and against all our enemies. To be short, let vs marke, that Iesus Christ hath so borne our curse, that he hath abolished it quite and cleane. Because hee was the fountaine of all glorie, it must needs be that the condemnation which he tooke vpon him on our behalfe, is quite and cleane discharged by his power. In like case standes it with his death. He suffered death, but was he overcome of it? No, but hee did rather abolish death. And the very staye and trust of our righteoufnesse, is the diuine power of his resurrection, as wherein hee hath shewed himselfe to haue gotten the vpper hand of death, accordingly as Saint Peter sayeth in the thirde chapter of the Actes, that it was vn-possible for him to be helde downe by the sorrows of death, because he had overcome them, and by that mean<sup>e</sup> hadde purchased righteoufnesse for vs. Nowe wee see that whereas Iesus Christ is sayde to haue bene forlorne and accursed for our sakes: it did so helde abace his maiestie, that we ought the rather to magnifie his glorie in that behalfe; assuring ourselues that we shall no more be accursed, because hee hath done away our curse, and borne it in his owne person.

Also let vs make therewithall, that notwithstanding his being accursed before God, yet he ceased not to be Gods welbeloued sonne, according to this saying vttered by the heauenly father himselfe, This is my deerebeloued sonne in whome I am wel pleased, and in whome I am pacified. And serued that but for one instant?
 Nay it was to continue for euer. How is it then that Iesus Christ was accursed, seeing that the father was pacified by him? And that hee was not only well liked himselfe, but also the meane to reconcile the whole worlde. He is our peace and although through our corruption of nature G O D hate vs, yet are we beloued in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ; and howe is it then possible that he should be accursed before God? They agree both very well. For (as I haue sayde afore) Iesus Christ hath borne our curse, yea and he hath borne it in such wise as G O D ceaseth not to loue him still for all that.
 And this curse is so abolished, that the reproch of his crosse is turned into glorie and tryumph, because it is vnpossible that the sonne of G O D should not continue euerlastingly the same that he was afore. True it is that he was somewhat abaced for a while; but yet it behooued him to be also crowned with honour and glorie, as it is now come to passe. After this maner must we put this text in vre.

Nowe therefore, forasmuch as wee perceiue that G O D hath set downe heere a Lawe for the ciuill government of the Iewes: let vs assure ourselues also, that hee knewe well in his owne euerlasting counsell, what should come to passe, namely that his sonne should be hanged on tree: for hee had so ordained it. And why?
 To giue vs the surer grounde of our saluation.
 For had not our Lord Iesus Christ born our curse after a visible fashion, wee might still hang wauering and in doubt of it. And whereas it is sayde, that we be reconciled vnto God by his death, and that he hath satisfied all our debtes, so as the deuil can not henceforth any more accuse vs, but that wee haue our defence for him, that is to witte, that our sinnes are wyped away: notwithstanding the reporte of all this vnto vs, yet might we still be in perplexitie, and stande scanning after this manner: Yea but howebee wee sure of that? Lette vs open our eyes and looke vpon the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ, yea and let vs looke vpon it in such wise, as wee may vnderstande that euen from the beginning G O D ordained the tree of the Crosse to be a recorde of cursing. Nowe then, whereas it is sayde, Cursed shall he be which performeth not all the things that are contained in the Lawe: therewithall G O D sendeth vs to his onely sonne, and would haue vs to knowe that he was hanged on tree to y<sup>e</sup> intent to be accursed. As how? Was he cursed in his owne person? No, but for our sakes.

Yet notwithstanding, we may nowe glorie, that the curfe of the Lawe hath no more power ouer vs, but that he hath discharged vs thereof. After this manner ought wee to put this text in vrc.

Howebeit let vs marke by the way, that it is not by the vertue of the wood, that wee be fo blessed before God by meane of our Lorde Iesus Christ, as the papiftes brutifly beare men in hand. For when they heare the crosse spoken of, they be tyed to it with a deuilifh fuperftition, yea and with fo brutifh a fuperftition as is pitie to fee, that they fhould leaue Iesus Christ, and fall to worshipping of a peece of wood. But when the fcripture fpeaketh of y curfe which our Lord Iesus bare in his body to fet vs free withall: it fet- teth before vs two things. First, that when we looke vpon the wood, we fhould take it as a to- ken of the curfe, and thereat conceiue a terrour in ourfelues: for the thing of it felfe is horrible. Thus much concerning the wood. And there- fore as for all the cresses which the Papiftes fet vp, what betoken they elfe but that they bring Gods curfe continually vpon themfelues? It appeareth manifefly that they defpife the facrifice which was offered once for all by the fonne of God. Wee be reconciled to him for euer, and they come to bring vp y curfe againe, as though they were defirous to haue their finnes abide vpon their heads for euer, without any defacing or dooing of the away by Gods mercy, through the power of the death and paffion of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And therefore looke howe many cresses there are in the Popedome, fo many re- cordes are there that crye out for Gods ven- geance againft thofe wretched vnbeleeuers, which content not themfelues with the amends that was made for them when our Lorde Iesus Christ indured the curfe in himfelfe which was due vnto vs. But knowe we once this curfe? If we refort to Iesus Christ, there we finde that the fame curfe is quite and cleane wiped out & done away. After what manner? By the wonderfull power of God, euen after the fame fashion that we knowe that God made light to fpring out of darkenefle in the creation of the worlde: and is it poffible that light fhould come out of darke- nefle? Surely this change is not to be done by man, nay, mannes wit can not comprehend it. But God ment to fhewe that the meanes which he hath to worke by, doe farre exceede all y euer we can conceiue. And therefore let vs marke wel, that he which at the beginning of the world turned darkenefle into light, yea and made light to fpring out of darkenefle: was alfo as able to turne curfednes into blessednesse, in the perfon of his onely fonne. And that is the thing which I ment in laying afore, that forasmuch as hee is life and the very fountaine of life, therefore hee abolifhed death, and not without caufe. In deede Iesus Christ yielded himfelfe to death; but after what manner? Was it in fuch forte that he ceafed in the meane while to be the life of the worlde? Nay: euen therein did he fhewe himfelfe moft of all to be the life of the worlde. Verily he was at the creation: For he is the fame liuing woorde whereby wee were created, and whereby all things are ftill preferued and main- tained in their ftate & being. But when our fal- uation was reftored vs by our Lord Iesus Christ, then did he fhewe that he had life in himfelfe, & that he is the wellfpring fro whence it behoueth vs to drawe it. Then like as hee loft not his life when he fubmitted himfelfe to death: fo hee ceafed not to be blessed of God his father, when he fubmitted himfelfe to the curfe.

Nowe, to knit vp the whole, it remaineth to be knowne after what manner our Lorde Iesus became accursed to fette vs free from the curfe. The firft is, that we fhould no more be caft off by God as we deferue. For when as the fcripture termeth vs accursed, the meaning therof is that God vouchsafeth not to regarde vs. And of good right may he hate vs, becaufe there is no agreement betweene him who is the righteous- nefse it felfe, and vs that haue all manner of wickednesse reigning in vs. Forasmuch then as by nature we be enemies vnto God; by reafon wher- of he fhaketh vs off, and vtterly difclaymeth vs, fo as we be not worthy to come neere his maie- fty, and if we come, hee muft needs thunder a- gainft vs: therefore Iesus Christ became accursed euen by bearing Gods hatred as it were in our behalfe, to the intent that henceforth wee fhould be beloued. Nowe I haue tolde you al- ready, (and it behoueth vs to print it well in our mindes) that Iesus Christ was neuer hated of God his father, for that were vnpossible. But he was faine to beare our curfe, becaufe he was our pledge, and wee could not be freed otherwise, than by the fatisfaction of his death made once for all. And that is the very meane whereby we be come in fauour againe & are beloued of God. Therefore if we will haue Gods fauour, and find him a father vnto vs, (for that is the title which we muft vse, if we intende to pray to him with true trust): we muft euer refort to the death and paffion of our Lorde Iesus Christ. All our prayers (say I) muft be offered vp by the death and paffion of our Lorde Iesus Christ, or elfe they fhall neuer come at God. The Papifts take ho- ly water and fprinkle themfelues, when they go into the Church; but fuch things are gewgawes and they haue borrowed them of the Jewes, not knowing whereunto thofe figures ferued. For they leaue the clefting y was made by our Lord Iesus Christ, & ftad buzzing about fuch dotages and fuperftitions. But as for vs let vs assure ourfelues, y we muft haue al our prayers befpinkled with the bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ, or elfe they will be vnclene before God, & they can neuer be made clean but only by y kind of cleft- ing. The way then for vs to proceede to the ob- tainment of Gods fauour, is to refort to the facrifice which Iesus Christ hath offered vnto him. Secondly we muft vnderftande y God forgiveth vs all things of his owne freegoodnesse. For why? The fcripture giueth the name of curfings to all the punifhmentes which God fendeth vpon men by reafon of their finnes. Therefore let vs marke, y whereas God might iuftly powe out his vengeance vpon vs, and y we fhould lye euerlastingly vnder the burden of his wrath: the chastisement which his sonne hath suffered, hath deliue. ed vs from it. As howe? Because he receiue. th vs into fauour, and is at one with vs, in not charging vs with the finnes that we haue committed, but forgiueth vs them in the person of his sonne. True it is that God will chastise vs for our faultes: howbeit,  $\bar{y}$  is not with rigorous punishment, as one that entred into accout. with vs to be our Iudge: but to warne vs, and that the correctiōs which he sendeth vs may become as so many medicines to vs. But howsoeuer we fare, we alwaies obtaine free forgiuenes of our finnes because Iesus Christ hath borne our curse vpon his crosse.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, as we may bee sorry for them as becōmeth vs, euen with such grieffe, that we may bring vnto him the broken heart which is the acceptable sacrifice vnto him. And to the intent we may be the more prouoked to mislike our finnes and to abhorre them, it may please him to grant vs the grace to looke wel vpon this horrible vengeance of them which was executed in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that thereby we may learne to mislike so much of our vices and corruptions, that our whole seeking may bee dayly to cut off some thing, and to cleanse ourselues better & better, vntill he haue ridde vs quite and cleane of all, and clothed vs againe with his owne righteousness. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

The Cxxv. Sermon, which is the first vpon the two & twentieth Chapter.

THOU shalt not see thy brothers Oxe or his sheepe goe astray, and withdrawe thy selfe from them: but thou shalt bring them home to thy brother.

2 And if thy brother be not neere thee, or that thou knowe him not: then shalt thou take them home to thine owne house, and they shalbe with thee till thy brother require them, and then shalt thou deliuer him them againe.

3 Likewise shalt thou doe to his Assē, and likewise to his rayment, and also to all other things which thy brother shall haue lost and thou found: Thou shalt not hide it away from him.

4 Thou shalt not see thy brothers Assē or Oxe sinke vnder their burthen in the way, and withdrawe thy selfe from them: but thou shalt helpe him vppe with them againe.

Or asmuch as wee restraine the commaundement of the law too much, wher by theft is forbidden; therefore  $\bar{y}$  warning  $\bar{y}$  is giuen vs heere is very needefull. It seemeth to vs that if we haue not taken away another mans goods or substance, we be cleere before God. & can not bee accused of theft: But God hath a further respect, to wit, that euery man shoulde worke his brothers welfare. For we be bound thereto, & he that maketh none account thereof is condemned as a theefe before God, though he can not be blamed before men. If I abstaine (say I) from doing any man harme, and keepe my handes vndefiled from robbie, and extorsion: yet am I not discharged for all this. For if I haue seene my brothers good perishe, and suffered it to goe to destruction through my negligence: GOD condemneth mee for it.

Therefore let vs mark wel,  $\bar{y}$  law in forbidding theft hath also bound vs al to procure  $\bar{y}$  welfare & profit one of another. And in deede it is a rule to be obserued of vs in all cases,  $\bar{y}$  God in forbidding any euill, doth therewith commaund vs to do the good that is contrarie thereto. Thou shalt not steale, sayth he. And why? For he that doeth his neighbour any hurt or harme, is abominable before God. Then is it to be concluded, that as I would haue mine owne goods preserved, so must I be charie of other mens also, & euery mā must do the like on his owne behalfe. And therof we haue an example heere: namely that if I see my neighbours Oxe or cowe or any other cattell of his straying in the fieldes, I am bounde to driue them home to his house, and to say vnto him, I haue founde thine Oxe straying, looke better to him. Yea and if I finde a beast which I knowe not and see it straying abroad, I am bounde to keepe it till the owner thereof come, I must not hide it, to make mine owne gaine of it, but I must declare it abroad that I haue founde stray cattle, that the owner may come to require it, and, I must bee readie to deliue deliuer it him againe . And Moses addeth that the like is to be done in all things that are lost, whether it be rayment , money, or any other thing, that ye lift. Then if I finde any lost thing, I am bound to keepe it safe, and to restore it to the owner . And truly euen vprightnesse doth sufficiently leade vs therunto : For if a man haue lost either money or anie other thing, and can not finde it , hee will make mone for it , and that iustly . Nowe the more wee be inclined to our owne profite , the more let vs looke to be condemned, when any body hath susteined losse by our spitefulnesse or negligence. I my selfe will blame others if they restore me not mine owne when I haue lost it . And why should not I be condemned in the like case ? And so we see now that it is not ynough for vs to knowe the tenne commaundementes which are conteyned in the Lawe : vnlesse wee haue the exposition of them also, so as we knowe what God ment and intended by the . For if I take this saying, Thou shalt not steale, and thinke it ynough for mee to haue absteyned fro taking away of other mens goods : it is an ouer slender exposition . And if I flatter my selfe and boast of my purenesse and innocencie, it shall nothing boote mee . For GOD sheweth that he had yet a further meaning, name ly y euery man should haue a care of his neighbor, that being knit and vnited together, we must labour to maintaine our neighbours right as well as our owne , and be so faithfull one towards another, and on both sides be so vprightly minded, as we might say, as I would not y an other man should suffer my goods to perish, but that he should preferre them for me: so must I do the like to all those with whom I am conuersant, that is to say all men , as shalbe declared more fully hereafter.

And if we be bound to sende home our neighbours Ox or Ass that is lost, let vs see whether we may take away an other mans goods by extortion & leaude dealing . For there are manie which thinke it no offence before God, to conuoy to the selues by litle meanes the things y belong not to them . And wherefore is that? Because they shall not be impleaded for it at the Lawe . Yea, but who is he that acquitteth them? Thinke they to dally so with God? But as I haue declared before, the Lawe sayeth, not only that we must absteyne from all robbery , but also preferre the goods of our neighbours . For if I lay waite to finger to my selfe and to enrich my selfe by impouershing them that haue wherewith to serue my turne, seeking mine owne profit by my neighbours losse : I must not thinke y God liketh of my suttle dealings, craftines, & shifting. When we haue washed our hands neuer so clean before men, what shal it boote vs, if the heauenly Iudge condemne vs? Thus yee see y the way for vs to put this text in vte, is to consider Gods intent in condemning theft in his Lawe : which is , y he will haue vs to indecour to benefite our neighbours to the vttermost of our power , so as euery man may peaceably inioy his owne, and eche of vs helpe other, eschewing all hurt & hindrance of our neighbours, and doing to all men as we would be done vnto . That is the effect of the thing which we haue to beare in minde.

We see that euen in the beastlines of Popery, some tracke of his doctrine was reteined still. True it is y those shauldinges being as gulfs, and spreading out their nets to drawe in the pray to the from all sides, willed folke to make offerings of the thinges y they had found , bearing the in hand y if the owner were not found, those things were excheated to God, meaning to their owne purse. Yet notwithstanding , this stode euer as a rule, y vnder peine of the cuery it was not lawfull to conceale any thing that was found, being knowne to be lost , but that all meanes possible should be wrought to finde out the owner . Now seeing the blind wretches which were so brutish knew this: what excuse will there be for vs? Nay, we see what libertie many folke do take nowe a dayes : infomuch that euen they which pretend to haue the Goipel, do play the theecus for euery triffe, so as there is nothing but pilling & polling w them. But in very deed the most nuber of the neuer tasted what Gods truth is. But how so euer the case stande , this saying of God ringeth shirle heere, & our eares are continually beaten with this lesson, y we ought to procure the welfare of other men. Yet notwithstanding , let a man go into y fields, & he shal finde nothing but robbing and filching. And what shall he finde in townes & cities? much worfe . A man shall see snatching and catching euery where, & all mens indeuour is to fleece one another. Wo worth vs therefore if we bethinke vs not better of y thing that is tolde vs heere, which is y God commaundeth vs to procure the welfare of other men, and to looke to the doing of it in such fort, as no man may be hindered by our default, and not only y we be clere from all euill dealing, but also from all negligence or slothfulnesse . For God inioyneth vs, y as we thinke vpon our owne profite, so we must not forget the weldeoing of our neighbours . But as we would haue others to looke about for vs, when we had lost any thing: so must we be likeminded towards all such as wee can succour in their neede.

Now if it be sayde that we must bring againe our neighbours Ox or Ass: what is to be done to his owne proper person? Or to his children and housholde folke? I see a housholde out of order, and the maister thereof deceiued: If I warne him not thereof, I am to blame . So then we must procede so farre by degrees , that if wee must haue a care of beastes , much more must wee haue it of humane creatures . If I ought to bring home a mannes Ox when I finde him straying, for feare he should be lost: what ought I to doe to his children that are readie to perishe , and runne a straye like brute beastes? Shall I not thinke vpon them to bring them into the right way ? Again in generall, if I see my neighbour goe to decay and destruction, I ought to reclaime him, accordingly as S. James warneth vs saying: If any of you bring backe his neighbour into the right way , when hee was gone astray: he hath wonne a soule to God. Now if our Lorde extend his loue eue vnto Oxen

Oxen and Asses; what ought we to do to those whom he hath created after his owne image, & which are like our selues, & to whom we be linked by a kinde of brotherhood, not onely in respect of our bodies, but also in respect of our soules? Shall we see them run astray & go to destruction, & not reach them our hand nor do our indeuor to bring them backe againe to the way of saluation? Therefore when we see mens soules in daunger to bee lost, let vs learne to reclaim them, & let vs apply our selues thereto as much as we can possibly. For if we be slacke in that behalf, there needeth none other witness against vs than y<sup>e</sup> brut beasts. For if we suffer their owners to lose them, we shalbe condemned before God. So must our indreiment be made and framed against vs by the brute beasts, when we shal haue held skorne after that fashion, to bring back the wretched creatures that are gone astray, to cause them to be reduced againe vnto God: For if we be bound to maintain mortall men in their right: I pray you, be we not double, yea a hundredfold more bound to do it vnto God? Behold, God telleth vs that we belong to him, & that we bee his heritage. Now, I see a poore man goe astray like a beast that is lost, and shal I suffer God to be bereft of his right, or to haue his possessions diminished? True it is, that we cannot enrich him: but yet doeth he shewe howe deere he looueth vs, in y<sup>e</sup> he hath purchased vs with the blood of our Lorde Iesus Christ. I see Gods possession go to hauocke, and make no account of it, and so is it lost from him through my default: and how shall I excuse my selfe? Wherefore let vs marke well, that if wee ought to mayntaine the welfare of mortall men, because God hath ordeyned that there shoulde be faithfulness among vs one towards another: wee ought much more to indeuour and procure that God may abide vniimpached in his state, and that those which be of his house (that is to say of his Church) may not miscarie, but that they may all be preferred vnto him. That is the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this text.

Nowe Moses addeth, that men must doe it, though it be the more to their owne paine. For although I be vnknownen to the partie that hath a beast lost, and he be not my neighbour: yet must not his beast be lost by my negligence, but I must bring it backe least it fall into euill hands: and my lo doing must bee of purpose to restore it to the owner. Here wee see (as I haue saide afore) that it is not enough for vs to absteyne from all misdealing, but wee must also doe our neighbours seruice, as wee woulde they shoulde doe for vs, The taking of payne or care for an other mans benefite, must not make vs shrinke from the doing of our duetie. If wee alleadge, What am I bound to him? What hath he doone for me? It is not for vs to regard the doings of men, whether they haue done vs any pleasure or no, and there after to requite them, as who woulde say, I should shew a man no friendship, vnlesse he had first befriended mee before. No, it must suffice mee, that God will be acknowledged in all those things. And therefore we must not haue an eye to mens persons to say we know them not: but it must suffice vs that God saith vnto vs, Although the parties bee vnknownen vnto you, yet must you doe your indeuor to saue their goods and substance: for it is my will that there shoulde be that bonde among men, and that by meane thereof they shoulde be knit together, and euery man willingly become better to other. Although men can not bring ye before earthly Iudges to compell you thereto, yet ought euery man of himselfe to yeelde vnto it and to beare in minde that I will haue you to exercise such charitableness among your selues. Thus much concerning that point where it is said, that although the partie bee not our neighbour, no nor knownen vnto vs: yet wee must not forebate to keepe his beast for him, or any other thing that he hath lost.

There is also another point, namely y<sup>e</sup> if we light vpon our Neighbors Ox or his Asse falne downe by the way by reason of some disease or trying vnder his burthen: wee must helpe to get him vp. And this sheweth vs yet better, that all they which procure not the benefite of other me, are esteemed as theeues. For we commit not any offence, but the same is a breaking of the Law of God. It behoueth vs to marke that. Now what is said in Gods law? Thou shalt not steale. It is but one word. But we must haue an eye to the law-makers meaning. And so we must conclude, that if we see our neighbor stand in neede of our succour before our eyes, and faile him: if wee perceiue he is like to sustein losse, & we remedy not the matter, hauing the meane to do it, we be condemned of felonie before God. It is a hard case, men may well dispute of it, yea & imagine y<sup>e</sup> they shal get y<sup>e</sup> vpper hand: but al replying must be laid downe: for as much as God hath spoken it, his saying is an vnrucocable sentence. Therefore let it content vs y<sup>e</sup> the law telleth vs that if we saue not our neighbors goods to y<sup>e</sup> vttermost of our power God condemneth vs and taketh vs for theeues. Indeed if we were to be called before worldlie Iudges, we might alleadge, he neuer bound me to do so much for him, I am not beholdē vnto him, I haue not promised him any thing, what covenant is there betwixt vs: & such other like things. But whē we come before God, we must shut our mouthes, & acknowledge y<sup>e</sup> if we haue bin negligent when we haue seene the losse or hinderance of any mans goods, so as wee haue not helped to saue them, but haue shut our eyes at it, and not vouchsafed to put forth our finger to y<sup>e</sup> succouring of them: it is all one with theft or robbrie, before God.

And herewithall let vs marke wel, y<sup>e</sup> seeing it is said here y<sup>e</sup> we ought to succor the beasts whē they be falne downe vnder the burthen: howe much more ought we to do y<sup>e</sup> like to men. When an asse is falne down, what is y<sup>e</sup> to vs? And yet for the loue of my neighbor, I am bound to lift him vp againe if I can. A poore man y<sup>e</sup> hath toild himselfe to y<sup>e</sup> vttermost, standeth in need of my help: and I forsake him: is this cruelty excusable before God? Behold, I am condemned for not doing my dutie towards a brute beast: & what shal then become of me if I forsake mine owne image & the image of God, so as a poore man is borne downe & I succor him not, but wing my mouth at it as if I had done no fault at all? So then let vs marke, y in speaking of the brute beastes, God meant to induce vs y rather to the discharging of our owne dueties one towardes another: Like as

1. Cor. 9. 10. when S. Paul alledgeth this text, Thou shalt not muffle the mouth of the ox y laboreth for thee, thinke we (saith hee) y God hath no further respect than of the beastes? Nay verily, his speaking of it is for the loue of men. As who should say, If we ought not to withdraw foode from the beast that laboreth vnder our hand & for our profite: ought wee not to giue sustenance to the handicrafts man, or to any other person when he doth vs seruite? Indeede S. Paul speakes there of the ministers of Gods worde; but yet generally wee be led to this vprightnes of maintaining such as take paines for vs, according to reason. For why? God hath spoken so of Oxen: And he hath spoken it to doe vs the more shame, as if he should say, The Ox shall haue iust matter to condemne you. Indeede y Ox hath not speech as we haue; but yet wee cannot so scape but y God will condemne vs for cruell and vnkinde foolke, if we pittie not the brute beastes. It is saide in Salomons

Prou. 12. 10. Prouerbs, y the righteous man hath in regarde, the blood of his horses & of his beastes y labour for him. Sith it is so, then if the poore soules that haue bestowed their labor & trauel, & spent their sweat & blood for you, be not paid their wages as they ought to be, nor succored and susteyned by you as they should be: if they aske vengeance against you at Gods hand, who shall be your spoker man or aduocate to rid you out of his handes? Now then, whereas here is mention made of the releuing of Oxen & Asses when they bee false downe vnder their burthens: let vs learne thereby, that it is much more reason we should releue our neighbors, when we see them vexed and ouermatched. Verily a beast cannot speake to moue vs to pittie and compassion: and therefore we must go to him of our owne good wil, though we be not moued nor requested therunto. Hereby we be warned, that although a man crie not out at a mutter, ne make any great bewailing: Yet his verie necessitie ought to suffice to make vs to step to him aforchande, & not to suffer him to lie languishing to the last instant, that he bee constrained to say, Alas helpe me. We must not be so slow. For why? Although a beast cannot speake a word, yet doth God commaunde vs to succour it. And therefore much more do we owe like dutie towards our neighbors.

Furthermore, if a man demaunde what those burthens are: S. Paul sheweth vs them saying, Beate yee one an others burthens: as if hee had said, y our infirmities are burthens, & wee haue need to be eased of them. Therefore we must exercise our charitie after that maner. I see a neighbor of mine that is weak, I meane this of alme. For how perfect so cuer men be, they haue cuer some faultes in them, and they haue need to be borne with. And I for my part cannot away with it, vnles men haue pittie vpon me: I haue my burthens as well as all other men. In respect hereof God saith vnto vs, Beate yee one an others burthens: for this is Christs lawe, saith S. Paul. And yet hath this law bene for euer. For if the brute beastes were to be releued by the law of Moles: likewise were men to be releued, as I said afore. But S. Paul telleth vs that we haue more neede to doe it nowadayes than euer: For our Lord Iesus Christ telleth vs that y cheefe sacrifice which he requirith of vs euen for God his father, is to haue a regarde wherein euery of vs may helpe his neighbors, & to indeuour to remedie infirmities where he sees the to be. Indeede we ought not to foster vices. Neither is that S. Pauls meaning when he exhorteth vs to beate one an others burthens. His intent is not that we shoulde dissemble, or that we should foade men in their naughtines by playing the blinkards when folke haue done amisse. For y were rather a leauing of the wretched soules still in their straying, vnill they were tumbled downe into the pit of destruction. Then is not y S. Pauls meaning in commanding vs to beate one an others burthens: but rather, y when we see an other man in sorrowe, we should comfort him: when we see him weak-minded, we should haten him; when we see him too much intangled in the cares of this worlde, we should labour to pul him backe, perswading him, to put his trust better in God, & not to bee so wedded to worldly things. When we labour after this fashion to remedie al vices: then do wee beate one an others burthens. And to induce vs thereunto, we must vnderstande y there is none of vs all, but hee hath neede to bee borne with. That is the thing which we haue to gather vpon this place, where it is saide that we be bounde to helpe vp an Ox or an Ass or any other beast y is false downe a brode, and that we ought to releue it as much as may be.

But here is no mentio made of any other than a brother. It is saide, y if thy brothers ass or anie other thing of his be lost: or if y Ox or horse of thy brother be false down by y way, thou must helpe him vp againe. Who be the brothers of whō God speaketh here? The word Brother is to be extended further than a number do extend it, who alwaies excusing themselves, do pluck their heads out of y collar as easily as they can, whē they see Gods comandements to be too hard & difficult yea & vterly vnpossible for them to do, they slip y collar by such fond shifts as this: I am bounde (say they) to do this for my brother, y is to lay, for such a one as I am acquainted with, or to whō I am linked by any familiaritie, neighborhoode, or friendship: those indeede are our brother. Yea. But what if we haue to do with the furthest strangers in y world? should we account them for our brothers? To what purpose were y? Lo how y hypocrites would dally with God, & breake y bond which he hath made betwixt vs, vnder pretence of this word Brother. But the exposition thereof is giuen vs in y three & twentieth of Exodus, where it is saide, If the Ox or the Ass of thine enemy be false downe, thou shalt helpe him vp againe: thou shalt do good to him y hateth thee, and to him that seeketh to hurt or hinder thee.

Ye see then who are our brethren, namely euen our very enemies, such as persecute vs, & such as could find in their hearts to eat vs vp. And yet for all that, euen with them must we maintaine brotherhood. As how? Verily it seemeth a right hard case at the first sight: for haue not they already broken the bond of brotherhood? What though there were an vnion among al mankind? Yet as touching those which are so malicious & froward, and despise God by doing leawdly, are not they worthy to be shaken off, & to be barred from the companie of other men, seeing they haue sundred themselves from them? Truth it is that if we shoulde haue respect to their persons, we might wel say, shal such a one be my brother, hauing set himself after that fashion against me? Were he a member of my bodie, would he haue cut off himselfe from me? Seeing then that hee hath forsaken me, I will haue no acquaintance wth him in any manner of wise. The alliance which I had with him was of god, God made it betwixt vs: but he hath vtterly withdrawn himself from it, & therefore may I likewise forsake him. So long as we plead against the person, such excuses may well take place: but as for before God, they will not go for paymēt. For his planting of neighborhood among vs was with condition, that although a man make himselfe vnworthie thereof yet we must not faile to do him all the good we can. And so the bond of kindred ordeined by god, cannot in any wise be defeated. Were a man become the veriest naughtipacke that could be, yet ought we to intreat him as our neighbour.

Truth it is that there are cases wherefore we ought to forsake men, & to giue them vtterly ouer. But yet for all that, we must not cease in the meane while to procure their worldly welfare, and much more the health of their soules, yea euen of such as are excommunicated & cast out of the Church, as saith S. Paul. We must not seek them, for that were y way to infect vs with their defilements, & to make vs their partakers. Nay, we must rather mislike them & abhorre them, as it is expressly cōmanded vs. But yet in y meane season, we be bound alwaies to succour them in their need, & to forbear to hurt or hinder the. That is the thing which our Lorde compelleth vs vnto. And therefore let vs marke well that it was neuer lawfull vnder the law to beare enmity against any man yea & although a man had enemies: yet was it not lawfull for him to seeke reuege. And if I be bound to succour mine enemies Alike or horse: what ought I to do to his own person? Shall I be exempted from himselfe, when I am bound vnto his cattell? It is well knowne no. And herein we see the beastlines that hath been & yet still is in the Popedome. For the fittle doctors say, that to do good to ones enemy is not a commaundement of God, but a counsell giuen by our Lord Iesus Christ. And marke I pray you wherupon they ground theselues. What say they? It is too hard a thing for vs to haue y heart to do good to such as hate vs & persecute vs. And therefore it is to be concluded, y God hath not commaunded vs to do it: for that were too great rigor. If Iesus Christ counsell vs, verily then is it a point of perfectio: but yet are we not bound to it. And thereupon they hold opinion y none are bound to it but only y Monks, whose state is angelical, & yet notwithstanding, of al me in y world they be fullest of reuenge. Neuer theles, it is for none but Monkes to haue such perfection; & as for vs that are lay people, they say that for vs to become Christians it is enough to take it as a counsell, and to tend y way, howbeit without thinking our selues guiltie of deadly sinne, though we doe it not. True it is that they can find in their hearts to say, that we ought not to hate anie body; but to say that we be bound to loue our enemies, and to do good to such as seeke to hurt or hinder vs; no no, they cannot digest that worde. And why? For they be forepossessed with this diuelish opinion, that God cōmandeth not any thing which is not possible for men to doe. And thereupon they make as it were a counterpeise or euen balance, of freewill & of all Gods cōmandements: inso much that they stand scanning thus: Cannot we doe this or that? God then hath not commaunded it, neither ought it to be done: & if a man did it, it were more than needed. As who shoulde say that God had forgone his right, because we be so corrupted and vntowarde as not to be able to performe y which he hath ordeyned. And what a dealing were that? If a man owe me monie, & haue waited all away by his leawd behaviour, is hee therefore cleerly quit and discharged, because he hath lo m spent both his owne & mine? No surely. Whence commeth it then that we cannot loue our enemies, and that wee be so reuendgefull: but of our owne corruption & of the sinfulness of our nature? Yet notwithstanding, we cease not therefore to owe still vnto God the things y he hath iniointed vs. And therefore we conclude that our Lord hath bewrayed y blindness of the Papistes, in making them to spewe out such blasphemies as these, namely, y to doe good to our enemies is not a commaundement of the law, but a counsell of our Lord Iesus. For we see what was iniointed by the law of Moses. And again on the other side, a man may wel say there is great oddes betweene the perfection of Christians, and the conuersation of the fathers: yea verily, & the hardest part of all our life, is to loue our enemies & to doe good to such as persecute vs. But the fathers t haeliued vnder the law were bound to that as well as we. And therefore we must not imagine that our Lord Iesus brought any new rule as the Papifts auouch blasphemously against Gods lawe, saying that it was but an Aphe & an entrance: and that there is nowe a true holines and perfection, in the things which the Gospell sheweth vs. But we see y cleane contrary, namely y euen vnder the law God did expressly forbid men to auenge themselves: & againe on the other side cōmanded them to doe good to their enemies, & to indeuor to ouercome euill by doing good, which is the perfection of y gospel as S. Paul sheweth in y twelfth to the Romanes. And it is the verie same thing that is cōteined in the Sermon which our lord Iesus made frō the fifth chapter of S. Matthew to y seuenth. Also y same thing is brought to our remembrance by the things which Iesus Christ faith, in the similitude of the man that was wounded in his way by the Iewes, as he went from Iericho to Ierusalem. There he taunteth the Iewes, who came of the lineage of Abraham, and ceased not to vaunt themselves of that holy pedigree. And yet he faith to them, I cannot tell what kindred or brotherhood there is among you. For if a man bee false behinde hande, and haue neede of helpe, I see not that ye succour him: ye acknowledge none other brotherhood than that which is of the fleshe. And if yee see any gaine to be had by allying your selues with any man: he shal be your brother and your great cousin. But if yee see no profite to be had by him, farewell he, he is no more your kinsman. Hereby hee inferreth a similitude, how a Priest looking vpon a poore mā that was wounded and sore hurt, and in daunger of death; passed by him and tooke no heede of him: and likewise a Leuite, and also a common Iew. Then came a Samaritan, (y Samaritanes were hatefull to the Iewes, as they who indeede had nothing but apes toyes and meere superstition in their Church) & yet our Lord faith there that the Samaritan had pitie vpon y Iew which was so sore wounded, and succored him. Was not this man the Iewes neighbor? Ye cannot denie but that he was so. Her cupo Iesus Christ concludeth, that when the law speaketh of neighbors, it meaneth not those which are allied vnto vs, or which are of our owne bloud and kindred: neither meaneth it those neighbors onely with whome we be conuersant and familiar: but generally all men, yea euen the furthest strangers vnto vs. Although we may say y such a one belongs not to vs, yet are we his neighbors as in respect of god. For our Lord could we haue vsed another word: but hee intended of set purpose to rouch vs to y quick in saying, Looke how many men are in the world, so many neighbors haue we. And whereas in this text y word is a Brother, indeed it had respect to the lineage of Abraham. But nowadaies we haue all one father, who is called vpon in all languages and in all countries. He hath not chosen the race of any one man, nor shut vp his seruice within any one certaine country. For the partition wal is broken downe, so as there is not now any difference of Iew and Gentile, accordingly as is told vs that we bee all one body in our lord Iesus Christ, and y seeing God is proclaimed by the Gospell to be our Sauour & father, we must maintaine a brotherhood among vs. And as touching the word Neighbor, the law hath vsed it of purpose to shew me y they may well shrink away one frō another, but yet they be all of one knowe kinde, according to this saying of the Prophet Esay, Thou shalt not despise thine owne fleshe. If I can say, This man is of a far countrie, there was neuer any acquaintance betwixt vs, one of vs can not speake a word y the other can vnderstande: what is all this to the purpose? Let me looke vpon him & beholde him throughly, & I shal find the same nature in him that is in my selfe: I shall see that God hath made him so like me, as if we were but one fleshe. And all mankind is of such shape and fashion, that we haue good cause to loue one another, and to know y we ought to be all one. Although there bee some difference as touching this present life: yet ought we to consider that we spring al out of one roote, & therefore that we should tend all to one end, euen vnto God who is the father of vs all. And therefore it is not without cause that in steede of saying, thou shalt doe so to al men, our Lorde faith, thou shalt doe so to thy neighbors. And albeit we fall to disputing of the matter, and would slippe our heades out of the coler, seeking to shift off y matter by alledging that we bee strangers one to another: yet can we not bring to passe that all men should not be our neighbors, because we are al of one selfe same nature, wherby God hath knit vs & linked vs all together. The thing then which we haue to mark in this part of the texte vpon y word Brother, is y whereas God speaketh after that maner to the Iewes, because hee had adopted the lineage of Abraham: it sheweth vs nowadaies that we must al be as brothers, soasmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ hath proclaimed peace through the whole worlde, and God is at one agayne with all nations & all men. Seeing it is so, it behoueth vs to maintaine the brotherhood which was procured by Christs bloudshed, & whereunto God calleth vs. And although many spiteful persons go about to violate it by their vnkindnes in shunning away from the Church, and become our enemies, by giuing vs occasion to do them harme: yet notwithstanding let vs strue against their naughtines, & labour to procure the saluation of their soules, and y welfare of their bodies so far as we can. And whē we see y we on our side are weak, & cannot frame our affections to y obeying of God so well as were to be with: let vs pray our good God to strengthen vs by his holy spirit, y we may outstand all assaults y are put vnto vs, so as we may haue y vpper hand of them, when hee hath once rid vs of our fleshe.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our sins, praying him to make vs so to feele the more & more, as y being cast downe in our selues, we may be lifted vp again by his hand, & y being so lifted vp & vpheld by him, we may follow his example towards our neighbors, in deuoing to continue in good peace & concord, & bearing with y weaklings, so as we may al with one cōmon cōsent keep our way vnto him, & attaine thither by his grace. That it may please him to graunt thus grace, &c.

On Fryday the iij. of Ianuarie. 1556.

The Cxxvij. Sermon, which is the second vpon the two and twentieth Chapter.

5 A woman shal not weare the apparel of a man: neither shal a man put on the gar-garments of a woman. For whosoever doth so, is an abomination to the Lord thy God.

6 When thou goest abroad and findest a birds nest in a tree or on the ground, and young birdes or eggs therein, & the dam sitting vpon her young or vpon the eggs: thou shalt not take the dam with her young birdes:

7 But thou shalt let the dam goe, & take the young ones to thy selfe, that it may goe well with thee, and that thou maist prolong thy dayes.

8 When thou buildest thee a newe house, thou shalt make a battlement about the roofof it, that thou bring not bloud vpon thy house by the falling of some man downe from it.

The first law which I haue reheared here, sheweth y in all our behauiour, we must haue a care to be honest, & eschue all loosenes.

Truely it should seeme to be no matter of great importance for a man to be apparelled after one fashion or other: but yet for all that, God wil haue things done in order. For if men go disguised, & weare such apparell as serueth not for necessitie but for folliet: that is not conuenient. If women bee dissolute, what a thing is that? They forget their nature: for women ought to bee modest. If there bee no shame, but that they will needes be out of order: it is a very beastlines. That is the effect of Gods intent in saying that men ought not to put on womens apparell, nor women ought not to bee clothed in mens apparell: For it is good reason that there should be a difference betweene men and women. And although there were no lawe written, doeth not euen nature teach it vs? And when S. Paul telleth vs that women must come to the Church with their heads covered & not with their haire about their eares: hee sheweth the same thing. What saith he? haue we need to speake to you of such things? For if a womā were polled, durst she shew her head abroad? A man may well be bold to shew his head bare, though he be polled: and shall a woman do so too? That were a shame, euerie bodie would mocke at her, and she should be faine to hide her haire. Now sith ye know this without any scripture or worde written: doe ye not see howe God hath sowne as it were a seede of modestie in you, to the intent that euerie man should haue a regarde to that which is comelie for him? So then, let vs mark y here God intended to shew vs that euery bodie attyring of themselves ought to be such, as there may be a difference betweene men and women. And truly we see what daungers doe insue when folke go so disguised: many inconueniences doe accompanie them, & God is offended with the. Therefore the setting downe of this lawe is not without cause. For they that loue to go so disguised, do despise God: as for example, in these maskings & mummings, when men put themselves into womens apparell, and women put themselves into mens as ye know: what comes of it? Although no euil ensued thereof, yet the verie thing it self displeaseth god. We heare what is said of it in this place. Whosoever doth it, is an abominatiō. Ought not this saying to make the haire of our heads stand vp, rather than wee would prouoke Gods wrath vpon vs wilfully? But besides this, we are sure y the suffering hereof is the opening of a gap to all whore dome. At a word, such disguisings are but inticements of baudry, as experience prouoeth. Therefore let vs not think, that it was more than needed, for God to appoint men a seuerall kind of apparelling by themselves, and the women another kinde of attyring by themselves agreeable to their seuerall sexes. Whereupon wee haue to remember, that God liketh well, y there should be an honestie euen in our apparell. Truely (as I haue said afore) y is not the chiefe point: For if a man should set y perfection of our life in this thing: it were alone as if he should set the cart before the horse: but yet is it not to be omitted. For euen the Heathen themselves haue shewed vs our lesson, telling vs that if there bee no regard of honestie, men do bewray y the rest of their vertues are not counted for vertues any more. For if they obserue not some order, discretion and modestie in their behaviours & maner of dealings, they may seeme to be degenerated into brute beastes. Then is it as a wimes that we walke as before God, when we regarde a kind of honestie in our apparell. Truely men may soone ouer shoot themselves. Although they attire not themselves like women, yet if they vse any gaudifines, and make themselves to be as gasing-stocks: such superfluitie displeaseth God already in another respect. Likewise though women attyre not themselves in the raiment of men: Yet if they be too gallant & braue, and couet to haue too great a show, they faile not to offend God: euen in another respect, as I said afore. Yet notwithstanding, we must first of all see that men be so apparelled as they become not womanlike, as we see diuerse times y they attire themselves like brides. In so doing they seeme to be sorie y God made them not women, & to bee desirous to renounce their owne sexe. And that is a shamefull thing. Again, when women go apparelled like men of war, (as there be some which had leuer to beare a hackebutte on their shoulder than a distaffe in their hand): it is against kinde, and we ought to abhorre it. Although wee were not spoken to, ne had any law or ordinance of God: yet do we euen of ourselves perceiue it to be strange and whosoever hath any sprike of purenesse in him, wil iudge so. Ye see the y first of all: the fashion which men do vse in apparelling themselves, must shew y God hath created them to be as men: and that the women also must obserue the modestie that is agreeable to their sexe. Thus much concerning the first point.

And as touching the second, let vs marke also generally, that in our apparelling of our selues God will haue vs to respect vse & honesty. Those are the two things which we ought to let store by. The first is vse. And my meaning by vse, is y men should be contented with such apparell as will defend them from cold and heate. And by honestie I meane that they should not be clad & attired after a disguised fashion, as though they wnt to play an entelude, or were desirous to make folke to gaze at them for the strangenes of their apparell, that it might be said, who is this? O, it is such a one. Now then, if wee obserue the vse, that is to say, if we hold it enough to bee clothed onely: and therewithall do keepe such measure as we breake not common order: it is a rule that God alloweth. Also whē women be not too curious in attyring themselves, nor desirous to drawe all mens eyes vnto them to behold them in their decking: that is the honest kinde of behauiour, which God commendeth vnto vs. And in the same respect doeth S. Paul say that womē ought to haue a holy honestie, or a comelie holines. In speaking of the attire and apparell of the faithfull women, he vseth a worde which importeth that they must not onely bee honest, but also therewithal haue a certaine mark of holinesse, that men may know them to haue profited in Gods word. And foolishly if we considered wel what was the first cause of apparell, we would not be so greatly giuen to superfluous brauerie as we be. For as oft as we put on either shirte or Cote, we be put in mind that our Lord commaundeth vs to hide our selues, because his image is disguised in vs: and our clothing of ourselues ought to make vs thinke vpon the sinne of our father Adam. For by reason of sin, we become subiect both to heat & cold. And againe, God telleth vs that it is a signe of our shame. For nakednesse of it selfe is not vn honest, were it not y Gods image is disguised in vs by our corruption. Had we this regard with vs, surely we would be warer to keepe order and measure in our apparell, than we be. Howfoeuer the worlde go, let vs learne y God will haue vs not onely to be pure and cleane from all lecherie, but also to preuent all inconueniences. As for example, when he saith, Thou shalt not commit aduoutrie: that commaundement hath an eye to this present text. I haue tolde you already, that all the lawes which are writtē here, concerne manners, & are rules of good life, & are to bee referred to the ten commandements: For God hath not added anie thing to those tenne sentences. Therefore whereas in this text it is said y the man shall not weare the apparell of the woman; doeth God set downe an eleuenth commaundement: Did God thinke himselfe better afterwarde, and adde somewhat else to that which we had heard of him heretofore? No, it is but onely an exposition of this saying of his, Thou shalt not commit aduterie. As how? For in forbidding aduoutrie, God not onely forbiddeth y act it selfe, which were punishable & worthe of reproch euen before men: but also bee forbiddeth in effect al vnchast behauiour, so as none may appeare, neither in apparell nor in any part of our conuerfation. We must keepe such a measure, as our apparell tend not to vnchastitie, least we runne into such loosenesse, as we be blamed for seeking to make a hotchpotch, & to haue had no regarde of bringing all things to confusō by such disorderly dealing. Which mischeefe to eschew, both men and women must haue a care to follow curie of them their owne vocation. If we bee not of that minde, although we commit not any aduilty in act, yet are we attainted already before God, with some vice that tendeth towards aduilty. Wherefore let vs learn that by this sentence where our Lord saith that men and women ought to differ one from another in the fashion of their apparell, he meane to expound and confirm this former saying of his, Thou shalt not commit aduoutrie. Were this as wel borne away as it ought to be, we should haue better rule amōg vs than we haue: & therewould be no such impediments in the redressing the abuse of apparell. The costlinesse thereof would soone be corrected in some countries. And why? For ye shall see nothing now but imbroderie, & such ouersumptuous things, that by al likelihood men are wilfully bent to ouercharge themselves with the deckings of women, but these things would be provided for. And in the meane while men looke not to other vices which are as much or more to be condemned. For there is neuer any ho, when folke beginne once to seeke newe fashions to disguise themselves This seemeth to be nothing: but as it commeth from an euill roote, so rendeth it also to an euill ende. For it is certaine that if it were not for ambition and pride, these things shoulde not bee seene so common as they be. Inso much that there are a great fort, that can finde in their heartes to indure hunger and thirst and a number of other incommodities in their bodies, onely to bestowe their monie vpon things that canne serue them to none other ende than pompe and vanitie. And why doe they so? O, they loue wel gay apparell: they haue a delight to bee tooted at and gazed at a great way off, And wee see it more nowadayes than euer it was seene. This fond curiositie hath reigned in al ages among y Frenchmen, and they cannot be re clayned fro it as yet at this day, but they despise God & nature more than euer they did. But we heare what God saith by his Prophet Sophonie, where hee threateneth such folke as seeke newfangled and straunge attires, coueting alwayes new shift. No doubt but hee condemneth this pompousnes and the persons theselues which seeke eueryday new fashions, that they may be gazed at afar off, and be the more esteemed, and y men may say of the; Such a one hath inuēt a new fashion: such a one is skilfull in finding out new attires. Surely such folke are wel worthe to be condemned to be tailours. These great lords & braue lads which will needs weare tablets at their necks, y is to say superfluous Jewels for folke to gaze at a great way off: bought of reaso to be al made tailors, seeing they, haue so great pleasure in finding out so diuerse sortes of apparell to disguise themselves with.

And by the way let vs marke, that in saying so our Lord sheweth vs that we must come backe to the said vie and honestie, and to the rule which he hath giuen vs: and if wee keepe that; let vs assure our selues that it shall bee an acceptable seruice to him. Contrariwise, if we be led with a foolish and inordinate lust, to change euery minute of an houre and to disguise our selues: it is a thing that displeaseth God, though it importe none euill at all. And moreover, we see how it proceedeth of fond vaine glory: and when men are so giuen to vanitie, surely they despise their owne Soules and neuer care for them. Also they bee infected with ouerweening, for as they will needes be commended. Nowe when men deale after that fashion, can it be sayd that there is no euill in it? No: for whereto doe all these disguisings and superfluities tend, but to all maner of corruption, and whoredome, and such other like things, besides superfluous expences? And therefore let vs marke, that to keepe our selues from such dangers, and from desiling our bodies with lecherie, and other infections, we must eschew euill occasions, and not meddle with any thing that may allure vs to any wicked lust of flechery, or otherwise, but apparell our selues soberly and necessarily. Thus ye see in effect, howe we ought to put this commaundement in vre.

Now Moles addeth, That if a man finde a birdes nest, he may take the young ones, but he must let goe the dam, when shee broodeth her eggs, or her young ones. At the first sight this seemeth not worthy to be set downe in Gods Law. For were there no greater & needfuller things to speake of than young birdes? Why doth not God say rather that if a man see a mother nursing of her childe, he shall not trouble her, but rather succour her and helpe her, and in any wife beware that he touche her not, for that were a hurting of the infant which is a silly innocent soule. Why doth not God speake after that maner? What needed it to goe say that a man should let a Birde alone when shee broodeth her young? Hereby hee ment to expresse the better, howe greatly hee abhorreth all crueltie. For if hee cannot beare with it when it extendeth but to the little birdes: shall a man scape vnpunished when hee falleth to hurting the image of God himselfe, that is to say when he offereth wrong to another man? So then let vs marke that in speaking of little birdes, GOD hath much better declared his meaning, than if he had spoken simply of me. For it is all one as if hee had sayd, Accustome your selues in such wise to be kinde hearted, and to doe no deede of crueltie, as that euen the little birdes may feele it. Not onely practise you it among your selues; but also when ye see a little Bird, consider thus with your selues: no, our Lord, to inure vs y better to vprightnes and reason, will haue vs to giue some prooffe and witness of it euen towards the creatures which cannot complaine of vs. A young bird hath no tong to craue reason at our hands, or to attempt an action against vs. Yet notwithstanding, albeit y (to our seeming) there is no account to be made of them, neither is vprightnes to be vsed but among men: yet for all that God will haue vs willing to frame our affections the better thereby; that whē we come to deale with our neighbors, we may be restrained by it to say, What? it is not lawfull for vs to be cruel to the Birdes; and howe may wee then bee cruell to such as are of our owne kinde, in whom wee see the image of God imprinted? Thus ye see what wee haue to remember in the first place; where our Lord speaketh so of little Birdes.

Nowe let vs come to the pich of this Law. It is sayd, Thou shalt let the Damme goe, and onely take the young ones to thy selfe. When a Henbird broodeth her young ones, therein we haue an image of a mothers dutie towards her children. And the sillie birdes doe sometimes teache vs our lesson, when men and women are fo brutish, that GOD is sayne to send them to schoole of the beastes. For when as the Prophet Esay saith, The Oxe knoweth his Maisters stable, and the Ass knoweth his Crib: thereby hee ment to put men in minde of their leaudnesse, and as it were to vpraiide them thus, Ye bee woorse than the brute beastes, therefore go learne of them. For the Oxe in knowing his owne Crib or stall, doeth shewe you that you ought to knowe the Lorde your GOD. And seeing hee vouchsafeth to gather you into his flocke and into his Church, and yet you remaine woorse than the wilde beastes: doe ye not shew your selues to haue vtterly forgotten the order of nature? Nowe then, seeing that the birdes haue such a care of their young ones, surely they may teache men and women their lesson, when they shewe themselves to haue no care of their Children, as wee see some ryotous folke doe, which care not though they let their wites and Children starue at home, without regarde thereof, and in the meane while goe and spende thrie as much at the tauerne as would find their whole house. Againe there are mothers y haue no care at all of their children, all their seeking is to rid their hands of them, they cannot finde in their heartes to take the paines with them; wherein they shew themselves to be vtterly void of louingnesse and kindnesse, and to be woorse than the brute beastes, which teache vs our lesson in this behalfe. For although the beasts haue no further care of their young, than til they be able to shift for themselves; yet are men taught their dewtie and charge thereby, and what they haue to doe all the time of their life. Why doe not the birds take care for their young ones, further forth than till they be able to shift for themselves? Because a bird is not created in the world to be gouerned by his sire and his dam all the time of his life; He is not bound to that: for he is a reasonles creature. But the ease standeth not so with men. For euen when they be come to yeres of liberty, they must still be guided and gouerned by counsell, and their fathers and mothers must put them in mind of their dewty when they haue done amisse. This needeth not in the beastes: but yet doe the beastes discharge themselves of their duty so long til their yong ones be exempted out of their charge. And sith it is so, what shall men doe

Let vs resort to that which is sayd heere, namely, Thou shalt not catch the dam when shee sitteth vpon her young. And why? I see the dam brooding her yong ones, and (as we see) she had leuer suffer herselfe to be eaten with vermine, than for sake her yong: shee sittes there as vpon a torture, and these passeth not for it. For why? Shee hath such a care of her yong, that shee forgetteth her selfe for their sakes: if ye demanda reason of it, there is none that we know, but this; it is a naturall inclination and mouing impressed by God in birdes, that when they see their little ones, to their seeing they be deerer to them than their owne life. And although it be a painefull thing to them to tary sitting there in such care: yet goe they to it with a cheerefull courage. Nowe when wee beholde this, is it not all one to vs as if we sawe a picture wherein God shewed vs our dewie? Let fathers take warning heere, to trauell earnestly for their children. And as they ought to haue a care for the feeding and mainteyning of them: so must the mothers also doe their diligence in that behalfe, assuring themselues that it is an acceptable seruice to God, when they take such paines in respect that GOD hath bound them to that Condition, and that it behoueth them to yeeld thereunto, willingly and with a franke and free goodwill. Seeing then that wee see an Image of our charge, and God sheweth as it were with his finger, what dewie fathers and mothers doe owe to their children: shall wee goe ouerthrow it, were not that all one as if a Child should goe burne his booke? When he hath a booke bought for him to goe to schoole with, and he tearth it in peeces; shal he not be beaten for it? Then if wee burne the booke which our Lorde sheweth vs, and wittingly deface the order which hee hath set in nature, by playing the butchers in killing with our owne handes the silly bird, brought thereto by constraint of necessitie for the discharge of her fatherly and motherly dutie: what will become of vs? True it is that God hath giuen vs the birdes for our foode, as wee knowe hee hath made the whole worlde for vs. Yet notwithstanding if wee be so cruell that wee will not spare the poore birdes, euen when they be as it were vnder Gods tuition, employing themselues in his seruice: is it not a refusing of the grace which he offereth vs, in setting before our eyes as in a looking glasse, the dutie which we owe towards those whom hee hath committed vnto vs? Yes verily. In so much that if wee be not besides our wittes, and carryed with too cruell a rage, wee will haue pitie and compassion vpon the poore birdes, when wee see them yeelde their life in that sort, to discharge their dutie. And in deede, it shoulde seeme that men intended to defye God and nature, when they take the dammes so vpon their little ones. For they be so leane, that they bee as it were frothe or slime. Nowe our Lorde meant to restraine men, and to shewe them that their lustes are altogether out of order. As if he should say, What will ye doe? Ye see there is no substance or strength in them. For during the time that I take them into my tuition, they be not good for sustenance. Now then if a man be so cruell towards the birdes without hauing regard hereto: surely he will be cruell to his neighbours also. And he that maketh no sticking nor conscience to kil birdes in their breeding time, will also cut his neighbors throat if he thinke he may haue any gaine by it. Thus wee see nowe why our Lorde hath tolde vs that hee would haue the Broodbirdes to be in safetie though their young ones be taken from them. Hereby we be taught so to vse Gods creatures, as the vse of them may be orderly, and specially that wee may inure our selues to pitie and compassion all our life long. For to that ende is this commaundment to be referred.

As I sayde afore, GOD standeth not vpon the birdes, to put any great perfection therein: but hee ment to teache vs by an argument from the lesler to the greater after what manner we ought to behaue our selues towards our neighbours. Therefore if we trouble any man while he is doing his dutie, and put him to any vexation vnder colour y he is busie in discharging himselfe towards God and towards those to whom he is bound: we bee worthe of double blame. If a man disquiet a nurce or a mother in doing her dutie towards her child, surely it is double crueltie. The instruction that wee must take hereat, is that euery of vs must straine himselfe to help his neighbours. When we see them take paines to doe the things that God hath ioyned them, we must in deuor to succour them, & no man is to be troubled or molested in y behalfe. For if it be not lawfull to trouble y birdes, what may we do towards them that are ioyned vnto vs, as our brethren, as hath bin declared heretofore?

Nowe it followeth, that when a man buildeth a house, he must make battlemets or railes about the rooffe of it. This serued for y houses of Iewrie. For there they builded their houses with flat rooffe, and in all the East Countries they haue kept the same fashion still to this day. And in that respect our Lord Iesus Christ said, looke what ye heare now in secret, ye shal preach hereafter vpon y houses toppes. When wee reade this text, it seemeth strange to vs, if we haue an eye to the forme of building that is vsed here in these countries. For how shall a man get vp to y house top, to preach there? But their houses were made like Towers, that a man might walke vp and downe vpon them. Now if those had no battlemets or railes, men had bene in danger to haue falne downe from them. For their children went vp to y tops of their houses, wherby many might haue bene slaine through want of heede; sometime a man seruant, sometime a chambermaide, and consequently a child might haue falne downe, and so all shoulde haue bin in danger. Now our Lorde commandeth the to provide aforehand for it, by making battlemets about their houses. But we must first of all aduise our selues wherunto all the sayings are referred, which are set downe heere. Following the keye which I haue giuen already, which is that there are but ten articles wherby whereby to rule our whole life well: we must not goe seeke for five legges in one sheepe, as they say: but we must alwayes hold vs to this point,  $\text{y}$  God gaue vs a perfect rule of all righteousnesse and iust dealing, when he comprised his Law in two Tables and in ten commaundements. Now whereas here is mention made of building mens houses in such sort as they bring not blood vpon them; hereby we see how our Lord hath thewed vs how deere the liues of almen ought to be vnto vs. Marke that for our point. And so haue we the exposition of this commaundement, Thou shalt not kill. But is it ynough for a man,  $\text{y}$  he abstaine from murdering, from cutting of throats, from beating, and from rexing his neighbour? Truly it would be abhorred, if it were but spoken of in common speeche: but God hath yet a further respect in forbidding murder. Why is that? Let vs come to this reason: that forasmuch as mans life is precious vnto lum: therefore it followeth that we must preferre our neighbours liues to the vttermost of our power. For although wee offer them no violence, yet shall wee not bee discharged. But euery of vs must looke that hee vse no auoyance, nor giue any caule or occasion of harme or losse: to infewe to our neighbour. Yee see then howe our Lorde hath tould vs yet better in this text, the thing which hee had spoken afore when hee sayd, Thou shalt not kill. And so according to my rule, we must come to  $\text{y}$  forget downe and foreexpressed commaundement, Thou shalt not kill. Well, God maketh there but a single forbidding: but yett much we learn thereby to seek al the meanes wee can to maintaine the life of our neighbour. Thou wouldest not that any man shoulde put thee in daunger of thy lyfe, but rather that hee should preferre it, and that thou mightest not be in perill by another mans outfight. Therefore looke that thou yeld  $\text{y}$  like minde to thy neighbour.

Morouer let vs marke that heere God hath vnder one part comprehended the whole. Hee speaketh of the making of battlements or Railes vpon the roofes of mens houses: but it is all one as if he had said, whensoever men build, let them bee well ware to build after such a sort, as no inconuenience may insue therof. Many be so grosse witted, that they make things in their houses as it were of set purpose to intrappe them that come in: so as a man had neede of good skill where to set his foote, and if hee bee not very ware and looke well to himselfe, hee shal bee in daunger to breake his necke. There are some which bee so ill disposed. And God sayth that he which doeth so, bringeth blood vpon his house, that is to say, defleth his house with mans blood. Nowe then, let vs looke wel about vs, and let vs so seeke our owne commodities, as our building may bee without daunger. And why? For otherwise wee shal bee wortheie of blame. But (as hath bene declared already) we haue to gather vpon this text, that God doth well vouchsafe to lay for the preferring of our liues, & to prouide aforehand for all inconueniences, that none of vs may fall in daunger. For as much then as wee see that GOD hath such a fatherly care of vs: haue we not cause to acknowledge his gracious goodnesse, and to be vtterly rauished at it? Therefore although our dewtie bee shewed vs heere, that is to say, although God tell vs that euery of vs ought to prouide for the safegarde of his neighbours life: yet haue wee another good lesson to gather here, namely that GOD defendeth hither vnto vs; and sheweth that hee hath his eye vpon our life, and that he intendeth to bee the defender thereof. Nowe sith wee see this, haue wee nota singular recorde of his goodnesse? Yee see howe our bodies are but Carions: and yet GOD vouchsafeth to mayntaine them, and giueth vs heere a commaundement to prouide long aforehand for the daungers that may insue to it, that it may bee preferred from them. Ought not the sight of all these things to touch vs to the quicke, and to make vs to magnifie the goodnes of our God?

And furthermore, when we know this goodnesse, as in respect of this present life and this world: let vs mount vpon one step higher, and not doubt but hee hath a farre greater care of our soules, as hee sheweth by experience. And therefore let vs rest boldly vpon him, and not doubt but wee shall bee preferred if wee abyde vnder his protection, and play not the loose Couletes, but come broode our selues vnder his wings (as the Scripture sayeth) not doubting but hee will keepe vs safe and sounde. And besides this, let vs marke also, that if they which put their neighbours in perill of their bodies are gualtie before GOD: much more shall they bee accountable to him, which cast any stumblingblocke in their neighbours wayes, whereby they be turned from the way of saluation. If a man shoote at aduerture and wounde one as hee passeth by, hee is worthy of blame, yea and of punishment too. For why? Men ought to looke one to another. Am I to be excused if I shoote at aduerture and kill a poore man that mistrusted no such thing? Nay, I ought to be aduisd for him aforehand. Euen so is it with all other lyke things. Insomuch that if any neighbour fall into any mischappe through my faulte or negligence, it is an offence committed against GOD, and the world also knoweth such things to bee punishable. But I make my neighbour to stumble, not onely to the breaking of his arme or of his leg, yea or euen of his necke: but also to the destroying of his soule: and what a thing is that? For wee see that the stumbling blocks which are cast in mens waies, setue to the vtter destruction and casting downe of the silly soules that were purchased by the blood of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Therefore when men procure troubles & stumbling blocks in the Church, doe they not cause the thinges to goe to destruction, which God had begun to build vp? And is not that one of  $\text{y}$  highest points of treason against God? Therefore let vs looke to our selues, and seeing  $\text{y}$  God hath such a care of our persons, let euery of vs follow his example: & if we prouide aforehand  $\text{y}$  no hurt may befall to mens bodies, let vs haue much greater regard of their soules.

And moreouer, let vs marke what is sayde heere concerning euery mans house. For if a man giue euill example to his houshold: he not onely bringeth bloud vpon his house, that is to say, he not onely defileth the house wherein he dwelleth; but also he bringeth much worse vpon it, that is to say, all manner of cursednesse, and hee prouoketh Gods wrath. There is a man which is a despiser of all Religion, hee passeth not to haue GOD dishonoured in his house, nay hee neuer openeth his mouth, but to the spewing out of some blasphemie or diuelishnesse: againe on the other side his wife is a harlot, or a drunkard, or a feend of hell, vtterly voyde of the feare of GOD, voyde of courtese, voyde of modestie: and besides all this, there are a great sorte of other euill examples to becene there in diuers maners: 20 and is not the dooing of all these thinges a wilfull desiring of his owne house? And what can come thereof? When a man hath goods, and a great housholde, if in the meane while hee defile the place that was giuen him and wherein hee dwelleth, so as all is full of filth, as for example, his children are ill nurtured, his seruantes are vnruely, and in stead of giuing themselves to the seruice of God, there is nothing but loosenesse and cause of offence: 30 what other can come of it than is sayde in this text, namely that his house is defiled? And therefore let vs marke, that after our Lorde had declared in this text, that all those are counted for murderers before him, which are not careful to preferue all mens liues: hee addeth likewise, that euery man must to prouide for his owne houshold, as no offence may be committed there, and that the poore soules bee not destroyed: [as for example,] that the young children be not corrupted and marred by wicked bringing vp, nor the seruants and householdfolke see any thing that may marre them: but that the Maysters and Mistresses do so behaue themselves that GOD bee honoured and serued, to the intent their houses be not defiled and infected with the common filth of the worlde, but that wee may shewe that God raigneth there, so as his blessings may be powred out vpon it in all respectes, as well of body as of soule.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our finnes, praying him to make vs so to feele them more and more, as we may returne to him as to the Physician that can heale vs of all our diseases: Praying him also, so to call vs home to himselfe, that with all sobernesse and modestie we may cast aforehand to keepe our selues chaste and vndefiled for his seruice; and that therewithal we may euerichone of vs haue a care and regarde of our neighbours, being ready to relecue one another, & (as much as is possible) eschewing all annoyauce and harme dooing: and that by this meane wee may with one common accorde shewe our selues to be true children towards him, and bee able to call vpon him with full trust. And for the bringing heereof to passe, it may please him to raise vp true and faithfull Ministers of his worde, &c.

On Wednesday the viij. of Ianuarie. 1556.

The Cxxvij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the two & twentieth Chapter.

9 Thou shalt not sowe thy Vineyard with diuers kindes of seedes, least thou defile the increase of the seede which thou hast sowen and the fruite of the Vineyard.

10 Thou shalt not plowe with an Oxe and an Ass together.

11 Thou shalt not cloath thy selfe with cloth of diuers sortes, as of wollen and linnen together.

12 Thou shalt make thee fringes vpon the foure quarters of thy vesture wherewith thou couerest thy selfe.

Here is no doubt but God in forbidding the Iewes to sowe their Vineyardes with diuerse seedes, to clothe themselves with wouen garments of diuers stufes, to plowe their grounde with an Oxe and an Ass, minded to bridle the multitude of inuentions which men forge vnto themselves, to alter the plain simplicitie which we ought to hold vs vnto, and which nature it selfe hath taught vs. For the minde of man is a wonderfull storehouse alwayes to deuise some one thing or other. And (as a man by dayly experience may see) it keepeth therein neyther meane nor measure. Nowe all this while superfluities in all thinges encrease dayly. For men giue themselves ouer only to delights and pleasures, to their gorgeous pompes and braueries, and I knowe nor what trimnesse (as they terme it) so as they haue cleane forgotten to liue after common order, and according to that vse and fashion wherewith men ought to content themselves, if they had any stayedness; or sobriety in them. Wee see (I say) howe men giue the bridle to their lustes, and take to themselves such lawlesse libertie, that there is nothing but a mingle mangle in the whole order of nature. Nowe our Lorde minding to holde his people in some modestie, hath spoken in this place more grossely, and vnder certaine particular things, meant to shewe them, howe he liketh of plaine simplicitie, to the intent hee might restraine such straunge deuises as dayly arise, and that men although their lusts bee so ticklish, should not be ouercurious, but liue and hold themselves in such contentation, as to say: Well that which the Lord hath giuen vs ought to suffice vs if any reason might content vs. And therefore let vs not be set vpon such wandering fantasies as alwayes to deuise some thing or other without any ende, neither let euery man bring his peece of deuise, and traually vainly in martyring themselves to satisfie their inordinate desires: but let vs enjoye the benefites which G O D hath bestowed vpon vs, howbeit in such wise as that wee remember howe his minde is that wee shoulde vse them soberly. Ye see then what the meaning of God is which we haue to beare in minde touching this place.

Nowe a man might treat very largely of euery sentence, & yet we in the meane while should reape small profite thereby: because wee should not vnderstand the true marke which God heere aimed at. We must therefore begin at this point, ÿ is to wit, to know why God forbad the Iewes to sowe in this forte diuers feedes in one vineyard, to cloath themselves with garments of diuers things, and to plow their ground with an oxe and an asse. But let vs nowe returne to euery of these lawes: It is said That a man shall not mingle feedes together: as it is spoken heereof likewise in the 19. Chapter of Leuiticus. For God there vseth a preface saying, Ye shall keepe my statutes. And hee doeth it because wee alwayes alleage examples to cloake our fautes withall, and beare our selues in hande, that if others doe any thing, all ought to be lawefull for vs. But God bereaueth his people of all such excuses by saying, Know yee that I am your gouernour: follow me, and hold your selues to my will. And this word is well worth the noting, to the intent we be thine: our selues well that if the Lord haue once giuen vs his word to the contrary, we must not presume on the liberty of dooing that which is commonly vsed among others. And why? Sith God is so gracious vnto vs as to guide vs, let vs stay ourselues on him.

But now he saith, Ye shall not sow diuers seeds. And why? for (saith he) so thou mightest sanctifie that which thou hast sowne and the fruite also which might come of thy vine. Now this term of sanctifying or hallowing betokeneth as much as if it were said: thou shalt bereaue thy selfe of thy vine, and of the fruite which thou shouldst gather thereof. And G O D sheweth heereby, howe his will is that there should be true and plaine dealing among the people of Israell, and that if a man sowe corne, hee should make such lawefull marchandise thereof without any mingling, as that a man might say: see heere is Wheate, here is Barely, here are Beanes, heere are Pease, when euery graine is feuerall by it selfe. For if the feedes bee not pure, what shall come thereof, but that the people shall be deceived? And besides that also there shall not be one simple and naturall manner of fooode as ought to be. Moreover here is mention made of sowing the Vineyardes, because that in those countries the vines are very large: for they are bigger than ours, and in fashion like, but they are very large, and the grapes also very great, insomuch that there they must haue more roome or space for them. In effect we see now how our Lorges meaning was, that the ground should be so sowed ÿ the vitallies which were sold among his people, should be simple & all in their feuerall kindes, and herein hee compriseth that which we haue aboue touched, namely that men shoulde alter nothing but maintaine the order of nature.

But now if the corne be falsly mingled in the garner, is it not all one, yea and more too, than if the corne had bin mingled in the field? Therefore when that which ought to serue for ÿ nourishment of men, is so chaunged from his owne kinde, there is no true dealing therein. And yet for all that, wee see how subtle men are in this behalfe and howe they will yet alwayes haue some new fashions, some for their lucre, & other some for some other respect, or to feede some curious humor of theirs. It were much better we helde fast ÿ order which our Lord hath appointed. For ÿ is the very rule which we ought to follow. And although there were no great euill in dooing otherwise, yet we ought alwayes to hold vs hereunto. Seeing God hath deliuered vs this rule, ÿ there should be simplicitie or singlenes as I may terme it among vs: let vs followe it. But wee see farther, ÿ all these medlies which are made in things, proceede either first some craftie wilnes & deceit: or from a certaine curiositie & ambition: and secondly that they tend vnto a wicked gaine; namely when men haue no regard vnto ÿ losse of their neighbour, but euery man is giuen ouermuch to think on himself, as who wolde say: O this will serue my turne very well, I shall haue the better vterance of it, & the thing will not be so easly espied; or else it will passe well without with other ware, and it will be neuertheless esteemed; but I shall finde vpon my reckening, that it was so much ÿ more to my gaine. Therefore sith wee see that these medlies proceede first so euill a roote, and tend to so wicked an end, are they not to be double condemned? Yes verily. But yet herewithall let vs beare in minde (as I haue tolde you before) that when G O D woulde not that the feedes should be mingled in the fiede, hee forbad atwell all other mixtures which are made of any wicked purpose. If wine bee newe brewed in the Hogshede, is it not as yll or rather woofe then if one vsed this this mingling in the Vineyarde? So then let vs haue an eye to the meaning of GOD. Let vs content our selues with single simplicitie, and at a woorde, let vs maintaine the order of nature.

Now he addeth: Ye shall not plow your ground with an Oxe and an Ass. Here may be had a double respect, the first is touching the beastes, who if they bee not alike coupled, haue the more painefull trauaile. The second is touching the caring of the ground, which cannot bee doone so orderly by this meanes: nay it cannot bee done at al, And here he purposely maketh mention of Asses. For they had other maner of Asses in that countrie thā we haue here. For they serued to beare great burdēs, as able there unto as Moyles, which are fourefold stronger & mightier than the Mules of our countrie. And therefore if one should couple an Oxe and an Ass together, there would bee such inequality, that the Oxe would bee much more grieved then if hee were matched with his like, and the Ass in like manner. And why? For they are not in nature matched well together. Nowe albeit God ordaine not like Lawes for all other beastes: yet (as we haue seene before) his will is that men should vse them so farre forth with gentleness, that they should pittie the beastes which they employ to their vse and seruice. For he that will shewe himselfe cruell towards his horse or his Oxe, will be the same towards his neighbour. And men truely become hard hearted when they deale so cruelly with the beastes which God hath giuen into their hands to doe them seruice. For if they shew their crueltie vpon the poore beastes which trauaile to their profit, it is a sure signe that they are of a crabbed nature, & that they would haue no more compassion vpon reasonable creatures. Yee see then what regard God had in making this Lawe. Againe (as I haue alreadye touched) the ground cannot be so well plowed, if the beastes be not matches: for when there is not obserued a iust and equal proportion betwene them, the labour can neuer proceede orderly. But we must returne backe alwaies to that which we haue touched; namely that Gods will was y his people should not giue themselves vnto straunge inuentions, as we may see howe men alwaies runne this way and are greatly enclined thereunto. By following all manner of mingling, he ment to traine vs vnto this point, that is to wit, that whereas God hath ordayned all things in this worlde to our vse and profit, that wee should looke to our selues to keepe such a measure therein, that wee should not mingle heauen and earth together, nor make an hodgepodge of all things when wee employ Gods creatures to our vse. And in very deepe whereas he sayeth ye shall keepe my statutes, it is to teach vs that he will haue vs to repress all such loose libertie of ours. And although hee bound the Iewes more straitely by this commandment than vs at these dayes; yet this doctrine belongeth also vnto vs, as shall bee heere anon more largely declared. Let vs come nowe vnto the thirde Lawe which is set downe heere. God forbiddeth the Iewes to cloath themselves with garments wouen of Linnen and Woollen. Heere wee may better vnderstande that which wee haue alreadye touched: namely, that wee ought to keepe an order in things, and to content vs with that playne simplicitie which God alloweth of, so as wee take not ouer lawlesse leaue to confounde all things, but consider to what ende euery thing is ordayned. Wee haue flaxe and hemp and such like things: wel, wee must apply euery of these things vnto our vse. Againe we haue wooll to make vs garments and diuers other things. When men vse staydnesse in these things, their clothing of themselves with them putteth them in minde of Gods providence, in that he hath more than a fatherlike care of them. For haue we neede to be apparelled? We haue a shirt, we haue a coate, wee haue shoes. We see it; behold, we haue leather to shoe vs, we haue cloth to couer vs: and farther for an ouerplus, wee haue a shirt. And Lord howe thou hast wel provided for all! Hereof are wee put in minde. Nowe if men make a medle of things, surely they become beastes in so doing: and Satans endeouoreth nothing more, than to blear our eyes, to the intent wee should make no account of this orderly differēce, which God hath set in all partes of the world, that wee might behold therein his infinite wisdom which shyneth in all things, and his soueraigne goodnesse whereby he sheweth and declareth himselfe our father. Satans whole desire therefore, is that all should be confused, and that men should riotously waste things here below, without any consideration that God hath forgottē nothing which might serue for their vses and necessities. Let vs therefore marke diligently, that when God forbade the Iewes to appaell themselves with wouen garments of diuers stufes; it was to the end they should apply all things to their proper vses, and haue this regard of things to say: Why hath God giuen this into our handes? To what purpose must it serue vs? So that men should not beled with any exceffiue curiositie, but be contented to haue the naturall vse of things, in such sort as God offreth them. I haue told you heretofore that the bondage which is nowadayes, is not such as was vnder the Lawe: for wee haue greater libertie than the people which liued vnder it, whom God held as little children, as Saint Paul sayth. Nowe we know that it is needefull that little children should be ordered with a more strait, and as it were flauish government. And why? Bicause their age will not yet suffer such libertie to bee yeilded vnto them as vnto others. Yet neuer the later, that which men teach little children, is to the intent they should obserue and doe it when they come to mans state. Their increasing in age deliuereth them in deepe from the rodde and such other straitnesse; but yet must they keepe still that honestie and those vertues also wherein they were trayned vp when they were but children. Euen so although our Lorde Iesus Christ haue deliuered vs from so strait a bonde as were the ceremonies of the lawe: yet the substance thereof remaineth remaineth alwayes vnto vs:(and to be short) we must beare in minde that God hath spokē those things vnto vs as well as vnto the Iewes, although it be after an other manner: for we are now to gather, that al confusions & medlies displeasē him. And why? Because his wil is that we should vse those benefites which he bestoweth on vs, soberly, that we should not wander in our delightes, nor mainteine any superfluities among vs. And therefore let vs not busie our heades with deuising of new inuētions to set all playne dealing aside, to haue no other respect but to lay baytes for monie, as in very decde all these fine deuices tend to none other end but to picke mens purses. Oh see here a trimme inuention (saith one,) & by & by fooles runne after it: and emptye their purses by it. If men would content themselves with plaine simplicitie, euery man should spend lesse, and be contented also with lesse. But when men goe once so astray, there is no ho with them. For hee that loueth to be talking of this new thing, and y new thing, he must needs be corrupted in other things. And this is an occasion of the enhauncing of wares, and to make them more sleightly than elie they would be, if euery man walked simply and soundly in that behalfe. And so ye see what wee haue at this day to gather vpon this place.

Truely the desites of men are so infinite, and lyke gulfs and bottomlesse pittes: that it would be a hard matter to gather all that might be said vpon this place: neuerthelessē it behoueth vs to be put in minde thereof. And againe, when we shall haue heard the things in generall which God meant to teach vs here: euery of vs must afterward fall to the putting thereof in practise, and expresse the same particularly in our deeds, according to y objects (that is to say occasions) which are offered vs. We haue already sayd that our Lorde meant to restrain vs vnto a sober & moderate vse of his benefites. And therefore I conclude that whē men be ouerlous and mingle things together to satisfie their lustes, it is a dehiling of the benefites of God. It is sayd: Thou sanctifiest, that is to say, thou deilest. The fulnesse of the feede, that is to say, the things which thou shouldst gather. For the Hebrewes take sometime this word Holy for cursed. Yea and y name of an harlot which they vse is deriued hence, as a cursed thing which we ought not to touch. For an holy thing and that which is dedicated vnto God ought not to be touched. After y same manner, that which is deiled and cursed is called Sanctified, (that is to say such a thing as a man must not touch) although it bee in an other respect. And so it is said that we sanctifie the fulnes or encrease of y benefites which God giueth vs, when we apply the vnto an ill vse. Let vs therefore note, that we vnhallo the pure and naturall vse of Gods benefites, when we for our lusts sake doe make any great mingling of them. Now we are not to seeke for this vice onely in y fields, whē wheate is mingled with oates or with some other graine: but we must also cast our eye vpon our tables, where there is vsed such varietie, as would make a man to wonder. Whereby it is to be seene how men are giuen ouer vnto this vice: so as they labour to disguise all things, and they seeme to haue conspired to alter and change whatsoever is in nature. I pray you is it not a dehiling of things, when men doe so disguise the order of God: Is it not euen a spring of him? And are we worthy to enioy the benefites which he bestoweth on vs, when we know not how to keepe any meane in them? If a man perceiue a childe to cramme himselfe without measure; to take away that vice he will cut his morsels smaller. And if he perceiue that he is ouer lickerous and giuen to his lusts, he will giue him the clean contrarie to that which he desireth. And why? Because that otherwise hee marreth him cleane. And if he should bee foaded still in his delightes, hee should bee vndone when he is olde. Seeing it is so, If when we come to mans estate, wee so abuse the benefites which G O D hath distributed vnto vs in so good order, and we mingle them together, so as no varietie can please vs; must not our Lorde needes see to it, and vse a forcible remedie, when hee perceiueth that by our good will wee can not keepe any staye? If one demand of mee, and say; yea sir, but are all minglings, sinne? No. I will not speake so strictly. Yet neuerthelessē the beginning of them proceeded from a wicked desire. They which inuented so many varieties to feede the fond appetites of men, did questionlesse offend God, and we ought to detest them; notwithstanding that they haue bin lyked of in their times, and that men haue said: Oh here is an excellent cooke: oh here is a good Steward. Although they haue gayned glory by making so many delicacies, and by their compounding of so many things to make their fine and new sauces, and I know not what other conceites to feede the humors of such as desire to bee entertained ouerdelicatelie: yet must wee detest such things: and it were to bee wished that such men had had their mothers wombe for their graue. But now what haue we to doe, but to repressē all superfluitie, and all that euer maketh vnto vice: Ought wee not to endeavour this with all our might? Yes verily. But what? Euery of vs is so farre from mending of one, that it seemeth rather that wee intend to pleade prescription against God. Whatsoeuer is told vs, wee fare not the better by it one whit. And why? Because we haue taken it vp of custome. Yea, but God wil in the end shewe, that there is no lawfull possession, but such as is ruled by his lawe, and according vnto his will. Nay doubt wee not but G O D will punishē such superfluities, by cutting our commons shorter. In decde our nature is inclined to this wickednesse of retchlesse confounding of things, which God had distinguished: but yet must wee therefore seele the tokens of his anger, when he sheweth not himselfe so liberall a father towards vs as hee was wont to doe. And if wee were wise or but well aduised, we would not waire for the declaration hereof. That which is said here woulde suffice vs, namely that we ought not to mingle the creatures of God, but alwayes to holde vs vnto a plaine simplicitie in our maner of liuing. Ye see then what we are to note touching our meate and drinke, namely, that men ought so to content themselues with that which they haue, that being nourished of God they may reknowledge it in this sorte: Behold, our God hath a care to feede vs, and wee may well see that he is a father towards vs, in that hee sheweth himselfe to haue so great a care of our lyfe. Let men therefore take heede that they be not drunken with their delicacies, and besotted in their varieties, but y they haue an eye alwayes vnto God. Now the lyke ought also to be obserued in our appaile. It is said in effect that a man shall not clothe himselfe with diuers sortes. This serueth to teach vs, that we ought to keepe as great sobrietie as wee can possible, aswel in our appaile as in our meates and dringes. For if men decke themselues with diuers sortes, and vse in their attire many fond disguisings, whereof procedeth assuredly nature teacheth them no such thing. For the heathen men had skill to say, that if euey man would so loue nature herein, there needed not such varieties of meates or diuersities of appaile. Men of themselues doe martyr themselues. Lo what our lustes doe leade vs to! For they busie vs in taking paynes about this and that, and make vs also to trouble others: and so all y world is disquieted. And why is that? If we could be content, wee shoulde liue much more quietly. But we are still giuen vnto superfluities; and that is the cause why wee can haue no end of our trauailes: we are become lyke the damned soules. And where is y fault thereof, but in our selues: So then let vs note (as I haue touched already) that these diuers sorts of varieties which men long after, serue for so many warrants to prooue, that we cannot stay within the true contentation of nature. I graunt it were but a meere follie to hold vs to the rigor and extreme precisenesse of liuing which some fantasticall and brainficke men haue vsed: that wee shoulde be contented with nature, y we must haue neither glasse nor goblet, but our bare hand only to drinke out of: these be follies in deed. Nay, whē our Lord vseth liberalitie towards vs, let vs consider of it. It is sayd in y 104. psalme, y God hath bestowed on men, not only bread and water for the necessitie of their lyfe, but also wine to comfort their harts and to make them merrie. Whē we see y God of his exceeding grace giueth vs beyond our very necessitie that which we needed not, well: let vs accept of his liberalitie, & know that he giueth vs leaue to vse it in good conscience with giuing of thanks. He coulde wel bring forth corn for our sustenance although no bloome came before it, and hee coulde wel enough cause fruite of the trees to encrease wout either leafe or blossome. But wee see how our Lord intended to delight all our senses, and meant to present vs with his blessings in all sortes, and in all the creatures which he offereth vnto vs to reioyce in. So then this barbarous rigor, that men should bee debarred of that which God hath bestowed vpon them, is not to bee spoken of, or admitted. Let vs but onely restraine our couetous desires: & let vs consider well of that which God graunteth vnto vs, to goe so farre forth, and no further whē we once perceiue that the thing is not lawfull before God.

Now our Lord commaundeth vs to keepe our selues vnto plaine simplicitie. It followeth then, that all needelesse minglings and disguisings of things, are alwayes euill. For they are as so many vices which God reprobeth. And if this wickednesse bee evidently seene in meates and dringes, it is yet more apparently known in appaile. I pray you to what excessse are wee grown herein nowadayes? In deede this wickednesse raigned in men long agoe: and it is not for naught that the scripture speaketh thereof; but yet it is much more nowadayes than euer it was. The Prophet Esay speaking of the attire of women because they were so curious in trimming vp themselues, and had such a sorte of pettie trinkets, deciphereth them particularly as if he had had some inuentorie of their Chiftes, cuen from y crowne of their head vnto the sole of their feete; as their ouches and brouches and such lyke knackes: And hee tels them that God can well skill to make a violent reformation, seeing they were so set vpon their brauerie and toke no care of amending that wickednesse. But we may see nowadayes more of this than euer was heretofore, and no varietie can please men. They are as it were beginning still a fresh to deuise some new thing or other, and are neuer at an end. And what is the cause hereof, but that we shew in deed, how we haue no care at all of our soules, when we are so busied about our bodies; that we let our soules to rust, when through our foolish desires we seecke so many beautiful deckings & such strange inuentions to make a shew of our selues to the worldward? Let vs therefore note that all these curiosities doe bewray that men and women despise God: because they cannot hold themselues within the order of nature which is the true rule to lue by, and so consequently they defile the vse of his creatures. So then we must not stand so much on the threedes where our garments are woven, as who would say, God hath forbidden vs to weare Lincicwolcie: but we must vnderstande that our Lincicwolcie meaning is; we should obserue a simple & natural fashion in our appaile, & not vse such gay glorious fluffams to disguise things nor to seek after such superfluos deckings. For when we doe so, it is al one as if a man would come & disorder an whole house. For example sake, there is an household well ordered: now if one would come and ouerturne the portes and platters, and mingle the sheetes with the handtowels and table-napkins, and so tumble all things together, what a thing woulde that bee? The lyke is done when we cannot keepe such measure as to apply vnto our vse that which God hath giuen; yea which hee hath giuen vs (as I haue tolde you) on condition that wee should eschewe all excessse, and not mingle things together after our owne fantasies. Now if this were well noted, we would by effect shewe that we are a people schooled out for God, and that we haue his word which withholdeth vs from intermingling our selues with the defilements of this world. But if a man would lay forth all the vices which are committed in this behalfe, one sermon would not serue. For we see to what a maze this wickednesse is growen at this day. And that is a great shame. But yet for al that, euery man looketh to his owne profite. When we see that mens fond desires tickle them, then beginne wee to reare vp some new deuce in our braine: and this will be trimme (saith one,) I must needs haue an other new deuce and yet another, & yet a third to that. There is no talke of the necessitie, nor of the vse of things: but first of pleasing the desires of men, and secondly alwayes of making our gayne. And is mony spent vpon those superfluities? Wee must finde out more. And in the meane while there is nothing else but wickednesse, and naughtinesse, wylnesse, and vnfaithfulness among men. And I would to God this were not to be found. But wee ought to thinke better hereon than wee haue done. Ye see how we are to practise this doctrine, where God hauing spoken of food, cometh to speake of apparall, and sayth, there shall be no such varietie as might serue to paint out men and to peruert al the simplicitie which is in nature. And in deed if our sight were not ouerdimme, we should easily discern this matter, and say: this and this is not conuenient. But what? wicked custome hath so put vs out of the right way, that we be as blind herein as Beetes. Why can we not iudge, that there is nothing but confusion in our lyfe? Because we are so drunken with the filthie dregges of our superfluities, that wee haue lost all sense and are become more than blockish. But if wee would take vnto vs such as haue lued in playne simplicitie, and bring them aside a little to beholde how men leade their lyfe, and to see how they haue to day one thing, to morrow another, and how they are euery day to beginne againe, and how they are alwayes forging of some new deuices, to put that out of vie which was in fashion but three dayes agoe, and all to gaine mony afresh: and to see how others spend to maintain their shewes and their braueries, if (I say) some of these good meaning men which haue bin brought vp in playnesse should see this: they would spit at such follies. But yet for all that we are not to be excused. Although our vices blinde vs, yet the Lawe of God shall alwayes remaine. It shall remaine (I say) to our vtter confusion, if we aduise not our selues better to reclaime our selues, and to reforme vs to that stayednesse which God hath commaunded vs.

Now it is sayd moreover, That the Iewes should make at the neather parts of their garmentes, fringes, or borders that is to say, their garmentes should haue a large border, and be plighted in the edges: as mention is made hereof in the fifteenth Chap. of the booke of Numbers. For there it is sayd that they shall haue fine cordes or laces of silke to folde together the borders of their garments. And why? The reason is there expressed. For otherwise this place would be obscure. It is sayd here: thou shalt make thee fringes, or borders vpon the soure neather partes, or quarters of thy garment. If there were no mo wordes than so, a man might demaund why, and not be answered. But God in that place sayth that that fashion should serue them for a monument. Thou shalt thinke thereby that thou art a people dedicated vnto God, who hath chosen thee to himselfe to be thy protectour. In so small a thing then God meant to admonish his people to say: see, Wee are not as the Paynims who walke after their owne fancies: for God hath deliuered vnto vs his lawe, to the end to holde vs fast, to the keeping thereof. And we haue seene the lyke to this before in the fourth Chapter. For when God sayd there, that the Iewes ought to exercise themselues alwayes in thinking vpon his Lawe, he sayd: you shall haue some sentence of my Law written vpon the postes of the dores: wher you are at y<sup>e</sup> table you shall haue something thereof yea, you shall beare my Law about you, and decke your selues therewith. Whereas others haue their braelets and images of golde, you shall haue some parcell of my Lawe to put you in minde that your God speaketh vnto you, and will not that you forget his doctrine: yea he will haue you to make fringes and other ornamentes thereof. And so whereas others haue their guildings which serue to no other end but to pride and worldlie vanitie; you shall haue your garmentes decked with some sentence or other of my Lawe: to the intent you may bee put in minde to say: Behold, it is my Gods wil that I should delight my selfe with his Lawe; that I should take my whole pleasure therein, and that I should adorne and deck my selfe therewithall. As touching my life, I will shew that I haue bin brought vp in his schoole. For seeing he hath so vnitd himselfe vnto me, his praise and glorie ought to shine in me before men that they may knowe I haue not bin circumcised in vaine, nor receiued the signe of his couenant for naught, to be coupled vnto the Church of God. According hereunto it is now sayd, that the Iewes must make them fringes on the foure quarters of their garmentes, and put laces thereon. Now I tolde you that in so small a thing, God meant to deliuer a good and profitable lesson. For when the Iewes closed vp in this sorte the endes and borders of their garmentes, which were otherwise made than ours are, they were admonished thereby, that God ruled them as if they had bin tyed by the heele. As who should say: When thou walkest thou must keepe thy selfe in the way of thy G O D, and bee so hedged in for thy whole lyfe time, y<sup>e</sup> thou passe not measure. I graunt this might serue well for honestie to ty their clothes so with small cordes, or laces, y<sup>e</sup> they might couer their whole bodies. For being open & vsfowed on both sides, it would haue bin an vsightlie thing if they should not haue bin tyed. This might then serue well for honestie comlines. But there is in it a higher reason than so, as is expressed in y<sup>e</sup> same place of Numbers: that is to wit, that God meant to betoken thereby, some such admonition as this: see if a man haue his legges vnbound and at will, hee is gadding by and by & leaping; but thy God will haue thee to haue these lases tyed in this maner to teache thee so to measure all thy paces, y<sup>e</sup> the law of thy God may euer rule thee, & that thou maist obserue it in all pointes, and neuer turn aside from it. Ye see then in effect what we haue to beare in mind vpon this place. Now this Ceremonie is no longer in vse, these fringes and these laces are comprised vnder those shadowes which were done away at the coming of Christ. But yet at this day let vs note, that Gods will is that we should exercise vs in his Law in all respectes. And seeing we are out of this bondage which serued for yong children, let vs know we ought to be so much the more earnest in minding the law of God: so as we be warned and aduertised by these fringes and lases and other like things, that our Lordes will is that his law should serue vs for a reitrait, to teach vs that we haue not yet the libertie to doe what we list, but that our handes and feete, soules and senses, and all the partes of our bodies and affections of our mindes, bee hold restrained by his biddings and forbiddings. And so much the more heedfully ought we to note this, because we see how me haue alwayes dalyed with God and peruerred all sounde doctrine. For the Iewes bare themselves in hand, that they had discharged their whole dutie, whē they made faire large fringes and had written on them goodly sentences of the scripture in great capitall letters. This was all their holynes, as our Lord Iesus vpbraided the Scribes, y<sup>e</sup> Pharisees, & Priests: who because they would haue a more speciall holynesse than the common sorte; had great large gardes, & vpon them sentenes of y<sup>e</sup> lawe written which might bee scene a farre off. After which maner when the Monks haue their Frockes, & their Coules and all the rest of their baggage vpon them, O they are no lesse than halfangels: & yet in the meane time, vnder these holy vestimentes, they throwde vile and wicked desires, yea and such outrageous enormities, as shew them to be monsters made contrarie to all nature. And so was it at y<sup>e</sup> time. And why? For the world thinketh to pay God with hypocisie. We ought therefore to much y<sup>e</sup> more hee defullie to note y<sup>e</sup> meaning & the truth of the Law; that is to wit, that our Lorde maketh no account of this smaller trash, y<sup>e</sup> men should haue either fringes, or lases on y<sup>e</sup> skirtes of their garmentes; but his wil is that men should exercise themselves in his doctrine, & apply it to the proper vse. Seeing then it is so, let vs aduise our selues well, and not abuse the libertie which is giuen vs in y<sup>e</sup> Gospell; but let vs be ashamed, if being come to y<sup>e</sup> age of men, we haue no wit in comparison of the fathers which liued vnder the Lawe, to frame our selues vnto the wil of God. In deede in respect of our selues wee are but little children; but yet in cōparison of the people of olde time, we should be olde ones, & tull & ripe in yecres. Let vs then be ashamed if y<sup>e</sup> Law of God which should serue vs for a bond cannot holde vs backe; but we are carryed headlong into all wickednesse. Let vs bethinke vs of keeping our selues in such an estate, as we may meue that God hath not without good cause shooled vs out vnto his seruice, that we will not take such lawles libertie, as the ignorant and vnbeleeuing do, who haue no guide nor direction.

Now let vs kneele downe before the face of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him y<sup>e</sup> being touched with liuely repētaunce, we may runne vnto him who hath the remedie in his hand to help vs: And pray we him that of his goodnesse and fatherlie courtesie he will beare with vs vntill he hath clothed vs with that fulnes of righteousnesse and holynesse whereunto we tend. And let vs notwithstanding not cease to bewaile our selues before him, vntill he haue fully deliuered vs from all those staines which are in vs. And so let vs say, Almighty God and heauenly Father, &c.

On Tewsdai the xiiii. of Ianuarie. 1556.

The Cxxvij. Sermon which is the fourth vpon the two and twentieth Chapter.

13 If a man take a wife, and when he hath lyen with her, hate her,

14 And laye slaunderous things vnto her, and bring vp an euil reporte of her, and say: I toke this wife, and when I came to her I found her not a maide:

15 Then shall the father and the mother of the maide take the signes of her virginitie and bring them forth before the elders vnto the gate.

16 And the maids father shall say vnto the elders: I gaue my daughter vnto this man to wife, and hee hateth her:

17 And lo he layeth slaunderous things to her charge: saying, I founde not thy daughter a mayde: notwithstanding beholde the tokens of my daughters virginitie. And they shal sprede the vestures before the elders of the Citie.

18 Then the elders of the Citie shall take that man and chastice him.

19 And shall condemne him in an hundred pieces of siluer, and giue them vnto the father of the maide: because he hath brought vp an euil report vpon a maide of Israell, and she shalbe his wife, and he may not put her away as long as he shall liue.

20 But if this thing be true that the young woman be not founde a maide :

21 Then shal they bring forth the maide to the doore of her fathers house, & the men of the Citie shall stone her with stones, and she shall die: because she hath doone leawdly in Israell, by playing the whore in her fathers house, and so thou shalt put away the euill from a mong you.

22 If a man be founde lying with a woman married vnto an husband: they shall die euen both twaine: namely the man which lay with the wife, and the wife her selfe. And so thou shalt take away the euill out of Israell.

23 If a mayde be betrothed vnto a husband, and a man finde her in the Citie and lye with her:

24 Then shal yee bring them both vnto the gate of the Citie, and stone them with stones that they die: the mayde because she cried not out being in the citie, and the man because he hath humbled his neighbours wife, and so shalt thou take away this euill from among you.

Ll this which we haue here recited serueth to declare what speciall care God hath, that chastitie should be maintained among his people. And hereof wee may gather this, that if whoredomes haue their full skope among vs, it is such an abomination in the sight of God, that it prouoketh his wrath and vengeance. And that people must needs be accursed, among whom there is a lawles libertie to goe a whorehunting, and where this vile filthinesse is not clenfed. Ye see then in effect whereunto we must apply this whole doctrine. But yet for all that, we must note the things as they are set down here, to the intent we may apply euery point vnto his vse. First of all therefore our Lord sheweth, that by great reason he ought to be chastised, which bringeth vp a slanderous report vpon any body: for euery mans estimation ought to be maintained.

Moreover, that if a man or woman complayne that he is wrongfully accused, when notwithstand- ing he is found faultie, his punishment ought to be doubled. And from this Lawe we may gather a good lesson. We know how it is sayd: y a mans good name is better and more precious than either golde or siluer. And if a man bee once pastt shame, it is a sure token that he is wedded to all wickednesse. It is natural therefore to euery man, to maintayne his credite. In deede we must not be ambitiously giuen, as they which couet naught else but to be esteemed of men.

We woorth vs if we goe that way to worke. But we ought (as Saint Paul sayth) to procure that which is good, not onely in conscience before God, but also in the sight of men; to the intent that we be not a stumbling blocke of offence, and that men take vs not for a buckler, when they will doe amisse, and alledge, and did not such a one doe so? For what a thing were it if men should take occasion on by vs, to offend God? Ye see then to what end we ought to maintayne our credit as much as lyeth in vs.

And for this cause it is sayd here, that if any ather that he hath taken a woman to wife, accuseth her that she behaued herselfe lewdlie before he tooke her, then the father and the mother shall come and maintaine the honestie of their daughter: and the man which shall bee found to haue wrongfullie charged her whome hee had espoused, shall bee punished both in his bodie and in his purse: and their daughter shall so remaine with him, that he may neuer bee diuorced from her. Wee see now how God would not suffer the husband to accuse the wife wrongfully, and therefore by greater reason it may bee concluded, that it is not lawfull for a stranger to slander one in respect of chastitie which is found innocent. For the husband might alledge that he hath more libertie to doe so, because hee is her head and superiour. But in any wise God will not that a woman bee falsely accused, and hee commaundeth that the husband should bee punished for so doing, yea, and that in his very person. For besides that monie which is here set downe, there was a further appointed correction by the Iudges. And let vs note that this was done, not onely to maintaine the womans good name, but also to moue women the more to liue chaste, when God declarth himselfe the protector of their honestie. When we see that God hath this care that they which liue honestly and wout reproofe haue their good name also maintained, and that the husband that be chastised if he slander his wife: when God (I say) abaseth himselfe to execute this office; should women be so beastly and wicked as to giue themselves ouer to vnchast villanie? No: for surelie this priuiledge cannot be to highly esteemed, & yet they make a skorne of it. Ye see then what the end is which God aimed at, and what wee haue to beare in minde in this Lawe.

Now withall let vs note, that when Iudges and Magistrates are warned of their office, euery one in particular ought to gather an instruction hereby. As how? If a false reporte be raised on one which is innocent; the office of them which beare the sword, is to maintaine the good name of euery one. That is it which God commaundeth them. As for vs on our side, let vs not waite for our punishment: at the handes of Iudges and Magistrates for false accusing of any: But let vs keepe our selues from all slandering, first it is a thing which so highly displeaseth G O D. Let vs therefore take heedde how wee open our mouth to stayne any mans credit. And why? because that howsoeuer men beare with vs for it, yet it displeaseth God. In deed he hath commaunded that it should be punished. But whether men punnish it or winke at it; yet God will alwayes shewe that he will not suffer the person of any man to be wrongfully greued. Ye see then, how the thing which we haue to beare in minde, is that wee must liue vprightly together and take heede that none be falsly charged or slandered, and that if there be any wickednesse, we must doe our best to take it away. But to deale vpon hatred and ill will or to be so maliciously bent to slandering as to backbite our neighbors, or to be venomous roused, and to diffame one another: is such an outrageous fault as God can in no wise suffer.

But on the other side let vs note, that as Gods will is that such as be innocent should be maintained in their good reputation: so contrariwise if any man complaine that he hath wrong done him and yet be found faultie and is conuicted of the crime of which he sayd he was cleare; hee deserueth to be dubblic punished, as wee haue thereof here an example. If a mans daughter make complaint against her husband, & her father and mother take her part: well, reason is they shal be heard to speake. But if the young woman be found faultie, and haue behaued her selfe amisse; although it were before shee was married, before shee was bounde to her husbande, before shee was betrothed: yet for all this it is Gods will that shee be stoned. And why? for it is a kinde of theft, if one knowing himselfe faultie, will for all that be so shamelesse, as to challenge vnto himselfe the honor which appertaineth not vnto him. If a man haue offended, he must cast his eyes to the ground: If one accuse vs, we must be fory and desire God to burie our faults. Now contrariwise if we be so shamelesse and bolde to wrye our mouth, and to say, rusee we did no such thing: what a presumptuousnesse is that? And yet notwithstanding nothing is more common nowadays than that. For they which are the leawdest of all other, if a man giue them a nippe for their vices, yea though it be as farre off, will make greatest outcryes, and if their credit be not maintained, O how they thinde: Who are they which nowadays doe beare the countenance of honest men? Euen a sort of rascalles which are nothing worth, and in whom is nothing but vtter naughtines. He that is an honest man in deede, is almost ashamed to be called an honest man, because the title of honestie which should haue bin holy, is so defiled. For euery man vnhallotheweth it, because euery man chalengeth it, & the veryest naughtipackes and the leawdest persons (as I sayd afore) doe clayme it most boldly. For not onely euery man with full mouth, vaunteth himselfe to be an honest, found, and true dealing man: but also if ye blame him, although he be neuer so faultie, he will threaten you with an action of slander. And if such be an hundred times conuicted they make none account of it. But our Lorde speaketh otherwise thereof: his will is that who soeuer chalengeth vnto himselfe that credite which is not his due, should be double punished: so as if hee deserued to be whipped, hee should be put to death, because hee abusethe iustice in such sorte, and maketh a skorne of it; and would that men should iudge him for an honest and good man, when there is apparat wickednes in him. Ye see then here a point which is well woorth the noting, namely that as Iudges & Magistrates are bound to maintaine the good name of them which are faultles: so also on y contrarie side, if they see men shameles which would be maintained vnder colour of iustice, and enioy the priuiledge of good men & of such as haue liued honestly and without reproofe, they should vse the greater rigor and seueritie towards them. And why? Because if they had stolt but hie shillings, they should haue bene punished: but now they haue stolen y which is much more worth, that is to wit, the name of vertue. And from who stealte they it? Euen from al good men. For they would put themselves in the aray of such as haue walked in the feare of God and in al honest conuersation before men: they would be esteemed for good men, whom they defile w.th their filthines and corruptiōs by mingling themselves in amongst them. So then forasmuch as they make such a confusion, they deserue to be y more grieuouly punished. If one play the theefe, and will for al that iustifie himselfe, & bee quitted from the crime which is laid against him: if afterward hee be conuicted thereof, whereas an other which shal haue committed but single theft deserueth to be whipped; the former ought to be led to the gallowes. For it is robbetie committed against God, when he would be so quitted & cleared vnder the colour of iustice, as who would say, I will be accounted guiltles [whosoer sayes nay to it.] Such manner of dealing is a defiling of the throne of iustice, and a spoiling of mens estimation, which haue liued wel (as I haue said afore) and the next way to confound al things, so as no man may know any longer how to discern betweene good and euil. And all this would come to passe if this wickednes should be admitted & suffered to haue his sway. This is the thing which we haue to beare in minde.

But now when we know that Gods wil is that men should proceed according to iustice, there is comprised herein a warning for vs almanely that we should haue an eye vnto our conscience that it be pure, so as if men accuse vs, God may answer for vs, and be as it were our warrant. The thing (say I) which is shewed vs in this place, & which we may gather here vpon, is, that if we be accused, we may say it is wrongfully. And before whom? Before God. For it will not boote vs at al to be iustified before men. Our wickednesse may wel be hidden, wee may borrowe some cloke for it, but yet for all that G O D alloweth not of vs. And what steede then shall all the rest stande vs in? Nay and if we be so shamelesse, (as we see nowadays many are,) that albeit their wickednesse be knowne euen to little children, yet they care not, so they be not conuicted by two or three witnesses: what a thing is that? Therefore if wee haue a care of our good name, let vs first of all walke in such vprightnesse before God, that if we be charged wrongfully with any thing, we may call God to cleare vs, and haue our recourse vnto him to say, Lord thou knowest that I finde my selfe guiltlesse, vouchsafe therefore to stretch forth thy hande, as thou hast promised, to defende mine innocēcie, as the scripture saith  $\bar{y}$  God wil make  $\bar{y}$  righteousness of his seruants to shine forth as the breake of the day. Nowe therefore when wee bee falsely distamed, let vs waite vntill GOD redresse it, and let vs knowe that in the ende, when wee haue beene humbled for a time, hee will make manifest the iniurie that men haue done vs. But let vs alwayes haue our recourse vnto him: which thing cannot bee, except we be well assured of our owne innocency. And moreouer let vs take heede that we liue so with men, that if wee be accused they may be constrained to say: It is wrongfully: or at the least they may be astonished & say, What meaneth this? This man hath liued so honestly, that he neuer deserved any euil report. So let our life answer for vs, notwithstanding that men report euill of vs. Yee see in what fort we are here to proceede.

And because heere is expresse mention made of women, let them which will haue the good report of chastitie, take heede to walke in such sort as no suspicion may be raised on them, nor any occasion bee giuen of speaking euil of them. But what? We see nowadays many sic dames which play the harlottes closely; who because the world doeth not charge them with it, will needs be counted for honest women. And what tokens shewe they thereof? Yee see then howe the thing which wee haue to gather vpon this which God hath set downe here, is, That if a father or a mother complaine, and the daughter be founde void of all crime, that she shall haue her estimation maintained: and on the other side, that if shee be founde guiltie, shee shall be the more grieuously punished, even by stoning to death, albeit shee haue not played the harlot before time, because she hath complained wrongfully, and hath commenced her action in forme of Lawe, and vniuently claimed vnto her selfe that honourable tide, which shee through her owne fault hath lost. And hereby we may perceiue, that wee must not forbear to punish offences, for feare of false accusation. For nowadays if a man woulde beleue many men, there shoulde be no lawes to punish faultes and offences. And they alleage that it is done to shunne other inconueniences: yea, but shall wee in the meane while giue way to all lawlesse behauiour, and shake off all yoke and all correction from vs? What then woulde come therof in the ende, but beastly confusion in all places? And therefore although sometime there may be feare of false accusations and slanders, yet must wee not leaue the vse of chastisements and corrections, so far forth as reason and indifferencie require, but remedies ought to be prouided against the, as we see howe our Lord doth heere, in that hee willeth that the case be tried, if an husband raise a false report vpon his wife. Now then there must bee an orderly and lawfull manner of proceeding on both sides; so as the wickednes may not remaine unpunished, and also that such as are innocent bee maintained, and that meane obserued which our Lord sheweth vs. Yee see in effect what we haue to note vpon this place.

Let vs now returne vnto that generall point which we touched afore: namely, that God in all these lawes, declareth what a pleasaunt thing chastitie is in his eyes: and contrariwise howe hee cannot suffer the filthinesse of whoredome to raigne among his people. For by  $\bar{y}$  punishments which are set downe here, we may gather how grieuous and intollerable a wickednesse it is. And why? because wee knowe that God exceedeth not measure, when hee punisheth sinnes, but that he doeth it with discretion. Let vs therefore conclude, that if the punishment bee rigorous, it is because the sinne also is great and excessive. It is verie true that God doth not alwayes punish sinnes as they deserue; In somuch that hee permitteh a kinde of diuorcement among the Israelites, and also when a man played the fornicatour, hee was discharged so hee promised marriage vnto the maide and tooke her vnto wife. But albeit our Lorde in respect of the hardnesse of that peoples heart, ordeyned not alwayes such precise lawes as to punish them according vnto their desertes: yet wee shall not erre at all if wee make this conclusion, namely, that if God haue punished any fault of theirs, it is to declare vnto vs that the thing displeaseth him, and that it is not to be borne withal, and that wee prouoke his anger: and therefore that wee must stoop vnto him, sith wee see that hee hath appointed certaine punishments, & that it shall cost vs deare if we become not the better by them.

And this is the cause why S. Paul declareth that the punishments which God hath executed, are as looking glasses & liuely pictures, because we may gather thereby, that God will be alwayes a iust Iudget to execute the like vengeance vpon them which restraîne not themselves willingly from the like wickednesse, by beholding the warning which hee hath giuen them. As how? He alledgeth that God punished those which were rebellious among his people, so grieuouly that the earth opened and swallowed them vp which did set vp themselves against Moses and Aaron. Againe wee see howe their iustes were punished in that GOD thundered downe from heauen vpon them. Indeede hee sent them the meate which they desired: but it had bene much better for them to haue starued for hunger, than to haue payed so deare for their shotte, as to swallowe vp the vengeance of God together with their meate, which they vnlawfully desired. As for whoredome, there was so grieuous a punishment for it, and the wrath of God was so kindled against his people that they were like to haue beene vtterly rooted out. Seeing then that we haue such warninges (saith S. Paul) let vs learne to feare and take heede, that we tempt not God wittingly. For this is alone as if wee woulde defie him, if when wee see him set vs such a barre and to threaten vs by other mens harmes, yet wee cease not to followe the same wickednesse. This is al one (say I) as if we woulde defie him, and proclaime open warre against him. So then let vs learne, that when God or dayneth any execution of punishment, it is not only to the intent that he which hath offended shoulde bee chastised; but also that wee shoulde take it for a rule to learne howe to be-10 haue our selues as we ought, and not be so senselesse as to cast our selues headlong into wickednesse, seeing our lesson so written before our eies. And so to bee short, let all the corrections which are contained in the Lawe serue vs for so manie bridles to restraine vs withal; and let them teach vs to walke in the feare of God, or at least let vs take them for preferuatiue medicines, and let vs not tarie till the mischief light on vs, but prouide for our selues before hande and pray God that hee so guide vs as we taste not of his anger. And let vs put that in practise also which S. Paul saith speaking of adulteries and such like things that no man deceiue vs with vaine words. Take heede saith hee yee bee not deceiued: for the worlde dispenseth easlie with it selfe euē so far as to dalle w God, & to set his iustice at nought: but bee not you deceiued in that behalfe (saith hee) for the wrath of God commeth vpon the children of disobedience for those things. Nowe if God by punishing of sinnes sheweth howe hee detesteth them, in that hee setteth downe a law in writing, and appointeth Iudges and Magistrates to execute that which he commaundeth, I pray you is it not a most certaine warning, and such a one as ought to touch vs more neare the quicke? And if for all this we will be stubborne and hardhearted in our wickednesse, is it not a rushing with our hornes against God, as I haue saide already? [Yes surely]. And therefore let vs note that seeing God hath punished adu-20 uerties so grievously, it is to stewe vnto vs, that it is so great a sithinesse as cannot but nourishe his wrath and vengeance. Therefore his will is that aboute all things faithfulnessse should bee kept in marriage.

Now here the speciall case is of adulteries. Without doubt all kinde of whoredome displeaseth God. For we must euer returne backe to this principle or grounde, that sith God blessed man and woman, when he ioyned them in marriage, he curseth all whoredome, accordingly as the Apostle also saith, That marriage is holy & honourable; in somuch that when the bedde is dedicated vnto the name of God; that is to say, when the parties are ioyned together in his name, and do lue honorablie, it is as it were an halowed estate: but adulterers and fornicatours God will iudge. He speaketh not onely of adulterers, that is to say of such as haue broken their owne marriage and the marriage of others, but also hee speaketh generally and without excep-30 tion of all them which giue ouer themselves vnto any manner of whoredome, in respect wherof S. Paul saith also that not onely adulterers are shut out & banished from y kingdom of God, but fornicatours also. And againe we see that when hee speaketh of such as lue a wicked and loose life, and therefore ought to be excommunicated and cast out of the Church; hee speaketh not onely of adulterers, but of fornicatours also. And the reason why, is most worthie noting. For what are our bodies and soules, but the temples of the holy Ghost? Seeing God vouchsafeth vs this honour to dwell in our soules and bodies, 40 is it not great reason that they shoulde bee kept holy and vndefiled? And if a man soyle himselfe by coupling himselfe with an harlot, is it not all one as if he woulde teare in piéces the bodie of our Lord Iesus Christ? Let vs therefore note that generally God detesteth all kinde of whoore-dome.

But hee speaketh in this place of adulteries, because in them there is the greater villanie. And why? because if a maide promise marriage and falsifie the faith she hath plighted, shee defileth not onely her owne bodie, and so consequently violateth the temple of God, but the also dishonoreth her husbande with whome shee was coupled, so that the robberth another of his good, yea of such good as cannot bee recom-50 pensed with golde or siluer. For the setteth him forth vnto open shame, for whom (if neede so required) shee shoulde spend her life. Is it meete then that it should be suffered? Therefore let vs note that whereas our Lordes will is, that the maides which haue promised marriage should be stoned if they commit whoredome: it is because they haue committed villany against their husbandes in not keeping their faith to whome they were betrothed. And therefore he wil that such a fornicatour bee likewise punished. And why? Because hee robberth an other man of his good name, and breaketh an holy and sacred promise. Men punish falsifiers and forgers: As for example: if a man steale a publicke Recorde [as an indenture, deede, bonde, or such like] or falsifie it, hee shalbe grievously punished. & is not marriage a greater thing than a contract of an hundred crownes, or a bargaine of an house or of land? This case concerneth the fellowship of two reasonable creatures, yea and their fellow-60 ship for life and death; the case concerneth an holy bande which God himselfe hath established among vs, yea and that to this intent that al confusion should be taken out of the world, so as we should not be like vnto brute beastes which couple together wout any difference, but that y mā shoulde haue his wife & the wife her husbande. And if this be violated and taken away, al order of nature is corrupted. If we play the blinde busfards and winke at such gear, & so let it slip: let vs not deceiue our selues for all that; for God will require it with horrible reuenge. And we see it is not without cause that God hath so grievously punished the fornications of such as had promised or betrothed themselves vnto husbandes.

And if this bee so with them, what shall bee saide of the wife which is already married? For shee is giuen to an husbande to helpe him to gouerne his house in the name of god; & if she giue

Eph. 5.6.

Heb. 13.4.

1. Cor. 6. 9.

giue her selfe ouer to villainously vnto whoredome, shee not onely robbeth her husbände of his good name, and worketh him a great outrage, but shee spoileth also the name of the whole familie: For shee playeth the whore with another man, and the children which she beareth, through that whoredome, doe beare the name of her husband. And againe the goods and substance of the man are taken from the lawfull children, and be giuen to bastardest which haue no title thereunto. And is not y<sup>e</sup> a more wicked villanie, than if one had broken vp an house, rifled all the coffers, spoyled and taken away all things, and committed the greatest robberies in the world? Yes verily, and it ought lesse to be borne withall: and that knewe the heathen men well ynough. If we had no more but the Lawe of Moses, yet ought we to be more ashamed to see whoredome: nowadayes so easly pardoned, and so small account to be made of it. But when the heathen men teach vs our lesson, and vse better order by a great deale than those which at this daye call themselves Christians, I pray you what a witness will that be against vs at the latter daye? Blind men haue bene of more clearer sight than we. Wee Christians say continually, that Iesus Christ hath brought a true declaration of the Lawe, to the intent we should knowe that that is our perfect holinesse which is there contained. In deede hee added nothing thereunto. But yet neuertheless we ought to be better learned than the fathers which liued before the Gospell. But how profite we? There is no account made, nowadayes of whoredome. Wedlocke is broken, faith is falsified; & yet men make no reckning of it, yet passeeth scottie. In what state then thinke yee are wee? If men will shifte the matter by saying, Oh sir yee must beare with our weaknesse; thinke wee it shall be taken for payment before God? Is not his worde alwayes vnuocable? Is it not all one as if he should say: Haue yee no care of that which I commaunde you? And what are yee? Are you trowe yee wiser than I? Well, I will make you to knowe that I am your Iudge. And let vs note well that the sinne and wickednesse is doubled, when men cannot finde in their hearts to yeelde vnto that which God hath once spoken, but will needes choppe Logike with him. So then let vs knowe that there is a double woe threatened vs when wee see God on the one side speaketh vnto vs and telleth vs that whoredome is such a pestilent infection as hee can in no wise suffer it, and that hee declareth when marriage which hee hath dedicated in his name is corrupted, that it must needes be punished. When wee heare that God proceedeth vnto such seueritie, and also see, that euen onely by nature hee hath inspired the heathen to knowe that there could be no order among men, except whoredome should be seuerely punished, what are wee able to say? Nowe then first of all wher eas it is saide heere, that a maide which hath betrothed her selfe vnto an husbände shall be stoned with the fornicator, if shee suffer herselfe to be defiled: wee must vnderstande that seeinge shee was so leaude as to falsifie her faith, yea and that in so holy and sacred a thing as is marriage, our Lord esteemed her as one giuen ouer to all vice and sinne. For a woman which plaieeth the harlot, is alreadie worse than a thief, because shee hath done much worse in working her husbände such wrong and villanie, than if shee had robbed him of his monie. Moreover wee must returne to this point, namely to consider of the promise that is made in marriage of howe great importance it is. For we knowe to what ende marriage was ordained, namely, to the intent that men should liue honestlie together, and that there should be no such beastlie loosenesse of coupling themselves together like dogges and bitches, or like bulles and kyne, but that they should shewe that they beare not the likenesse of God in vaine. Seeing then that marriage is ordained vnto this ende; if men will walk cleane contrarie, is it not an open defiance of God? Is it not a plucking of him out of his throne, and such a wypping out of his image as men can no more knowe themselves; but become as bulles and dogges? Therefore when men fall to such extremitie, must not God shew forth his anger?

But let vs alwayes returne vnto that point which wee named before; that as this commandement is giuen vnto Iudges and Magistrates touching euill order, so ought euerie of vs to be admonished of his duetie, that wee walke more carefully, in our vocatiō. If such as beare y<sup>e</sup> scepter of iustice in their hands, do suffer whoredome to raigne and wedlocke to be broken, so as neither faith nor promise be kept any longer: they shall yeeld an account hereof vnto God. But yet for all that, let vs looke vnto our selues, and let euerie man so walke, as y<sup>e</sup> he haue not God for his Iudge. For what shall we winne by scaping y<sup>e</sup> hands of men so as our offence is not perceiued, or else we be by some wicked flitts & practises quit from punishment, and no man sayes a word vnto vs. Yet for al that, we must come to our reckening before God, who will not lose one iot of his right. Although men be negligent or play the blinde men, yet will God in the end shew that he forgate no peece of our doings, but registred the euerie one in his booke. Let vs therefore take heed we walke in such sort, as wee esteeme tyme of marriage. And forasmuch as wee see y<sup>e</sup> God beareth rule ouer it and accuseth al adulterers and fornicators, let that moue vs to be helde in the greater feare and carefulnesse. We see howe the Paynims for al their superstitions and ydolatries, had yet I knowe not what a blind motion, whereby they were perswaded for the better maintaining of marriages that their gods or rather ydolls were the protectours thereof. And why thought they so? It was euen of a meere follie. I graunt it; but yet this folly of theirs proceeded from a good ground. They were corrupted with superstitions and had imbrewed it with their inuentions and errors. But yet neuertheless, this alwayes remained, & was so engrauen in their mindes as it coulde not be wiped out, that God meant there should be such a marke in marriage and that men should know that hee had a care of it. Seeing it is so, let vs take good heed that wee make not God our enimie and aduersarie partie, which doubtlesse we shall doe, if wee falsifie the faith of marriage. If a man lay waite for an other mans wife, it a woman giue her selfe ouer to a whoremonger, bee shee married or be she betrothed, if they falsifie the promise which they plighted, and breake y<sup>e</sup> faith which they gaue; it is all one as if they wa- 10 ged battle with God, and they shall feele that they deale with too hard a match. Let vs therefore walke in such stayednesse, as our Lord may accept of vs, and that we may finde fauour in his sight: Let euerie of vs resist his wicked lusts, and not giue our selues the bridle to ouer leape our bounds so farre as to venter to corrupt fo holy an order.

Nowe if the punishment be so grieuous when a maide which is but betrothed committeth for- 20 nication: much more reason is it that it should bee so in a married woman, as I saide afore. And why? Because shee wrongeth her husband, shee setteth him out into open shame, shee spoileth also the name of his house, shee robbeth the children which are yet vnborne, shee robbeth those which are alreadie begotten in lawfull wedlocke. When a woman is become such a diuell, what other remedie can there bee, than to roote out the whole mischiefe? And this is the cause why it is expressly saide, Thou shalt put away 30 she euill from thee. Heereby our Lorde ment to giue vs to vnderstande, that if men suffer a woman vnpunished wher she is growen to such wickednesse as not to picke her owne children, they suffer a monster to liue. For what may one think that woman to be but a monster, which hath no regarde of her children, and which maketh no account to haue bastards mingled with lawfull children? And that is a thing contrarie to al na- 40 ture. Sothen (as I haue tolde you) the fault must needes be extreme, when the punishment is so grieuous, that God will haue it serue vs for an example, and that they which haue been offensive by their life, should serue for an instruction vnto others by their death, that they may learne to keepe themselves chaste. Thus yee see what we haue to beare in minde.

Nowe touching whooremasters, they are guiltye of the like. Indeede the woman shall 50 not be spared, because she hath falsified her faith towards her husbande, and hath committed an vnardonable crime. If a man risse his neighbours coffer, hee shall be punished, & that not as a single thiefe, but as a robber. But the whorehunter commeth to defile y<sup>e</sup> whole house, hee commeth to infect it with whoredome, hee commeth to robbe his neighbor of his honour, credite, and good name, and in steed of the right seede, hee through cursed and villanous false- 60 nesse, deliuereth a strange and bastarde seede. Therefore if a man commit such a robberie, I pray you is it a sinne to bee punished with eight dayes imprisonment onely; and peraduenture by being put to breade and water, that is to say, to be sealed at the tauerne? For wee see that the punishmentes which are vsed nowadayes a gainst adulterers and fornicators are but a meere mockerie both of God, and of Iustice, and of Lawes, and of all ciuill order. For when a man is put in prison for committing adulterie, or for playing of y<sup>e</sup> fornicator, it is all one as if he were put there for men to bring him euerie man his glasse of wine and to say, Taste which is the best. If he were in his owne house, he would be contented with ordinarie: but there hee shall bee at greater choyce than if he were in a common tauerne. Euerie man will come to visite him, yea forsooth, the poore prisoner must be pitied. Yee see what is ordinarily done in this behalfe. And as for my selfe, I haue prayed God that whoredome might rather goe vnpunished, than proceede in that order as we see it doth nowadayes. For it is a setting of Iustice forth to open shame, and skorning of God and of all his command- 20 mentes. And therefore wee neede not to meruaile if whoredoms be so rife, seeing they which offende are sent so to the tauerne. But let vs put the case that the Lawe were obserued, and that adulterers and fornicators were locked vp in close ward, there to fast with breade and water. What is al that? O, saies one, they shall fast three dayes or (as some say) nine dayes. Yea but if a thiefe be taken and accused, he shall be indited, hee shall be clapt vp by the heeles in the stocks, hee shall be manacled and tyed with an halter, and in the ende sent to the gallowes: or when hee scape- 30 peth best for some pettie fishing, hee shall bee whipt. And why? Oh he is a thiefe, he hath robbed a man, hee hath cut a purse in the open market place. And what hath the whooremonger done? Questionlesse hee hath done worse in entering into the bedde which God had hallow- 40 ed in his owne name, than if he had committed all the theueries in the worlde. Hee hath matched himselfe in whoredome like a beast: and is not this an intollerable offence, and such a one as ought to bee punished to the full? If wee open not our eyes to beholde it, yet the Lawe of Moses must needes condemne vs. But besides this, the Painims (who haue obserued a better order than wee, and haue had lawes to punish whoremongers and to cause wedlocke to be kept vn- 50 defiled) euen they shall rise vp against vs in the latter day, and shall proue that we offended not of ignorance, or for lacke of warning, but of wilfull malice, because wee would foster such wickednesse.

True it is indeede that this wicked custome is come from great antiquitie, as the Papistes will say that wee are not vnder the Lawe but vnder grace, and therefore we must not punish whoredome. But it is a mocking of God when we take the Law of grace for a Lawlesse libertie to commit all wickednesse. And albeit our Lorde Ie- 60 sus Christ punished not the woman which was taken in adulterie; wee may not say therefore, that he hath giuen vs leaue to commit adultery. For why? Hee refused also to bee Iudge: and being desired to part the inheritance betweene two brethren, he woulde not doe it. Must wee therefore say that such partings are not lawful?

Iohn. 8. 14

No. But this was to shewe that hee came not to be an arbiter and a Iudge. Againe let vs note that he saith, No man accuseth thee, therefore I condemne thee not. But withall let vs knowe, that he came not to take away the law of his father or to breake al order, or to make his church a hogges stye as it is nowadayes, by graunting men libertie to doe all manner of euill: No, No; Be it farre from vs to impute such a crime vnto our Lorde Iesus Christ: for that were a blaspheming of him aboue measure. But let vs know that whereas we haue here this law, it ought to serue vs for an instruction vnto the end of the worlde, that we may walke in such chastitie, that when we haue kept mariages vndefiled among vs, wee may looke for the blessing of God which shall cause vs to prosper.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, and that we may be so cleane ridde of all our wicked desires, that renouncing all our vices, wee may dedicate both our soules and bodies vnto our good God, in such sort as he may be glorified in all things, and we keepe such faithfulness and trustines one towardes another, as wee may thereby shewe that we are true brethren, and hee may receiue vs for his children: and that this may encourage vs to call vpon him, & to lift vp our harts vnto him, to approach more neare & neare vnto him & to cleaue vnto his righteousnes in all puresse of heart. That it may please him to grant this grace not only vnto vs but also to all people and Nations &c.

25 But if a man find a betrothed mayd in the field and force her, and lye with her: then the man which lay with her shall dye alone.

26 But vnto the mayd thou shalt doe nothing, because there is in the mayde no sin of death: for like as when a man riseth against his neighbour and woundeth him to death, so is it in this case.

27 For hee founde her in the fieldes: and the betrothed mayde cried out and there was no man to reskewe her.

28 If a man finde a mayd which is not betrothed, and take her and lye with her, and they bee found:

29 Then the man that lay with her shal giue vnto the maydes father fiftie peeces of siluer, and the shal be his wife, because he hath humbled her, and hee may not forsake her as long as he liueth.

30 No man shall take his fathers wife, nor vncouer the skyrte of his fathers garment.

According to that which was hadled yesterday, we see how GOD meant that wedlocke should be faithfully obserued. And it is good reason it be so, otherwise the whole order of nature must needes be ouer-throwne: For there is nothing which among men, ought to be more straitly kept and obserued than this. Other couenants are faithfully to be kept in deede, but because this exceedeth in holines, it ought to haue the greater reuerence. And therefore it is not without cause, that God hath decreed that he which meeteth with a betrothed maide and deflower her, should dye without remission. For why? Hee hath broken the couenaut which ought to be kept holy among all men: in making whereof Gods will is that his name should be called vpon, to the intent that the parties might know that they are ioyned together with an inuiolable bond. Seeing then there is such a rebellio committed against God, it behoueth that the chastitē be like & answerable therunto. And so we are yet better confirmed in this doctrine, that is to wit, that except we wil nourish the vengeance of God vpon vs, wee must obserue wedlocke holylic. And we must not regarde what the common opinion is herein. For if we will be wiser than God, he knoweth well ynough howe to punish our diuelish pride; and wee shall be alwayes rewarded as we deserue, if we will not vse the remedie which God hath appointed vs in his Lawe. Indeede we are not bound vnto it precisely in all points, (as hath bene alreadye noted, and shalbe yet farther declared hereafter:) but yet for all that, God warneth vs that if we suffer wedlocks to be broken, and graunt such libertie that adulterers remaine vnpunished; we must needes (as I haue told you) fall into horrible confusion & extreme beastlinesse.

Nowe by the way we must note further, that he which rauisheth a maide is heere likened to a thiefe which meeting with his neighbor sleaeth him. He compareth him not w one y beateh his neighbor. This cōpartion therefore doth evidently declare y the act of it self is beyond measure outrageous & intollerable. For like as y life of man is precious vnto God, so is the chastitie and the faith which is lighted in marriage. For the wife is linked vnto her husband to liue and to die with him. So then when this faith is once falsified, what honestie can there bee any longer amongst men? Therefore God to shewe the grieuousnesse of the fault, saith it is a kinde of open theuerie and murder if a man meete with a maide & deflower her specially by force. This is an vnardonable offence. Moreouer, God dooth vs to vnderstande that maides ought to make as great account of their chastitie, as of their life. For (as hath bene tolde you) if a maid fight not for her honestie, and her virginitic, doubtlesse shee is not worthie to liue in y<sup>e</sup> worlde. For if shee crie not, but suffer her selfe to be defiled, shee must die without any pardon. Therefore our Lorde in this place againe declareth, that maides ought to behaue themselves honestly: so as if they meete with any misaduenture or finde any naughtipack which would entise them to naughtines, they must haue les regard of their life than of their good name, and rather suffer their throates to be cut, than their bodies to bee defiled, and to liue in such shame. Ye see then in few words, what we haue to beare in mind vpon this place: because the matter was handled so largely yesterday, it may suffice to gather things briefly as neede shall require for y<sup>e</sup> words of Moses. And here we see how it is not for vs to stand either vpon custome or vpon mens fancies. For nowadayes if men alledge that adulterers are not punished, they beare themselves in hande y<sup>e</sup> it is a sufficient buckler for their defence, and if they say, who complaineth of it? Ye see how god is shut out. Many men therefore beare themselves in hande y<sup>e</sup> it is a reasonable defence if they may say that all men vse to doe so, it is the common custome, it is the opinion of al men. But contrariwise we see here how God rescrueth alwaies his authority. Albeit that men corrupt themselves through abuse, although they flatter themselves in their vices although they be of opinion that al is lawfull for them, yet notwithstanding this excuseth them not, neither impeacheth it Gods authoritie any whit at all. Nowe then, let not men lean vnto y<sup>e</sup> which is in comon vse, neither yet let them therupon harden themselves, but let them haue an eye vnto y<sup>e</sup> which God hath once comāded. For that must needs alway keep his course. And indeed, we may see what corruptions haue risen in the worlde, when men haue so swarued from the word of God after y<sup>e</sup> fancie of this man or that man. From thence haue all superstitions proceeded, Ye see how the Papisits nowadays being befored in their follies, cannot bee brought back into y<sup>e</sup> right way of saluatiō. For they beare themselves in hande, y<sup>e</sup> they are sufficiently armed with this shift of theirs y<sup>e</sup> of long tyme men haue liued as they doe, & that themselves are nor the inuenters of the religion which they holde. But (as I haue tolde you) this can serue them to no purpose, no more than it can serue for y<sup>e</sup> defence of adultery, to alledge y<sup>e</sup> it is not punished nowadayes nor any account made of it. No: but God who is the heavenly Iudge, will in the end shewe that these are such enormities as hee can in no wise suffer. Now y<sup>e</sup> which Moses addeth proueth y<sup>e</sup> same thing which we touched yesterday; namely, y<sup>e</sup> God did not alway punish offences in such sort as by good right he might. I meane of punishing according to y<sup>e</sup> law which he gaue for y<sup>e</sup> ordering of the people of Israel. For he bare w<sup>y</sup> many things because of the hardnes of that people, as our Lord Iesus sheweth them when hee speaketh of diuorcements which were done against all reason & indifferencie. For hee saith here that if a man finde a maide, and y<sup>e</sup> she without forcing yeelde herselfe, that hee shall be quit by giuing of money for the marriage of y<sup>e</sup> maide, & by taking of her to wife, and by being debarred of y<sup>e</sup> common liberty, that he may neuer forsake her. Now I grant that this was a chastisement vnto y<sup>e</sup> man which had played the fornicator. But was it so grieuous as the fault required? Nay verily. What shall we say then? Did God permit whoredome, or ment he to lay y<sup>e</sup> bridle on their neck, or gaue he to vnderstand thereby, y<sup>e</sup> the sin should be pardoned? No, none of all this. For we haue shewed afore, that when God deliuered his law which consisteth in ten wordes, hee declared therein his will, and prescribed men a certaine rule wherby they should liue. Now that lawe is it which shall iudge vs at y<sup>e</sup> latter day, & it not onely serueth to condemne offenders vnto temporal punishment, but also doth vs to vnderstand that we must answer the count to before the iudgement seate of God, to perish for euer. Therefore when we shall haue escaped y<sup>e</sup> hands of men, yea and y<sup>e</sup> god that haue winked at our faults, yet must we in y<sup>e</sup> ende come to our account before him. Ye see then y<sup>e</sup> the law of God is to iudge vs. As for this it serueth but for an earthly policie. And God (as I haue saide) respected not such perfection as is required in y<sup>e</sup> faithfull; but rather bare with the hardnes of y<sup>e</sup> people, which was so sturdy & so hard to be ruled. And albeit he punished not those diuorcements which were made against all indifferencie, yet is it not to be said therefore, that he permitted the. For we heare how our Lord Iesus Christ pronoucereth therof, That whosoever forsaketh his wife & taketh another (except it be for adulterie, so that he can proue she hath played y<sup>e</sup> whore) is an adulterer: and that who so taketh her to wife that is forsaken, committeth adultery also, and his marriage is nor lawfull, but detested of God. Euen so stādeth y<sup>e</sup> case in that which we see in this place. For although God punisheth him nor seuerely which committeth fornication w<sup>y</sup> a maide, it is not because that whoredome is any way at all to bee pardoned. If it be not punished by mē, yet god alwaies hath his right referued. But this is done because y<sup>e</sup> commonly in y<sup>e</sup> estate of gouernement, men wil sooner punish those faults wherby their own comodities are hindered, than wherby God is offended. Indeed y<sup>e</sup> Iudges & magistrats ought not to giue the bridle so far, that God should be mocked, y<sup>e</sup> his name should be dishonoured, or that al religion should be trampled vnder foote, as wee haue seene heretofore that blasphemies were more grieuouly punished than murders. But when there is some by offence comitted, when there is no manifest despising of God to be seen; men will not pursue it so fiercely, as when a matter toucheth themselves. So then, as touching  $\bar{y}$  fornication which Moses speaketh of in this place, so far much as it concerneth the losse & discredit which is done vnto a man because his daughter is kept back from preferment in marriage: he that hath inuegled her must assigne her a dowry: & because it may be that she shall not find another match: therefore he must take her to wife if her father wil. And if he should cast her off againe within a while after, she should be new to prouide a gain. Therefore he must keepe her still, and be so debarred of that common right which belonged to others,  $\bar{y}$  he may neuer forsake her. Yee see the howe God prouideth for the commoditie of the partie. But yet for all this God is still offended if a man defile the temple of the holy ghost which is his bodie, and giue ouer the members of our Lord Iesus Christ to such wickednes. For we are all members of his bodie. And farther, when he goeth about to defile a maide which is  $\bar{y}$  temple of God and a member of the bodie of our Lorde Iesus Christ, I say that the doing thereof is an ouer great confusion. And yet for all that thee is not punished; no, not by ciuill order: But yet the law of God remaineth alwayes in his estate,  $\bar{y}$  is to say, it is the rule which he hath giue vs to liue by, which shall not bend at our pleasure. To bee short, God by giuing his Law, ment to frame vs vnto his obedience: and to shew vs our dutie towards him. And therefore  $\bar{y}$  law goeth roundly to work, & sheweth vnto vs wherunto we are bound. Moreouer touching ciuill order, god had an eye vnto  $\bar{y}$  which  $\bar{y}$  weaknes of  $\bar{y}$  world might beare, & conformed himself therunto: & therefore there were many things which were not punished by the law of Moses. Neuertheles we are taught  $\bar{y}$  albeit our faults be not iudged by men, wee must not therefore fall asleepe in our sins. For we shall gaine little, though earthly iudges let vs alone, & we escape without punishment before them, if in  $\bar{y}$  meane time  $\bar{y}$  wrath of God encrease vpon vs: and because he hath patiently waited our amendment, it grow more & more against vs, & we put that in vre which S. Paul saith,  $\bar{y}$  is to wit, that we had vp to our felues a treasure of  $\bar{y}$  greater condemnation. Let vs therefore learne not to haue such respect vnto me, that we think so our faults be not vpbraided vs by them, or so they accuse vs not, or frame no inditement against vs, we be therefore quited. Nay let vs know, that it should be good for vs sometimes to be awaked by me. For wh $\bar{e}$  we be chastised; then doth God  $\bar{y}$  which S. Paul saith in an other place, to wit, hee punisheth vs according to  $\bar{y}$  flesh in this world, that we might not perish euerlastingly. Now therefore let vs lift vp our eyes alwayes vnto  $\bar{y}$  iudgement seate before which we must come & appeare. Although we haue bin borne withall in this world, and  $\bar{y}$  we beare our selues in hand  $\bar{y}$  our sins shall remaine vnpunished, wee must be double punished at  $\bar{y}$  hand of God, because we haue bin stubborn & hardhearted euen vnto the vttermost, and haue so abused his patience. Sith he waited so long for our amendment, & sought by all gentlenes to win vs vnto himself; if we for all  $\bar{y}$  haue bin rebellious, and haue as it were laughed at his louing kindnes which he vsed towards vs; must hee not call all this to minde to our greater cost?

And let vs note farther  $\bar{y}$  it is too vaine excuse which many make, saying; And whose blame I wronged? Nowadaies if a man charge these blasphemers with this wickednes, they will wry their mouth & come with I know not what shamelesnes, and say: & who complaineth of me? to whom is it  $\bar{y}$  I haue done any injury? If we were all such as we ought to be, doublelesse we would crie an alarme when  $\bar{y}$  name of God is blasphemed, and we would al be proctors in  $\bar{y}$  case, seeing  $\bar{y}$  God vouchsafeth vs this honour, to haue vs to maintaine his maiesty & his own cause. Yet for all this, we make no account thereof. If our selues haue any injury done vnto vs, wee will crie at it. But if God be euill spoken of, so that his name be put to open shame, we let it passe, we take no care of it. They which haue so shamefully offended may say: who is he  $\bar{y}$  accuseth vs? But yet for all that, this is such a shift as shall auaille them but a little (as we haue said.) For shall God forget himselfe? Shall he suffer himselfe to be so despised & make no account thereof? Hath not he sworne by his owne name, that he will maintaine his glory vnto the vtmost? Now seeing it is so, what wil come of it if wee replice against him and say, that none can complain of any iniurie done vnto him, wh $\bar{e}$  wee shall haue so offended the maiesty of God? Alas, is it not more than if wee had bidden bataille vnto all creatures? Yes verily. Now the case is like in fornication. I graunt that a man which plyeth the fornicator may say: no man complaineth of me. For both  $\bar{y}$  parties were agreed together. But what? Yee see that the temple of God (as I told you) is vnhalloved. And is that trecherie so small a thing? If a man had robbed, he should haue beene punished, as he well deserueth. But here is a farre greater fault than theft. For when the temple of God is defiled, it exceedeth all the extortions and pollings which can be done vnto men touching their goods. Yee see howe two temples of God are defiled at once through fornication. Yee see also how our Lord Iesus Christ is therein shamefully abused. For he vouchsafeth vs this honor that we bee members of his body, he hath vnited vs vnto himselfe, and shall we for all this goe and abandon our selues to such a shamefull villany? Is not  $\bar{y}$  a tearing of the bodie of the sonne of God in peeces as much as lyeth in vs? Let men then delight themselves as much as they list, and let others soothe them in their filthines and make but a laughing game thereof: Surely they shall fare neuer the better at Gods hand for all that. So then let vs learne (as I haue told you) to lift vp our eyes vnto  $\bar{y}$  heauenly throne, and to walke in such wise, as wee may alwayes haue a warrant within vs that wee haue proceeded in all vprightnesse with God. And let vs not be so foolish as to rest our selues vpon that which men command, but let vs holde that rule which cannot deceiue vs, that is, the lawe which God hath deliuered vnto vs, and whereunto he wil haue vs to frame our whole life.

1. Cor. 6, 15

Rom. 2, 4.

1. Cor. 5, 5.

But Alas, this is euill practised nowadayes. How many are there who if there were no laws, nor threatening; would euer come to Church to heare one word of  $\bar{y}$  doctrine of God? And yet we see manifestly  $\bar{y}$  such men doe it but for fashions sake. Well: they will come. But when? On such dayes as are cōmanded. But if there should be no expresse commandemēt, they are of opiniō that they are not otherwise bound thereto: and so it were much better that they came not vnto the Church at all. For they do nought else but defile the temple God. And they shew that they neuer tasted one whit of doctrine, they come thither so like dogs & swine. And so we see  $\bar{y}$  many in this worlde haue a care of nothing but of  $\bar{y}$  which is commanded and forbidden them, for feare they shoulde bee pinched by  $\bar{y}$  purfes, or haue some other punishment, according vnto ciuill order. Otherwise they they  $\bar{y}$  they haue no religion, but are very beaats. But as for vs, sith we see that God is so gracious vnto vs, as to declare vnto vs his will that we might followe it, let vs bebinke our selues to draw neerer vnto him, and to make his righteousnesse shine in vs. For this is his true ymage. And therby we declare that we be his childreū, and it is our warrant that hee hath adopted vs, and  $\bar{y}$  he will execute the office of a father towards vs. But there are very few which consider this. Yet notwithstanding, it behooueth vs to be attentue to that which I haue said: namely, that because God hath called vs vnto himselfe, and hath vouchsafed to teach vs howe we ought to liue: we also ought to profite in his schoole, and to come willingly of our owne minde vnto him, and also to accomplish that which is said in the

Psal. 40. 8. & P'salme, to wit, that to be good souldiours of our Lord Iesus Christ, we must come of our owne accord without forcing, and without threatening. We must come with a franke and free heart, as if we would say: Lorde, behold I offer my selfe vnto thee: therefore if we wil suffer the Lord so to gouerne vs, that looke what way so euer he turneth the bridle we wil go & be wealded by him, & not bec stubborne in any wise, nor sling against him like wild & sauage beastes: that is it (say I) which we haue to beare in minde. But as long as we are led with a slauih feare, doutles God will not accept any thing of  $\bar{y}$  which we do. And I say, not onely  $\bar{y}$  our doing of  $\bar{y}$  things which are cōmanded vs, & our abstaining from  $\bar{y}$  things which are forbidden vs, be but for feare of men & of earthly Iudges; but also  $\bar{y}$  if our obseruing of gods law be but because we feare to be damned: he vterly mislyketh such a seruice, & wil make no account thereof. And what is  $\bar{y}$  reason? Forsooth because he wil be honored of vs as a father is honored of his children. For I pray you, if a child grind his teeth against his father, & it grieue him to obey him: but because he hath no way to escape his hands, he wil doe what he commaundeth him: and yet if it were possible he would get him out of  $\bar{y}$  house, and not obey his father: thall this seruice please him? Surely no. And wil God haue lesse graunted vnto him than mortall men require, which are but rottennes? Of a very truth, they which serue God so by constraint could find in their harts to haue him plucked out of heauen if they coulde possibly doe it. And therefore let vs bebinke our selues to yeeld vnto God such sacrifice as he lyketh of. Let vs sacrifice vnto him our selues, our thoughts, our wils & affectiōs, and all  $\bar{y}$  is in vs: let vs dedicate all vnto him with a syncre affectiōn, & with an vpright free hartednes (as we haue said afore.) True it is that we ought to be fore-afraide of Gods punishment, because we are like an Ass which must euer be spurred, & laid vpon with a staffe. Therefore let vs humble our selues whē we see  $\bar{y}$  threats which are made against vs in the holy scripture. But withall let vs yet passe farther, to know  $\bar{y}$  God is our father; and knowing him to bee such a one, let vs come vnto him like true children; as he requireth vs by his Prophet: If I be your father (saith he) where is mine honour? He saith not onely, If I be your master, wher is  $\bar{y}$  feare which you owe me? But he uttereth both down together. If I be your master, wher is my feare? And if I be your father, wher is  $\bar{y}$  honor which you owe vnto me? God therefore wil be honored of vs; but withal he wil be serued of vs, and that of a frank & free goodwill, and of a syncre affection, as we haue before declared, when we treated of  $\bar{y}$  short abridgement of  $\bar{y}$  law in the sequenth chapter: what doth thy God O Israel require more of thee, but  $\bar{y}$  thou shouldest stick vnto him by louing him? This (say I) is in effect all  $\bar{y}$  seruice which God requireth of vs. And so wee are warned,  $\bar{y}$  we must not be so ouergreued wth the threats  $\bar{y}$  are made against vs, and with  $\bar{y}$  punishments which are contained in the law, but  $\bar{y}$  we shold also outgo  $\bar{y}$  same & be redy to offer vp our selues a willing sacrifice vnto God, & to call vpon him as our father, accordingly as hee hath adopted vs for his children.

In the ende Moses declareth,  $\bar{y}$  men must obserue such an honesty of nature in mariage, that the sonne in law must not couple himself with his stepmother. Indeed here hee setteth downe but one kind: But in the twentieth of Leuiticus, there are no degrees spoken of. But this serueth to put them in mind of  $\bar{y}$  which was said before. For Moses in this booke maketh a rehearsal of the law which hee had already written. And I haue told you  $\bar{y}$  this is not more than needeth; because mens memories are so short, and they forget so soone that which God hath taught them. It was therefore expedient  $\bar{y}$  Moses for  $\bar{y}$  better warranting of his doctrine, should repute it again in this booke. And therefore he doth touch this but by  $\bar{y}$  way concerning marriages: that men ought to keep such an order, as to hold incests for accursed. For  $\bar{y}$  Paynims themselves knew,  $\bar{y}$  if mariages were made wout all difference, there shoulde be incests (as they called them) committed, so as mariage shold be defiled before God, & become worse than whoredome. They had this conceite imprinted in them by nature: & albeit they had not bin taught  $\bar{y}$  will of God purely, yet had they some sparke of it. God would not that mankinde shold become so beastly, but  $\bar{y}$  they shold always haue a kind of light, to make them vnexcusable, and to encrease their condemnation the more, as S. Paul also treateth hereof in  $\bar{y}$  second Chap-

Psal. 40. 8. & 110. 3.

Rom. 12. 8.

Mal. 1. 6.

rer of the Epistle to the Romans. Now to treat of all those degrees which are spoken of in Leuiticus, vs. were needles at this time. It shall suffice briefly to beate in mind  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  ette & of all, namely  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ we ought to haue a difference and honesty obserued in mariage: that degrees of kindred be nor mingled and confounded together: that a father take not his daughter to wife, nor a brother his sister, nor an vnclie his neece: that a father in law take not his daughter in law, and  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  a mother in law take not her son in law. For if we obserue not this order, what differ we from  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  brute beastes?
But a man wil say, why fir? It is by mariage. Yea, but like as mariage is an holy thing, so must it be kept with the greater reuerence. So that it is a double condemnation, if I will go vnder the colour of mariage, and defile my selfe like a brute beast. It is as if a man should rob his neighbor vnder the colour of Iustice. He commenceth a false action against him, & when hee hath cast him he will alledge: Oh I haue gotten  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  sute, I haue nothing but by way of iustice. Yea, but thy wickednesse is greater than if thou haddest cut a mans purse. That offence of the twaine had bene the lesser. For thy theeuery indureth stil: and (which woris) thou hast falsly abused  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  name of God, & defiled  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  seat of Iustice. Seest thou not what a treachery thou hast wrought herein? Then like as  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  man is a double thiefe which by pleading a wrong cause and through ouerthwart meanes hath raked vnto himselfe an other mans goods: so doubles those which violate the order of nature, as a father which marieth his daughter, an vnclie which companieth with his neece, a brother which taketh his sister, do worse than if they committed whoredome. And why? Because first the thing it self is beastly, and can neuer be lawful. Secondly  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  land is as it were defiled and infected where such wickednes raigeth. Briefly me ought to detest & abhorre it. And yet notwithstanding, if men will yet venter to confound marriage together, which is so holy a thing, which is  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ lucely image of that spirittuall vnion which wee haue with our Lord Iesus Christ; which God (as we know) ordained at the beginning & blessed; if me will intermingle it with such filthines; if they will make but a sport of it, to whom offer they this iniury? Offer they it not vnto God who is  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ author of mariage, & commandeth  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  it be maintained in all purenes? Ye see then what we haue to beare in mind concerning this place.

But now hath God prouided a lawe for it, and not without great cause. For in those countries there was more corruption touching incestes, thā hath euer bin in al other countries besides. I say, that neither in Greece nor in Italy men euer used such lawes and villanous liberty in this kind of wickednes, as they of Asia and of all the East countrie did. For there it was counted nothing for the brother to couple with the sister. It was therefore needfull  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  God in this case should reime his people with a shorter bridle. And hereby wee may see  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  cuttome shall not serue vs for an excuse. If a thing displeaseth God, although it be vsed among men, it serueth not to lessen the fault. For God wil alwayes remaine iudge. And why? Gods will is that we should do him this honor to hold our selues vnto his simple wil, although me draw cleane backward. Let vs therefore learn to yeeld our selues vnto the Lawe of God touching this point. And if a man reply, that we are not to be held thral to  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  order of Moses, I grant it, But yet ought we at leastwise to admit  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  warnings which God giueth vs, and to vse his counfel. Although we be freed from this bondage of the cuill Law of Moses, yet will he haue vs to be are alwayes in mind this ground, to wit, that we berthinke vs for what cause God hath forbidden this thing. For it is because the thing is intollerable. We must therefore frame our selues vnto that thing which we know to be acceptable vnto God, and withhold vs from that which he forbiddeth.

But yet there is a double condemnation to fall vpon them which wil go cleane contrary against it, as S. Paul saith speaking of him which had takē his mother in Law to wife in Corinth. How now?
(saith he) Are ye not ashamed  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  such fornicatio should be among you, and that so villanous an act should be committed, as  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  Paynims could not abide to heare the like spoken of? Indeede sometimes such like things were to be seen among the but yet neuertheless they did abhor such wickednes. Seeing then  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  the vnbeleeuing wretches haue bin raught, by such a motion as themselues knewe not, wout either scripture or preaching, albeit God draue the thuronto, to keepe this honestie in the degrees of mariage: what ought we to doe? Verily we see  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  the very Paynims are yet more to our cōdemnation. For there was a certaine Emperour of Rome, who because he wold cōmit the same incest himselfe, made a law  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  the vnclie might marry with his neece. And this liber-tie which was so graunted by  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  Law was neuer solowed of any but of his own baud. Although he had all countries at cōdemnment, yet could he neuer make  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  law of sufficient authoritie  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  any man besides himselfe & one baud of his wold be perswaded  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  the vnclie might marry with the niece. Now what shall we say of this, but  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  our Lorde had a secret bridle for men, as if he should say: I will  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  there remaine some honestie in nature in despite of all those which beare rule in  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ world, & would make such a confusion that men should be as brute beasts, ye i eue as dogs & swine?
Do what they can yet wil I be aboute the, & cause my law to be so printed in  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  heartes of men,  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ for all their wickednes & blindness they shall yet retaine some honestie in  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  which I haue principally cōmanded the. Beholde (I say) how God hath borne sway in such sort  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  men (how vnbeleeuing fouer they were) haue yet had some remorse,  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$ they would not altogether go against that which was forbidden them in this lawe. In deede men might haue alledged: This thing is lawfull for vs.
The Law is made, the sentence is proclaimed, libertie is granted vnto al me to do so: & yet we see how God ouerruleth al & sheweth  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  he himselfe wil so waken me & simon the to appeare before him,  $\text{\textcircled{y}}$  they shall not fall into such confusion. And therefore let vs humble ourselues vnder him and be so far frō wayting vntil he cal vs vnto our account & draw vs vnto this honestie by force, that we alwayes preuent his iudgement, to walke in such feare and carefulnes, that wee make it our pleasure to serue and honor him: so as there may be such an honest conuersation among vs as not onely the order of nature may bee obserued, but also that we may shewe how it is not for nought that hee hath should vs out from among the vnbeleeuing wretches, and would that we should be an holy people vnto him and dedicated vnto his seruice.

But now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them more & more, and to draw vs away from them, & so to rid vs of them, as we may encrease from day to day, & be reformed vnto his righteoufnes: & that he wil in the meane time beare with vs in our infirmities, & not intreat vs severely, but pardon vs our faultes, vntill he hath clenfed vs altogether from them. And so let vs all say: Almightye &c.

On Thursday the xvj. of Ianuarie, 1556

The Cxxx. Sermon which is the first vpon the three and twentieth Chapter.

NOne that is hurte by bursting, or that is gelded shall enter into the congregation of the Lorde.

2 A Bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the Lorde, neither shall the tenth generation of him enter in.

3 The Ammonites & Moabites shal not enter into y congregation of the Lord, neither shal their tenth generation for euer enter into the cōgregation of the Lord.

LT might seme a strāg case y God in this place shutteth out of his congregation such as are maymed in their bodies. For men can hardly bee perswaded y this hindereth any to come neare vnto God. Nay rather when there is any weaknes in them, it maketh them more worthy of pitie and compassion. And we are assured on the other side, y God requireth a spiritual purenes, & maketh no great account of this outward appearance; as it is expressly written in the fifteenth Chapter of y first booke of Samuel, that he respecteth not those things which appeare to the eye ward, as men do. But wee are to note, that when God in the old time vnder the law required any outward purenes, it was to bring the Iewes more forward to consider, that they could not present themselves vnto the temple, except they were thoroughly purified, specially touching their soules. The like is meant in that which we see here. For whereas God in this place condemneth y maimed which is in the body; it is to betoken, that they which will serue him & desire to approach neare vnto him, ought to be soūd both in their bodies and in their soules. For whatsoever was figured in y law, was referred vnto that spiritual and heavenly patron which Moses saw in the mount; as it is written in the 25. Chapter of Leuiticus. And this is wel obserued both by S. Steuen, and by the Apostle to the Hebrewes. So then let vs note y when God barreth those from entering into the sanctuary, which had any mayme in their bodie; he ment to betoken therby that he woulde haue his seruants sound & pure. Yea and that men should not in y behalfe rest on that which is seen with the eye of man, but rather seeke after the true soundnesse, which God respecteth, which is in our heartes and in our mindes.

The like is to bee saide of that which Moses addeth touching bastards. God meant hereby to shewe, first what a priuiledge he had granted vnto the stocke of Abraham. And this was done to the intent that his fauour shoulde be the better knowne. Beholde howe God chose out of all the world one certaine people. And why? Wee haue before shewed that there was no worthines at all in them, but this proceeded of his own freebestowed loue. Nowe because men doe willingly darken the fauour of God or cleane forget it, or happily not knowe it in such sort as they should; God would that the children of Abraham, before they entred into the sanctuary, shoulde learne to reason thus with themselves: What is y cause y we haue access & entrāce vnto our god? What is the cause why hee sheweth himselfe so familiar vnto vs, and receiueth vs when wee come vnto him? It is because he hath chosen the seed of Abraham, howbeit such as are y true seed of Abraham. We see the how god ment to make the which were descended from y stock of Abraham, to perceiue y without any desert of theirs, he had chosen them to be the inheritaunce of y euerlasting God. I say he shewed this vnto the, & exercised the in the remembrance of y benefite, to y intent it might be y better acknowledged among the. That (say I) is y thing which we haue to note first of all. Secondly God by this meanes held the Iewes shorter y they might keepe themselves pure & chaste, and y there might be no fornication among them; nor any such confusion as men might not know which were right begotten and which were bastard children, when no difference might bee had in that behalfe. Therefore G O D by ordaining this Lawe, gaue the Iewes an occasion to lue more chaitly, to the ende their stocke might bee holie and not prophane, and that he which intended to commit adultery should be mowed thus to thinke and to reason with himself: How now? God chose me before I was borne because I am of the children of Abraham: and yet not contented herewith, he hath declared that hee will be my sauiour, euen to a thousand generations: he accepteth my offspring, hee hath dedicated it vnto himselfe; although we be al cursed by nature, yet this grace of adoption exceedeth in my stocke. And shall I goe now and raise vp a defiled seede, which shall not bee of the people of God, which shall not be of the body of his congregation, which shall haue no entrance into the sanctuary? Were not y a renouncing of the benefit of my god? Is it not to shut him far off from me, & to giue him no entertainment, or to shew him no countenance, when hee calleth mee so gently? This (say I) ought to holde backe the Lewes, or els they were more than blockish. And that had bene too leawd an vnthankfulnes and a forgetting of the benefit which God had graced vnto them.

Therefore that we may nowe apply these two places to our instruction, let vs note y although God regard not nowadayes whether there be any blemish in a mans body or no, ne respecteth our parentage: yet notwithstanding his will is y this law should serue for vs, and y we should apply the truth thereto to our vse: that is to wit, y when we come vnto him, we must bring with vs an vp-right foundnes. And wherein? Surely not in our bodily members, for we know y his seruice is spiritual. Therefore let vs purifie our soules. I grant y our bodies ought to be purified also (as S. Paul warneth vs); but that is not in such wise as there be no maime or fault of sickness in them, but it is meant, that we must not defile them w vile and wicked things, as he speaketh of Idolatry & fornication, & also as the scripture speaketh of bribes, & extortions. He which falleth downe before ydols, as much as in him lieth defileth his body, which ought to be dedicated vnto the seruice of God. The like is to be said of fornicators, which giue themselves ouer vnto such wickednes as God detesteth. They which spoile & rob another man of his goods, haue bloody hands as the Prophet Esay vpbraideth them. Thus ye se how we ought to induce our selues to purifie our bodies. But y chiefe point is, y we haue this foundnes in our soules, that they be not feared w any such maime, as may hinder vs from being quicke and ready to obey our God. We must not (say I) be womanish; but we must haue an inuincible courage to make battaile against Satan & against all temptations, shewing our selues to be me indeed. Likewise we must not be weake in faith, but wee must proceede alway forward, and enforce our selues to come vnto y mas estate wherof S. Paul speaketh to y Ephesians, that we wauer not with euery word but hold vs fast to y which is good, & abide constant, & stable in y truth which we haue known. Wee must not be tottering & wauering too & fro; but we must resist all temptations so as nothing may hinder vs to keepe on that course whereunto God hath called vs. Let vs therefore strengthen again y weake knees, & let vs fortifie y trembling hands by the power of y holy Ghost.

Thus ye see wherof we are expressly warned in this place to occasion vs to cling vnto our God, when we be to withstand any temptations which hinder vs from seruing him.

And moreover let vs note, y seeing God hath sanctified vs, (yea & that together without whole offspring) we ought to continue in true chastitie when we heare his voice at y mouth of our God: I wil be y sauiour both of you & of your children also after you. Whē God is so gracious as to giue vs children, we ought to prouide diligently y the stocke be pure & vndefiled. And let the faithful take good heed that they intermingle not them selues with fornications or such other like defilements. And why? Because it is a renouncing of y excellent priuiledge which God giueth them, when he chuseth them in such sort vnto himself and therewithal chooseth their children also although they be not yet begotten. But the chiefe point is, that we must learne to be the true children of Abraham. Seeing we be grafted into his stocke through faith let vs take heede that we be not cut off from this body by our vnbeliefe. For the Prophets who were y true expounders of the law, do wel declare what the thing is which God ameth at in this place, when they say: Come you of the stocke of Abraham? No ye are the childre of an harlot euery chone of you. Get ye hence ye harlots brats, appeare here in your liknes, come soorth and let men knowe you: yee children of a strumpet (saith y Prophet Esay). And y Prophets Jeremy & Ezechiel speak in like sort: What haue you like vnto Abraham whose name ye beare? Was not your father an Amorite, & your mother a whore? To whōs speake they thus? Speake they to children of harlots & vnto bastards concerning y flesh? No. But vnto lawful borne children. And why then calleth hee them strumpets children, as if they were begotten in some brothel-house? Because they were corrupted & followed not y faith of Abraham. For y true parentage is spiritual (as S. Paul saith). They which descended from y stock of Abraham concerning y flesh, are not therefore accounted y lineage of Abraham. And what is y reason? Forsooth because they are grown out of kind. So then let vs note that whē Moses forbade y bastards should enter into y temple, it was not onely for this shameful note which is in respect of the world, when childre are not begotten in lawful wedlocke: it was rather to shew y the Lewes were not worthy to haue any accessse vnto God, to call vpon his name, or to company with his congregation, except they held fast this spiritual kined of Abraham, that is to say, except they followed his faith, & except they continued in y pure couenant of god. Now this could not be done except they always bare in mind, that god had chosen them to bee an holy people, to bee a royal priesthood. Let vs now for our part note y albeit wee were altogether strangers vnto God, although we had no accessse into his temple, & although (as S. Paul saith) we had no couenēt with him because y promises were not made vnto vs; yet notwithstanding we are made household seruants with the holy fathers, citizens of the kingdom of heauen, through faith, forasmuch as God hath communicated vnto vs this freedome

Seeing it is so y<sup>e</sup> we which were wild & barren trees, haue bin besides nature graffed into y<sup>e</sup> good Olive, let vs take heed y<sup>e</sup> we vse well so excellent a benefite: and let vs stick wth a stedfast faith vnto Abraham our father; and as oft as we come vnto the church, let vs take warning to examine our selues and to say: Behold God hath appointed this order, that we should come together to the intent he may be among vs, & we haue familiar access vnto him: and that is on condition y<sup>e</sup> we become true children of Abraham. And in what sort? Let vs consider of that which is said in the first Chapt. of S. Iohn: for this kinred is there expounded, such as God requirith nowadayes and alloweth of. It commeth (saith he) neither of the will of man, nor of the wil of the flesh, nor of bloude: but the cause thereof is that we haue believed in the onely sonne of God. Seeing then it is so: that when we beleue in our Lorde Iesus Christ, & be graffed into his body, we are admitted for the sonnes of God, although wee on our part are not worthy of that honour. Let vs take heed, that we hold our selues there, and that we grow not out of kinde through vnthankfulness, & fo cut our selues off from that body wherunto we were ioyned through the grace of God and his infinite mercy by y<sup>e</sup> meane of faith. Yee see then what we haue to beare in mind vpon this place, when it is saide expressly, that bastards shall not enter into the congregatō of God, euen vnto the tenth generation.

But let vs come now to y<sup>e</sup> which is spoken of y<sup>e</sup> Moabites & the Ammonites. These people were descended from Lot, and so ought to bee y<sup>e</sup> kinsmen of y<sup>e</sup> Iewes. Yet neuertheles God banisheth them out of his Church, and will not y<sup>e</sup> they haue any entrance therinto, vnto the tenth generation, albeit they yielded themselves vnder y<sup>e</sup> obedience of y<sup>e</sup> law. He addeth: They met you not by the way when you came out of Egypt with bread & water, that is to say, they entertained you not as kinsmen and friends should haue done. Now albeit y<sup>e</sup> Ammonites and y<sup>e</sup> Moabites were seuered from the stock of Abraham, as Lot was already gone vnto Sodome, and so had not the promise: yet neuertheles they ought to haue called to minde their kindred, and y<sup>e</sup> Abraham had brought Lot into y<sup>e</sup> land of promise, & had taken him for his son. The remembrance hereof ought so to haue endured, that y<sup>e</sup> Moabites & Ammonites (if they had had any good nature) should haue granted passage vnto them which were of their owne blood. And againe we see how God spared them. For we haue seene heretofore, how the Israelites were expressly commanded to abstaine from al iniury and violence, whē they passed through their land. Take heed yee vse not any force of armes, take nothing but what you pay for: keep y<sup>e</sup> high and beaten common way as ye passe: buy y<sup>e</sup> water which thou drinkest, and vse no extortion. And why? For they be thy brethren. And indeed although god chose not Lot as he did Abraham, yet ceased he not to pity him, & to haue from care of sparing his succellours & those which issued from him, albeit those people were begotē by his incestuous coupling wth his two daughters. The two fathers which were y<sup>e</sup> first rootes of this issue were Ammon & Moab, y<sup>e</sup> is to say, such as were begotten by incest & by shameful and vnatural fornication. Yet neuertheles God beareth wth them. But they are so wicked & vnthankfull, y<sup>e</sup> they desire both God and man. God hath compassion of them, and therewithall chargeth y<sup>e</sup> Iewes to haue a care of them. Ye see what curtesie y<sup>e</sup> Iewes used. They praised them to let the passe through their country as friends, protecting y<sup>e</sup> they woulde not molest nor annoy them in any manner of thing. They desired them to graunt them passage for their money, that they might come vnto y<sup>e</sup> land wherunto God called the. But these cursed creatures wold needs hinder y<sup>e</sup> calling of god, & bring to passe, that y<sup>e</sup> people shoulde not enter into the land of promise to take possession thereof. And hereupon they hyred Balaam the son of Beor y<sup>e</sup> false Prophet. And why? Because they distrusted their owne power, and thought by the meanes of a false Prophet to coniure God, & that by vsing such a kind of bewitching, they might curse that people of his. Now because they were so froward, and vouchsafed not to vse y<sup>e</sup> benefite which God offered vnto them, it was good reason that they should be punished therefore. For albeit the vengeance of God was not by and by executed, yet God registred it in his booke & we see here how their punishment for this wickednes was refered.

Now hereupon we haue to note, that if we intend to be accepted of God in the number and companie of the faithfull, wee must procure the welfare of the whole Church as much as lieth in vs. For those which make any trouble in y<sup>e</sup> church of God, or be any way offensiuē, are heere banished the Church vnder the person of y<sup>e</sup> Moabites and Ammonites, as if God declared that they are not worthy to come neare vnto him, or to company with any of them which are dedicated vnto him. And nowadayes how many are to be seene of this sort? So y<sup>e</sup> we ought not to meruaile if y<sup>e</sup> curse of god lie vpon so many men. And why? Because y<sup>e</sup> for one which is found to aduance the weale of y<sup>e</sup> church, & to edifie y<sup>e</sup> people of God, a man may find a dosen which indeuour nothing els, but to bring vnter confusion & destruction vpon it. How many turmoiles see we nowadayes in y<sup>e</sup> world to hinder y<sup>e</sup> course of the gospel, & to bring to passe y<sup>e</sup> the Church might fall vnto y<sup>e</sup> ground, or be confused & disordered? Now from whence proceedeth this, but from y<sup>e</sup> wickednes of men? The like as God sparred y<sup>e</sup> doore against y<sup>e</sup> Ammonites and Moabites at y<sup>e</sup> time, because they refused to giue way vnto his people whē they should enter into the lande of promise: so let vs note y<sup>e</sup> all such as by stumbling blocks nowadayes to turne those aside, and to drue them into wickednesse which were in a good way, & al such as breede troubles in y<sup>e</sup> Church of God, are euerychone reiectēd of God. And verily we see that there are nowadayes many Ammonites and Moabites in the world. For who are they which seeke to peruert all things, and which giue so many offences & make such great confusions throughout Gods church? They are such as name themselves y<sup>e</sup> faithfull, such as are of our company & haue one common baptisme wth vs: so that they ought to aide vs: they ought ought to bring vs forth bread & water; y<sup>e</sup> is to say, they ought to lend vs their hand, that we might follow our calling to come vnto that place to the which God calleth vs: those (I say) which ought to receiue vs and open the way vnto vs; euen those are they which barre vs of entrance, & those are they which pull the bridle backward, & which make these hurlyburlyes among vs.

Hereby we are warned, that seeing the people of God was vexed by their owne kindred, we ought nowadayes to beare it patiently, if the lyke befall vs. And withall let vs be warned (as I haue told you) to behaue our selues in such sort as none of vs may be condemned of hauing shut vp the way against them which endeoured to come vnto God. But let vs ayde them as farre as we shall be able, euen vnto the vtmost of our power: If we doe otherwise, the vengeance of God is at hand, and shall light vpon vs. For God who once condemned the Moabites, will not faile to be our Iudge at this day. Although the ceremonie be not obserued, yet (as I tolde you) all they which induor not to set forward the course of the Gospell, must needs be banished his kingdom. And in very deepe wee heare the threates which are made by the Prophets against all those which are enemies of the Church, and which trouble it: and that was not for the time of the lawe onely: but they foretold vs of the kingdom of our Lord Iesus Christ. Who soeuer they be that seeke not to ayde and succour Ierusalem (sayth the Prophet Esay) the Lord will arme himselfe against them, and they shall feele his strong hand and be destroyed. All they which deiuise any nisechie against thee, or relieue thy enemies to strengthe them, shall feele the hand of God contrarie & enemie vnto the. As much to y<sup>e</sup> same purpose is said in Zacharie. And these prophetices and threatnings (as I haue touched already) serued not for the time of the lawe, but for the state of Christianitie. Let vs therefore comfort our selues when wee vnderstand that God hath such a care of our saluatiō, that he protesteth he will be an aduersarie vnto all them which seeke to hinder vs frō coming vnto his kingdom, and into that inheritance which hee hath promised vs, and telleth them that his hand shall be against them, and that his curse shall fall vpon their heades. Hereby wee see how deare our saluation is vnto him, and what care he hath of it. Moreover let vs be afraid (as I tolde you) to giue occasions of trouble and offence. Let vs not be of the number of those naughtipackes, which when they see y<sup>e</sup> Church flourish, seeke nothing more busilie thā to disorder all things therein. The diuel hath drencht them with such a poyson, that they cannot abide the weale of the Church, therefore they seeke al the means they possible can, to breede confusion and disorder therein: let vs take heede (I say) y<sup>e</sup> we intangle not our selues among them, knowing that if we doe, we shall neuer escape the curse which is here threatned vnto the Moabites and the Ammonites.

But we haue yet one point more to note. And y<sup>e</sup> is, y<sup>e</sup> although God at y<sup>e</sup> first punish not the which molest his people: yet hee faileth not to keepe alwayes some punishment for them in store, notwithstanding that he delayeth it. And therefore let vs not bee so hardie as to beare our selues in hand, that if God beare with vs and wink at our fautes for a time, we shall still remaine vnpunished. For wee see how it fell out in this case with this people. No doubt but they bare themselves in hand, that it was a matter of nothing when they molested the people of God. And why? Because God listeth not to execute his vengeance vpon them out of hand; Now in deepe they were ouerthrowen. But what for that? They did but wagge their head thereat, because they bare themselves in hand that the Iewes would not put them to any farther trouble. But God for all y<sup>e</sup> remained their Iudge. And so although y<sup>e</sup> Ammonites & Moabites were spared for a time, & God would not that they should be rooted out as those people which he had already before condemned; yet notwithstanding they made neuer the better match for all that; for ye see how like a sort of vnhalloved people, they are put besides all entrance into y<sup>e</sup> temple of God, they are reiected with this note of shame; y<sup>e</sup> they are declared enemies vnto y<sup>e</sup> people of God. Let vs therefore stand in feare sith we see this. And although we be not punished out of hand, yet let vs knowe y<sup>e</sup> we shall not escape the vengeance of God; when wee haue sought to molest his Church, and haue set a barre against our neighbours that they may not enter in as they ought to doe. And why? Because although God listeth, yet will he not forget y<sup>e</sup> wickednes of them which shall haue sought to molest his Church, or to bring any manner of trouble vpon it. Ye see whereof wee ought to be aduertised. And if this were printed well in our heartes, we would haue another manner of care than we haue to edifie the Church of God, and we would withall more abhorre and detest all offences. But what? We see how headlong men runne into this wickednesse, euen with a madde & brainesicke disposition. And why? Because God is not ready at hand to take vengeance, they bare themselves in hand y<sup>e</sup> the matter commeth al to one end, whether they worke y<sup>e</sup> Churches weale or woe, & thereupon they wester in their wickednes. But for all y<sup>e</sup> let vs looke vnto our selues.

And moreover although God vter not his vengeance at the first against them which seeke to trouble and to ouerthrowe the building of our faith: yet let vs assure our selues, that God (notwithstanding that he winketh at things for a time) yet sleepeeth not in heauen for all that. And therefore let vs patiently wayte vntill hee put to his hand. He suffereth the wicked sometime to wander at will, and to triumph among vs, & we are of opinion that the earth will sinke vnder them; we are astonished & euen beside our selues: we think there is no remedie, we suppose there is no way to succor vs, we are of opinion y<sup>e</sup> god is laid down to sleepe. But in y<sup>e</sup> end he putteth to his hād. And although he chaistise some of them lightly, yet others settle in their lees. As for exāple, a mā shall see y<sup>e</sup> when God punisheth some wicked persons which haue been the occasions and authors of many troubles and offences, yet others shall remaine remain unpunished, by reason whereof they thinke their owne wickednesse to be nothing, & so they followe it on farther, because God beareth with them. But it is sayd that the Ammonites and Moabites shal beare this curse throughout ten generations. Therefore sith we see that God will punishe them which molest vs, and which haue bin occasions of falling among vs; howsoever the case goe, let vs waite gods leaseure, hauing an eye to y<sup>e</sup> which is set downe here, & beholding y<sup>e</sup> which hath happened vnder y<sup>e</sup> Law, vntill he wreke his vengeance on the wicked.

For wee may vnder this figure which is here giuen vnto vs beholde the loue and fatherlike care which God hath for his Church in that it is his pleasure that things should be well ordred therein, and that none should hinder his childre whom he hath adopted, from coming vnto that inheritance which he hath promised them. And therefore let vs alwayes constantly goe on, and ouerleape those stumbling blockes which are layd in our way. When we see that the wicked aduance themselves against vs, and inuent & deuise all that they are able, to destroy vs; let vs be armed with strong and inuincible constancie to fight against such temptations; let vs not slack our courage, but let vs assure our selues that God will looke to these things in such sorte, that by his reaching forth of his hand we shal ouercome all y<sup>e</sup> difficulties and incomberaunces which men on their part set against vs. This being done we shall knowe that God hath reserued an horrible iudgement for our enemies, although they perswade themselves y<sup>e</sup> all is forgotten, & that there is no remembrance of their misdeedes. And when they be in full possession of their wickednesse, God wil cuen then prouide a remedie suddenly & beside y<sup>e</sup> expectaion of all men & of the whole world. Yee see then in effect what we haue to beare in minde vpon this place.

Now by y<sup>e</sup> way, a man might demaund what the cause is why God ordayned that the Iewes should in no wise seeke the peace nor the prosperitie of the Ammonites and Moabites. For it seemeth that he giueth here the Iewes an occasion to reuenge themselves, the which notwithstanding was neuer lawful. Let vs note in a word that God appointed them to execute his iudgement. And so his willis that they should punish the Ammonites and Moabites, howbeit with a pure and vpright zeale. When God ordayneth Justice, and putteth the sword into the hand of them whom he hath called vnto that estate, he commaundeth them to pursue to death as deserue it, and willet them to punish offences. And that vndoubtedly is a kinde of reuenge: but yet that reuenging is lawful; yea it is requisite & necessarie. And if he which is armed with the sword of Iustice punish not offences, hee shall render an account thereof vnto God. Now it is very true y<sup>e</sup> magistrates ought to take pitie and compassion of the whom they cause to be executed. When they put an euill doer to death, they must haue pitie on him because hee is a man & a reasonable creature. But howsoever the case stand they must execute y<sup>e</sup> vengeance of God, howbeit without spitefulnessse, and without bitternessse. So was it with the Iewes touching y<sup>e</sup> Moabites and the Ammonites. God ordayned the to execute his iudgement. And for this cause hee saith vnto them, Ye shal not seeke neither their prosperitie nor their peace: that is to say, let them be as they are. For God will not haue you either to companion with them, or to relieue them. Now shal it be lawfull to helpe an euill doer, & to fauour him? That were to ouerthrowe Iustice, and the order which God hath appointed, & to be a confederate with him in y<sup>e</sup> same offence. If a man fauour y<sup>e</sup> wicked, if he helpe & ayde the; he becommeth guiltie of the same crime, & intangleth himselfe in their wickednesse. And therefore God forbid y<sup>e</sup> Iewes to beare any such affection towards y<sup>e</sup> Moabites or Ammonites to help the. And now wee see how reuenging was not onely granted vnto y<sup>e</sup> Iewes, but also commaunded them: & this reuenging was not such as should procede fro a venomous minde or which should be wrought after the lust of y<sup>e</sup> flesh, (for wh<sup>o</sup> we hate any mā to the death, our affectiōs are alwayes troubled & we are neuer well ordered) but gods meaning was, y<sup>e</sup> the Iewes should worke this reuenge, of a good zeale, as being taught thus to say: Beholde wee are appointed by God to execute his vengeance vpon y<sup>e</sup> Moabites. Sith it is y<sup>e</sup> vengeance of God which we ought to execute, we must not make it ours, y<sup>e</sup> is, we must not be ruled after our own lustes, we must bridle our own wils. Now the let vs after y<sup>e</sup> example of y<sup>e</sup> Iewes (which were executors of y<sup>e</sup> vengeance of God vpon y<sup>e</sup> Ammonites & Moabites) learn to submit our selues wholie vnto y<sup>e</sup> obedience of God. For surely it is an acceptable sacrifice to him, wh<sup>o</sup> as we suffer our selues to be guided by his word, and will not attempt any thing beyond y<sup>e</sup> which he biddeth or forbiddeth.

Now hereby we be warned, first of all not to giue y<sup>e</sup> bridle to our owne reuengements: and y<sup>e</sup> when we be wronged or iniured, we must not be pricked forward through our carnal affectiōs, to enterprife more than God permitteth vs. For it is written: Vengeance is mine & I will pay it home, as we shal see in the two & thirtieth chapter of this booke. Now the, haue we bridled our selues in that behalf: haue we not desired reuenge against the which haue prouoked vs, & wrought vs any despyte? Let vs therewithall tary our Lordes leaseure for the redresse of it, yea and let vs haue pitie on our enemies and seeke by all means possible to bring them backe into y<sup>e</sup> way of saluation. And if we see that God also taketh reuenge vpon the wicked, let vs acknowledge his louing kindenesse towards vs, and let it be a warrant vnto vs that he hath a great care of vs, & that he watcheth while we sleepe. Let vs therefore learne to fare the better by all the chastisements which God layeth vpon the enemies of his Church, knowing y<sup>e</sup> thereby he declareth that hee loueth vs with a fatherly affection, and is mindefull of vs and of our saluation; albeit wee thinke not so. This is a thing which ought to make the godly to reioyce, and to confirme the to trust so much the more stedfastly in God, and to runne vnto him, when the wicked vexed them, and when men seeke to turne them aside out of the way of their saluation. But as for those which are appointed to execute y<sup>e</sup> vengeance of God, let them doe it constantly, & yet without spitefulness, & without bitterness. For if wee intermeddle our affections with that which God commaundeth, the vengeance is no longer his: but it proceedeth from our flesh, that is to say, from our vntuly passions. Let them therefore which haue the charge of Iustice, take diligent heede that they proceede therein withall vprightnesse and indifferencie: without being caryed away in any manner whatsoever with any wicked desire.

And moreover let vs be seuered generally fro the wicked: and not ioyne our selues with them; specially when they separate themselves fro the Church of God; for if we haue any familiaritie with them, is it not a conspiring against God & his people as much as lyeth in vs? Shall we not by that means be confederates with them? Yes, & therefore we must in this behalfe forget all kindred. we may not say, he is my friend, he is my gosip, I haue vsed his companie this long time. We must lay all these things aside and say; this man hath shewed himselfe to bee Gods open enemy because he is a let that the faithful agree not as they ought, and because hee hath layd a stumbling block to stop the increase of the Church. When we behold such things, let vs not be led with our dolefull affections: for although y<sup>e</sup> Iewes were the Moabites kinsmen, yet must they reiect them. And why? Because the Moabites were estranged from the people of God, yea & were become their enemies. Ye see then what we are to beare in minde. But wee put it ill in practise. For who is he which now adayes preferreth not kindred and I know not what else before God and his Church? We neede nothing to procure our selues fauour. If a man bee in office and haue a neighbour, he will be his friend. If he haue a gosip or a kinsman, he wil be his friend, much more. But though we be in no authoritie, yet we wil fauour one or other. And why? for euery smal wandring friendship is enough to win our heart. But in the mean while God is forgotten. We can see his Church destroyed before our faces, wee can see men in deuour nothing but to worke destruction and confusion in all things, & yet we will be touched therewith neuer a whit. Are we worthy that God should accept vs for his children? We heare the curse which is pronounced in the

Psalme against all those which make not Ierusalem the cheefe of their ioye: that is to say, which esteeme not more of the common welfare of the Church, than of all the prosperities of this world. Lyke as the faithful ought to endeavour that the Church of God may prosper, that it may be aduanced, that it may encrease: so when the same commeth to passe, they ought to bee farre gladder thereof than of all other benefites, commodities, and whatsoever else they enioy in this world.

And contrariwise when they see any affliction in the Church, they ought to be more so-rie for it, than if they suffred al manner of afflictions in their owne persons. If they doe not thus, they are accursed. But now we can see y<sup>e</sup> Church of God troubled by the wicked, and we can go and ioyne our selues with them. We are not contented to let them alone, such as they are; but we will needes fauour them, wee will needes support and ayde them. And is not this a confederating of our selues with Satan, as I haue sayd afore? Is it not as strinch as to make open war both against God & against his people? Yes verily. And therefore let vs learn to haue such a regard vnto the welfare of the Church of God, as to holde all those for our enemies which lift themselves vp against it: and let vs wage battaile against them to the vttermost of our power, to resist their wicked practises: except wee will be guiltie of confederacie with them to ouerthrow all that which God hath builded.

Moreover, whereas it is said, That they came not out to meete the people; let vs note diligently that G O D thinks it not enough for vs not to bee offensiu vnto his Church, but his will is that wee should also employ our selues faithfully, alwaies to further the saluation of the faithful, according wherunto it is said: That all they which succor not the Church shall be cursed. After that G O D hath threatened them which made warre against the citie of Ierusalem, hee turneth his threatenings against them also which hope it not when it was in necessitie. For there must bee no ventersluppe in this behalfe. We must be either friends or enemies. Therefore if we minde to escape the vengeance of God, whensoever wee see the Church stand in neede of our helpe, let euery of vs employ himselfe faithfully, and let vs endeavour to aduance that which is belonging vnto G O D, and to ayde them which seeke him, and labor to come vnto vnto him. Let vs endeavour (I say) to assist them and to quicken them vnto goe on alwayes more forward. If wee doe not so, doubtlesse wee shall be guiltie of hauing bin too retchlesse and negligent in the Churches behalfe. But (as I sayd afore) if we help and fauour men when they lay their heades together to destroy all, surely wee not onely bewray our selues to bee open enemies of God and of his Church, but also wee shewe our selues to bee double enemies, and so it must needes bee that double vengeance shall fall vpon our heades, as it is in this place declared vnto vs.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God wth acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to vouchsafe to make vs feele them better than we haue done, so as wee may bee alwaies quickened vp more & more to resorte vnto him, & he so strengthen vs to resist the temptations which are bent against vs in this world, as we may withstand al the enemies which cease not to molest vs: and all the vnderlings of Satan which raise troubles and offences among vs; This good G O D of ours graunt vs grace not to bee discouraged with such things, but that wee may continually proceede in the way wherunto God hath called vs, vntill he haue put vs in possession of that saluatiō which he hath promised vs in the kingdome of heauen. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely vnto vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Fryday the xvij. of Ianuarie, 1556.

The Cxxxj. Sermon, which is the second vpon the three and twentieth Chapter.

3 The Ammonites &c.

4 Because they met you not with bread and water in the way when ye came out of Egypt: and because they hyred against you Balaam the sonne of Beor of Pethor in Mesopotamia, to curse you.

5 Howbeit that y<sup>e</sup> Lord thy God would not hearkē vnto Balaā, but the Lord thy God turned his curse into a blessing vnto thee: because y<sup>e</sup> Lord thy god loued thee.

6 Thou shalt not seeke their friendship nor their welfare at any time for euer.

E saw yester day howe that although God did not punish y<sup>e</sup> spitefulnesse and crueltie of the Ammonites and Moabites at 20 hee did beare it still in minde.

Lykewise when as he winketh at faultes, it is not because he hath forgotten them, but that euer-ry thing shall be reckoned for in his due time.

Whereupon I tolde you, that they which haue offended must not flatter themselves, if GOD beare with them and lay not his hand vpon them at the first: but that they must consider y<sup>e</sup> he allureth them vnto repentance when he is so 30 patient, yea, and that he stayeth to see if men will perceiue their owne wickednesse and be sorry for it. We declared with all, why God commaunded the Israclites to execute his vengeance, and in what sorte they should doe it. It remaineth now that we see the reason which is contained here which is that the Ammonites & Moabites (though they issued out of the stock of y<sup>e</sup> Iewes) did notwithstanding shewe themselves their mortal eniemies by stopping of them from coming into the land of Canaan. It is true that this 40 poynt hath bin considered of as concerning those which raise offences to turne Gods children frō coming vnto the inheritance which is promised them, who are by good reason condemned in the person of the Moabites and Ammonites.

But now we must consider that which Moses toucheth concerning the curse. He sayth, That the Moabites hyred Balaam the son of Beor to curse the people. Marke here the meane which the Moabites vsed to roote out thē whome God had chosed, and to sparre the doore against them, that they might not take possession of the land of Canaan which was promised them. The Moabites saw full well that they could not be the better men if they came to handy strokes, and therefore they hired a false Prophet to curse them. And in what sorte? forsooth in the name of God. Now in the first place we see, that they which had no true & pure religion, had yet some 50 seede thereof: yea and that they had this printed in their hart, that God gouerneth the world, y<sup>e</sup> all things are ordered according to his will, y<sup>e</sup> they whom he fauoreth do alwaies prosper, that they to whom he is contrary are vnhappy & vterly confounded. That is y<sup>e</sup> cause why the Moabites hired Balaam in this sort to curse the Israclites in the name of God. For although all this which they did be disallowed, & that they falsly pretended y<sup>e</sup> name of God like trecherous caities as they were, so as this dedde of theirs was in thē a cursed defilement, yet notwithstanding al this proceeded frō a good gronde, namely: y<sup>e</sup> they yeilded vnto God all power of ruling y<sup>e</sup> world, howbeit y<sup>e</sup> they abused it afterward. Now when we see this, if we think to cōpasse y<sup>e</sup> thing, which we take in hand, wout calling on y<sup>e</sup> name of God, so as one putteth his trust in his owne paines taking, an other in his wisdom, a thirde in his strength: we are worse than these blinde wretches which neuer knew one word of the law: and there needes no other witness to condemne vs before God. This therefore is a point well worth the noting. Seeing God would y<sup>e</sup> such light shold remaine among y<sup>e</sup> vnbeleeuers, as y<sup>e</sup> they shoulde knowe y<sup>e</sup> he gouerneth the life of men heere belowe, and y<sup>e</sup> all things are in his hande: [much more] ought wee to yeelde y<sup>e</sup> honour vnto him, vnlesse wee will be worse than those which were without all true religion.

But let vs also take heede that when we haue some good seede, we corrupt it not. For y<sup>e</sup> matter consisteth nor altogether in imagining this or y<sup>e</sup> of God: but we must haue a sound & pure knowledge of him. For there is nothing more easie thā to snarle ourselues, because wee are so enclined vnto vanitie, & the deuil also forgeth vs many deceits to intangle our mindes wā, so as y<sup>e</sup> truth is by and by turned into a lie, except we it ande heede fully vpon our gard. And therefore let vs learne to call vpon God, to the intent y<sup>e</sup> if he vs call him selfe vnto vs, we may not swarue neither to the right hand nor to y<sup>e</sup> left: and y<sup>e</sup> the knowledge which we haue receiued, be not peruerted nor abused. For heere we see what happened vnto thē which hired Balaam. They tooke him as a Prophet: & in very deed Balac the king of Moab sayth vnto him: I know y<sup>e</sup> they whom thou cursest 60 shall be cursed, & those whom thou blesest shall be blessed. What is y<sup>e</sup> cause why Balac speareth thus? He saw y<sup>e</sup> Balaā had receiued from God y<sup>e</sup> gift of prophceeing, and of foretelling many things to come. He was therefore of opinion y<sup>e</sup> seeing God had made him such an excellent mā, he shold be heard. So his intent and purpose was, to bring to passe that God might bee fauorable vnto him.

Rom. 2.4.

Numb. 22.6

& this was good (as I tolde you) that he thought thus: Beholde, if God be on our side all shall goe well with vs, we shall remaine safe & sound: but if his hand be aganſt vs, we mult needes periſh. Ye ſee one good thing in Balac and in all the Moabites which were his ſubiects, for they acknowledged that if God were their aduerſarie partie, they could nor withſtand him, & thereupon they humbled themſelues before him, and deſired to obtayne fauor at his hand. Who wil not highlie eſteeme of this? yea, but in the meane while they went not the right way to worke. As I tolde you afore, it is not enough for men to haue ſome good meaning in generality, but they muſt come vnto God in ſuch ſorte as he commaundeth, and they muſt not ſeek any bypathes. For this is not the way to come vnto him, nay rather it keepeth vs aloofe from him, & maketh vs but to recoyle. Therefore albeir the Moabites knew that y true happineſſe of men is to be in the fauour of God, and that they fought to come thereunto: yet notwithstanding they ceaſe not to offend him grieuouſly. And why ſo? For they take a cleane contrarie way, when they beare themſelues in hand that they ſhall buy the fauour of God for mony. And in what maner delt they? Although y people of Iſraell was choſen of God, and the land of Chanaan was promiſed vnto them; yet the Moabites perſwaded themſelues that they might cōiure God in ſuch wiſe as he woulde not accompliſh his promiſe, but ſhape and vnſhape himſelfe according vnto their luſtes and pleaſure. Let vs therefore note firſt of all, that to finde the fauour of God, we muſt not hardē our ſelues in our vices, but bee ſory for them: and ſecondly hope for nothing againſt his promiſes. Here bee two ſpeciall pointes. And it is all one aſif it were ſayd, that to pleaſe God, we muſt be truly repētant. For vntil we know our faultes, and be aſhamed of them, doubtleſſe God will alwayes remaine our enemy. And therewithal let vs grōūd our ſelues vpon his promiſes. For it were a follicie to thinke to obtaine any thing in ſuch ſort as God in the meane while ſhould bee ſaine to eate his worde, and be chaunged according vnto our fancie. Now the Moabites were of this minde. For they cōtinued ſpitefull ſtil. And how thought they to winne Gods fauour? They went about to buy it of Balaam for mony. Lykewiſe nowadayes among the Papiſts it is to be ſcene how they inrange themſelues in their ſinnes, and had leuer to rotte in their owne filth, than receiue the medicine which God offereth them. But in y meane time they thinke to ransome themſelues by their Maſſes, and by other ſuch meanes as they haue. But they ſhall gaine aſmuch as the Moabites did. And what meane they by theſe ransomes which they bring, but that they woulde ſaine make God partaker of their wickedneſſe? When a man ſhall haue pilld & robbed others, he will bring part of that bootie for an offering. A fornicarour thinke to cleare himſelfe by giuing of almes. Now this is all one as if they woulde let God in their owne aray, and make him alſo guiltie of the faultes as well as themſelues: & therefore they doe but prouoke his vengeance farther vpon them, as the Moabites did. So thē (as I haue tolde you afore) if wee will haue acceſſe vnto God, let vs learne to feele his anger: and in feeling of it, condemne our ſelues for our ſinnes, and ſo come and offer our ſelues purely vnto his ſeruiſe, praying him to change vs into new creatures, y we may be acceptable vnto him.

And herewithall let vs come and ſeeker after that ranſome by the which we are recōciled vnto God, & redeemed frō all curſing: which is becauſe our Lord Ieſus Chriſt hath ſhed his precious bloud for our ſaluation. And thus ye ſee how we ioyne the promiſes of God with repentance. For it is not enough for ſinners to feele and acknowledge their faultes, & to be aſhamed of thē: But faith muſt be ioyned therewithall. For what doe the Moabites in this place? They tel Balaam that thoſe whome he bleſſeth ſhall bee bleſſed. What proofes haue they of this? Was God pinned on Balaams ſteue? Was he bound to him? Ye ſee then how fondly Balac delt. But the deſpiſers of God deſerue well to be ſo blinded. For they perſwade themſelues that God will come downe from heauen, and transforme himſelfe for their pleaſure, yea after what maner ſoeuer they ſeeker him. For (as I haue told you) there is a rule and manner of ſeeking God which wil neuer deceiue vs. And aſſoone as men turne there, from that, they doe but wander from him. How ſoeuer the caſe ſtandeth then, if wee deſire in deede to finde fauour at the hand of God, let vs haue our eye fixed on his promiſes. Let vs know how and by what meanes it commeth to paſſe, that he fauoreth vs; and hying our ſelues thither, let vs wholly ſtay our ſelues on that which he telleth vs. To be ſhort, let faith be our guide, & ſhewe vs y way. After that maner God wil accept of vs, whē we come vnto him; by that mean the gate ſhall be opened vnto vs. And ſo in the example of Balac and y Moabites, we haue as it were a looking glaſſe, wherein to behold al y byſcapes & all the vagaries which y world maketh, when they pretend to ſeeker God and yet keepe aloofe from him. For whatſoeuer they pretend, there is no alteration of minde in them, neither haue they any beleſe in the promiſes of God. On the cōtrary ſide, we haue alſo to gather how God will become fauorable vnto vs. And that is if we imagine not to bind him vnto vs, as though he ought to allow of our vices, and would intermeddle him with our filthineſſe: but ſeeker to be clenſed from it, and to yeelde our ſelues vnto him, and to cleaue vnto his righteouſneſſe. Secondly when we conceiue nothing in our braine after our owne lyking, to ſay that wee muſt ſerue God, but how after this manner: we muſt winne his fauour in this ſorte, after the manner of the lawleſſe libertie which reigneth nowadayes among y Papiſts. But if we woulde aſke any thing at the mouth of God: alas, we are not worthis to come neare him. And againe when wee thinke on his maieltie, wee muſt needes bee confounded for feare, becauſe there is nothing in vs but all manner of corruption, and wee muſt needes bee his enemies, cūen of good right. Yea but wee haue thoſe proniſes which cannot deceiue vs, if so bee wee doubt nothing at all. Surely God so warranteth that which he hath spoken, y<sup>e</sup> if we set our mindes thoroughly vpon his promises and vnderprop our selues with them, we may goe on with a courage and not doubt but that he will receiue vs.

Now moreouer whereas it is sayd that the Moabites hired Balaam, and meant that hee should serue their turne to curse the people; we haue hereby to note, that if we beare our selues in hand, that God wil helpe vs with his fauour against those whom he loueth; the if he will be such as we see the Moabites had thereof. And yet this is in common vse, that the wicked think y<sup>e</sup> God ought to be on their side, notwithstanding y<sup>e</sup> they persecute & destroy folk with neuer so euil conscience. Albeit y<sup>e</sup> they vse neuer so much spitefulnesse and crueltie, yet are they of opinion that God will helpe them. As for example nowadayes, when princes make warre vpon couetousnesse and ambition: they proclayme many solemne processions, But what for that? Surely all that euer they do, is detestable before God. For what stirreth the thereto, but that they are blinded with pride, couetousnesse and such lyke things; so that they spare no mans bloud, ne make any account of confounding heauen and earth together: & yet notwithstanding they call vpon the name of God. I alledge onely this one example, howbeit that euery particular person is at the same point. Euery of vs in y<sup>e</sup> trade which he vseth, would faine haue God on his side. But yet for all that we continue stil our deceit & malicious willnesse, our cruelties & extortions, our periuries and trecherous dealinges, & wee giue our selues vnto all wickednesse: and is it possible that God should be matched with our filthy infections? Should he renouce himself & turne his glory into shame? yet are we so blockish that they dally thus with God, yea & y<sup>e</sup> with such presumptuous bouldnes, as it is an horrible thing to behold. Such we see that this sicknesse is ouer rise; let vs learne (as I haue told you) that when we wil call vpon God to defend vs & to be aduersary vnto our enemies, we must take hede that we haue a good cause, & that we be warranted in conscience y<sup>e</sup> we attempt nothing but according to his will, that they which persecute vs do it wrongfully, that we be desirous as farre as lieth in vs to be appeace with our enemies, & that wee haue not prouoked them with any iniurie, nor giuen them any cause to molest vs. Whē we can protest this in conscience before God; then we may wel call vpon him; & feare we not but he will be our defender. But if our cause be euil & that they which persecute vs may truly alledge y<sup>e</sup> we haue prouoked them so to do, & haue giuen the cause thereof; let vs not then looke for any fauour at Gods hand, For when we abuse his name so fallly, our payment shal not be long after. And how shal we be rewarded? Verily not onely our labor shal be lost, but God wil also laugh vs to skorne for taking part against his children. Therefore if wee wage battaile with good men, and vse extortions, & wrongings, & other wicked practises, and increase the same with this further, of committing such outrage against God as to intermeddle his name with our wickednes; questionlesse hee will wreke his wrath vpon vs for it. Wee see what is said in this place. For God pronouncing here y<sup>e</sup> sentence of condemnation vpon the Moabites, saith y<sup>e</sup> they abused his name in hiring Balaam to curse his people. Let vs therefore learne (as I haue tolde you) not to trouble the which serue God, nor to maintaine any quarell against them, vnlesse we will haue God for our aduersarie. And in so dooing let vs not think to gaine any thing by calling vpon him, but rather perswade our selues that in so doing we shall kinde his vengeance for much the more against vs.

Let vs come now vnto that which Moses addeth: God would not heare Balaam, but turned his curse into a blessing: because the Lord shy God loued thee. This historie is handled more largely from the 22. Chap. of Num. vnto the 24. But without making here the whole rehearal thereof, it shal suffice to haue the effect of that which is touched here as by the way. It is said that God would not heare Balaam, but there was yet more than so, as Moses in that place rehearseth. For God hindered him, and declared vnto him his will. Whē Balaam desired leaue to goe at y<sup>e</sup> request of Balac and of the Moabites: he made the messengers tarie a night, because he would repaire aside vnto God. Thereupon it was told him: Thou shalt not goe. But yet for all that, he bargained, yea & the desire of gaine prouoked him to intreat God so long vntill he saith: Goe thy way; Howbeit wth displeasure, in so much that God shewed him his rebellion & his own asse taught him, as who saw more clearer than he. He could not perceiue y<sup>e</sup> Angel of the Lord, and yet the brute beast perceiued him. Ye see then Balaam condemned; in so much that God giueth more reason & discretion to y<sup>e</sup> Assē whereon he fate, than vnto him who was a Prophet: yea contrary to all nature y<sup>e</sup> Assē speaketh. When we see all this, is it not as much as if God had expressly set himselfe on the contrary side, to shew y<sup>e</sup> he garded y<sup>e</sup> people of Israel vnder his protection? And after this when Balaam is come, what saith he? He telleth Balac y<sup>e</sup> king thus. I can doe nothing. Truly I haue enforced my self to doe somewhat, but I see y<sup>e</sup> God withstandeth me: and I cannot open my mouth to speake, but he turneth my words clean contrary from my purpose. Hereupō they make many cōiurations to hinder God, & make him beholden to the: they reare vp seuerall altars on one side, & feue on another. And wherunto redeth al this, but to y<sup>e</sup> which I told you, y<sup>e</sup> the wicked woulde faine bring God to their part: But they goe not y<sup>e</sup> right way to seeke him. They fetch their vagaries and go by y<sup>e</sup> wayes. And they doe nothing but turne rayle to him. And if happilie they cast an eye towards him, it is but to prouoke his anger and to kinde it so much y<sup>e</sup> more. Ye see then in what sort Balaam and Balac go forward. Now in the end whē God had opened Balaams mouth, hee prophecied of the good which should come vnto the people of Israell vnto the reigne of Dauid: Saying, That a starre should come out of Iacob, the brightnesse whereof shoulde reche vnto Israel, and Moab should bee subiect vnto them, and humble himselfe vnder their feete. And vndoutedly in the reigne of Dauid there was a figure of the kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Yee see then how Balaam was constrained to speake in this sort mauger his beard, and againe, when Balac reproued him saying, What meanest thou? Thou art come hither at my charges, and commest thou to deceiue mee? for thou doest cleane contrary to that which thou didst promise mee. And what can I do saith Balaam? Is God like vnto men, that hee should change his purpose? If he haue once deceiued a thing, it must needs be done, it abideth for cuer. For hee altereth not, ne changeth according to the lust of men. Beholde how the false prophet speaketh in as excellent a style and manner of speech as can be, of Gods vchangeable truth.

Now because the Israelites should not think that Gods doing hereof, was either because they had deserued something, or because they were better than the Moabites: Moses sayeth afterwards: That this was because God loued the Iewes. To the intent therefore that he might be magnified for his freebestowed goodnes, and that y Iewes might humble them selues knowing that they had obtained fauour at his hand and by reason hee had cholen & elected them of his owne good will; he saith: Thy God hath now declared how he loued thee. Here we haue to note first of all that Balaam was such a false prophet, as notwithstanding had some particular gift of prophesying from God: and these be no contrary things that a man should haue the gift of prophesying, and yet for all that abuse the gift of the holy ghost, and turne it to a wicked purpose. Wee see that also which S. Paul sayth in his Epistle to the Corinthians; namely, that they which had the gift of tongues, of interpreting, and such like things which were excellent in the Church; had notwithstanding no regarde of edifying of the Church: and that many of them were not renewed in such sort by the spirit of God, y they sought to serue him. It may wel be therefore that men that haue receiued excellent gifts to be esteemed, & that they shall beare the markes of the spirit of God, & yet not haue the chiefe and principal thing of all, y is to wit, the spirit of regeneration, nor be so confirmed, that they shall giue themselves ouer wholly vnto the seruice of God, & endeouour to make that auailable vnto them which they haue receiued, by applying it vnto a good & lawfull vse, wayting for the saluation which God setteth before them. This may wel be. And if this fall out in the Church, that is to say, to them which are of the householde of faith: what shal we think of Balaam & the like? & so we see there is no inconuenience, y Balaam had the gift of prophesie, & yet for all that had many corruptions therewithal, inso much that he was an idolater, & vsed forceries. But what is the cause that God gaue him the knowledge of foretelling things to come? for it might seeme y by this meanes he setteth forth his name vnto open reproche. It is true in deede that Balaam & such like, when they thus abuse the gifts of God, do vnhallo w y which is holy, & that which they haue receiued of God. Yet notwithstanding there was this respect, y God ment to leaue some witness of himselfe euen among the Infidels, to the intent they might haue so much y lesse excuse, & be so much the more conuicted, if they would make ignorance their buckler. As for example, the Moabites forasmuch as they had not y law, therefore they had neuer knowen any thing of God, except their fathers had left the some small remnant therof. For Lot was not ignorant of it, but being brought vp in his vncler Abrahams house, he knew what religion meant. As for the Moabites, they were altogether estranged from it. Howbeit there remained some small print therof, y they might be conuicted at the latter day: y if they had sought after God, they might haue attained vnto him, but because they were snarled in the multitude of superstitions which they themselues had deuised, & were grown cleane out of kinde, they can seeke after no starting holes: for they shal alway be condemned for hauing a malicious wickednes in them, and for turning aside from God, so as they deserued to be blinded in y fashion by y deceits of Satan. And thus yee se what is to be noted in the first place touching Balaam.

Now in y Balaac beleued, y if Balaam once cursed y people, al should passe on his side; wee see therby how men can neuer hold the mean, but euen do swaue aside to some extremitie or other. It is true in deede y when wee are blessed of y prophets of God, the same is a warrant vnto vs of his blessing. But yet we must alway haue an eye vnto God. For if we teare him in peeces, what shal we win therby? But when men think to coniuere God, it is al one as if they would dismember him. For they intend to seuer his iustice & vprightnes from his truth, & his gracious goodnes, from his mightie power. God saith y when we be blessed of his prophets, we ought to assure our selues that he ratifieth y same in heauen. When Abraham blessed Isaac, when Isaac blessed Iacob, when Iacob blessed his children, it was no vaine blessing, because it had his certaine force & effect. And why? Because God had giuen vnto them this office. And what is y reason y we are blessed at his hand, when me blesse vs with their mouth? His wil is that men should beare this reuerence vnto his word, by y which he declareth him selfe here below vnto vs, he cometh not downe alwayes from heauen in visible maner, he sendeth not his angels at our pleasure: but those whome he hath ordeined his messengers, are to declare his wil vnto vs. He will be serued by them as by instruments, to the intent he may make his blessings which he sendeth vnto men to profit them. And therefore if we say that being blessed by the Prophets or by the priests, we are assured y God ratifieth the same in heauen: we shal speake truly. Yea verily, if so be wee haue an eye vnto God, & be conformable vnto his wil. But if we dally with God, & wil haue him transforme himselfe at our becke: let vs note y he wil curse vs, yea, y he will curse vs double when we vse him in that order. For when God ordeined ned that the priestes should blesse the people, it was to good effect & purpose. For it is expressly said in the sixth Chapter of Numbers: Ye shall blesse my people in my name, & they shall be blessed. There is a promise made. The priestes then when they opened their mouth in the name of God, had this trueth warranted from heauē, that they might promise the fauor of God, and the people were certaine that they should prosper whē they once had this warrant which was offered vnto them. But yet for all that it behoued vs to haue an eye vnto God. For if any wicked should come to seeke for a blessing at the priestes hāds, & the priestes on the one side should desie God & make their gaine of him; & they on the other side which come vnto them, haue hyred them to blesse: what might be thought of it? It were a diuelish superstition, & a peruerfion of the order of God. And yet notwithstanding they do it daily in the popedom. For ye see what our Lord Iesus Christ laide vnto his disciples. If you forgiue sinnes vpon earth, they shall be forgiuen in heauen. and whatsoeuer ye vbinde vpon earth, shall be vnbund in heauen. Ye see then how our Lord Iesus Christs will is, that his blessing should be vttered vnto vs in his name. But what do the papists? Their prelacie forsooth on the one side vsurp the office of God, & by their charmes & forceries they would so blear the eyes of the whole world, that men should not seeke after God. It is ynough (say they) to haue a crosse on the back, or a sprinkling of holy water, & I know not what. And the world on the other side is soone entreated to receiue these dotages. For men fall asleep in their vices, & beare themselves in hande it is ynough for them to haue discharged all their sinnes once a yere into a priestes bolome, & then to haue a Masse or two sung, & other like solemnities vsed. After this maner haue men purchaced blessings not at Gods, but at Balaams hand. What is then to be done? Because we see men swaue thus aside vnto these sinful extremities; let vs know, what when Gods wil is that his blessing be declared vnto vs by the mouth of men, it is to the intent we should look vpon him, & receiue the blessing at his hand, yea, & in such sort as we seuer it not from his trueth or righteousnes. On what condition is it that he blesseth vs: It is to the intent first that we should know, that there is in vs nothing but cursednes, & secondly that we should haue recourse vnto his maiestie, & hold our selues in the right way which hee hath shewed vnto vs, and therefore let vs not disioyne that which is ioyned together by God least we become guiltie of this crueltie of tearing God as it were in peeces, as the Papists do nowadays, & the Moabites did in tunc past. Now then we see wherin Balac offended, & how we are warned by his fault, which is, that he thought Balaam had this priuilege to blesse at his pleasure, & that God had layed the bridle on his neck, & that he had resigned ouer vnto him his own office. Let vs take heede of so vaine & foolish thoughts. And let vs vnderstand what when God sendeth vs men to declare vnto vs his word, it is not because himselfe would bee at rest & sleepe in heauen, & in the mean time forsake his church here below, & suffer men to bestow at their pleasure the treasure which he hath committed vnto them; but it is to the intent that we should be guyded vnto him according vnto our weaknes. If we haue men to speake vnto vs in his name, it is not to the end that we should stick vnto them, but to the intent they might be our ayders & helpers. And yet notwithstanding if we wil come vnto God, we must be blessed in his name, yea, & receiue with faith & true repentance the good which he offereth vs. And when we be so blessed, let vs knowe that which men shall haue done, is not vaine or fruitles thing: because God warranteth & ratifieth it in heauen; but yet for all that, he himself must gouerne vs, he must alwayes haue the chiefe preheminence, & we must not leane to creatures, but resort vnto him and say: Lord it is of thee that I desire to be blessed. And how? not by forging such imaginations as shall seeme good vnto vs: but thou Lord hast appointed that we should come vnto thee, & sithe we haue thy word, it is ynough to assure vs that our labor shall not be lost: but that the thing which thou hast pronounced & decreed by thy worde & by the doctrine of the Gospel, shall be fulfilled: & that although it be done on earth, yet notwithstanding yet effect thereof shall be shewed in heauen. Wherefor whensoever we heare the warrant of our saluation preached vnto vs; it is all one as if we had seene an angel from heauen, or as if god himself had taught vs in his own person: and we must do God this honor to receiue his word reuerently without making any reply against it, at leastwise if we wil be holden & accounted for his people. Now hee withal we are also warned by God by withholding the mouth of Balaam, declared therby the power of his promise which hee had made vnto Abraham. Truly he might haue vsed other meanes; but his intent was to certifie the Jewes more fully of their adoption. Sometimes God giveth the bridle to the wicked to blaspheme with open & full mouth, & to peruert all truth, whereupon they take so vntruly & lawlesse leaue, as none can be greater, & do nothing else but pluck forward the vengeance of God vpon their heads. To be short, all the world groweth out of kind by their abuses. God somtimes permitteeth this, and why so? because men are worthe somtimes of such scourges. Secondly, God meaneth to humble vs. And thirdly, he will trye the stedfastnes of our faith. But in Balaam he vsed another manner of order, that is to wit, he bridled his tongue so as he could not do what he would, & what he purposed for good withstood him. And why did hee so? Because the people were ouer tender & nyceharted: they had neede of helpe, and therefore God meant to giue them this advantage. So then let vs note, that he suffereth deceiuers somtimes to darken the trueth, yea, & to cast forth their lyes at full, & in the meane while notwithstanding disappointeth them of their purpose: or if his wil be that they preuaile, it is because of mens vnthriftines: for (as S. Paul saith) they haue wel deserued that God should forsake them. But somtimes he wil bridle the tounges of wicked, so as the enemies of the worde of God

Matt. 16. 19.
John. 20. 21.

cannot speake that which full faine they would & we see nowadays many experiences hereof.
In deede a man may see on the one side these hyeling villaines, these hypocrites & flatterers [I meane] which write nowadays as their knowledge serueth them, & as men greafe them in y hand like common strumpets of the stewes. It is nothing with them to speake euil of God, and to aduance themselves against his word. We may see many such Balaams nowadays, which are at the Popes pay, & are of his stinking clergie, & be of the number of these horned beasts. But yet we see also how God bridleth them, & locketh them vp in such close ward, y they speake sometimes cleane contrarie to that they purposed, so as they profit vs more by that meanes, than if they had set themselves purposely to serue god: insomuch y the throte of Popedom is cut by his own vnderlings, & by all these Balaams which endeuour to bring al to vtter destruction, & the things which are done by them, doe serue vs to as good purpose, as if the seruants of God had spoken & writen. Therefore when we see this, let vs acknowledge the goodnes of God, and be confirmed more & more therein. And moreouer if he sometimes giue such great libertie vnto y wicked, y they disguise al things, & falsifie the truth by turning of it into a lie: Let vs pray him to strengthen vs against such temptations, and not suffer the weaklings to quayle altogether by that meanes. Now it is to be noted also y God heard not Balaam, but held him backe, notwithstanding that he declared his wil vnto him, & in the end did suffer him to goe. Hereby wee are taught not to come with hypocrisie as Balaam did when we desire leaue for any thing at Gods hand. For wee see what leaue he had. The like was said vnto king Achab. Yea thou shalt haue y victorie. But God mocked him, because he wold needes haue leaue of him, whether he would or no. Wel, God gaue him leaue, but it was to doe him to vnderstand, y he was prouoked thereby to farther displeasure: so hapned it vnto Balaam.
But how euer it be, let vs thus conclude: that for asmuch as Balaam was so stubbornly bent; therefore his couetynesse so blinded him, as he sought onely after gaine. For as a swyne when he hath once winded his meat, runnes on to wash himself in it, though he see men readie to stick him, because his lust carrieth him on headlong though it be to his death: so doe the wicked which despise God. And why? For their desires blind the, & cary them away headlong, & yet will they needes haue Gods leaue with them.

But wee see what befell of it: namely y God commadeth him to blesse his people, & to curse the Moabites. Forasmuch as wee see this, let vs know y sith God did put the warrant of his truth in the mouth of a falsie prophet, [we must assure our selues that] when he sheweth vs so great fa-uour as to speake vnto vs by those whom he hath appointed shepherds in his church, & by who he wil be serued; it is an infallible warrant of his gracious goodnes towards vs. And seeing that a falsie prophet was constrained to say y God is not like vnto mortal men, what ought we to do?
Seeing y a falsie prophet speaketh thus, we ought to be ashamed to call the truth of God in question, specially when he declareth it vnto vs: by such as represent his person. And therefore let e-uery man answer Amen in his heart. Sith wee heare euery day y God allureth vs vnto himself, that he reneweth the remembrance of y a adoption which he hath made vs, y he layeth before vs the benefite of the death & passion of our Lord Iesus Christ, declaring vnto vs that we are cleansed by that meanes, & y we are reconciled vnto him: let these things cause vs to answer Amen; & let vs rightly scale vp the same, to shew y when God speaketh we are content with that which he saith, nothing doubting but that he will fulfil the same in his time.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feeble them more & more, yea, & y knowing how there is nothing in vs but al maner of milerie & wretchednes, & y vntil he accept of vs through his mercie, wee must needes be his enemies; it may please him to grant vs the grace to seeke him, not with faint-nednes & hypocrisie, but in plain truth, ridding vs of all our wicked affections, & of whatsoeuer we haue besides which may hinder vs from com-ming vnto him purely & in such simplicitie as he requireth. Let vs therefore go vnto him with repentance & faith, submitting our selues wholly vnto his word, & embracing his promises which he maketh vs to feeble with their power & effect.
And that albeit we heare them not but of mortal men which speake vnto vs, yet wee may not sayle to sticke wholly vnto y doctrine which is of God, & to y order which he hath appointed, knowing y our Lord Iesus Christ wil shew howe it was not for nought y he ordeined y his church should be so ordered. That it may please him to grant this grace not only vnto vs, but also, &c.

The Cxxxij. Sermon which is the third vpon the three and twentieth Chapter.

- 7 Thou shalt not abhorre an Edomite, because he is thy brother. Thou shalt not abhorre an Egyptian, because thou wast a stranger in his land.
- 8 The children which are borne to them in the third generation, shall enter into the congregation of the Lord.
- 9 VVhen thou goest out with an host against thine enemies, then keepe thy selfe from euery wicked thing.

10 If any among you be vncleane by that which cometh vnto him by night, he shall go out of the host & not come into the host againe, 11 But at euening he shall wash himselfe with water, and when the Sunne is downe, he shal come into the host againe.

WE haue already declared whereunto this which Moses treateth of here doth tend. Namely to this, that for asmuch as God had seuered the people of Israel from all other nations of the world, that privilege might be obserued: and that was to the intent y<sup>e</sup> those whom he of his free fauour had fo chosen, might the better vnderstand, how deeply they were bound vnto his freebestowed goodnes. For as we haue before seene, he preferred them not in this manner before all the world, either for any worthines or nobilitie which was in their persons. Ye see then how the children of Abraham were then adopted, when God gathered them vnto himselfe, to be taken for his children. And therefore they are exhorted not to mingle themselves with the defilements of y<sup>e</sup> Infidels, but to continue in al holines, because God hath so dedicated them vnto himselfe: knowing y<sup>e</sup> they ought not to match themselves with such as were removed from God, for that had bin an infecting of themselves to peruert the grace of God. Likewise nowadays being assured y<sup>e</sup> God hath giuen vs his word, it is to the end we should walke, not as blinde men in darkenes but as folke y<sup>e</sup> are enlightened & haue the sunne of righteousnes, our Lord Iesus Christ. Ye see then in effect what Moses treateth of in this place, to wit, that y<sup>e</sup> people of Israel being elected of God, should keepe possession of that grace which was granted vnto them.

Now if a man had seene y<sup>e</sup> estate of y<sup>e</sup> children of Israel at y<sup>e</sup> time, he would haue scorned y<sup>e</sup> forbidding which is set down here. For alas poore men they had wandered alreadie in the wilderness fortie yeres; they had not one foote of land of their own; they were hunted out of al places, & yet for all y<sup>e</sup>, as if they had bin of some great nobilitie, & in some high dignitie, God saith vnto them: make much of the benefite which I haue bestowed vpon you, receiue not the Moabites, for they are your open enemies; but receiue the Egyptians & Edomites, in y<sup>e</sup> third generatiō. Yea, but what should y<sup>e</sup> Edomites haue gained by coming to such a wandring & vagabond people? & againe, as for y<sup>e</sup> Edomites, they were in peaceable possession of their inheritance, no man troubled them, & therefore this might seeme superfluous. But let vs note y<sup>e</sup> God valueth more the fauour which hee bestoweth on men when hee calleth them into his church, than if they had all y<sup>e</sup> riches & honors, & all y<sup>e</sup> delicate pleasures in the world. Ye see then y<sup>e</sup> reason why God forbid leth y<sup>e</sup> Iewes to receiue them whom he had cursed & reiected. For y<sup>e</sup> question is not whether y<sup>e</sup> Moabite, & Egyptians should aduantage themselves the more as touching earthly commodities, by ioyning with y<sup>e</sup> people of God: that cometh not into account; but whether it would not benefite them to come vnto y<sup>e</sup> inheritance of saluation if they were members of the church of God, if they were partakers of y<sup>e</sup> adoption which God made in the person of Abraham. That was the thing which was to be considered. Therefore albeit we be now despised of the world, yea, & scorned also as we see how this heathnish kind of men are full of pride, & make such triumphes to y<sup>e</sup> worldward y<sup>e</sup> they wil scarce vouchsafe to make vs their footstoles to tread vpon: although (say I) that wee see our selues brought into such contempt: yet notwithstanding let vs know, y<sup>e</sup> such God hath bestowed so inestimable a benefite vpon vs, as to looke mercifully vpon vs; & to draw vs to him, & y<sup>e</sup> at this day we are of his household: Surely it surmounteth al that euer men do customably esteeme of in y<sup>e</sup> world. For y<sup>e</sup> which is said by Esay y<sup>e</sup> Prophet shal alwayes hold: namely, that we are more esteemed before him, than are all y<sup>e</sup> great kingdoms of y<sup>e</sup> world. So then let vs leaue to content our selues with the fauour which God hath bestowed vpon vs, in y<sup>e</sup> it hath pleased him to gather vs into his house as his own children, and let vs beare patiently y<sup>e</sup> want of all other things, & nor be ouerpensiuē or grieued, though y<sup>e</sup> world make no account of vs. For it ought wel to content vs y<sup>e</sup> our Lord sheweth himselfe our father, & y<sup>e</sup> he hauing adopted vs, calleth vs to our heavenly inheritance, although in this world we be most miserable, & (as it should seeme) none in worse estate & condition than we. Let vs come now vnto y<sup>e</sup> which is said of the Edomites, Gods wils, That in the third generation they should be receiued, yea, euen to be accounted of the Church, if they offer themselves therunto. And he addeth, That they are brethren, that is to say kinsmen, of the children of Israel. For we know y<sup>e</sup> Esau from whom the Edomites came, was the eldest sonne of Isaac: so y<sup>e</sup> by nature he should haue bin preferred before Iacob, if God of his freebestowed goodnesse had not made a change therin. Now y<sup>e</sup> Moabites also were kinsmen of the children of Israel by reason of Lot. But we haue seene why God did cut them off, to wit, because they enforced themselves to y<sup>e</sup> utmost of their power, to hinder the children of Israel from coming to their inheritance. Those then which should haue bin neere by blood, estranged themselves wholly from the people of God. For they troubled the gracious fauour which God had bestowed on his people, or at leastwise it was not long of them, that it was not troubled. For they hyred Balaam, & endeouored to annihilate the blessing of God, & to abolish his promise. Ye see then in them an v pardonable offence. But as touching the Edomites, there was no such reason. And so, God remembered still, that hauing made the promise to his seruauant Abraham, hee extended his fauour to his whole stocke. Yea, albeit that Esau was for a tyme deprived of it; yet notwithstanding he would not haue him so farre removed from it, as other nations were. In deede if wee consider both these people, as they are, either in his estate, wee shal see that to be true which is saide by the Prophet Malachie: Mal. 1. 3. for God vpbraideth the children of Israel with their vnthankfulness in this behalf & they considered not what a priuledge he had giuen them. What (saith he) haue you forgotten? & loue which I haue shewed you? And wherin? There he bringeth in the children of Israel as wicked folke & such as had cast vnder foote & which they had receiued. I pray you (saith he) was not Esau Jacobs brother? and yet I loued Jacob your father and hated Esau. My will was he should bee shut vp as it were in the desertes & hilles, & I haue giuen you all this country in possession. Yee see the how God magnifieth his goodnes towards & stock of Jacob, in comparison of Esau. But heere Moses saith & if the Edomites wold yeeld themselves into the church of God, they might be receiued in the third generation, yea & be incorporated thereinto altogether. For he which offered himselfe to be circumcised, was alwayes receiued; but he was not yet accounted of & bodie of the people, vntill the third generation. Let vs therefore diligently note, that here the children of Esau be not made equall vnto the stock of Jacob. But it is said that if any of them would renounce his own kinred, he should be accounted in the number of this blessed stocke which God had shouled out to serue him, and be receiued in among them.

Now we are here to call to minde, that when God made his promise, it was vnto the whole stock of Abraham, not that al were partakers of the promise of saluation, but that God had a certain regard & bare a special fauour vnto al that house, & vnto them which were to issue from it, accordingly also as we see how he saith: As concerning Ismael, I haue heard thee. And in very deede, it was not for nought & God commaunded & Ismael should be circumcised. We know what circumcision importeth: it is a signe of the fauor of God. Now seeing it was giuen vnto Ismael, it is great reason & he should approach more neere vnto God than the Paynims which were altogether defiled, & which had no signe that God loued them, I say no particular signe. For in as much as he maketh his sunne to shine vpon the good & vpon the wicked, & in that he nourisheth the whole world; thereby he proueth himselfe a father towards all. But here the case is of hauing some warrant of adoption. Now Ismael had it. But in the end it is saide that he shall not be the inheritor of the house. Behold he is cut off. And S. Paul also alleageth the same similitude, to shew that there are many which are called in the church of God, which in the ende are driuen out againe & banished, as not worthy to enjoy so great a benefit. And so it is with Esau: for he was the sonne Isaac, yea he and his brother Jacob were twinnes; by reason whereof it might seeme there should haue been two nations of like condition & estate altogether. Esau was the elder, & for that cause should haue been preferred before his brother, but he was bereued of his right: God chaunged the order of nature, to the intent we might haue a looking glasse (as the holy scripture sheweth it to bee) that it is of mere fauour, when we are elected of God: & we must not seeke & cause thereof in our felues, as if we had prevented him, or as if we had deserued any thing, & & he had found vs more worthy than others. There is none of al this. But if wee be small & contemptible, yea & as it were things borne out of time; God will magnifie his goodnes so much the more, by choosing vs. Yee see how Esau is driuen out of his fathers house. And in what manner? Is it that he should be put beside all & commodities of this world? No. For he was rich & wealthie. Yea, it seemed & he was an hundredfold more happie than his brother Jacob. For whiles Jacob remained a stranger stul in the land, Esau was well harbored, & his offspring was settled in peace. Yea, he had then the lordship & government in & countrey of Edom, which countrey carried his name. And al this whyles poore Jacob is a fugitiue in a farre countrey. And when hee returneth hee falleth on his knees before him, & desireth mercie, so as his life seemed to hang by a slender thread, & that Esau should deuour him, like as when a Wolfe holdeth a fillie sheepe in his chawes. Euen so stood & cam with him. And in the end when Jacob was come home againe, wee see he did nothing but wander here & there, so as hee had scarce any corner to lue in, yea, & & was at the curse of another: he had no water to drinke; but it cost him dearly: he was hardly entreated & many quarrels were picked vnto him for al the things & he had; lastly hee was driuen from his owne home into Egypt by reason of famine, & there to dye. But as for the Edomites, they pynd not away after that manner. And so we see (as I told you) & God meant in this behalf to shew the fauour which he bestoweth on men when he vouchsafeth to chooſe them vnto himselfe. And herewithall we see how his goodnes was extended to al the stock of Abraham, although they which were children only after & flesh, were not accounted nor aduowed to be of the church: yet, neuertheless there alwayes remained some remnant of grace among them. Likewise at this day we be farre neerer neighbors vnto the Papis, than vnto & Turkes or other Paynims. And the reason is, because & albeit they are estranged from the grace of god, & haue corrupted al religion, & are so intangled in their abuses & corruptions as it is horrible to behold; yet notwithstanding there remaineth among them some footstep of & calling of God. For they haue baptism which is a visible signe wherby we see & God held the of his house & of his fold. Yee see then how & papis are as it were the Edomites. For they were first called, and should haue bene partakers of the saluation which was preached vnto vs by the gospel; they beare yet the mark thereof as touching baptism. But because they haue peruerted the seruice of God, yea & as it were taken faith clean away, by the which they should haue bin called vnto the mercie which hath bin brought vnto vs by our Lord Iesus Christ; it is great reason & they should be held for Edomites. But on the other side, we ought notwithstanding to call to mynd the brotherhood which they had with vs. And therefore let vs endeavor as much as is possible for vs, to bring them back againe, that we may be knit together againe. And how knit together againe? I meane not, that we should turne aside from the pure truth of God, to be at agreement with the Papists, but that they should enter, that is to say, that they should approach neare vnto God, & so we be reconciled al of vs, yeelding obediēce vnto our heavenly father, so as we may haue al one head Iesus Christ who will defende vs vnder his wings. When the Papistes come & order themselves thus, we are to receiue them with all gentlenes, by reaso of the brotherhood which God hath set betwene them & vs. And we must not only do so; but also must seeke them as much as is possible for vs to do.

As touching the Egyptians, it is saide y they also shalbe receiued into the Church. And why? For thou wast a stranger (saith he) in the land of Egypt. Now in deede, true it is that the children of Israel were oppressed with cruel bondage by reason of the cruel tyrannie which the Egyptians exercised ouer them. But yet Gods will is that their benefits should be acknowledged. Albeit they so vniustly oppressed the childre of Israel, yet because y children of God had their refuge thither in the time of famine, & were there relieved: God wil not haue that benefit forgotten. And y is the cause also why God by the Prophet Esay, comparing the captiuitie of Egypt with y captiuitie of Assyria, saith: In deede my people went to sojorne in Egypt, & necessitie constrained them therto: & whereas the Egyptians oppressed them, in so doing they did them wrong: but yet they had some colour thereof, in y they might say, These men yeelded themselves vnto vs. But as for the Assyrians, they came & vexed vs. But as for the Egyptians, they came & vexed vs. But as for the Assyrians, they came & vexed vs. But as for the Egyptians, they came & vexed vs. Now then we see y although the children of Israel might iustly complaine of their euil intreatance in Egypt, & of y manifold iniuries which they had in dured there; yet neuertheles God comāndeth them to think y they were bound vnto the Egyptians for somedhing. For ye were harboured in their countrie (saith he). Hereby we are warned to be mindeful of y good which we shal haue receiued at any bodies hand: in so much that if we be afterward harmed or ouermuch oppressed by him in any thing; yet we must beare it patiently & alwayes beare in minde to say: wel, yet for all this, we be stil bound vnto such a man. In deede I graunt we shall haue occasion to be grieved against such: but yet seeing y God hath ayded & releued vs by their meane, y must alwayes preuaile with vs & we must remaine their friends as farre as lieth in vs. And that is a good lesson for vs to beare in mind vpon this place.

But yet further let vs thinke also of y which I told you, namely, that when God gaue an entrance vnto y Egyptians, to be receiued into the congregation in the third generation: it was not to the intent y the people of Israel should defile themselves with the abominations of Egypt, or meddle any whit at al with them: but rather that the Egyptians should not remaine in so desperate a case as they were in, but be brought to worshipping y liuing God & to dedicate themselves wholly vnto him. For if our Lord had not opened the gate both vnto the people of Egypt & of Edom, they would haue bin so much the farther off frō comming vnto true religion. But if when y gate is opened vnto them, they accept not the benefit as God offereth, they are to be the more grievously condemned. And so we see the intent & meaning of this law. It was not Gods meaning, y his people should gratifie the Egyptians by making a mingled & corrupted religion, that euery man might put to his patch & his peece: but y if the Egyptians would forsake all their owne corruptiōs, they might be graffed as an imp is on a tree, they might (I say) be vnited vnto y church of God. And we see how in y 45. Psalm mention is made of the wife of Salomon, & albeit she was a kinges daughter, it is saide vnto her: Harken O daughter, thou must forget thy fathers house & al thy people, & cleaue wholly vnto thy husband, & then he wil loue thee. Now we knowe y the holy ghost in that place hath giuen vs as it were a generall rule, that all they which before time haue bin strangers to the word of God, & haue not knowen what the doctrine of saluation meaneth, must vpon their calling first of al forget their kinred & their birth, & al their former trade of liuing, & then submit themselves wholly vnto him, which is made their head, & in whose name & person God marryeth vs. For we knowe that our Lorde Iesus Christ maketh a spirituall marriage with vs, to the intent we should be members of his bodie. Let vs therefore note, y Gods opening of the gate into his Church, both to y Edomites & the Egyptians, was not to haue them bring in their infections to peruert his seruice, or to make any medly, but rather y y Edomites & Egyptians should come & agree in al points vnto his law, & yeeld their consent vnto y purenes of doctrine which is therein contained. And therefore nowadayes, seeing y God hath shewed himself so gracious vnto vs, as to make vs his church, let vs learne so to keepe vs vnder his wings, as we may not be drawn aside one way nor other: let vs take heed (I say) y we stray not at mens pleasures: but let vs hold our selues vnto y pure doctrine which we haue receiued. Let vs be readie to receiue them which wil be reclaimed therunto, yea let vs haue our armes stretched out, not only to them which are the children of God, but also to such as are our kinsfolke afarre off, endeavoring for al y to winne & to gain them, howbeit alwayes with this condition, that they remoue not vs from God, but that they rather be knit againe vnto him with vs.

Now this fauour which God had granted both to y Edomites & the Egyptians, & this benefit which he had bestowed on them, was afterward againe raken from them by reason of their own wilful malice. And that is y cause why it is said in the Psalm, Lord remember the children of Edom. For they said in the day of Ierusalem, Sacke it, sacke it, rase it downe to the grounde.

Ye see how the holy Ghost pronounceth a newe curse vpon the Edomites. And yet notwithstanding they were brethren together with the children of Iacob: yea they came of the stocke of Abraham, who (as we know) was the father of the Church. Yea and we haue seene likewise, y God had such a regarde of the Moabites, y he would not haue the Israelites to make warre against the, but rather to call to minde the auncient brotherhood or kintred which was betwene the. Neuerthelater when the Moabites had altogether rejected the grace of God, & were so fore poysoned as to hire a false prophet, & to indeuor with all their might to annihilate the promise of God, and y they conspired against y people of God w such deuillish rebellion; then was it behouefull y they shold be dully punished for their churlishnes. As much is to be sayd of the Edomites. For we see how God had a regard vnto this promise which he had made vnto Abraham (I wilbe thy God euen to a thousande generations) & which was continued towards Isaac. But when y Edomites abused this goodnes of his, and not onely made no account of it, but would also faime haue the people of God rooted out: see ye not how it was a kinde of bidding battaile vnto God, & a defying of him oply? For they ought to haue called to minde y Esau was put backe, y he had lost his birthright, and y this came not to passe but by the decree & appointment of God, as was declared vnto Rebecca when she was great with child. The Edomites shold haue considered these things. But seeing they were so enuicomed against God, whereas he notwithstanding with long patience forbore them; it was needefull y he should curse them againe (as we haue before alleaded.)

Gen. 25.

As much is to be sayde of the Egyptians. For there are great threatninges vttered against the, in the holy Scripture: they are holden for y cursedst people of all nations in the world. And why? because they endeoured with might and maine vtterly to abolish the seruice of God, they turned y people fro it asmuch as lay in the to do. Therefore they not onely lost y priuilege which was giuen vnto the: but also prouoked the vengeance of God vpo them: so y they payed ful deerely for the fauour which he had offered vnto them: And hereby we are warned, y if God take pitie vpon vs, & draw neere any way vnto vs, we on our side must not behaue our selues like deafc folkes, but receiue the fauour which he bestoweth on vs, & learne in dewe time to fare the better by it. For if we be founde wilde and vntamed, so as we will not vouchsafe to come neere him, but rather fling with our heeles against him when he would keepe vs vnder his yoke: his fauour must needs be turned into a curse against vs. And therefore let vs learne so to profit by the fauor of God, that as lone as it is offered vnto vs, it may bring forth fruite in vs, y he may be glorified thereby, and y we perceiuing how far we are bound vnto him, may studie to apply our selues wholly vnto his seruice. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to beare in minde touching that which is layde of the Egyptians in this place.

Nowe Moyses addeth, That when the people goe out vnto battaile, they must keepe themselves from euery euill thing. And he addeth certaine examples, to shewe what is meant thereby. And heere wee must marke first of al, y Moyses speaketh purposefully of warres: because y men beare themselves in hand that then all things are lawfull. When we are in peace and euery man keepeth his house, it may well seeme that then it is a more easie thing to keepe good order, & to maintaine ciuill gouernment: for then lawes are of force. But when warre is once begonne, there is much vnulines which men can not remedy, and there is no longer any meanes to bridle folke: insonuch that although neuer so much extortio & violence be vsed, a man may well lie downe & cry, but he can not let it. To be at a word, there is no longer any order among men. For this cause Moyses sheweth, y although men goe out to battaile, yet for all that they must take heede of al euill things, and not graunt themselves a lawles leaue to be carried headlong into any wickednesse. Albeit men haue many allutements and many occasions offered, yet must they holde themselves in such subiection, that God may be serued & honored. And in very deed if men were in their right wits, they would walke in greater feare & carefulnesse in the time of warre, than of peace. For when we are at deathes doore, when we are threatened with perils on all sides, ought we not to haue an eye so much the more vnto God: Ought not this to humble vs, & to make vs to stoope? Ought we not to haue our whole recourse vnto him, and to pray him to be our guide? Yes verily, if we be not ouer blockish. And therefore when we are in warres, we should holde vs to so much the straiter rule, and remaine most peaceable vnder the obedience of our God, because of the necessitie which presseth vs, & of the dangers also which threaten vs on all partes. But what? As I tolde you afore, we see the cleane contrarie by experience: namely, that men graunt themselves pardon for all things, the drumme no sooner soundeth, but lawes must keepe silence, so as there may be no longer any rule of order, no longer any meane or measure, no longer any lesioning or warnings to be hearkened vnto. Nowe because men be so ill disposed, heere God putteth them in minde of their dutie, and sa: th: although this wicked custome raigne through out the worlde, that they which are souldiours are of opinion that all things are lawfull for them to doe: yet notwithstanding doe not you so: but rather abstaine from all wicked things. When you come into the fielde, & stande there against your enemies, thinke not that ye shall be pardoned any more, than if ye were at home in your own houses. For the case standeth so, y ye must fight vnder my banner, yea, and ye must take mee for your captaine. And therefore I must not bee so dishonored, as to be accused of hauing leaude ruffians & dissolute persons in my bande. For if it be so, how can my name be called vpon ouer them, and they named after my name? Nowe we see in effect what is contained heere.

And hereupon we haue to gather, first that common abuses can not serue to iustifie vs, but that when our account is to bee giuen vp to God it shalbe a vaine excuse to say: euery man doth so: the thing is as cōmon as may be among men. If we say so, God wil reply readily ynough vpon vs. For is there any thing more custumably vsed, than this lawles leaue which souldiours take and vse? It is growen in maner euen to a law, y<sup>e</sup> without controlment all may do so. But our Lord for all y<sup>e</sup>, wil not be barred of his right. Therefore he saith, Let men sake haede of euerie euill thing. Nowe the albeir we see a bottomles sea as it were & an vniuersall flud of all vices in the world; so as euery man is wilfully bent to do euill, & men haue taken such possessiō of sinning, y<sup>e</sup> a man dares not so much as nutter when he beholdeth such outrageous things as none can be more out of order: let vs not beare our selues in hand for all y<sup>e</sup>, that we shalbe excused before God, but let vs alwaies haue an eie vnto his word. Mé do thus and thus: yea but God saileth not to be of a cōtrary iudgement. And this is the thing which we haue to beare in mind in the first place.

Morouer if wee be forbidden to do euill although we be prouoked thereto by many occasions, notwithstanding to y<sup>e</sup> worldwarde it seemeth y<sup>e</sup> we may be suffered to do it: what shalbe thought if we offend when we haue no such temptations nor so great? Doubtes we are in double fault. For if it be said y<sup>e</sup> in time of war when the doore seemeth to be set open to all wickednes, yet notwithstanding euen then we must stande on our guard: what is to be thought if when we may folow the good rule of cōuersation, & things be not so far out of order, nor the deuill hath such meanes to drawe vs into wickednes; yet notwithstanding euery of vs russeth forth into all vnruines, wour remēbering our God any whit at all? I pray you doth not y<sup>e</sup> fault deserue greater punishment? So then let vs note, y<sup>e</sup> in all estates we must alwaies take occasion to serue God. Notwithstanding y<sup>e</sup> the world do alwaies seeke to turne aside, & to withdraw it selfe frō his seruice, in somuch that if men be in peace, they become fo drunken with their pleasure & delites, y<sup>e</sup> they can not be helde frō wandring & from giuing theselues ouer vnto many corruptions; & if they be in war, they be haue themselves much wors. But we on our part, what ought we to do? when we are in griefe and trouble, let vs know y<sup>e</sup> God by y<sup>e</sup> means calleth vs vnto himselfe, & wil haue vs to be so much y<sup>e</sup> more carefull to serue him, forasmuch as wee want his succor and y<sup>e</sup> he must hide vs vnder his winges. If we haue time of peace, let vs know y<sup>e</sup> he giueth vs leasure to bethink vs what we haue to doe, & to call vpon him in quietnes & to consider y<sup>e</sup> better of our ductie a great while aforehande, while we haue faire & calme wether. For if the wether become troubled wth stormes & clouds, we see not a stones cast (as they say) from vs; but when y<sup>e</sup> sun shineth faire & cleare, then we can ken a far off. Euen so our Lord, when he granteth vs peace & quietnes, would haue vs vse it in such sort as euery man shold dispose & order his life vnto his obedience, y<sup>e</sup> he may enioy vs, & we be farre from confusion & disorder, & not drawe back when he sheweth vs vnto him by gentlenes, nor shake off his yoke as though we wold not suffer him to gouerne vs any longer. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to gather vpon this place.

As touching y<sup>e</sup> exāple which is set down here, whereas Moses would That he which is defiled in his body, should be severed frō the company of others: Let vs briefly for a conclusion note two things therein. The one is y<sup>e</sup> God by such ceremonies would haue his people to keepe themselves altogether pure both of body & soul. True it is y<sup>e</sup> before god the man which hath offended, shall not be absolved for his washing of himselfe in water. That aualeth nothing. For none of these corruptible elements pertaine any thing to y<sup>e</sup> saluation of our soules. Neuertheles because God ordaineth the, therefore they stand vs in steede. As y<sup>e</sup> water of baprisim is not like other cōmon water, & the reason is, because God hath hallowed it vnto a special vse, to y<sup>e</sup> intent it shold be a warrānt vnto vs, y<sup>e</sup> we are washed by y<sup>e</sup> bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ. Now when we haue this we must also make our profit of the aide which God hath giuen vnto vs because of our weaknes. The people of olden time had many mo, because they were holden like little children as S. Paul sayth, & in comparision of them we are come vnto mens estate. Therefore when God ordained y<sup>e</sup> men shold wash themselves with water for any bodily deflement; it was to the intent y<sup>e</sup> euery man shold know (as he himselfe declareth) y<sup>e</sup> to be dedicated vnto God we must walke in all purenes, & when there is any corruption amōg vs, it must be purged. Ye see the hereunto this law serueth vs, & in what sort we must apply it vnto our instructiō. I grant we haue not now y<sup>e</sup> old ceremonies of y<sup>e</sup> law, we are not precisely bound to wash ourselues when we are defiled or haue any spotte in our bodies; but yet we must hold still y<sup>e</sup> truth & substance thereof: which is, y<sup>e</sup> seeing God hath sanctified vs, we must continue in his seruice, purging vs from all corruptions both of body & of minde, as S. Paul also exhorteth vs in the second of y<sup>e</sup> Corinthians, where he sheweth y<sup>e</sup> euill must not be nourished among vs. For when it is suffered to encrease & to infect the whole flocke, what wil come of it in the end, but y<sup>e</sup> it will growe remedies when the infection hath taken hold throughout. And y<sup>e</sup> is the cause why excommunication was ordaine in y<sup>e</sup> church: if there were any which behaued themselves amisse, by leading an vnriely & leaud kinde of life, our Lord Iesus cōmanded to separate them for a time frō the church, to the intent to make them ashamed, y<sup>e</sup> they might humble themselves, & thereupon returne vnto y<sup>e</sup> flocke, & liue better than they had done afore, & that others also might thereby be warned, so as wickednes shoulde not haue lawles libertie as though all things were lawfull & permitted. We see then that although nowadaies this figure be no longer in vse, yet notwithstanding we may gather a good & profitable instruction from y<sup>e</sup> which was cōmanded to the ancient people. First of al, we must be fully resolved to offer ourselues vnto God in such sort as our bodies & minds be kept vndefiled, knowing y<sup>e</sup> we haue y<sup>e</sup> like promises y<sup>e</sup> the ancient fathers had, yea & far larger: & therefore we ought to endeavour

so much the more, to attaine vnto that purenes which I told you of. And therewithall if we see any which corrupt the flock with their infections, let them be remoued according vnto y order which our Lord Iesus hath commanded vs, & let them be so remoued, y knowing their wickednes & repenting theselues of it, in the end it may serue them for a medicine to purge them, so as y infection growe no further, but y the Church of God be alwaies maintained in such order as me may know y God hath not for nought drawen vs out & re-moued vs from the rest of the world which is defiled, but to the end y he might gouerne vs by his holy spirit, and we be so wholly his, that we may be true sacrifices vnto him both in life & in death. Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to touch vs with right repentance, y being angry with ourselues for offending him & for being turned away from him, we may endeour nothing more, than y he may frame vs wholly vnto his will; and y being rid of all corruptions and infirmities of our flesh, we may be clothed with his righteousnesse so as his glory may shine in our whole life. And because it can not otherwise be, but y in this world there shalbe alwaies some thing wherefore hee may finde fault with vs, let vs pray him to vouchsafe to beare with vs in our imperfections, vntill hee haue brought vs vnto himselfe into his heavenly kingdom. And so let vs say almightie God heavenly father, &c.

The Cxxxij. Sermon which is the fourth vpon the three and twentieth Chapter.

12 Thou shalt haue a place without the camp, wherunto thou shalt goe forth.

13 And thou shalt haue a paddle among the rest of thy tooles: and when thou listest to sitte downe without, thou shalt digge therewith: and when thou hast eased thee, thou shalt couer that which is come from thee.

14 For the lord thy God walketh in the middest of thy camp to deliuer thee, & to giue thee thine enemies before thee. Therefore let thine host be holy that hee see no filthy thing in thee and turne away from thee.

15 Thou shalt not deliuer the seruant vnto his master: which is escaped to thee from his master.

16 He shall dwell with thee euen among you, in what place soeuer he shall chuse in one of thy cities where it liketh him best: thou shalt not vex him.

17 There shalbe no whoore among the daughters of Israell, nor anie whoore-monger among the sonnes of Israell.

W E haue already scene heerebefore, how God meant to traine vp the people of old time vnder the lawe, in all purenes, euen in the smallest things: intending thereby to accustom them to keepe theselues holy without any manner of stain or defilement. And this is y principall end wherunto we ought to referre the first sentence of y which we haue now read. A man might think it strange at first sight, y God should speake of such a thing as is mentioned here: namely that when men will ease themselves, they must couer their ordure. A man would thinke y this ought not to be put in y law of God. For these are such things as are not honestly named. But as we haue already touched, it behoued the people to be alwaies led by the things which concerne the body, vnto the keeping of theselues in all holines in the seruice of God: as for example, wheras in the lawe mention is made of washings; it was not for y the cleansing of the soule consisted in taking a litle water to wash ones hands or to wet his body withal but the people was warned thereby, y they must purifie theselues before God, or otherwise they were defiled. If a mā happened but to touch the body of one y was dead, he was become vnclane. And why? Thereby God gaue vs to vnderstand, that wee can scarcely in all our life moue either hande or foote, but we drawe vpon vs some staine or other. For this worlde is full of occasions vnto euill: and we for our part do no sooner take any thing in hand but we offend therein: so as we ought alwaies to consider & acknowledge; that if God take vs for such as we are, hee must needs abhorre vs. And why? Because wee are filthy and vnclane. What remaineth then for vs to doe? Let vs seeke the remedy of our vnclanesse. Can the water enter as farre as the soule to purge vs? No. It is but a signe, to betoken that men haue neede to be washed, and to be made cleane: and they ought to be guided thereby vnto that which is represented vnto them by the water. The like is to be sayde of all other things. Let vs therefore note well, that whereas Moses sayth here, that if men auoyde their excrementes, and any stinke insue therof, or if there be any disorder among them: God is offended at it: nor y he stayeth on those things: for we know that all is one vnto him, so our hartes be pure and cleane, & our bodies answerable therunto, so as we be not stirred vp to defile ourselues with with our wicked lustes and affectiones.

But yet for all that because men pardon them selues so lightly for many faultes, and by giuing themselves the bridle are led from one euill vnto another: this law (say I) was giuen to this intent, that men should accustom themselves, even in the smallest things, to take heede of all vncleanes. If a mā be of vn honest behauiour in his life, doubtles he will become so hardhearted, y he will make no account of filthy things, as we see how beaustly some are become in that behalfe: when they haue once forgottē God & al honesty, they cast off al shame, so as a man may say they haue no longer any discretion to knowe what is good & what is euill: and this cometh of euill accustomed of themselves. And therefore our Lord (not without good cause) ment to bridle his people in all these things which pertainē vnto y body. For it was not lawfull for thē to make water, (I know not how much lesse to ease themselves) but in secret. And why? For if they had bin a filthy & vnclean people, this filthines of theirs might haue bin to their further discredit. As much may be said of vs. If we be not ashamed hereof, we giue ourselves by & by the bridle in things also concerning God. It is needefull therefore y we be restrained & governed with such honestie, as men may say we walke in the presence of our God. And in deed, whē we are to receiue any honorable gifts our houses shal be swept & we will take good heed y no flouts corner be left, nor any thing else which may offend thē. What reuerence then ought we to beare vnto our God, who alwaies beholdeth vs, & we can not stir a finger but he eiegh what o'uer we do in our whole life? Ought we not so to walke before him, as to be well ware euery one of vs least we should displeasē him? True it is in deed (as I haue already touchēd) y God is not offended w these corruptible things for he is not subiect to our passioēs, nor to be moued with thē. But because of our rawnes, & for y we are grosse and earthly minded, there is great need y by the things which concerne y body, we shold be warned to come vnto y which is spiritual. So then we haue now y meaning of this law, wherin God forbade his people to lay their filth abroad to be seene.

And he addeth also the reason thereof: For I am in the midst of you (sayth he) and I will swrne a way from you if you do otherwise. Heereby he declarēth y neither the health of the people nor any such like thing was the matter y he respected in making this law, neither was it any ciuill policie, as for exāple it may be well commanded & it is a very good order, y men shal make cleā y streets and such other things, for it is for the health of men: & when such things are not obserued, it is a filthy thing, & if a man see heapes of filth & mire in a cite, he wil say, there is no good order seene vnto: God had no respect hereunto whē he forbade such filthines: but hee aimed at an higher thing, to wit, y the children of Israel shold be put in minde to say: wel, God is so gracious vnto vs, as to dwell among vs, let vs therefore learne to walke in such purenes of soule & body, y principally our soules be purified frō al wicked thoughts and affectiones: and secondly y our bodies also be kept in such honestie; y we be not hardned to commit any filthy things before men, & grow past al shame: for y were y next way to make vs forget the duecty which we owe vnto God. We also on our side must take heede of these things, not in y manner as the Iewes did, which straitely obserued this law & other such like touching the ceremony: but we must keepe ourselves vnto y truth and substance therof, which they so much despised, according to the cōmon custom of y world, which is euer wont to busie it selfe about the formalitie or shew of things, & to make no account of the substance. Let vs therefore learne to know, y whereas the Iewes obserued this ceremony w out any minding at all of y which God required of them, they did but dally & play with God, and their whole obseruation therof was but hypocrisie, so as they did nothing else but prouoke y anger of God. For when men wrest & peruert his word in such sort, it is such a trecherie as he can not suffer. But it is no wonder to see this abuse among men. For they would faine content God with such outward things, it is ynough for thē so they set a good face on y matter. And being themselves carnall, they measure God by their owne ell. But contrariwise let vs note y when God comādeh vs frōal things, it is to lead vs to a farther matter; & therefore let vs alwaies aime at this mark, & not stay our selues on things which are of no gret importāce, according to y rule which our Lord Iesus hath declared vnto vs in this behalfe. Ye ought in deede (sayth hee) to doe these small things whē they are comāded by y law: but yet ye must alwaies come vnto y chiefe & principall point. And we know what God sayth: namely, y he requireth mercy & not sacrifice: his will is y there shoul be faithfulness, & iudgement and vprightnes among men. And as for sacrifices & washings & such like things, his meaning was y by thē men shold be trained to put the assurance of their saluatiō in y fauor which he hath promised vnto thē, y they be fory for their sins when they see them before their eyes, & y they should serue thē for witnessē to endite themselves, to y intent y when they offer themselves to God being in such displeasure with their finnes, they might attaine pardon and mercie of him. Thus ye see what we haue to beare in minde.

And now seeing the figure is passed & done away, we haue no neede to busie ourselves in the outward obseruatiō of this law. What remaineth then? Is this law needeles nowadaies in respect of vs? Ought not we to reade it? Yes: for ye see that God ment it should be an instruction for his church euen vnto y end of y world. It remaineth then, y letting the figure passe, we gather y which is taught both to the Israelites & to vs: namely y in all things we must take heede of stayning and defiling our selues. Nowe we are not ignoraunt what the things are which defile a man. It is not y which enterech into a man (as our Lorde Iesus Christ speaking of meats sayth) but it is y which cometh out of a mā. Look how many wicked affectioēs we haue, so many staynings of vs haue we before god. For frō whence cometh fornication? Proceedeth it not out of the heart of man? From whence whence cometh ambition? From whence come other wicked desires, as couetousnesse, enuie, pride, and all the rest? Now when y<sup>e</sup> soule of man is so full of such soule staines, y<sup>e</sup> it is infected before God: it draweth the body by & by vnto the, and if we put wicked thoughtes in practise, beholde, howe our bodies also are wrapped in the same filthines with our soule, & we become altogether defiled. Let vs therefore learne so to dedicate ourselues vnto God, as our infectious filth is not a cause to driue him away from vs. And therewithall let vs beare in minde that which S. Paule sayth: namely that seeing God will dwell within vs we must purifie both our minds & bodies. And this is the reason which Moses alleadgeth, when he sayth That God alwayes dwelt in the middes of the campe of Israel, to deliuer the, & to giue vp their enemies into their handes.

And afterwarde he addeth, Take heede that the Lorde thy God departs not from thee, when he shall find any vncleanesse in thee. At this day this fauour is bestowed in more ample maner vpon vs, than it was then vpon the auncient people. For we know howe God is ioyned vnto vs in the person of his only sonne. Now seeing y<sup>e</sup> fulnes of the godhead doth dwell in our Lord Iesus Christ, & that not vnder a shadowe as in the arke of the covenant where y<sup>e</sup> lawe was enclosed, but is assuredly our God being manifested in the flesh: & seeing it is so y<sup>e</sup> we are members of Iesus Christ, & that he hath vouchsafed vs to get a benefite, as by coming downe from heauen to ioyne himselfe vnto vs: let vs note y<sup>e</sup> at this day God is more neere vnto vs than he was vnto y<sup>e</sup> people, yea & he will make vs to haue more feeling of his vertue and power. For we are alwaies in such sort vnder his protection, y<sup>e</sup> we neede not to feare but that his power is still stretched out to maintaine & preserue vs. When our Lord Iesus sayd vnto his disciples; I am with you euen vnto the ende of the worlde, surely he ment to strengthen them in all the conflictes which they were to suffer in preaching of the Gospel, and it serued likewise to declare vnto vs also y<sup>e</sup> he will neuer forsake vs as in respect of his power. Seeing it is so then that we are vnder the government of the sonne of God, and y<sup>e</sup> although he be ascended vp into heauē, he filleth not to fill all, & y<sup>e</sup> he is also our shepheard to the intent y<sup>e</sup> none of them who his heavenly father hath giuen vnto him should be lost: that we are one of his bone & flesh of his flesh (as S. Paul sayth) and y<sup>e</sup> there is no greater coniunctio betwene y<sup>e</sup> husband & the wife than is betwene the son of God & vs. Seeing it is so I say. let such gracious fauour as this, prouoke vs to withdraw ourselues frō all filthines; & let vs keepe this holy vnite which we ought to haue with our God.

And moreover let vs also diligently note, how precious a thing it is y<sup>e</sup> God dwelleth with vs, to giue vp our enemies into our hands, & to deliuer vs frō all euill. For hereby we are warned y<sup>e</sup> were it not for his fauour, we are set open to ten thousand deaths. And in vey decde let euery of vs consider his own infirmities throughly, & we shall finde y<sup>e</sup> if our Lord had not a care of vs & fought not mightily for our detence, we should perish euery minute of an hour. How is it then y<sup>e</sup> we are assured of our saluation: Surely because our Lord who watcheth ouer vs, is strong ynough, & therefore albeit y<sup>e</sup> all the armies of hell were banded against vs, yet shall they not preuaile any thing at all, if God be on our side: inso much y<sup>e</sup> we shall not only be preserued from the hand of our enemies, but also haue y<sup>e</sup> victorie ouer them & bring them vnder our feete, because God dwelleth among vs. Ye see then on the one side, howe men ought to feele what need they haue y<sup>e</sup> God should help them, seeing they are theselues our weake and haue no helpe to defende theselues: & also how for all y<sup>e</sup>, they may boldly bott. And why because God hath receiued them vnto himselfe, & will preserue them & be their safegarde. Behold (I say) what y<sup>e</sup> glory of the faithful is, which notwithstanding proceedeth of humblesnes. For we can neuer be safegarded by our God vntil we haue learned to distrust our selues, and feele ourselues forlorne considering y<sup>e</sup> weaknes which is in vs.

But let vs also note the threat. Take heede (saith he) lest thy God, whē he shall see any filthy thing in thee, departs from thee. Now the filthy things among vs which may offend God, consist not in our bodily stutishnesse. For where doeth God oftener dwell than in poore cottages, which through great neede and penury sometimes there is vermine & sometimes stinche: There are poore Lazars who haue not wherewith to serue their neede, & much lesse wherewith to serue their pleasures. a lamētable case to beholde. Surely none of all these things, which may seeme stutish vnto most men do offend God: but y<sup>e</sup> stutish which maketh him to depart from vs, is the desiring which cometh from the heart, & afterwards (as I tolde you) defileth our bodies. And therefore let vs not think y<sup>e</sup> God is like vnto mortall men, or y<sup>e</sup> he is led with such passions, but let vs know y<sup>e</sup> being a spirit; his will is y<sup>e</sup> we also should haue a spirituall purenes in vs: that i, y<sup>e</sup> we should put away farre from vs the things which may infect vs (as I haue sayd afore) namely fornication, enuy, hatred, treason, excessive desire of hauing riches, ambition, and pride. Al these things are filthy & displease God, and when our bodies are defiled with them, the wickednes is double. Let vs therefore learne to purge ourselues frō all such infections, if we will haue God to be resident among vs. For as hee is come neere vnto vs, so wil he also withdraw him selfe frō vs, if we be not pure temples. For vpon none other condition than y<sup>e</sup>, will he dwell among vs. Therefore this threat may set our hayres on end on our head where it is sayd: Take heede that thy Lord departs not from thee. For seeing y<sup>e</sup> our lord hath vouchsafed vs this honor to come neere vnto vs, and y<sup>e</sup> he declareth y<sup>e</sup> he will haue the chief roome in our company: it is good reason y<sup>e</sup> euery of vs should take heede y<sup>e</sup> we giue him no repulse, & y<sup>e</sup> there be such publike order takē as our infections cause vs not to want y<sup>e</sup> presence of our God: wherefore let euery of vs particularly looke vnto himselfe & afterward let vs al vnicially do our indeuor y<sup>e</sup> al honesty may be mainteined, so as we may be a people hallowed vnto god. For if euery of vs giue ouer himselfe to filthy demeanours, as one taketh leaue to be an adulterer, an other dispendeth with himselfe to play the theefe, and to vse deceites and extortion, respecting onlie howe hee may enriche himselfe by vnlawfull meanes, and a thirde giueth himselfe to wicked practises, to vndermine and to ouerthrowe his neighbour: and a fourth is full of arrogancie and ambition, & so blasphemousnes reigneth at wilk is it not all one as if euery of vs for his part had conspired to banish God out of our companie, and to driue him away? Seeing then that vices doe so reigne, and there is so horrible confusions among vs: Lette vs looke well to ourselues and let this warning serue vs for a bridle to restraine the mischiefes, or otherwise we shall bee guiltie of driuing GOD away that he might no more dwell among vs to blesse vs. Thus yee see what we haue to beare in minde concerning this place.

Now Moses addeth: That if a seruant, (that is to say a slaue as we haue expounded it heretofore) which is of the heathen, doe vnnie away and desire refuge among the people of Israell, they must suffer him to dwell there, and not deliuer him into the hande of his maister. This lawe may seme euill at the first sight, if we consider not well what God meant thereby. For seruantes were at that time in the same plight and state that a mannes oxe or horse is now. Men employed them to marclous painefull and burthen some things, and their maisters had power ouer them both of life and death: so as among the Paynims a maister went not to make his complaint vnto the Iustice when he would put his seruant in prison or set him on the racke, yea or put him to death. Euerie man might hange and drawe in his owne house, and that was a verie harde case. And moreover (as I haue tolde you heretofore) a mans seruantes were counted among his moueable goods in like sorte as an horie or an oxe. So then if it had not bene lawfull to withhold from a man any part of his goods, but it had bin verie ill dealing to haue done so: why was it lawfull to keepe backe his seruant? It might seme that a man doeth him wrong and iniurie to defraude him in this wise of that which is his right, and men might persuade themselues y<sup>e</sup> God displeaseth here with his people to play the theeues after some indirect maner. But the meaning of the Lawe is that it was Gods will y<sup>e</sup> there should be some priuiledge for such seruantes as were willing to yeelde themselues vnto his seruice: and that because, as long as they liued vnder the Paynims, they were not their own men nor had such libertie: and therefore when they turned into the better way, God granted them this exemption by way of priuiledge. Moreover let vs note, that because of the excessiue cruelty of the maisters, the Lawes themselues were to graunt some releafe vnto seruants. For y<sup>e</sup> maisters most cruelly abused the authority which was granted vnto the ouer their seruants, in somuch y<sup>e</sup> for euery smal tribbe (as y<sup>e</sup> breaking of a glasse [or such other like]) a maister would hamper his seruant to beate him without pitie or mercy. These examples caused men to let the haue some refuge.

And the heathen themselues permitted y<sup>e</sup> if the seruants could escape vnto any temple, they were in safetie from their maisters, not y<sup>e</sup> they were altogether freed, but that they were solde vnto some other who peraduenture would handle them more gently. Also if they could get holde of the image of an Emperour, they hadde as it were a suretie for their safegarde. Our Lorde likewise had the same regarde in the lawe which is set downe heere, that is to say, because the Paynims hauing no feare of God, did torment their seruantes with more than tyrannicall crueltie: he would that those poore wretches should haue some place of refuge, that being pressed with anguish and affliction, they might haue a meane to be brought vnto true religion. For we knowe that when men are daunted after that manner, then they seeke vnto God. It is a good preparatiue to bring vs vnto the obedience of God, when we are afflicted and can no longer tell what to doe. For we see that when we are at heartes ease and haue our delightes, we are so drunken with them, that God is no bodie with vs. That is the very thing whereat this lawe aimeth.

Now let vs note, that when God giueth forth speciall lawes, he gaine sayeth not him selfe: but we must alwayes referre them vnto the generall doctrine. As howe? If a seruant should runne away vpon such cause, or vpon malice, or vpon any other such cause, it were a sinne in him; and that theuerie were not good nor allowed of GOD. Therefore when this speciall law and priuiledge was giuen forth, that a seruant should be suffered in the Lande of Iuda, it repealeth not that which our Lorde had deliuered concerning seruants afore. And againe whereas he sayth: Thou shalt not couet thy neighbours seruant, nor his maide; y<sup>e</sup> commaundement standeth still in full force; so that it was not lawfull for the Iewes to holde backe an other mans seruant, for their own profits sake; neither was it lawfull for seruants to deceiue their maisters. But when a seruant escaped vnto them, & desired to dwell among y<sup>e</sup> people of God; this leaue was graunted vnto him: howbeit vpon this condition, y<sup>e</sup> he was oppressed, and y<sup>e</sup> he had iust & reasonable cause of running from his maister, for being too leaudly & cruelly handled. That was to be presupposed afore. For (as I haue tolde you) the law which is contained in the tenne commaundements is an infallible rule. When we haue that abridgement, we haue therein the will of God fully warranted vnto vs. And we ought to measure euery particular lawe by those ten commaundements, That is y<sup>e</sup> true touchstone whereby we must examine how euery speciall lawe is to be taken and expounded. For we shall neuer vnderstande things to any purpose, except we referre them all luther. And why? for perfect righteoufnesse is contained in those ten commaundements which God hath deliuered in the two tables. Seeing it is so, we can neuer be deceiued if we examin things after this maner. Go to: here is the law. Pertaineth the thing vnto the seruice of God, or to the second table; that is to that table wherin God hath prescribed how we ought to liue with men? It is of the second table. Well then, let vs see nowe whether it pertaineth vnto the first commaundement of honouring father and mother: or to the second, Thou shalt doe no murder: or to the third, Thou shalt not commit adulterie: or to the fourth, Thou shalt not steale: or to y fifth, Thou shalt not beare false witness: or lastly to y sixth, Thou shalt not couet. When we shall haue thus considered of the thing, so as we may say, this belongeth vnto such a commaundement: then shall wee haue a key which will open vs the dore vnto the right vnderstanding of the thing. If a lawe concerne the seruice of God, be it of the first commaundement, or of the second, or of the third, or of the fourth, we may haue the better assurance how this Law ought to be vnderstood. And why? For we shall consider of the end whereunto it tendeth. If the law be between both (as we say) let it be referred vnto the first and the second table, let it be mingled of both, and then we may also iudge easily of it. But to returne to y present matter: when y Lord graunted a place of refuge in the lande of Iury vnto poore slauess, there is no doubt but he meant neuertheles to leaue his law still in his full force. Let vs therefore conclude, that he meant in this place to remedie the excessive and outragious cruelty which maisters vsed, & would that poore afflicted wretches (who as touching the world could finde no ease of their griefes) being destitute of all succour, might haue libertie to come into the Countrey of Iurie and there to dwell for euer.

Now we are warned hereby to help to y vttermost of our power such as are vniuently & wrongfully afflicted. In deede we must not mayntaine wicked quarells; wee must not cloake that which is ill. For they which shall vse such mercie, shall not be able to iustifie their case whereby before God. There are many which could be content that all leawd faulkes might be buried, and they will oftentimes willingly foster wickednesse through a fond pittie or deuotion as they call it. But let vs note y Gods will is not to lead vs vnto that kind of dealing: but y when wee see any poore soules tormented, he would haue vs moued with pittie to releue them as much as in vs lyeth. We heare what is sayd vnto Moab. Moab thou wast the harbour of my people, and thou madest hew & cry after those which came to shelter themselves vnder thy shadow. Although the people of Israel were iustly punished for their euill deedes, yet as in respect of the world, they had not prouoked the infidels to be so cruell vnto them. For the infidels came and made warre against them like tyrantes as they were, they came like wolues to spoile and deuour all. And well, the poore Iewes fell into the lande of Moab, and our Lord sayeth that he had appointed that Countrey, as a place of harbour for them. And why? Was there any Prophet which tolde them so? No. For humanitie perswadeth this of it selfe, that if wee see any poore people which are druen out of their owne Countreies by warres or by any other violent oppressions, it is all one as if God sent vs a message both to receiue them and to enterayne them as curteouslie as wee are able to doe. And so let vs beare in minde, that where there are any poore wretches with vs whome men haue persecuted, and tormented, we are too too vnkind if we deliuer them into their enemies pawes, which seeke nothing else but to vse all violence and all maner of cruelty against them. That is it which wee haue to beare in mind vpon this place.

Now seeing it is so that we ought to shew such gentleness, and to vse such compassion towards all that are vniuently oppressed, and whome men torment beyond measure without any cause; how ought we to behaue our selues toward those poore soules which are afflicted for the worde of God? By much more reason is it that wee should giue them refuge, and succour them in their afflictions: and if we doe not relieue them, let vs also feare that which is said by the Prophet vnto the Moabites. For he addeth that God will hunt them out of their secretest lurking corners. And why? Because they discovered the people which fled vnto them, and set them forth for a pray. Therefore if we cause the children of God to be persecuted by tyrantes, and ioyne with tyrantes in such wickednes, by driuing Gods children out from among vs, doubtlesse the Lorde will not faile to punish such cruelty. But when our turne cometh to be visited after the same manner, (as it must needs come) men shall hunt vs also out of our corners, and we shall finde no harbouring place for our selues in the whole world, because wee haue laboured to cast them away whom God deliuered into our handes. Yee see then in fewe wordes what wee haue to beare in minde.

And moreouer as touching the matter which I haue treated of already, wee must vnderstand that our Lorde commandeth vs to straine our selues to the vttermost, to bring them vnto the knowledge of the truth, which haue strayed heere tofore in superstition. The seruants which offered themselves out of strange Countreies were in the ende framed vnto the seruice of God. For albeit they were at the first rude and rawe, yet was it behoouefull that they should accoutme themselves vnto the Lawe, and that in the ende they should frame themselves wholly vnto it. Seeing then it is so, let vs gather vpon this place, that God ment to stirre vs vp to seeke after the poore wandering sheepe, to bring them into the way of saluatiō, and to gather them into his flock. And so ye see what we haue to beare in minde as touching this custome.

Moses in the third place sayth: Let there be no whore in Israel, nor any filthy & infamous fornicator, And whereas he speaketh heere, of fornicators; it is not meant of common fornication, but of that outrageous filthynesse which is contrary to all nature. And verily it is a dreadfull thing to consider that the people which was dedicated vnto G O D, should bee forbidden such wickednesse; and especially that they should at that time so exceede in villanous behauiour, that they had not onely stewes for strumpets, where women abandoned themselves vnto filthy lustes, but also that men with men were giuen to such filthynesse. Is not this a thing which ought to make euery hayre of our head to stande on ende? But heereby wee are warned what men of themselves are, except GOD holde them backe and gouerne them by his holy spirite. Wee must not thinke that these corruptions neuer came into the worlde before this day. They haue beene in it from all time. For since the time that Adam estraunged himselfe from GOD, it was of necessitie, that hee shoulde beare the punishment of his sinne, and that all his posteritie should be abandoned vnto wickednesse. For the roote of all vices, yea of all outrageous crimes doeth then budde fourth when man is forsaken of GOD, and hath the brydle layd loose on his necke as it is to be seene here. For we see that naturall fornications suffice not, but more than beastly enormities are committed. Common filching theueries suffice not, but there are robberies and piracies: there are inuentions and practises more wicked than all the theueries in the world. Men are grown so farre out of kinde, that they are dayly inuenting of strange fashions, they thinke it not ynough to haue put their enemies to death, except they extend their crueltie yet farther. To bee shorre, if wee consider well of all that is in man vntill GOD gouerne him; we shal find within him euen a sinke and gulfe of hell. And as euery man nourisheth in himselfe much wickednesse, so must it needes be that the mischief thereof shall increase, except GOD prouide a remedie for it. And whereas among the Paynimms themselves there was alwayes kept some honestie; it came so to passe through the wonderful prouidence of GOD, who meant still to referue some honestie among mankinde. In dedde the Paynimms had neuer this intent of seruing GOD, as was reason they should, but yet although none of their workes were accounted pure before GOD, he notwithstanding so ruled them, as things might not be vtterly confounded. Sith wee see this, let vs learne that when God sheweth vs any signes of his prouidence by retayning men in some order and honestie; it is to make vs perceyue thereby, that he warlieth ouer mankinde. And on the other-side let vs knowe also, that if hee helde not our his hande to keepe men vnder some order; wee should see such villainous and detestable things, that euen the brute beastes should behaue themselves more honestly than men. See (I say) what wee are to consider of; to the ende we may pray God to receiue vs, and not to suffer vs to fall into any such enormities as euen our felices should bee constrained to abhorre them. And for as much as wee see y examples of these things haue beene giuen so long time since; and perceiue by experience that the worlde ceaseth not to growe worse and worse: what would come of it if God shoulde not redresse it? What would bee the ende of it? Questionlesse were it not for Gods wonderfull prouidence in this behalfe, it must needes come to passe that all honestie among men should be cleane wiped out. Thus yee see what wee haue to consider vpon the forewarning which GOD maketh in this place. And moreover let vs note that this lawe of GOD himselfe coulde not vtterly disappoint the raigning of such abomination euen in the people which named themselves holy and elected aboue all the rest of the world. Inso much that sometimes the holy Scripture speaking of Kinges which were not our diligent in dooing their dueties, saith that there were Stewes, yea euen against nature, not onely of harlots which were there at hire, but also of other shamefull filthynesse not to be named: and that this wickednesse raygned. And where? In Iuda. Therefore when wee heare this rehearsed vnto vs, wee ought to tremble and walke in feare and warinesse, praying GOD to hide vs vnder his winges, and not to suffer such corruptions to happen vnto vs. And let vs note that from the one wee steppe to the other. For when loose behauiours is once permitted, men beare themselves in hande that euery thing is lawfull. When such infamous things are suffered, and lawlesse libertie of vsing them is graunted in any countrey; men not onely giue themselves to lechery lyke dogges, but also in the ende doe fall into greater and more outrageous filthynesse. Therefore seeing it is so, let vs learne ingeneral to haue such a care among vs, as all infections of whoredome may be removed, and wee cleane purged from them. For that is the very thing which GOD aimeth at. Now indeede it is true that this is a ciuill lawe; but yet for all that, it belongeth vnto the third commaundment of the second table: where it is sayde: Thou shalt not commit adulterie. Why are the people of GOD forbidden to haue a stewes among them? Because fornication is a detestable thing in his sight: for his will is that wee shoulde bee wholly dedicated vnto him both in our soules, and in our bodies. So then whereas God detesteth whoredome, what shall we thinke when open stewes are suffered, and no punishment or chastisement appointed for adulterers? What shall wee thinke thereof, but that men in the ende will defie God and perswade themselves that whoredome is nothing? Wee see then whereunto God meant to lead vs, namely, that we should knowe howe profitable a thing it is for vs to thinke on the wretchednesse of some men, that is to wit, that they fall into so outrageous things, that they forget all honestie of nature; and that there would bee nothing but beastlinesse in them, except they were withheld by y hand of God. Let this put vs in feare, and quicken vs vp to pray God to withdrawe vs from these corruptions whereunto we are ouermuch enclined, or rather wholly giuen ouer. And let vs yeeld our felices fully vnto him, & not behaue our felices as horses which are broken loose. Let vs take heede of seeking occasions of wickednesse, or of granting vnto our felices leaue of lawlesse libertie to doe wickedly, either in adulteric or otherwise; and let vs keepe our selues in such purenesse, as euery of vs may be ready to frame himselfe vnto the righteoufnesse of God, and to keepe and maintaine our selues in all innocencie before him.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to make vs to feele them more and more. And bicause it hath pleased him to call vs vnto himselfe, yea and to declare oftentimes that he is our God, and to make vs also to perceiue the power of his helpe, not onely touching our bodyes, but also touching our soules: let vs beseech him that we may be pro-ucked hereby to yeelde our selues wholly vnto him, & that all of vs examining our selues more narrowly, and perceiuing our owne defilementes, may resort vnto the holines and purenes of our Lord Iesus Christ, praying him so to purge vs by his holy spirit, that our onely seeking may be to offet our selues vp vnto our God both soule and body, and that therewithall wee may learne to liue one with another in all vprightnes and honestie, so as it may alwayes serue vs to mortifie our wicked affections, and not hinder vs frō enioying those benefites which he daily bestoweth vpon his Church. And that it may please him to impart these things not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewfday the xxviij. of Ianuarie. 1556.

The Cxxxiiij. Sermon which is the fifth vpon the three and twentieth Chapter.

18 Thou shalt neither bring the hire of a whore nor the price of a dogge into the house of the Lord thy God for any vow; for both these things are alike abhominable before the Lorde thy God.

19 Thou shalt not giue vpon vsury to thy brother, whether it bee vsury of monie or vsury of vittayles, or vsury of any thing which men giue to vsurie.

20 Thou mayst giue vpon vsurie to a stranger, but thou shalt not giue vpon vsurie to thy brother: that the Lorde thy God may blesse thee in al that thou testest thy hand vnto, in the Land whither thou goest to possesse it.

Ye knowe it was not lawfull by the Lawe to make any offering or sacrifice of vnclene things. In somuch that the beastes which GOD had declared to bee vnclene, might not bee mingled with the holy offerings. The reason was that GOD meant thereby to holde his people in all purenesse. The effect then of all this is, that when wee come before GOD, whatsoeuer wee offer must be cleane and pure, and without any spotte. And now Moses addeth that if a man brought the price of a dogge, GOD abhorred that likewise, for a dogge of himselfe and in his owne nature was an vnclene beast (as they say). Nowe then if one should say he woulde not offer a dogge, bicause it was not lawfull so to doe, but that hee might offer the price which hee had receiued for selling of him: Moses declareth that this in like manner was reiected of God as an abhominable thing. Whoredome of it selfe is a wicked thing, and detested of God. Now if one thought likewise to bring the price of whoredome, to agree with God and to be cleared of his fault, it was an abuse. For God will not haue his name which is holy, to be mingled with any such filthines and vnclenes. So this place containeth in effect a declaration of the lawe which I tolde you of, y we may not offer any thing vnto God which is not pure and holy. Now to the intent men might knowe that God admitteth not any

Sophistric or subtleties, as men doe when they fetch their byleapes, and beate themselves in hand that they can so countenance their wickednesse, as it shall not bee condemned before God: Moses telleth them that it is nothing woorthie, and that they must come to that vprightnesse and soundnesse whereby if a thing bee cull of it selfe, then all that euer cometh thereof is likewise abhominable before God.

Now then wee see what doctrine wee haue to gather in this place. The first poynts, that al the offerings which wee make vnto GOD, must bee pure and cleane. If this was required in the time of the Lawe: wee ought well to practise the same at this day, according vnto that which the prophet Malachie sayth. For after that GOD had reproofed the sacrifices which the Iewes made vnto him, because there was much vncleneesse in them: hee sayth, The time shall come when my name shall bee called vpon throughout the whole worlde, yea, when I shall bee called the great GOD, when I shall bee worshipped of all men, and when men shall offer vnto me a pure and cleane sacrifice. Now because the prophet in that place treateth of the estate of the Christian Church, and sheweth that GOD should bee exalted throughout the whole world at the coming of that Redeemer which was promised; therefore thus appertaineth vnto vs. Not that we must now offer sacrifices of Oxen and Sheepe or of other brute beastes: for wee knowe that such shadowes are done away: but wee must offer that reasonable sacrifice (as saint Paule termeth it in the twelfth to the Romanes:) which God liketh of, that is, that euery man dedicate himselfe vnto GOD by becomming newe both in heart and minde. Therefore whereas wee see that God nowadayes requireth spirituall sacrifices, bidding vs to offer vnto him our soules and our bodies; it is necessaric before all thinges that wee should be purified. For it is too great an abuse, if we thinke in this sacrifice to bring our owne defilements. As much is to be said of all y<sup>e</sup> offerings which God requireth which are ioyned vnto this solemne sacrifice of our owne persons. For when wee pray, it is a kinde of sacrifice which GOD nowadayes liketh, as it is sayde in the fiftith Psalme. Our almes likewise are sacrifices, as it is sayde in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. Forget not to helpe the poore straungers, and them which are in neede and necessitie: for they are the true sacrifices which God requireth. But nowe what remaineth for vs to doe? Verily wee must be pure if we will haue God to receiue such sacrifices at our handes. For otherwise hee disalloweth of all: as it is said in the Prophet Agge: That y<sup>e</sup> which we touch shall be defiled with our vncleannes. For there y<sup>e</sup> Iewes were condemned wth all their pompes & ceremonies. And why? For one was giuē to robbery, another to whoredome, another to some other wicked dealing, and another was full of crueltie, enuie & rancor, and yet for all that they came to make a faire shew in the temple, pretending to be wondrous deuout men. But what? God saith vnto them, when a man is vncleane in his owne person, is not all that which euer he toucheth defyled also? Yes verily. Nowe then your sacrifices are full of vncleannesse, for your handes are defyled, and yet yee come to handle those thinges which are holy. Therefore you doe nought elle but prouoke mee vnto farther anger. So then let vs learne (as I haue already declared) that if we will offer our selues vnto GOD, we must first of all bee pure and cleane, that is to say, wee must bee ridde of all our wicked thoughtes and affections. For if wee bee intangled in them, GOD liketh not of vs, and howe fairely so euer wee protest that wee doe all thinges to please him and to apply vs vnto his seruice, doubtlesse hee will disallowe all. And againe if wee desire that our prayers, supplications, and almes shoulde bee acceptable vnto God; let vs take heede that all proceede from a sincere and willing affection. And so yee see what wee haue to beare in minde in the first place.

Now if one demaunde howe it is possible for a man to be so clenfed, that there should remaine no blemish in him: we aunswere hercunto, That it is most certaine wee cannot come vnto such perfection, but yet we must tend thereunto: for we are not excused, so as we should alwaies abide and settle in our filthines. Therefore euery one of vs knowing that he is full of vncleannesse, must enforce himselfe by the power of Gods spirite to clenfe himselfe, and labour to come vnto a perfect purenesse. When wee are so affected, and haue this desire in vs, then God ceaseth not to accept our sacrifices although they bee not worthy to be accepted. And why? for our Lord Iesus Christ supplieth that which is wanting in vs, as it is sayde in another place to the Hebrewes: That it is through him that wee offer prayers and thankes giuing and sacrifices of praise vnto God. Yee see then in what sorte the purenesse of our sacrifices shal be esteemed, to wit, if they bee watered with the blood of our Lorde Iesus Christ, to clenfe them from all their staynes. But in any wise he which endeouoreth to serue GOD, must examine himselfe, and knowing his owne filthynesse and vncleannesse, hee must enforce himselfe to bee drawn from it. For if wee double with GOD, hee will dislike of all thinges that wee take in hande. And although men are of opinion, that wee doe more than our duetic; yet questionlesse in the sight of God, all shalbee holden for abhominable. And herewithall also let vs note, that God reprooueth all subtle dealing, when wee thinke to paine soorth our case in such sort, as to bleare the eyes of God, and that by so dooing wee doe but double our fault, as is declared vnto vs by this text. Therefore, if wee bring vnto God any sacrifice, and yet our protesting that wee will not offer vnto him any vncleane sacrifices, is but a setting of some faire colour on the matter; our Lorde sayeth still, The price of the dogge, and the dogge is all one. The hyre of an whoore, and the whooredome is alike vnto mee, as if hee sayde, that wee must take away all the appurtenances of euil. For if we retaine anything of it, we shalbe alwayes condemned. What must wee do then: wee must walke vprightly. There is nothing which God hateth so much as a double heart, as the scripture sayth. Sith it is so, let euery man enter into himselfe, & let vs make good tryall of our selues, to the intent wee flatter not, ne harden not our selues in our vayne pretences and imaginations. But when wee finde, that there is any stayne of wickednes in vs which displeaseth God, let euery of vs bee in displeasure with himselfe for it, and let vs offer vnto God the sacrifice of mortifying our selues, and say: Alas Lorde, I see full well that there are many wicked defilements in mee, so that when I approach vnto thy maiestie, I am vterly confounded. But Lorde I come and offer vnto thee my heart in sacrifice, which thou knowest to bee heauie because I see my self bespotted with such a vice. When God thal once perceiue y<sup>e</sup> with vnfained repentance we desire to bee ridde of our vices; hee will receiue vs, for this repentance is the sacrifice which wee owe vnto him, and this anguish of heart which wee haue for beeing inlynded vnto any wickednesse, and for offending of God, is the true sworde wherwith the sacrifices bee offered vnto God, I meane the reasonable sacrifices.

Nowe if it be not lawfull to bring vnto God any fayned thing: what will come of it if we intermeddle him with our iniquities? As there are many which giue almes. But wherof? Of their spoyles spoiles: when they haue pilld and robbed, they persuade themselues that God will be appeas'd, if they bestow some part of the boory vpon him. But there is no such beastly mocking of God as is this. When one hath playd the whoremonger, he will make his account to redeeme himself before God with some price, and y with a price full of filthynes. And therefore let vs diligently note y which Moses saith in this place; namely, That al these things are abhominable in y sight of god. It is too much that we haue so offended already, though wee added not a seconde fault. If one through extortion & wrong dealing scratch vnto himselfe another mans goods: he is already in too too great a fault. But if he thinke to dally in such sorte with God, as to thinke to raunsome himselfe by paying I knowe not what part thereof, or by way of almes, or (as men doe in Popery,) by offering to a block, or by causing of masses to be sung, or by appointing som yearly drige, or by building of some chappell: if I say men thinke to content God so with mony or monies worth: they double their fault, and do but prouoke God vnto farther anger. For that is such a trechery, as we know not how to do God a greater iniury, than so to entermeddle him with our filthines, as if he were a confederate with vs in the same wickednesse. Ye see then in effect how we ought to abstaine from al manner of deslements, if we will present our selues before God with any offering 30 at all on our behalfe.

And nowe Moses hauing thus spoken, addeth, That the Iewes shall not hye their breibren by vsurie, neither of siluer, nor of corns, nor of Wine, nor of any other thing, and yet notwithstanding whereas among themselues he will haue them to abstaine from vsurie, he permitteth them to vse it towards the Paynims. Nowe we haue to note in this place, that albeit this bee a ciuill lawe, yet it hath a respect in part vnto conscience, as wee haue about touched that we must examine all y 40 lawes which are contained in Moses by the lawe of the ten commandments. For that is the perfection of all, and that is y rule of our life. Therefore when we meete with any lawe, we must consider vnto what commandement it ought to be referred: and thereupon conclude, that if it be a ciuill lawe, we: touching the order of policie, it was properly belonging vnto the Iewes, but y substance and ground thereof, remaineth vnto vs, that is to say, y equitie and the vprightnes of it. Now this equitie of it (say I) laitheth for euer, & not for a time onely. And wherehence proceedeth all vprightnes, but from the righteousnes of God as from his fountaine? But that righteousnes is euclasting & changeth not, therefore it followeth that all equitie and vprightnes is inuio- 50 labile. And although men abuse it, yet in very deepe they are sufficiently conuicted, y whatsoever God hath shewed vnto them is rightfull, & must remaine in force for euer. But let vs nowe come & wey the text. Moses forbiddeth y Iewes to exercise vsurie amongest the Iewes. And why? Because they were the people of God. He gueth them leaue to exercise vsurie vpon the Paynims, with whom they had not acquaintance. But yet neuerthelesse they were me, & therefore they had no leaue granted vnto the, to spoile them of their goods. Some to aunswere this question, alleage this excuse, that God had giuen them the goods of al the people of the land of Chanaan, as of the Amorthites, y Pherefites, the Hethites and such like, that God (I say) had giuen their goods vnto the Iewes for pillage: so that they had leaue to spoile them of all, yea and were commaunded to 10 put al of them to death: and for that they did not so, they committed a great fault, for which God reprinted them, and they were likewise punished for it. But in this place there is no mention made neither of Hethites, nor of Amorrhites, nor of Iebusites, nor of Chananites, nor of any other people of that lande, but in generall of all nations in the world. Egypt is heere comprised, and Syria, & all the Iles of the sea, and all they who had entercourse of merchandise with the Iewes. Therefore this aunswere is not so proper to this place. But let vs note that God permitted the Iewes many thinges for policie sake, which were not therefore good, as we haue already seene: and howe did he permit them? Forsooth he appointed no punishment for them. And so in this place when it is sayd, Thou maist gnaw such as are strangers with vsury: God maketh not the thing lawiull, but he leaueeth it vnpunished. And yet for al that, that law abideth alwaies in his full force: Thou shalt not steale. Vnder this word we are forbidden to exercise any wicked practise, where by our neighbours may be grieved, we are forbidden to make our gaine by the losse of another. To speake in few wordes: I graunt that before men this shall not bee condemned for theif, but yet we must be accountable for it before God. For as for ciuill Lawes they haue respect vnto earthly Iudges which punish not all offences, nor cannot if they woulde. In deepe they ought to enforce themselues thereto: but when they haue done all, yet must they let passe much wickednes which shall be judged in that great day. And therefore let vs note, y when God suffered the Iewes to exercise vsurie, and to handle the Paynims in such sort as it is saide in this place; he ment not therefore to pre iudice y commandement wherein he had forbidden men to steale. I grant y this theuerie which was committed in vsurie was not punished by men, but yet for all y we must alwaies return vnto this point, y the righteounes which is contained in y ten commadements is euclasting, and y men cannot change it. Seeing it is so, we must therefore conclude, that whatsoeuer bringeth with it any harme, was forbidden y Iewes as well as vs. And yet nowadaies when they beare the Iewes in hand, y they haue free leaue for the practising of this wickednesse, so y among the Iewes there be no extortion nor other such euil done; they shall perceiue y they are so farre from being excused hereby, that rather they are in double wise condemned. For they should be ioyned with vs, because God hath opened vnto vs the doore into his Church. But they haue lost their roome, they are shut out, and banished from the kingdome of God, and we in the meane while are accounted for the children 60

Gal. 3. 7. of Abraham, although touching the flesh we come not from that stocke. Therefore albeit in oldetime the Iewes had that priuiledge, that they might lend vpon vsurie vnto the Paynims: yet is it not therefore to be said that they should nowadayes grieue and molest the children of God, especially when themselues are cutte off from his Church, and are taken for bastards, bicause of their rebellion and disobedience.

But the chiefe and principall point is, that we apply this place vnto our profite. It was sayde vnto the Iewes, Ye shall not practise vsurie vpon your brethren. And I pray you who are our brethren nowadayes? Wee knowe that our Lorde Iesus came to be our peace, and to the intent to reconcile vnto God both such as were nigh, and such as were asfarre off. There hath bene a common brotherhood among all, since the time that our Lorde Iesus declared that wee are all adopted, and there is no longer nowe either Iewe or Gentile, as the scripture speaketh. Therefore whereas it is said that we are brethren, and that without any difference; let vs conclude, that that equitie which the Iewes were commanded to keepe betweene themselues, wee ought nowadayes to keepe betweene vs. So then it is not lawfull for vs to bite any creature liuing with vsurie. Let that be marked for one point.

Nowe let vs note, that this worde vsurie cometh of the verbe which is here placed, and signifieth, To bite. It is said, Thou shalt not gnawe with gnawing: (if we would translate it word for word) or rather, Thou shalt not bite with biting. And so the worde of Gnawing or of Byting, by a borrowed speech is taken for vsurie. And why? Bicause it byteth and wasteth a poore man which is charged with it. Neuertheless this is the whole effect, that we must not harme our neighbours by taking any profite of them, such profite I meane, as is gotten by their losse. And to the intent that no man rest precisely vpon these wordes, let vs note that when Ezechiel in the 16. Chapter condemneth vsuries, he placeth not there onely this worde, Nefech, which is here put, and signifieth byting: but he vseth another worde which signifieth encrease: as if he sayde, all that which is beside the principall. Nowe for all this God forbiddeh not all manner of gaine, so as a man may not make any profite at al. For were it so, we must lay aside all Marchandise, and wee might not lawfully buy and sell one with another. But hee forbiddeh the profite or encrease which a man getteth by deliuering out his owne goods without his owne losse, and yet notwithstanding will sucke another mans substance: and careth not whether he harme his neighbour or no, so that he may enriche himselfe. This is the encrease which is condemned by the Prophet Ezechiel.

Againe wee must diligently note the other wordes which Moses vseth in this place. For he sayth not, Profite of money by vsurie, but he saith of corne, of wine, and of all things. Then is it but a nicere mockage: if I shall say: as for mee, I haue not taken any profite for my money by vsurie, but I haue taken for my corne, or for my wine, and that was giuen vnto mee for a recompence. Wee woulde gladly deale so subtilly, that when we offend, God should not see our wickednesse. But wee knowe that when Adam couered himselfe with figge leaues, it profited him little. And thinke wee that any of these rousing titles which wee take to colour our wicked practises with all will stand vs in better stead than Adams figge leaues did him? Shall wee be able to blear the eyes of God, when men themselues, yea euen such as are starke staring blinde can grope our wickednesse? And therefore men are our fondly besotted, if they say that vsurie is not but in money: for wee see how God hath extended it to all kindes of profite: so that if wee take encrease for corne or for wine, wee are alwayes vsurers. Moreouer wee must not rest precisely on the terme, but consider what is signified thereby. Nowe that which is heere called Byting, is verie manifest. And why? For wee see what Gods meaning is, and the worde also it selfe ought to serue vs for an exposition. Seeing God treateth here of that which biteth poore men and gnaweth them, he meant to giue vs a prouiso, that we should not gnawe any man by any vnlawfull meanes, nor rake vnto our selues other mennes goods. This is the thing which wee haue to beare in minde. But if a man will precisely presse a worde, and not regard what is signified thereby, he plaieeth but the futtle Sophister with God. If a man thinke to excuse himselfe by saying, he calleth not a bargaine vsurie: it is but a mere mockerie. I speake this bicause there are some which stand onely vpon the terme of vsurie, and would hereby escape and cleare their case: but God for all that quieteth them not, although they be so surde and so willic: may rather he pronounceth that they are as rauening Wolues, to deuour other mens goods. But yet in the meane while all is one to them, so they may haue any colour to disguise their matters withall. And that is the very cause why men haue found out such diuers contractes in the world, to the intent they might set some colour vpon their wicked practises. I haue tolde you howe that some, so they take no money, make account to scape scotfree. And why? One maketh this foolish reason, That money doeth not beget money. And therefore that it is not lawfull to receiue any thing for it.

Now as for mee I will take no money, but a man shall giue me so much Corne vpon a summe of money which I shall lend him. And is not corne that whereby a poore man is sustained? And shall I goe rob him of that wherewith he should be nourished and sustained? He hath not any thing to cate by reason that I haue vsed such crueltie towards him: and for all that, shall I say that I am no vsurer? It had bin better that I had taken the money out of his purse, than so to bereaue him of that which should sustaine him. And therefore let vs not deceiue our selues by the word, as men will say in Francke; this is no vsurie, or as they call it here in Geneua; this is no renewing. And why? They bring a skinne of Parchment and say: seee how wee couenaunted together. But if the sunne giue so much light vnto

to it y men may see it, shal not the eyes of God see as farre? And thinke we to dimme Gods eies with the shadowe of a leafe of Paper, or of a sheepes skinne, so as hee shall not see one why? Men may well vse such manner of dealing, as they shall haue (as I tolde you) some faire colour to say: O I haue made such and such a contract, and hee shall not bee taken for a vsurer. And why? Because things are disguised. But God will condemne vs with all our formalities. For (as I haue tolde you) wee must come to the vetic point of the matter. Let vs hearken vnto the lawe of God, for that is the rule which cannot deceiue vs: Whatsoeuer wee doe let vs examine it thereby: let vs consider to what commaundment it is to be referred: manely to this, Thou shalt not steale. But nowe what is theft in this commaundment? Forsooth all those meanes whereby wee vse to rake vnto vs other mens goods, whether it be by deceyte or by violence. Therefore if we will make our profit by y losse of another, if some will scratch as much as they can get, if they will abuse their credite, if they will set their foote on the throates of poore men; if they will play the tyrantes ouer them: if others will faune and flatter, and yet in the meane while haue their nettes laide, and sometimes runne to an fro, sometimes he lurking, & so vse all the meanes they may to pil their neighbours; if we (I say) doe behaue our selues thus, we are theetes before God. Let vs therefore conclude, that vsurie is an vnlawfull gaine which we take either for the loane of corne or of monie, or of any thing besides. As for example, if a man lend corne and not monie; yet sayleth he not to be an vsurer: for we see that the reason which so me nowe and then alleadge is childish; Monie begetteth not monie. For if I make a loane of corne, and when the corne is worth fortie shillings I say vnto a man: Well I will haue three pounce: why doe I so? Because I deliuered vnto him my corne which woulde haue yeelded mee so much monie: yea but I haue twentie shillings more than it is worth, am I not an vsurer before God? And yet men beare themselves in hande that this may bee lawefull. But such gainetaking is the euerie. And as I told you, all the subtleties which men vse shall not so blear the eyes of God, but hee will alywes condemne all them which vse this dealing for theetes and vsurers. So then let vs take good heed vnto our selues, and whereas it is saide, That we ought not to gnawe our neighbour by vsurie: Let vs knowe that our Lorde meant in effect to commaunde vs by these wordes, to vse equitie and vprightnesse in all our doinges, and then especially, when wee are to lende vnto our neighbours: for loanes which are willingly made are for the necessitie of him which borroweth, he hath neede of monie. Well then, if a man which is thus in neede come vnto mee and I seeke his disease, and knowing howe hee standeth in neede of readie monie, will pinche him and seeke some wicked gaine by him, it is vsurie, howe euer my colouring of it make it to bee otherwise taken before men. And what though men haue sought diligently, and coulde find no cause of blame in me? What if they haue sifted the matter neerelie, & not found me faultie? Yet notwithstanding God wil not sayle to condemne mee. And why? For in disguising my counsaunt, I haue sought to make my profite by the losse of an other, and that vnder this colour that the man which distressed succour at my hande is in neede. Ye see then howe there needeth no long scanning to find, what the vsurie is which God condemneith.

And herein we may see the hypocricie of me: for oftentimes they will come to aske counsell of this and that, when their owne conscience might satisfie them well enough. It were needfull oftentimes that the Preachers should bee marchauntes and skilfull in all the trades of the worlde, that they might bee able to aunswere them which aske counsell in this thing in particular. They then which knowe themselves so well what is to be doone in such affayres, why come they to aske counsell of him who is not trayned vp in those dealings? For wee can say well in generall what the thing is. But there are many which haue great store of subtleties & shifting policie, which none besides them that are of the same trade doe knowe: and these wil goe and beguile men, and then beare themselves on hande that they are cleared before God, if it may be saide vnto them: I finde no euill in so doing. No, but hee which saith so is not acquainted with the wickednesse which is hidden, because that as then hee handled the doctrine but in generall. Let vs therefore mark that in effect the point wherunto wee must returne, is, that when we lende we must not abuse the necessitie of our neighbor and say: well, here haue I a fitte occasion, I may nowe profite my selfe.

But nowe some man will demaunde, whether all manner of profite bee forbidden by lending. And it were a thing worth the discussing. For pur the case that a man dealeth plainly, & deliuereth his ware at a price and for a time. If the other breake day with him and delaye him of his monie, doubtles he deserueth to pay the forfeiture or the profite which hee withholdeth from him who made the loane. And when the interest or gaine thereof is set by Iustice, surely he needeth not to make anie conscience to take it. There is a man which hath taken my commoditie whereby I must liue: for when I haue solde to day I buy againe to morrow: and therefore hee that hindereth mee, by withholding from mee the gaine of my commoditie, from maintaining the trade of my shoppe, hee doeth no better than cut my throate. For behold, I grounded my selfe vppon him, hee promised to pay mee at such a day, that tyme is passed, and I can get nothing of him, hee cares not though I and my familie starue for hunger. Therefore in such case, iustice ought to provide for a man: although that nowadays it dischargeth his dutie but slenderly herein. For it seemeth that iustice nowadayes saureth the case of coisners, and that when they haue snatched what they can, and hee that is bitten commeth to recouer that which is reason by way of iustice; it seemeth that he commeth into the court to haue a newe fine set vpon his heade. Verilie it is too too wicked a mockerie, when a man shall be so deceiued, and yet can haue no remedie for it. So then if a man bee in this wise deceiued, it is a cleare case hee may take interest and gayne, and not be accused therefore either before God or before men. Wee may not therefore stand (as I tolde you) on the terme or the word.

And morcouer let vs beare in minde that which hath bin alreadie declared, namely that to be excused by lawe, is not all that wee ought to seeke: for there is a lawe of fuc in  $\frac{1}{2}$  hundred. And this is a generall lawe because Magistrates cannot set a certaine rate for curie case: but they appoint that a man may take fuc in the hundred. And why? For trafficke sake, and because this stint might not be passed. Nowe, may I say therefore that it is lawfull to take alwaies fuc in the hundred? No. For if a man which is in neede come vnto mee: and I take gayne of him, what excuse soeuer I bring, I shall bee accounted a theefe and an vsurer before God. For he is in neede: my partis to helpe him, and I do not. Ye see then what wee haue likewise to beare in minde.

Nowe withall also let vs note on the contrarye side, that when we thinke to auoide the worde of vsurie or interest, we must beware that we fall not into a greater and more outrageous fault in the sight of God. For it may so be, that I will lend my monie without such interest as the law permiteth me, I will take nothing for it: but I will put vnto it a cayle which shall marre all. A man cometh & desireth me to lend him an hundred crownes, well hee shall payne vnto mee a peece of lande which is worth two hundred. It falleth out that the bonde is forfeited. I will take no more than lawe awardeth mee for the profite of my monie, or I will take nothing at all. But I will force a sale thereof, and hee shall withall surrender me his tide. And a man will make himselfe beleue, that hee may washe his handes as an innocent, when hee hath done all this. What (saich he) I lent my monie, and when it was not paid me againe, I bought such a peece of lande. And if you will inquire futher of the matter, Why: it was surrendered vnto me. Yea, but was it done of the parties owne free accorde? When I helde the poore man by the throat, and kept him in my pawes, till I made him say that worde, That he would sell it vnto mee: and shall not God in the meane while be Iudge betweene vs? So then (as I haue tolde you) it is not for vs to stande altogether on the wordes, but wee must rather haue an eye vnto the thing, that is to wit, that before God, wee be not guiltye of anie extortion, that we haue not more than was lawfull for vs, nor raked vnto our selues other mens goods. For oftentimes men will take euen the most honest titles that be in the world, so as yee would thinke there were nothing but holinesse in them, and yet will those pinch a man much more than the gayne would which a man might lawfully take. And we see howe manie inuentions are framed in this behalfe: and which wee cannot at this time handle to the full. And I woulde to God that the practise of them were not so wel knowne as it is. But what? All they which knowe howe to make their gayne, are great clarks herein: Yea to dally with God, and to find out for themselves shrouding sheetes, whereas they will neuer haue an eye vnto the cheefe and principall poynt. Yee see then what wee haue to beare in mind, namely that when it is demanded whether all vsuries bee lawfull, wee must not stickie simplic vnto this word vsurie, but wee must consider what the intent and meaning of God is.

But to knowe this the better, we must resort vnto that equitie which is shewed vnto vs in his lawe. Yea and wee heare what our Lorde Iesus Christ telleth vs, namely, that wee must not doe vnto others, but what wee would haue them to doe vnto vs. This saith hee is the whole lawe and the Prophetes. No doubt then, but that this forbidding of vsurie is comprised also in these wordes, That we doe not vnto others but what wee would haue them to doe vnto vs. Nowe then insteede of asking counsell howe to excuse our selues before God, let curie man examine the matter thus: Goe to, if I were in this mans case, woulde I haue a man pinche mee thus with vsurie? Nay verilie woulde I not: I woulde say a man did me wrong. And if I durst not say it, yet I woulde thinke so in my heart. Nowe if a man thus condemne himselfe in his owne proper fact, is it not enough? What neede we then aske either this or that? And noeouer if we obserue this equitie and vprightnesse of not dooing vnto an other, which wee would not haue a man to doe vnto vs, wee shall bee absolved before God: yea and so absolved, that this lawe shall not trouble our wittes about the scanning of the forme of the wordes therof; but wee will stande steadfastly vpon this gronde, that God meaneth that euerie man shoulde haue his due, and that wee should not robbe, spoyle, and deuour other mens goods.

And let vs note further that it is not enough for vs, not to haue raked our neighbours goods vnto vs by guyle: but wee must knowe that wee are bounde to helpe and succour him. Therefore so little leaue haue wee to spoyle our neighbour of his goods, that if wee helpe him not in his neede, we are guiltye of theft before God. If I say, Oh I haue deceiued no man, it shall be replied against mee before GOD, that I haue. For if I haue wherewith to helpe a man and I will not disturbe one pennie, but leaue my Neighbour in extreme neede when I haue the meane to succour him; doubtles I am taken for a theefe before God.

And againe let vs note, that vsuries sometime are more to be condemned in a final profite, than in a great. This I say to the intent that men shoulde not seeke foolish cloakings of their faultes. For that which I say might seeme strange at the first blush. What? And shall a man thinke better of a strong theefe, than of a finall pelting theefe? I woulde haue no contention about the worde; but I say there is greater wickednes shewed sometimes in the reaping of finall profit, thā in a great gaine. And why? For there may be a rich man which is no necessitie, but yet notwithstanding he standeth in need of readie monie, as there are manie which haue wheron to liue, but they would always encrease their stocke. Such a man woulde buy a certaine peece of Lande, which woulde stande him in good steade: not that necessitie constrayneth him, but for a desire hee hath to growe still richer and richer. Nowe one lendeth him a Thousande crownes, the profite of this summe will bee much greater, than the profite of foure Florens, which a man lendeth vnto an other. Yea but to whome is this latter monie lent? To a poore man which hath finall children, & hath not a morsel of bread to put into their mouthes. Nowe if for the loane of these foure Florens, a man will haue one, and the poore man must make readie y<sup>e</sup> monie at the end of one moneth or twayne, this vsurie or Returne is worse thā y<sup>e</sup> other. For he returneth his mony ouer soone. I graunt it is a leauing of the olde skinne still behinde: but where shall a man finde a newe in the meane time? Yee see then howe this finall gaine is more dammageable than some great gaine. For why? It pincheth the poore man much more than if hee shoulde take a verie great gaine of an other which is able to beare it, and is not pinched in deede so to the quicke by it.

Nowe for conclusion, let vs knowe that God forbiddeth vs in this place to rake vnto our selues other mens goods by anie vnlawfull meanes, by vniust dealing or by crueltie. And we must not here bring our suttleties to excuse our vsuries and our snatching. For our Lord resteth alwayes on the substance in that hee commandeth that none shoulde bee pinched, and that the profites which wee take shoulde not be taxes and imposts to sucke the bloude of poore men, and to gnawe their substance euen to the bones of them. And it is expressely sayde; To the intent that the Lorde thy God may blesse thee, and that thou maist prosper in the Lande whither thou goest to possesse it. Hereby our Lorde meant to withdrawe vs from all vnlawfull meanes of heaping vp of riches. As if hee should say y<sup>e</sup> his blessing shall auaille vs more than all the promise which wee can make; and that al the payne which wee take to enrich ourselues, shall not serue vs to so great purpose, as if wee were blessed of him. For hee will make vs to prosper, and hee is riche enough to giue vnto vs wherewithall to mayntaine vs. Let vs therefore learne, that our Lorde meant here to re-prooue the vnbeleefe of men, in that they so distrust him, and thinke that the earth shall fayle them. And thereupon euerie man concludeth thus: I must vse such a meane, I must practise such a feate, I must looke vnto such a businesse; or otherwise I shall bee behinde hand in all things, I shall but pine away, I shall not get halfe my liuing, if I proceede not in this manner. Therefore when wee haue such a distrust, that is the verie cause why wee vse such wicked trades. Wee must therefore vtterly forsake al such things. If wee will haue G O D to blesse vs, let vs attempt nothing, but what is agreeable vnto his will, and what hee permitteth vs. If wee doe so; let vs assure our selues that God will make vs to prosper, and that his blessing shall stande vs in better steade than all that euer wee are able to get by vnlawfull meanes. As wee feel likewise howe his curse is vpon all those which giue themselues ouer vnto spoyling, and vsurie, and other such wicked trades. Wee see into what an horrible confusion they are brought, when they graunt vnto them selues such lawlesse libertie, as shalbe farther declared hereafter.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to grant vs the grace to be so dedicated vnto him by his holy spirite, that when wee come to present our selues vnto his seruice, we may offer vnto him pure sacrifices & such as he may accept of. And although there be alwayes many spotted & staines in them, that he notwithstanding wil not impute them vnto vs; and that in the meane time hee will so correct them, as wee may tend vnto that perfection to the which he calleth vs, and whether we open our mouth to call vpon him, or bestowe of our goods in way of almes, that we may do it without any sinister affection, & endeour so to dispose that which he hath put into our handes, y<sup>e</sup> we maybe found faithful stewards when we shal come at the later day to giue vp our account vnto him, & generally that we may so liue one with another, as that there may bee an vpright brotherly dealing among vs, that euery one endeour so to liue, & so seeke after his own profit, as he grieue not his neighbors, but rather y<sup>e</sup> euery man may be holpen & succoured by vs as much as is possible: & that thereby we may learne to shewe that we are the children of God, & that he is our father when wee shall seeke in this sort to maintaine the brotherhood wherein he hath ioyned vs together. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely vnto vs, but also vnto all people and nations of the earth, &c.

20 Thou maicst, &c.

21 When thou vovest a vowe vnto the Lorde thy God, thou shalt not slacke to performe it: for the Lorde thy God will require it of thee, and so there shall be sinne in thee.

22 But if thou absteynest from vowing, it shall not bee anie sinne vnto thee.

23 Thou shalt keepe and performe that which is gone out of thy lippes, as thou hast vowed it willinglie vnto the Lorde thy God, and as thou hast spoken it with thy mouth.

IT was declared briefly yesterday, that if the promise which is here contayned were printed well in our heartes, men would be contented to get their living otherwise than by such meanes as God condemneth. For it is nothing else but our vnbeleefe which prouoketh vs to vse deceite and other harme doing. And that is the cause also why God meaning to bridle vs, maketh mention of this promise: Feare not that I will cast thee off, or that I will forsake thee. And this is it wherunto the Apostle likewise leadeth vs in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, where hee intendeth to correct all manner of couetousnesse. And therefore let vs beare well in minde, that if wee will liue with our neighbours in all vprightnesse and equitie, wee must alwayes set before our eyes this blessing of God, to wit, that because hee claimeth vnto him selfe the Charge of susteyning vs in this worlde, euerie of vs ought to haue an eye vnto him, and to depende vpon his prouidence. And therefore when wee trauell for our liuing, let vs vse such meanes as God hath graunted vnto vs. And if we thinke to enrich our selues any way wee care not how, whether it bee by hooke or by crooke; let vs consider on the contrary side, that if God bereaue vs of his blessing, we may well do what we can; but what will bee the issue thereof? Verily all must needes slippe away like water, and we must goe backward. And albeit God suffer a man for a time to increase his wealth beyonde measure; yet shall that bee turned in the end into a woe, both for him and for his childre. And therefore let vs not be inticed by such bayts. When wee see that manie through pilling and polling of others, doe profit themselves greatly and heape together much wealth; let not that moue vs to enueie them. And why? Because the blessing of God is much more worth than all the riches in the worlde. And that is promised to none but vnto them which holde themselves within their bounds, and absteyne from all wicked dealings. And in verie deepe if we would but open our eyes, wee should bee sufficiently warned of that which is here tolde vs. But what? Euerie man is caried away so headlong, that wee consider not of those things which might teach vs plainly euerie day. Beholde there is one which thinketh hee hath swallowed vp a great part of the worlde, and it woulde abash any man to see how suddenly hee is consumed & brought to nothing. God in so doing doth shew vs as it were with his finger, howe hee curseth mens couetousnesse, extortion, and such like thinges, and yet wee haue no regarde of them. Manie complaine and say: Oh beholde we had thought to haue advanced our selues, and in so meane time wee bee false behinde hande, yea, and that is because they considered not whether they depended still on the goodnesse of God, or whether they proceeded not any further than hee gaue them leaue.

Therefore let vs learne to fare the better by all those teachings which God bestoweth vpon vs. When wee see that hee curseth such as snatch so to themselves on all sides, which play the rauening wolues, which haue nothing in them but craft and wilnesse to circumuent, and to snare the simpler sorte: when wee see how God vndermineth them and consumeth them again when wee behold on the other side that hee blesteth those which walke soundly and vprightlie, and that although they haue no great abundance, yet hee sayleth not to nourish them and to haue a care of their familie: when wee see this, let vs desire much rather to bee blessed in this sort of our God, than to haue all the meanes in the worlde which are so accursed of him. And in deepe, the grace and fauour of God shineth forth much clearer when a man hath not much to liue vpon, than when hee hath great renewes and a rich trade of Marchandise, and monie in his purse and prouision of his owne, both in his garners and in his sellars. Why lo?

1o. c. 1. 5.
Hebr. 13. 3.

For if a man be so well furnished of all things, hee maketh this reckening, that God hath no longer neede to helpe him. But when a man must liue from hande to mouth, or when hee hath not much to maintaine himselfe withall, & that at least he might consume all that he hath in the compasse of one yeare: and that yet for all that hee goeth on without diminishing, and yet knoweth not whēce his wealth proceedeth, but that hee is certaine. hee perceiued that God hath pitie of him: when hee thus driueth away the time, and at the ende of the yeare acknowledgeth that it was God onely which susteyned him and his; therein (say I) there is a much more manifest declaration of the goodnesse of God, and G O D by effect sheweth vnto vs howe hee blefseth his, and howe much his blessing auaileth.

Nowe withall let vs beare in minde howe it is sayde here, That God will blefse them which vse no wicked trades, as vsuries, extortions, bribberies: yea, that he will blefse them in all things which they put their handes vnto. God in this place sheweth, that hee wil not blefse idleness, but that hee will haue men to doe their induour by such meanes as shall bee admitted vnto them. Let vs therefore employ our selues to doe whatsoeuer our Lorde hath enabled vs; and then may wee looke for his blessing. But if wee will bee vnprofitable blockes, wee may not thinke it straunge if hee forsake vs. Why so? For wee see the condition which hee addeth when hee promiseth that hee will make vs to prosper: that is, y euerie of vs should offer him selfe vnto him, and that hee requireth vs to doe nothing but what wee can. Nowe I graunt that the meanes are not alwayes in mans hande; but yet wee on our part according to our power must seeke to employ our selues to doe well, and not priuledge our selues from all careful-ness.

As touching the conclusio of this whole matter, it hath bene declared that when God forbade the Iewes all manner of vsurie among themselves, it was to the end that men at these daies should abstaine from it, because hee hath knit together the whole worlde in one felicitasie bonde. And sith wee haue bene reconciled by our Lorde Iesus Christ, wee must lay aside all vsuries and such other wicked trades, and not doe otherwise vnto anie in the world than we would that other men should doe vnto vs. For why? Wee are all neighbours, whether wee be of the same countrie or farther off: and of what condition soeuer wee be, wee sayle not to bee of that neighbourhood which God hath established betwene vs. And therefore let vs come to that which is saide in the fiftenth Psalm, that to be citizens of the Church of G O D, our trading must not be by vsurie, or such vnlawful dealings whereby wee spoile others of their goods, and gnawe them whom we ought rather to releeue. Briefly, let that teach vs, not to doe any thing vnto others, which we would not haue doone vnto our selues. For that is in verie deede the effect of all, to the intent that men should not vse anie subtletie with G O D by cloking any wicked contractes which might be to the damage and losse of other men. And let vs further note diligently that wherof our Lord Iesus warneth vs; y e if we haue the true perfectnes which is required in all the children of God, wee must lend & that without hoping for any thing, that is to say, wee must not onely abstaine from all gaine and increase, but if there be a poore man which can neuer be able to quite the good turne we do him with the like, there must our liberalitie bee shewed. For why? If wee looke for recompence, y e heathen men do as much. But if we will haue our seruice accepted of god, wee must hope after no re-cōpēce in this world. Thus ye see howe me ought to liue together. First they must abstaine from all manner of harme doing, whether it be by deceite or by extortion: and then they must endeour to helpe such as are in neede. And fo euerie man must consider of his owne abilitie, & as hee hath the meanes wherby hee may do it, so hee must relieue them which be in neede: and require his helpe. Truly such is the wickednes of men that it requireth this matter to bee treated of euerie day, and that men should vse exhortations to y e same end, yea & that men should repress y e crueltie which is in many: but if we were as ready to learn y e which our Lord teacheth vs as we should, wee neede not many sermons & huge volumes to instruct vs in this doctrine. For (as I haue tolde you) nature it selfe sheweth what euerie mans ductie is, but because we be deafe of hearing, and are morecōdled with such vnbeleefe, that we are of opinion we shall neuer haue enough, and that the earth wil ful fayle vs: it standeth vs in hande to be exhorted and quickened vp continually. But wee must not waite vntill men speake vnto vs, euerie man must stirre vp himselfe in his owne behalfe, hauing alwayes recourse to that thort kilion which I haue tolde you.

Now Moses addeth, That when a man hath vowed any thing vnto God, hee must performe it, or else it shall be imputed vnto him for sinne. But therew. shall hee saie, how that if a man abstaine from vowing and vow not at all, hee committeth no euill; so as God will not binde men thereto, but it is enough if they accomplishe their voves: and that if they wil vowe nothing, hee will not charge them for it. Nowe let vs note that whereas mention is made heere of voves, it is not meant indifferently of any thing which a man shall list to promise at random and without discretion. For it is saide, When thou vovest a vowe vnto the Lorde thy G O D. We must therefore haue an eye vnto the partie with whom wee haue to deale in making a vow, that is, vnto God. So then let vs note that all voves are to be made with such reuerence, that men must iudge wisely what is good and what is ill. As in very deed if I promise any thing vnto a man, I wil haue this consideratiō with my self, to thinke whether hee wil accept of it or no. Will I promise vnto a man by way of mockerie that which shall not please him, and without knowing howe hee wil take it? No, I will beare him so much

much reverence as to knowe his will whether hee liketh of such a thing or no. Therefore if we shoulde enterprise to vowe vnto God whatsoever wee thinke good, without making a further enquire what hee liketh of: were it not a diminishing of his authoritie? Yes verily. For wee make lighter account of him than of a mortall creature. So then, that wee may fare the better by this doctrine of Moses, wee must lay this mayne grounde, namely that when hee speaketh of voves, he meaneth not whatsoever me shall fancie, but that which is good and lawefull to vowe, and that which God liketh of. And in verie deede voves are a part of y<sup>e</sup> seruice of God. For when wee vowe anie thing vnto him, it is to honour him and to do him homage. We must haue an eye vnto the meaning of a vowe. Nowe the meaning thereof is nothing else, but to put vs in minde that wee owe all things vnto God. And although all of vs should inforce our selues to giue him more than is possible for vs to doe, yet we cannot yeeld vnto him the hundredth part of that which we owe: neuertheless when wee giue him any thing, we witness thereby that wee are bound and beholding vnto him: and thereupon voves are made whereby a man declareth this, that hee doeth offer vnto God all that which hee hath giuen him, as if hee shoulde say: Lorde I yeelde vpe all vnto thee. And this is a reknowledging of his benefites which I make vnto him, as when a man is to pay a yearly Rent, he acknowledgeth thereby that the Lande which hee holdeth is his Lords. Euen so when a man offereth a vowe vnto God, hee doeth it to acknowledge that all that euer hee hath hee holdeth of God, which thing hee also protesteth by a visible signe. But nowe let vs consider whether God will bee serued after the lust of men, or according vnto his owne wil? Doubtlesse hee will bee serued in such wise as hee himselfe commaundeth. For hee sayth that it is as the sinne of witchcraft, when men of themselves attempt to doe anie thing, and will needes shroude themselves vnder the fayre title of Deuotion. It is no deuotion (saith hee) but it is all one as if you were witches and cojurers, and did put your trust in your coniu-rings and in your charmes, and therefore I like of nothing which you doe, but I condemne it. Therefore seeing wee heare that God will not bee serued of vs, but in such manner as hee by his worde teacheth vs. And sith hee sayth in expresse tearmes, That obedience is better than sacrifice: Let vs keep vs within our bounds, that wee vowe not vnto him whatsoever cometh into our brayne. For why? That is disallowed of him. Therefore this worde is well to be weigh'd, When thou vowest vnto the Lord thy God.

And secondly wee must consider of the end which wee haue named. For it is not enough that a thing bee good, but it must also bee doone to a good purpose and of an vpright and sincere meaning: and so wee must consider what the voves are which God alloweth. The voves which were made in the lawe, were as. solemne thanksgiuings. When a man was sicke, he vowed that if God would giue him his health, hee would come into the Temple and offer sacrifice. And why would hee doe so? Euen to confesse that he held his health of God, and that hee acknowledged him for his father, because he had deliuered him from his sickenesse. When a man went out to warre hee made one vowe or other, and when he was to make anie daungerous voyage hee did the like. We see the example of Iacob, howe hee saith that hee vowed vnto G O D, that if he brought him backe into the countrie where he was borne, into the Lande which hee had promised him for an inheritance, hee would giue him the tenth part of all his goods, hee would make him an offering thereof. What meant Iacob heereby, but to confirme vnto himselfe, that although he went as a poore fugitiue person which was chased out of his fathers house to go into a strange & vnknown countrie and had death alwayes before his eyes, hee was notwithstanding inheritor of the Lande of Chanaan, and that God would bring him thither againe? His meaning was therefore to confirme himselfe in that thing, because he had alreadie the promise thereof warranted vnto him by the blessing of his father Isaac. But to bee the more assured of it in his heart, he added this thanksgiuing, as if he had alreadie seene the thing accomplished and euen present before his eyes: my God I hope y<sup>e</sup> thou wilt bring me home safe and sound. It seemeth in deede that I am nowe put off from all things, and that I shall liue no longer in this countrie: Yet my God seeing thou hast made me a promise, I will hope that thou wilt so conduct me, that I shall returne againe into this Lande; and therefore I nowe acknowledge this benefite, and promise to offer vnto thee the tenth of all that euer thou shalt giue vnto me. Yee see how this example doeth sufficientlie declare vnto vs the intent and meaning of those voves which were made in the time of the Lawe: that is to wit, that they serued for prayes and thanksgiuings vnto God, and so by this meanes they were (as I tolde you) an acknowledgng of his benefites, or a kinde of homage which was done vnto him.

Nowe hereby wee may gather, that those voves which men make without iudgement, & without aduisement taken what pleaseth God, and what hee accepteth; are not onely vaine, but also corrupinges of his seruice eueriechone of them. For men doe fallily abuse the name of God, when they vowe they knowe not howe or wherefore. And that it is so, experience teacheth vs by many examples. But wee must holde vs vnto that reason which hath bene alreadie alleaged, namely that because voves pertaine vnto the seruice of God, if wee make them at randon and without such sobrietie as to say we will obey G O D in them, we make a foule and filthy medlie of that which we ought to keepe pure and cleane. There is then a defiling of Gods seruice, and a kinde of robbing of him of his honour committed in so doing. And herein wee seee howe blunt witted the Papistes are. For to prooue their vowes, they take a text all to broken, as if a man would take a clause onely of an Indenture or such like writing, and cancell all the rest, and were not that a manifest fallhoode? The Papistes doe no better. When they read this word Vowe, O it followeth then that wee must performe vnto G O D all the vowes which wee haue made. Is that true? Nay wee must first knowe whether they be lawful or no? They which should haue murdered Saint Paul and had conspired together by a solemne agreement, did not they make a vowe? But who will say nowe that they are bounde by their vowe, and that God liketh of it? They make a solemne vowe not to eate nor drinke, vntill they haue put Saint Paul to death. Truly this is all one as if they would make God a companion of their murder. See what a diuelishe agreement is made, and they confirme it by and by with a solemne vow. Yea but if our wittes be settled, we will condemne all such vowes. Nowe then wee see when vowes are to be performed. But Moses said not without cause, When thou doest vowe a vowe to the Lorde thy God, appointing God in this place for the partie which accepteth that which shall be presented and offered vnto him: for without that, all shall be of no value and of no effect.

But nowe what do the Papists in their vowes? First they take vnto themselves some trifling toy or other, and thereupon binde themselves vnto God: and they beare themselves in hande, that hee is much beholding vnto them, and that they deserued some recompence of ouerplus at his handes. One voweth a pilgrimage to such a Saint, another maketh a ninedayes vowe, an other voweth to eate no fleshe on such a day, or to fast such a feastes euen. Nowe let vs consider whether God liketh of anie of all these things. Doubtlesse hee doeth not. For as for going on pilgrimage, it is not onely a kinde of Iewishnesse, but it is also a wicked corruption. And although vnder the lawe, it was Gods will to haue one Temple to the which men shoulde resort to worshipping him: yet it is nowe abolished. No weif the place which GOD had chosen, which was ordeyned by his owne mouth is no longer in force, but wee must call vpon God eueriuere throughout the whole world, without going either vnto Mount Sion, or to any other place which men shall choofe: I pray you howe may men of their owne brayne make such holy places? That is to say; howe may they according to their owne fancie halowe Rome, or Saint James of Compostella, or I knowe not what? And secondly for eating of fleshe on such or such a day, we know it is nere superstition.

Seeing our Lorde hath ordeyned that men shoulde feede on all meates soberlie without any questioning concerning this meate or that meate; as though one meate were vnleane in comparison of an other, and that whosoever doeth otherwise, serueth the diuell: a man may well alledge his deuotion, but out of all doubt the diuell setteth him a worke, and hee must pay him his wages. As much may be saide of all the other pelting baggage, which the Papistes vse when they fast. And so wee see that these things are not vowed vnto God, and that although his name be therein pretended, yet hee will neuertheless disallowe of all. For why? None of it is ruled by his worde. Againe the Papistes vowe that which is not in them to performe, as the Monkes and the Priestes vowe perpetual chastitie, as they say. Nowe I graunt indeede that all men owe chastitie vnto G O D: but this chastitie is not an absteinyng from marriage: but the leading of an honest life by keeping himselfe vnder the state wherein he is: but among the Papistes there is no other chastitie, but the abstayning from marriage. They vowe this vnto God, but it is in them to performe it? Nay it is a diuelishe arrogancie. But if a man haue the gift of continencie, hee must vse it with all humilitie, committing himselfe alwayes into the hande of G O D, knowing that whatsoever God hath giuen vnto him to day, hee must saye to continue it vnto him to morrow, or else al will slip away like water in a minute of an hour. And further we know not how God will dispose of vs in this behalfe. Againe, it is not all one to abtaine from marriage, and to abstayne from a thing which God hath not permitted vnto vs. A man may haue excellent vertues, as if hee were an Angell of heauen, and yet marrie for all that. God calleth him thereunto, hee hath libertie to vse marriage for a remedie, therefore let him vse it. But howe soeuer the worlde goe, let vs beare in minde that which our Lorde Iesus Christ sayth: namely, that the gift of continencie is not giuen vnto all. And S. Paul as a faithful interpreter of that which his maister had saide, warneth euerie man to walke accordingly as hee is called. Therefore it is a diuelishe arrogancie in a man, to presume that hee hath in him selfe and as it were in his owne sleue the power of absteinyng from marriage. And if hee make a vowe thereof, it is all one as if hee did openlie desie G O D, and say, hee passeth not for him. Wee ought to offer vnto G O D. But of what? Of the benefites which hee hath bestowed vpon vs (as I tolde you.) Nowe wee knowe not whether hee will graunt vnto vs the benefite of abstayning from marriage for all our life time, or no. And howe then can wee promise that vnto him, which wee haue not receyued? For wee must alwayes make account to say: Lorde I offer vnto thee that which thou hast giuen mee. Euerie man therefore must haue an eye vnto himselfe, and to his owne abilitytie. Moreover when a Fryer voweth pouertie, is it not a notable mockerie? Some of them vowe pouertie: but after what manner? Forsooth they will sticke to their bagge and wallet, they will haue a common gathering, they will be as bloud hounds to smell out the best collections, they will conuey other mens goods vnto themselves from all sides. Therefore they mock God euen to his face, when they vowe pouer-ie, and that is to doe nothing but to waxe greasic and fat at all other mens costes. Others goe and lurke in a stie, as these monkes doe, who are well landed and tented, and whereas they be readie to burst with eating & drinking, yet for all that they vowe pouertie. And doth not this pouertie please God well thinke yee? Nay, what is to dalie plainly with God if this bee not?

 Lastly they vowe obedience. And to whom? To an Abbot or to a Prior. But in the meane while they will be priuiledged from all obedience of God and men, I meane from that which apper-taineth to anie rule of government. Yet see how God hath put children in subiection vnder fathers and mothers: but they may shake off this yoke vnder shadowe of being in monkerie. God hath put men in subiection vnder Magistrates, and vnder such as haue the sword of iustice: and a Monke will exempt himselfe from all this. It must bee lawfull for him to breake all the bonds and lites which God hath set, vnder colour of forging in his owne shoppe a newe obedience whereof God in no respect liketh. Wee see then howe the papistes generally and particularie mocke God with all voves which they make, & not only mocke him, but desie him; and by goinge so cleane crosse against him, do pul his vengeance vpon their heads. Therefore it is too grosse a beastlinesse when a man will come and wrest these places of scripture, to prouue that all voves must be performed without discretion. For first wee must knowe what wee are able to vowe vnto God, whether hee will accept our voves, and whether they shall bee pleasing vnto him or no? And therewithall (as I told you) the intent and meaning must bee looked vnto.
 For if wee vowe a thing vnto G O D which in it selfe is good: yet if the intent bee wicked, the vowe is corrupt and naught. For example: Wee haue already alleadged howe Iacob vowed an offering vnto G O D of the tenth part of his goods: a man may doe the like and yet doe it not as Iacob did: for hee is not ledde with the same spirite. Hee doeth it to merite or for I knowe not what other imagination which hee hath conceyued, and not of purpose to render thanks vnto God after the example of Iacob. The intent therefore and meaning must heere bee considered, and wee must aduise our selues well, for what purpose and howe wee vowe vnto G O D: to wit, that wee haue not anie of these foolish imaginations of meriting and of binding God vnto vs by doeing this or that: but it must bee doone to moue vs, to render homage vnto G O D, and to protest that wee are bounde vnto him for all the benefites which hee hath bestowed vpon vs: And that although wee cannot thoroughlie discharge our selues for them, yet at the least wee make such open protestation of them. Except these pointes bee purlie and simple obserued, doubtellesse all our voves shall bee reiected of God, although in outward appearance they haue no euill at all in them.
 Thus yee see then howe wee must vnderstand this place.

Nowe it is saide, When thou vwest vnto G O D, acquise thy selfe and performe that which thou shalt haue pronounced with thyne owne mouth and of thyne owne good will. If thou doest not vowe as all, or forbear to doe it, thou shalt not sinne. Here wee see first of all howe God would not binde men; but left them at libertie, to the intent they shoulde serue him of a more franke and free good will. Saint Paul saith that G O D loueth him which giueth with a cheerefull affection, that is to say, with a minde voide of constraint, and of a pure deu-otion as men call it. For if wee offer any thing vnto God of necessitie: as if wee doe an almes beeing constraigned thereto, or full sore against our willes: it is reiected of him, as a man shall see these miserabile pinchpennies do, who when they giue an almes doe gnashe their teeth at it, and woulde if it were possible withholde themselues from bestowing of any, and when they open one hande, woulde hold fast in the other whatsoever estapeth them. May such offer-ringes bee acceptable vnto G O D? Doubtes no. Yee see then the reason why wee say nowe that G O D woulde not tie men in any strait bonde, but rather leaue them free vnto themselues, to the intent hee might bee serued with a syncre and freehearted affection. And that is the cause why Moses saith here expressly. If thou vowe not, it shall not be impused vnto thee for sinne.

Nowe if it was so in the time of the law, by greater reason ought we nowadays to be freed therefrom. For voves were then common among the people, and it behooued the people also to bee exercised in such ceremonies according to the weaknesse of that time, when our Lorde Iesus was not yet come into the worlde.
 And it was requisite that the faithfull shoulde folowe those figures and shadowes which were in that time. And albeit God helde them in, as litle children by appointing such ceremonies: Yet notwithstanding in this behalfe hee layde the bridle on their neckes as men say, & meant not to perswade them to vowe, or to occasion them to binde themselues; but left the matter to their owne choyce and liberie. Nowadays then seeing that wee are vnder the Gospell, where there is no longer anie such bondage as was in the time of the lawe; thinke wee that our Lorde taketh any great pleasure of it when men vowe, so as they thinke they be not deuour enough, except they vowe one thing or other and passe others therein? But our Lorde contrariwise had much rather that men shoulde keep themselues vnto that which he hath ordined and followe the common rule in which is al our perfection. Moreouer let vs note, that if anie man thinke to adde any thing to the lawe of God by vowing, hee is to bee condemned for ir, although it haue no other euill nor vice in it. For wee are forbidden to adde anie thing vnto that which God hath declared vnto vs. Therefore when we make any vowe, it must not bee as if wee woulde giue God something besides that which he hath required; but it must be to keepe vs alwayes vnto his seruice. When wee tend vnto this ende, we may say: wee belong vnto God, and all that hee hath giuen vnto vs is his still, and it is good reason that we should make an acknowledging of it: In deede wee haue not any speciall rule to say: I will offer this thing or I will offer that: God leaueth it in our owne choyce. But howe soeuer the worlde goeth we must attempt nothing beyonde that which hee hath permitted vnto vs; and what wee knowe that he requireth of vs by his worde. If men (I say) bee not helde with such a bridle, questionles whatsoeuer wee vowe is vncleane and diuillike, and God disaduoweth al and condemneth it. So then it is a point worthe to bee obserued, when our Lorde sheweth that hee will not lay any great bonde or bondage vpon his, but leaue them their choyce whether they will vowe or no. But yet for all that, his will is that voves should be performed if they be lawfull: For hee sheweth what is required in them. Will wee knowe whether Gods life of the vowe which wee make? Wee must in the first place consider whether it bee agreeable vnto his will or no; and secondly whether that which wee vowe bee in our power; and thirdly whether that our intent and meaning bee vpright and ordered by a good rule. If all these things meete together, Gods will is that we should discharge our selves vnto him.

Nowe if wee consider well of thinges, wee shall finde that wee haue a generall vowe for our whole life, seeing we are called of God to come and offer our selues vnto him in sacrifice. Therefore if a man knowe what the end of his calling is, hee woulde certainly bee persuaded that hee ought to vowe himselfe vnto God. For hee receiweth vs, hee intertaineth vs, he adopteth vs for his children, on this condition that we should serue him in innocencie of liuing. Seeing hee taketh vs on such condition, euery one of vs must be prepared to offer vp himselfe vnto him. Nowe I graunt indeede that wee cannot doe it except wee be sanctified by his holy spirit, and the faithfull when they present themselves vnto God, doe it not in any confidence of their owne power, they doe it not to attempt any thing of themselves or vpon imagination to attayne thereby vnto anie perfectnesse, but they doe it, grounding them selves first of all vpon this, that God accepteth of their good will al though it bee weake and vperfect. And why? Because they haue the forgouernesse of their finnes promised vnto them, and this is therein comprised, that God will not impute vnto them those thinges which are faultie in their workes. Moreover they haue a promise that god will gouerne them by his holy spirit. So then here vpon euery faithfull man must vowe himselfe vnto God. And nowe hauing so vowed our selues: Let vs take heede we performe that which wee vowe. For there is a threat added which we must obserue and feare. It shall bee imputed vnto thee for sinne (saith God.) Truly if wee were all Paynians, that wee had neuer heard so much as one worde of the lawe, or of the Gospell, yet should wee not bee iustified therefore, if wee serued not our God. For hee hath placed vs in this worlde to the intent hee might bee glorified in vs. But as for them which are called of him, and which knowe that they ought to dedicate themselves wholly vnto his obedience, and which haue promised to do so: they ought to vnderstande that they are double bound: and if they breake that bonde, they are in so much greater fault; and a great way lesse to bee excused. Therefore if wee will applye this to our instruction, wee must knowe that the generall vowe which wee haue all made vnto G O D, is grounded vpon our baptisme. Seeing that hee hath adopted vs for his children, let vs honour him as our father, and seeing hee hath choose vs vnto him selfe, let vs bee giuen indeede vnto his seruice; let all our life bee subiect vnto his obedience, let vs (I say) thinke vpon this.

But nowe touching particular voves; if a man demaunde whether it bee lawfull to make them among Christians, the answer is, that we cannot be too well aduised in that behalfe. And therefore the lesse wee vowe; the better it is alwayes for vs. Truly wee may not condemne al voves: For seeing G O D hath left them at libertie, wee must alwayes remember this; that therefore it is lawfull. But howe soeuer the world goe; let vs bee contented to walke euery one in his calling, and let vs not vse voves, I meane, so as to binde our selues ouer much: for wee see our owne weaknesse, that when wee should walke as God hath commaunded vs, albeit the way be shewed vs, yet we swarte aside so often, that it is pitifull to beholde, and wee are constrained to crie out with Dauid: Who knoweth his faults? For why? Wee neuer haue such wisdom as were requisite, but it befalleth vs to wander and to turne aside one way or other, so as wee sinne many a time without thinking on it. Therefore if it bee an hard thing for vs to keepe our selues in our accustomed way by reason of the weaknesse that is in vs; what should we meane to charge our selues yet further with an harder thing, as if wee were well able to surmount them all? Ye see therefore howe we ought to abstaine from al voves, and to content vs with this plaine simplicitie, to say: I see what my God hath commaunded mee, I must holde my selfe thereto without stepping any further. But yet notwithstanding, if wee haue purposed to acknowledge any benefite towards God, let vs take heede that we performe it. For if the promises which wee make vnto men must be kept; what shall bee saide of that when we call vpon the name of God, & direct our selues vnto him, and that hee be made a partie? In few words therefore, let vs beare in minde vpon this place, that wee must be faithfull and trustie towards our God, for hee is such a one on his part, and will neuer breake his promise: let vs not mistrust that wee shall be deceyued in waiting for any thing from him. And therefore sith hee hath called vs vnto him, and woulde that we shoulde bee bounde vnto him, let euerie one of vs take heed that wee keepe our selues steadfast vnto his seruice, and let vs not behaue our selues, as wilde horses which are broken loose. And whereas it is declared vnto vs, that we are redeemed by the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ: Let vs knowe that wee are no longer our owne, but his who hath redeemed vs with so deere a price. Therefore let vs liue and die vnto him, inducing nothing else, but to yelde vnto our G O D the obedience which wee owe vnto him, euen by nature it selfe, and that also which we haue promised vnto him, so that wee may purely call vpon his holy name and declare by this meanes that we are his people indeed.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good G O D with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs to feele them more and more, and that feeling them we may be touched with such repentaunce, as to come and seeke the remedie of them in him alone, that is, that hee will pardon our faultes which are past, vntill hee hath wholly reformed vs & clothed vs with his owne righteousnesse. And so let vs say, Almightye G O D and heauenly father, &c.

The Cxxxvj. Sermon which is the seuenth vpon the three and twentieth Chapter, and the first vpon the xxxiii.

24 When thou comest into thy neighbours vineyarde, thou maist eate grapes at thy pleasure vntill thou bee satisfied, but thou shalt put none into thy vessel.

25 VWhen thou comest into thy neighbours corne, thou maist plucke the eares with thy hande, but thou shalt not put a sickle into thy Neighbours corne.

WHen a man taketh a wife and marieth her, if it come to passe that afterwarde shee finde no fauour in his eyes, because he hath found some ill fauoured blemishe in her: hee shall write a bill of diuorcement, and put it in her hand, and send her out of his house.

2 And when she is departed out of his house, and being gone her wayes doeth marie with an other man:

3 If this other also hate her and write her a letter of diuorcement, and put it into her hand, or if this latter man which toke her to wife die:

4 Then her first husbande which sent her away, may not take her againe to be his wife after that she is defiled; for that is an abomination in the sight of the Lorde: and thou shalt not cause the lande to sinne which the Lorde thy God giueth thee to inherite.

Lthough Gods will was that euerie man should possesse his owne, & ordeined that none should doe wrong vnto anie, yet hee alwaies so mo derate d this extremity of due right, as the poore should bee releued by the riche. And this gentleness ought alwaies to beare rule among vs, that they which haue aboundsance, albeit they may vse it as their owne, yet must they not deuour all themselves, but bestowe part of it on such as are in neede: and euerie man according to his measure and abilitie, must put to his helping hande to releue their penurie. And that which wee haue nowe read tendeth to this purpose. For it is ordeyned that euerie man should reape his owne Lande, and gather in his owne grapes, and receiue the fruite thereof.

Gods

Gods will is not that thinges shoulde bee fet forth to open pray, as if they were made common: but that euerie man shoulde possesse that which hee hath, and enioye it without controlment. And yet hee woulde not that there should be such crueltie as that the poore should nor bee any whir at all succoured by the rich. And that is the cause why hee suffereth them which are hyred to gather in the vintage, to eat of the grapes; and them which are hyred in harvest worke, to glean and to gather with their hand the eares of corne, as it were an hand full: and not to carie away their basket full of grapes, or to carie away the corne by whole sheaves. For that were a kinde of theft. When a workeman which is hyred for the profite of his maister, will pilfer away thinges in such manner vnto himselfe; what vpright dealing doeth hee shewe therein? Let vs note then that where as it is said, he that commeth into the vineyard, may eate of the grapes; he that commeth into a feelde of corne, may gather of the eares with his hand; it is not meant ingeneral of all commers in, and passers by. For what a thing would it bee, if libertie were graunted to al passers by, to eate as many grapes as they woulde? The vintage woulde bee soone gathered in: there shoulde bee no neede of fixe weakes labour, euerie man woulde make such a speedie dispatch, that there woulde bee nothing left to gather in. But it is here expressly meant of such as are hyred. And in deede it was not lawfull to enter into an other mans field or vineyard to say: I will goe and eate grapes, I will goe and fill my bellie at an other mans cost, and when I am wel filled, I will not pay my shotte. For if this had beene lawfull, it woulde haue bredde a barbarous confusion. But our Lorde (as I tolde you) speaketh here of the vintage and harvest. For herein no man sustained any losse. For after that such a lawe was made, hee which had a vineyard hyred men on condition, that they might eate grapes. And if any likewise hired harvest-folke, hee knewe they might glean, so that they tooke not euerie man his reaphooke to curchum a sheafe. For this had beene to take tith of the owner of the felde, and he should haue sowed for an other. And therefore there was no reason in such dealing. But when our Lorde permittech a reaper to take an handfull of corne, herein there is no extortion; there is no vnrule dealing vsed.

We see then howe in this lawe the poore & the rich are taught their lesson. For as for the poore, although they see that one hath great abundance of corne, that an other hath great plentie of wine: yet ought they not withstanding to beare their penurie patiently, and not to runne and scratch for other mens goods, as if they were left at fixe and seuen. Yea and that when men giue them such access, they must not repyne at him which is wealthy, to pilfer anie thing secretlie from him. As if a man being hired to sowe a ground, haue a sacke of corne diluered vnto him, and hee steale a bagfull of it: verily he committeth a double theft,

It had beene better he had cut a purse or silche away some other thing, than so to haue deceyed one which put him in trust. Again, if the threshers likewise, when a man openeth his barne vnto them, conuey away an other part: If a seruaunt which is of some house, steale a thing which hee founde cast aside in a corner: these filchings are as bad almost as open robberies. For thefts which are committed by such as are householde seruauntes, deserue much greater punishment, than those which are committed by straungers. And why? For when a man trusteth one so farre as to bring him into his house, into his felde, or into anie other place where his goods are; hee ought to shew himselfe twice or thrise as trustie and faythfull as hee woulde doe otherwise. And if a man do the contrarie, hee offendeth greuously both in the sight of GOD and of men. So then let vs note, that the poore ought so to beholde other mens wealth so, that they bee not prouoked with anie couetous desire to pilfer away, or to steale anie thing. For why? Seeing God hath bestowed on them no abundance of welth, they ought to content themselues with that litle which they haue, and to knowe that it is God which hath poynted out to euerie one his portion in this world, and that he hath nor without cause ordeyned that euerie man shoulde possesse that which hee hath gotten, or that which is come vnto him by inheritance, or that which hath beene giuen him: in respect wherof his will is that there bee a certaine order, so as none bee deceyed of their right. Yee see then how the poore are taught, That they must not be entised to doe that which is euil, although they stande in neede of the goods of this world. For it shall not serue them for an excuse before God, if they alleadge: Why? I sawe that that man was nothing vnder foote, and as for my selfe I was in extreme neede. No: Our Lorde will not haue men to giue themselues the bridle so farre, but that euerie man should keepe himselfe within his bonds.

Nowe by the way the richer sorte are warned to exercise gentleness, and not to be such holdefastes and so miserable, as to bee greued if the poore bee releued by their goods. As for themselues they liue still in abundance, they want nothing, yea they haue more than will serue their turne: And therefore they ought at leastwise to vse some small gentleness to the poore; according wherunto it is saide in another place, That when a rich man gathered in his harvest, hee shoulde not glean afterwards; but leaue it for the poore people to leaue and to gather the scattered eares; like as if chickens shoulde picke vp crummes, after that a man hath eaten his fill. Yee see then howe the rich are taught by this lawe, so to vse their abundance, that they defraude not such as are in neede: but seeke rather to communicate part of their goods with them: not that they shoulde set out the mayne heape for him to take which hath neede: but that euerie man should consider his owne abilitie, and although there bee no certaine lawe, to say: Thou shalt giue so much in almes, yet notwithstanding, all men must knowe, that they are bounde by the worde of God, to releue their neighbours, and to extende their liberaltie towards them, as farre as they are able. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to beare in minde vpon this place.

Nowe if this doctrine were well obserued, things woulde go better than they doe. But we see nowadayes poore folke giuen to such craft and malicious wiliness, as woulde loach a man to see it: they are become little better than theeues. A man cannot haue fieldes and vineyards in the countrie abroad, but they are alwayes deceiued of some parte of them, and that in such wise, as if they were in the Lande of their enemies. And why? Because the poore dispench with themselves, and beleue that they haue some vantage about the rich to pilfer away and to take by stealth, whatsoever they can come by. And what say they? O it is of the goods of GOD which wee take. Well then seeing it is Gods, it ought to be accounted holy. Therefore thou robbest GOD when thou pilferest away an other mans goods: thou goest to catch that out of Gods hande, which hee had kept in store for an other. Agayne wee see what crueltie there is in riche men, howe they woulde faine swallowe vp the whole world, howe nothing can suffice them. And therefore their wealth oftentimes is not blessed of GOD, because it is not in his safegarde, nor kept vnder his protection. Wee see howe GOD tellecth vs, that wee must vse such gentleness towards our neighbours, as that euery man must employ himselfe to releue those which are in neede and necessitie. If men woulde doe so, doublelesse GOD woulde holde their goods vnder his protection, and himselfe would keepe them: but because rich men vse rather crueltie than bountifullnesse towards their neighbours, it occasioned poore men to pilfer away all that they can get: because the rich abuser their goods in such sorte, as men see. Neuertheless this is not here written in vayne. All ought to followe the lesson and the warning which is here vsed, to wit, that the poore bee somewhat releued, and that they wrong not the riche, that they robbe them not of their goods, and that when they are hyred, they so employ themselves and bestowe their labour in such wise, that it may be to the profite of the maister which payeth them their hyre.

Let vs nowe come vnto that which Moses addeth touching diuorcementes. Hee saith, That if a man hath married a wife which afterwarde displeaseth him for some blemishe which shee hath, hee may cast her off, so that he giue her a bill of diuorcement. And hauing so cast her off hee may neuer take her againe, if shee marrie her selfe againe vnto an other.

Nowe let vs note that this bill which the man gaue in this case, was to the credite of the wife, and to the discredit of the husbnde. For it declared thus much: I haue married a wife and shee displeaseth mee. And why? For some blemishe which shee hath in her bodie, or for some qualitie which is in her. The husbnde then declared hereby that hee was a faithlesse and forsworne man. For why? Hee tooke a wife on condition to haue her companie all the time of his life, and nowe hee casteth her off. See howe through his fault, such an holy bond as marriage is broken. Yea but there was some thing amisse in her. Oh, but thy selfe wouldest gladlie bee borne withall. And thy wife was committed vnto thee on that condition, that shee shoulde bee a part of thine owne person: and thou cuttest thy selfe as it were in the midst. If thine arme bee weake, wilt thou cause it to be cut off at the first choppe? If there bee any contagious disease which might empyon the whole bodie, surlic thou were better leese one member, than thy whole life. But when a finger is ill fashioned, and a man seeth something, which I knowe not howe, is not so feare as he coulde wishe, must hee therefore mangle his bodie? Verilie it were against nature. Euen so an husbnde was not to bee excused, when he deliuered in this sorte such a bill vnto his wife. The thing tended nothing to her discredit, but it serued rather to shewe that shee was innocent, and that men shoulde knowe that shee was not put away either for adulterie, or for any other lewde deede: but only for y waywardnesse of the husbnde becing a crooked surlic fellowe, and such a one as is desired to haue his lust satisfied. Nowe it is saide in the ende, That when the husbnde hath thus diuorced his wife, and shee bee married vnto an other, her first husband may not take her againe. For this were an abomination before the Lords. In this lawe wee haue first of all to note, that when GOD thus permitted diuorcementes, it was not to dispench with the thing, to make it lawful: but because hee meant not (as touching ciuill order of government) to exercise any rigour against the lewes. For yet for all this, the lawe of marriage remained in his full force, and (as it hath bene aboute handled) ciuill order of government is not to preiudice the tenne commaundementes or to change anie thing in them. For in the two Tables GOD hath comprised a perfect rule of life, and a certaine and infallible rule wherunto wee must order our felues. Nowe may the rule of ciuill government change anie thing in these tenne commaundementes? No. For yee see howe wee ought to liue. But the rule of ciuill government is an ayde hereto, not to shewe vs any perfection, but to leade vs thereto, to the intent that men might be bridled from ouerflowing their banks too farre, and that the wicked which by their good will woulde not obey, might bee forced by constraint.

Yee see then whereto the rule of ciuill government serueth. But yet for all that, the lawe abideth in his full force. Agayne, in ciuill ciuil order there may wel be some expressing of these ten commandmentes, but that is all, it sheweth no perfection. And this is a point which we ought alwaies diligently to note. For we see that as the world is thimselfe, so many thinke to bee iustified if they can alleage: What? Men charge me with nothing. O they are pertie Angels as they thinke. And yet howe soeuer the worlde goe, they sayle not to bee diuels. Nay some wicked varlet will say: What? I am in office, it may well beare mee out. Yea as though they which had neede to correct their owne vices, were iustified by punishing of others: and as if this might serue them for a shrowding sheete to cloake their wickednesse with all, so as they might say they had offended in nothing. And they which speake thus, vnder colour that men dissemble their wickednes, or not punishe them, nor lead them to the galowes, nor shut them vp in dungeons: they take themselves to bee innocent men. And what a vile shamelesnesse is that? But what for that? The thing is as common as the high way. Againe if they which come like swine to the supper of our Lord Iesus Christ alleaged to couer their vices: What? I am receued to the supper of the Lord, yea but there are many which come thither which yet are vnworthy. It is vnpossible to purge the Church of God so, but there shall still remaine much chaffe among the good corne. Now if a man be receued to y<sup>e</sup> supper of y<sup>e</sup> Lord, because he could not be condemned before men, or happily because men vse too great pacēce towards him: may this serue to lessen his wickednes? Nay contrarywise he encreateth his sinne before God, because he abuseth his name so falsly, and defileth the table which was hallowed for the children of God. And ought they which are no better than dogges and swine, to come nigh it? So then let vs learne that the order and rule of gouernment both concerning earthly Iustice, and also of the church, is not to sit vpon what y<sup>e</sup> perfectnes is which is required. But we must alwaies returne to that try all which is to be made by the lawe of God.

And this is it which our Lord Iesus Christ hath also declared vnto vs vpon this place, as wel in y<sup>e</sup> fift chapter of S. Matthew, as also in y<sup>e</sup> nineteenth. For there he saith expressly: although a man was suffered to diuorce his wife, that it was no lawfull thing notwithstanding so to doe. But is God contrary to himselfe? No. And heere in there is no diuerfite as I haue told you. For in y<sup>e</sup> two tables of the law, God hath comprised what soeuer is required to perfect holines and righteouines. Ye see then how men ought to gouerne themselves, and they cannot be deceiued. Moreover there is a rule of ciuil gouernment which serueth somewhat to brydle men, but not to leade them vnto perfection: but to prouide that all things be not brought to vtter confusion among them. For the rule of ciuil order hath no such regarde of perfection, as the lawe requireth. Yea and God in his lawe not onely forbiddeth vs y<sup>e</sup> outward act of wickednes, but euen the inward lust and desire therof, which cannot be punished by magistrats nor earthly Iudges. For it is not knowen, God in his lawe forbiddeth not onely y<sup>e</sup> very act of fornication or to lust after another mans wife, and to entise hir: but hee forbiddeth vs also to haue any bylusting, although there be no consent, or the will framed thereunto. So that if a man haue but a wantō eye, he is already condemned for a fornicator. If there bee in a man any hatred, any rancor, any euill will, it is condemned for murder before God. Ye see then how the Lawe of God is spirituall, & that it requireth such a true & perfect obedience, that all the senses, all the affections, all the thoughtes of a man must bee agreeable vnto the wil of God: and we must be so reformed, y<sup>e</sup> being rid of al the corruption of our own nature, we may yeeld our selues altogether subiect vnto y<sup>e</sup> which God commandeth vs and which he liketh of. Ye see what y<sup>e</sup> righteouines of the lawe is. But there is no notice of this inward wickednes vnto men; it cannot be iudged by the men shall not accuse them, men shall not indite them for it, there are no witnesses in this behalfe but y<sup>e</sup> guiltie conscience of him which sinneth, which shall prick him and reprove him sufficiently. And this is as much as all the rest: nay this is all in all, when a man is thus conuicted in himselfe. We see then how ciuil order and rule of gouernment is diuerse indeede from the lawe of God, but yet for al that, there is no contrariety. And therefore this is no excuse for a mā to bring, nay rather it is an absurd thing for a man to say: What? God punished not diuorcements, it followeth then that he gaue his consent they should so be doone. No: the thing fareth otherwise. For marriage must hold alwaies in his full force, both as touching the lawe of nature, and as touching the will of God, who ordained it, and declared that it ought to remaine inuioable. But yet for all that, diuorcement is permitted: I meane as touching common order, which is but to brydle men heere belowe, and not to reforme them as the children of God ought to be, which are gouerned by his holy spirit. Ye see then as touching y<sup>e</sup> first point, that albeit God punished not those diuorcements which were made without any reasonable and lawfull cause, yet notwithstanding he alwaies condemned this vntaichfulnesse, and meant that mariage should remaine alwaies inuioable.

And fo we are warned by this example, not to sleepe in our sinnes. Although men reprech vs not, although we come not in place of Iustice to yeeld account of our doings: yet let vs not thinke that we haue escaped the hand of God. For we shall haue another reckoning, & a more straitter to make before him. When wee shall be summoned to his seate, we shall not be tried guilty by the verdit of men; but the booke of register shall be opened, as it is said in Daniel, and y<sup>e</sup> secretes of our hearts (as S. Paul saith) shall the be bewrayed, all shall be layde foorth before vs. So then let vs learne to haue alwaies an eye vnto this iudgement of God: let vs learne to sit out selues according vnto his lawe, when we wold know whether our life be well ordered or no: and let vs not be abused with y<sup>e</sup> which men thinke or iudge of vs.

In deede we must obey common order, but this is not all: it is but one part. If a man bee a transgressour of ciuill Lawes, and so become punishabable before earthly Iudges, hee deserueth double punishment at the hand of God. For first there is an euill thought, secondly there is a wicked act, and for the third there is an offence and euill example giuen. Behold three wicked things in him which is punishable by the ciuill Lawes. For first hee hath offended God in his heart, because there is the roote of euill, and againe hee hath doone and committed the act it selfe for the second, and for the third there is giuen a publike offence. Those therefore which offend against the lawes, are greuous transgressours agaynst God. But although we walke in such sorte, as men can finde nothing wherefore to blame vs, yet we are not quited as guiltlesse for all that, except euery one of vs entering into himselfe haue there the witness of his own conscience, that he hath walked soundly and vprightly, and finde that as hee hath committed no euill, so he hath had no will thereto, yea and that hee was in no forte prouoked vnto it. And albeit a man haue withstoode his wicked concupiscences and lustes: Yet neuertheless hee must alwayes condemne himselfe before GOD, and confesse with humilitie that hee should bee culpable, except God vsed mercie towards him. For it is not alonely sayde: Thou shalt not commit adulterie, nor theft, nor murder, but: Thou shalt haue no wicked desire. Nowe this surmounteth all the abilities which are in vs. It followeth then, that wee haue no other remedie, but to humble our selues before GOD, and although hee graunt vs grace to fight agaynst our wicked affections, yet to confesse that they proceede from the weakenesse of our owne nature, and that it is through his goodnesse that wee are absolved, and not through our owne merites. Thus yee see what is to bee borne in minde touching this point.

But nowe let vs treat of the matter of diuorcement. As touching ciuill order, a man was permitted to put away his wife, but so, as hee gaue her a bill for a winnesse of her honestie, to the intent that the wife through the crueltie or waywardnesse of her husband, might not bee dishonoured: but that men should be giuen to vnderstand, that shee for her parte ordered her selfe honestly, and that shee was not put away for any fault of hers. Yee see what is to bee noted in respect of ciuill order. Nowe if a man demaunde whether such maner of diuorcementes bee noweadayes permitted? Let vs consider of that which our Lorde Iesus Christ sayeth concerning this matter. Was it not forbidden you (sayeth hee,) because of the heardnesse of your heartes? Nowe then although such a permission were graunted vnto the Iewes, yet notwithstanding, the lyke is not giuen vs noweadayes. For the hauing of moe wuaes than one was permitted them likewise, as wee haue seene heeretofore, because it was not punished: and should wee therefore looke noweadayes to haue the like libertie in that behalf? No. For wee see that because God hath reueiled his will more fully vnto vs, than vnto the Iewes, it is good reason that wee haue a strayer bridle than they had: yea and the libertie which is giuen vnto vs, ought to binde vs so much the more in this behalfe, than were the Iewes. For as concerning ceremonies, and other such like things, the Iewes were vnder as strait bondage as none might bee greater. They were loaden with such a burden, as made them to benide and to sigh vnder it. And for this cause it is sayde, that the lawe bringeth nought else but feare. Nowe wee are freed from this so heauie yoke, I meane in respect of the ceremonies; but as for the rest, wee are a great deale more bounde to walke according vnto the will of our GOD. So that all the diuorcementes and this hauing of moe wuaes than one, ought noweadayes to be abhorred among Christians, although among the Iewes there was libertie graunted for these things, and they remained vnpunished. Let this be noted touching the rule of ciuill order.

But the principall point is for vs to vnderstand what is lawfull for vs, and from thence euery one may gather what his office and duetie is towards his wife. And the wiues also are to bee exhorted to discharge themselues the more faithfully towards their husbands, when they shall knowe vpon what condition they are ioyned together. Nowe as touching the husbandes, our Lorde Iesus Christ sayeth, that if any man forsake his wife, except it bee for fornication, hee is an adulterer, and hee maketh his wife an adulteresse also: he excepteth fornication. Nowe when hee sayeth that the man is an adulterer, it is because hee hath broken wedlocke. For if hee separate himselfe from his wife although hee play not the adulterer otherwise, yet seeing hee hath falsified the sayth which he once plighted, he is counted of adultery. The reason is, because it is the law of marriage that when a man ioyneth himselfe vnto a wife, hee taketh her for his companion to liue & to dy withall. If the nature of wedlocke be such that the man and the wife be contracte together to the end to liue & to die together, & that y man should be the head, & the woman y body: the man hath now but the halfe part of his own person, and can no more separate himselfe from his wife, than cut himselfe into two peeces. And y were (as I told you) against nature. Nowe he maketh his wife also an adulteresse: for although the wife haue liberty to take vnto hir a newe partie according vnto ciuill order, yet as touching God, she ought to take no other, but to remaine a widow. For if she go and marry hir selfe againe, she is an adulteresse: and that is y cause why S. Paule also saith expresse: that if a woman be separated from hir husband, not for adultery (for he meaneth not so;) but because the husband cannot brooke his wife, shee shall remaine a widow, or reconcile her selfe (sayth hee) vnto her husbande. Yee see what the remedie is which Saint Paule giueth. And it is no new remedie which appertayneth to Christians as touching conscience,

Matt. 19. 8.

1. Cor. 7. 15.

conscience: it hath euer beene. For S. Paul addeth nothing vnto the law of God, nor to that rule which is common vnto all the children of God. But although the Iewes had that custome, because of fy hardnes of their hearts; yet neuer-theless if a woman bee put away from hir husband, she ought rather to remaine a wydowe; or to reconcile hirselfe vnto hir husband, than to marrie againe. For otherwise shee sayeth not to bee desyred, as wee see by this place. And that were an abomination before GOD. And if she had patiently wayted to enter into fauour, and to bee coupled agayne to hir first husband, shee had not bene an adulteresse. Nowe as touching the man, he committeth double adulerie by auorsing his wyfe in this order. For, for his owne part, seeing hee hath broken wed-locke he is an adulterer: and againe he casteth off his wyfe as if hee woulde put her into the streetes, hee maketh hir an harlot by giuing of hir leaue to take a newe make: for that is against GODS institution, it is against the order of marriage which ought to be kept without any gaynsaying.

Nowe heereby wee are taught, that men ought to beare with their Wyues; and although they haue some vices and some staines in them, notwithstanding when they seeke to correct them, they ought to vse all gentleness. For why? It is not ynough for a man to keepe his wyfe in his house and say: Well, I cannot driue thee out, tarry here therefore, and as the meane time hee groyne at hir, hee spurne hir, hee bea-teeth hir, hee vexeth hir, and hee vouchsafeth not to doe the office and duectie of an husband towards hir. If a man keepe his wyfe by him in such order, it were much better he were di-uorced from hir, and that shee liued in peace in some little corner or other, where she should not so languish and pine away in sorrowe all the dayes of hir life. And wee see in what sort our Lorde speaketh hereof by his Prophet Malachie, when he treateth of the matter of hauing moe wyues than one. If thy wyfe please thee not, put her away rather, than ioyned thy selfe with many. Not that hee gaue a man leaue to put away his wyfe, but hee sayeth it were better for a man to put away his wyfe, than to keepe hir so, with griefe and sorrowe. And he maketh a comparison betwixt two euilles, of which a man ought to shunne the worst. Yee, shall haue some man keepe his poore wyfe, but it shall bee for no other ende but to brawle with hir, and to molest and vex hir with all the dis-quietinges in the world. Nowe there is no reason to the contrarye, but that a poore creature shoulde at the least haue peace and quietnesse.
So then (as I haue told you) let this place of the Prophet serue to shewe vs wherunto wee are bound, that is, that a man put not away his wyfe by duorcing of hir. But when wee are commaunded euerie man to keepe his wyfe (except it bee for adulterie) it is all one as if it were sayde, that a man must bee gentle towards his wyfe; and loue hir as his owne flesh, as S. Paul warneth vs in another place in the fifth to the Ephesians; and if there bee vices in hir, hee must beare with them in such sort, as there may be peace and concord maintained in the householde. If men vnderstoode that they are such debtors vnto their wyues, that is to say, that marriage requireth a peaceable kinde of life betweene man and wyfe, so as if there bee anything amisse, yet they ought not to bee ouer frowarde, therefore, but quiet and patient: wee shoulde see an other manner of blessing in all houses and families than we doe now see. But nowadayes, the most part of husbandes and wyues are like Dogges and Cattes.

For they haue no such regard of their duectie, that if a man bee vexed of his wyfe, hee will call vpon God and desire his holy spirit to repress his affectiones, but hee falleth rather into worse and worse. If a man espie any spot of wickednesse, hee deseth his wyfe by and by thereupon, and casteth hir off. The Duell is a sickler betweene both, and lyke a whyte Pye in this behalfe, hee knoweth well ynough howe to finde occasions and meanes to seuer that alinder, which God hath coupled together: but neuer-theless wee see what a lesson is giuen vs by our Lord Iesus Christ, to wit, that because the husband is not at libertie to put away his wyfe for any cause, but for fornication; he must moderate himselfe. And that albeit his wyfe be not altogether perfect, but haue her infirmities, yet he must seeke to amend them by gentleness. And howe-euer hee fare, he must take heed that hee shew himselfe gentle, and nourish peace and concord with his wyfe.

And heereupon let women on their parte bethinke themselves to acknowledge the fa-uour which GOD sheweth them, and to magnifie him for it. Seeing GOD hath vouchsafed them such honour, as to ioyned them to their husbandes who are their heads, let them not perke vp aboute them: but let them enforce themselves so much the more to take paynes in the thinges which are appointed them to serue their husbandes in; and let them haue this consideration to say: behold the husband is as it were the head of mankind, and women are as it were the body. Nowe sith God hath ioyned mee vnto an husbande to be his ayde and companion, I must endeour to please my husbande in such wyse, that hee have no cause to be grieved by me. He is to beare with me as God hath commaunded him: and seeing God hath such a care of me, ought I nor to haue the more heedfull eye to gouerne my selfe so, as I be not a torment and vexation vnto my husband? And if there be in me any euill qualitie, let mee be the first my selfe to correct it, and to fight so against it, that I be not forced and con-strayned otherwise to reforme my selfe: but let me of my owne goodwil seeke to please my husband, that there may be peace and quietnesse among vs, and not brawling & fighting as it were betweene duels. Ye see in what sort euery man ought to haue an eye vnto his duectie when our GOD speaketh of the pure coniunction which ought to be in marriage, & sheweth that as touching

ching men, it is by no means to be broken.

Matt. 19. 8.

But nowe let vs passe farther in this matter, pursuing that which our Lorde Iesus Christ saith when hee was asked: And why then did Moses permit that bill of diuorcement? Hee did it saith hee because of the hardnesse of your hartes: but it was not so in the beginning. This is rehearsed in the nineteenth Chapter of saint Matthew. Nowe note for one point that our Lorde vpbraideth the Iewes with the hardnesse of their hartes: and that is to the intent wee should learne to condemne our selues; if euill order bee not so perfect among vs as it ought to bee. When wee see that the Church of God may be founde faultie in many things; when wee are not reformed according to the order and practise of the Apostles, when we keepe not that purenesse which was in the primative Church, when wee see howe wee offend in these pointes, let euery one of vs sigh for sorrowe, and examining our selues say: Alas we ought to haue this thing, we ought to haue that, but we are farre from hauing of them. Wee see what order hath bene heretofore. First as touching the almes of the Church, there were Deacons in that behalfe. Wee see how liberal every man thewed himselfe, so as there was no necessitie: there was but one minde and one affection, so as the faithfull were but one. Wee see also touching the supper of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that it was administered in such wise, that if there were any man of a loose and dissolute life he was put from it. And excommunication was of an other force than it is, & men used it after an other fashon than they do nowadaies. And likewise as touching Baptisme, it was ministered with such reuerence, that euery man was attentue vnto it, the congregation was assembled together, as if one were to receiue an holy freedomship, as in very deepe it is. But among vs none of these things are so, as they should be. After the state of ciuill gouernment, faults are not halfe punished therein. And if there be any punishments, they are but playes and pastimes as a man may say. What ought wee to call to minde heereupon, when we see that both generally and particularly, things are not so well ordered as they ought to bee? Surely euery man ought to consider and to say: alas it is because of the hardnesse of our hartes, that we can haue no such order as ought to be among the children of God, that things are so wasted, and that no remedie can be had in this behalfe. What is the cause heereof? To whom must the fault heereof be imputed? To all of vs. For wee haue an hard heart. Whereas if we were so pliable to be taught, as that we could suffer our selues to be gouerned according to that which God commaundeth vs, Lawes should bee better obserued, Magistrates should not bee so hindered, nor finde it such an hardnesse to do their dutie: we should see especially the Church of God (wherein nowe many shamefull things are,) better ordered. And therefore in stead of this, that hypocrits cloake themselves with this shrouding theete to say: What? Men finde no fault with me, and doe any thinke that I am culpable before God? In place of this (say I) let vs learne to confesse, that our selues are the cause why things are not so well ordered as they should bee, it proceedeth from the hardnesse of our heart, which can bee made pliable by no means.

Nowe wee must farther note how our Lorde Iesus Christ leadeth vs to the first institution of GOD, to shew what is the true nature and condition of marriage. It was not so (sayeth hee) in the beginning. Heereby hee declareth that as GOD created man and woman and was himselfe the authour of marriage, so hee deliuered a Lawe wherein nothing must be changed: and as soone as men swarue from it, what excuse soeuer they take, what colour soeuer they haue as touching men, yet sayle they not to forge a thing contrary vnto the institution of GOD, which ought to suffice vs. And therefore if husbannes and wiuues will discharge themselves of their dewtie, they must looke farther than that which is before their eyes. For things are too confusedly disordered in this worlde. Therefore if men hang altogether vpon examples, euery man will drawe his neighbour: vnto vtter destruction. But let them haue an eye vnto that which GOD hath ordayned. Hee sayde: It is not good for man to bee alone, let vs make him an helpe like vnto himselfe. Seeing it is so, let vs note that all those which are called vnto marriage, that is to say, such as are not priuileaged to bee without it, and which seele that God hath not giuen them the gift of continencie to abstayne from marriage; let all those knowe, that of a truth GOD calleth them and as it were, leadeth them by the hande vnto this estate. And if they bee well perswaded of this, doubtlesse they will goe with a franke and free goodwill; euery husband will endeuour to discharge himselfe of his dewtie with all diligence, when hee shall knowe howe hee is bound, not onely vnto his wife, but alio vnto GOD. The wife also on hir parte will consider, that seeing shee ought to bee an ayde vnto her husbande, shee must not bee as a diuell to hinder and to trouble him. For that were a peruerting of the order of nature. But shee will thus bethinke her selfe: Beholde, GOD with his owne holy mouth pronounced, when hee spake of creating the woman: Let vs make an helpe for man. Hee sayde not, Let vs make a woman for him; but an helpe. Nowe seeing that the woman ought to bee an helpe and ayde vnto her husbande, it is greate reason that shee employ her selfe to doe her dewtie therein: yea and that of a franke and free goodwill; knowing that it is not vnto her husbande that shee is bounde but vnto God who ordayned such a coniunction in the beginning. Thus yce see what we haue to obserue.

And agayne note wee that when it is sayde, That a man shall forsake father and mother and cleaue vnto his wife; it is to magnifie so much the more that holy bond which was ordayned

Gen. 2. 18.

Gen. 2. 24.

dayned by GOD. For can a man renounce his father and mother? Doubtlesse no. Nowe much lesse may hee renounce his wife. If it bee not lawfull for a childe to renounce his father and mother, an husband shall bee lesse to bee excused for separating himselfe from his wyfe. For why? God hath so pronounced that albeit a childe bee specially bound to his father and mother: yet there is a straiter bonde of the husband towards the wife. Therefore if an husband be thinke himselfe of this, he shall not be so easily tempted to forsake his wife, as a childe to exempt himselfe from y<sup>e</sup> subiection of his father. And the wife likewise on her part shall know to say: behold my husband is my head, he hath authority ouer me, & God hath bound me to him, and shall I then separate my selfe from, either through an headie will, or affection, or through some other frowardnesse? Ye see how a wife shall be kept in the obedience of her husband when she shall thinke thus: seeing God hath allotted vnto me such a condition that I must be subiect vnto my husband, I must not hoyft vp my head like a wilde hinde and shake off the yoke. For I shall not disobey a mortal man, I shall not offend him onely; in as much as I breake the faith wherein I promised to be subiect and obedient vnto him, and do altogether the cleane contrary: but I shall offend him which hath put me in subiection vnder him, to wit God, who gaue me into y<sup>e</sup> hands of my husband, and wil that I be more subiect vnto him than vnto father and mother. Ye see how this beginning ought to be as a brydle to holde vs backe, that wee presume not to change any thing in the institution and order of God. And secondly let vs extend this vnto al other things: knowing that the Lawe of God is not as mans lawe is. If there bee an olde lawe, it may be forgotten and buried, men will not thinke on it, and a man shall not bee condemned for hauing transgressed such a lawe. If a man say it was three hundred yeeres since it was published, there is no remembrance of it now: if a man offend against it, it skils not, the lawe is no longer in force. But the matter is otherwise in the lawe of God. For wee can make no prescription of time against him, wee cannot lie and sape our selues in our vices, and say: I haue not bene warned, I remember the lawe of God no longer, the worlde transgresseth beyond all measure against it: men make but a game of it: wee may not (I say) couer our faultes with any of these excuses: for they are vayne and of no value. But wee cannot handle this whole matter at this time: wee will keepe it in store therefore for to morrowe, with that exception of fornication.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better, yea in such sort, that being cast downe in our selues, wee may lament and bee sorie that wee haue so greatly offended him. And seeing it hath pleased him to remedie our faultes, and to declare vnto vs that they are forgiuen in the name, and by the meane of our Lorde Iesus Christ, pray wee him, that he will likewise hereafter giue vs the grace by the power of his holy spirit, to ouercome all the temptations against which wee are dayly to fight, vntill he hath giuen vs victorie in all our conflictes, when hee shall haue withdrawen vs to himselfe, to make vs partakers of his glorie in the kingdome of heauen. That it will please him to graunt this grace not onely vnto vs but also vnto all peoples and nations of the earth, &c.

1. 2. 3. 4. When a man taketh a wife, &c.

5 When a man taketh a newe wife, he shall not goe to warre, neither shall hee be charged with any busines, but shall be free at home one yeere, and reioyce with his wife which he hath taken.

6 No man shall take the neather nor the vpper milstone for a pledge: for this gage is his liuing.

Haue declared already at large, how men ought to liue in agreement with their wiues, and how the bonde of mariage is such as cannot bee broken. It remaineth now, that we come to the exception which our Lord Iesus Christ maketh; to wit, that for the cause of adulterie, it shall bee lawfull for a man to put away his wife. The reason is, for that the man on his parte breaketh not the faith which he plightred, but the wife hauing played the harlot doth asmuch as in her is,

Matt. 19. 9.

vndoe

vndoe the marriage altogether, and so defileth it, as there remaineth no longer any holynesse in it. For on what other condition is the husband ioyned vnto the wife, but that they should liue chastly one with another? But the partie which committeth adulterie, breaketh this condition, and therefore the bond of marriage is then vntyed. So then if a man knowing his wife to be a whore, and hauing likewise proued her such a one, for sake her: he violateth not the institution of God, neither transgresseth he this law, They shall be two in one flesh: but he is quitte, and let free, because the wife hath swarued aside from the order of God and of nature. Let vs therefore note well, that when our Lord Iesus Christ alloweth the diuorcement which is made for the cause of adulterie, it is not to graunt a man leaue to change any thing in the institution of God.
 For it must euer holde true, That man may in no wise sunder those whom God hath ioyned together. But because the woman hath broken the condition of marriage, the husband is freed from it. The thing then which wee haue to beare in mind is that the exception which we heere haue rehearsed, serueth not in any way to lessen the force of the law of God, That coniunction which God hath ordayned must alwaies remaine firme and steadfast. But she that playeth the harlot, is no longer a wife, she is no longer to be taken & deemed for such a one. Now if a man demaund on the other side, whether y woman for her part hath like libertie, we heare what Saint Paul saith, y like as y husband is not maister of his owne body, no more also is the wife of his. Ye see what an equalitie of like right y holy ghost serueth downe: y like as y woman when she is married, is not my-stris of her owne body, so on the contrary side a man after y he hath plighted his faith to his wife is bound in such wise, y if he abandon himself other wise vnto lust, his fault is alike with y adul-terie which y wife committeth. So then if wee will hold our selues vnto y which God hath commanded, wee see y the rule is most euident and cleare, namely, y the man must not only content himselfe w the wife which he hath taken, y is to say, he must not only keepe her for a companion, but also beare with hir: because y marriage impor-teth a true and perfect vnion of two persons, and that as hartie as any may be. Which vnion is not possible to be maintained, except y husband doe beare with his wife & with those frailties which are in hir: & the wife also for hir part endeour to please hir husband, & to bee obedient vnto him.
 This we see (I say) on the one side: & againe wee see that if the wife be so loose in life, as to giue ouer her selfe to fornication, shee breaketh wedlock, whereby she doth as it were warre with God, perverting all honesty, which ought to be holy & inuiolable. Now if when the woman offendeth so on hir part, the husband likewise step a side in his dewty, and ouerthrote himselfe so farre as to breake the faith which he hath plighted vnto his wife; he is condemned of God. For why? The bond (as I told you) which passeth betwixt them, is mutuall and of like force touching them both.

And in this case there is no doubt, but that a man may marry a gaine, if he in this sorte put away his wife because of adulterie: and men shew an ouer grosse abuse when they weigh not the words of our Lord Iesus Christ: That if a man forsake his wife, except it be for adulterie, & mary another, he is an adulterer, & that he caufeth her whom he hath forsaken to commit adulterie also. Now when Christ excepteth y cause of adul-terie, it is to set the man in y case at free choice & libertie to mary agayne. For what a thing were it to bar a man from a newe match; if he haue observed his promise faithfully, & liued in the feare of God, and not beene vnfaithfull towards his wife? If he be constrained to put her away, must he be punished for the offence of another? What reason were in that? Should he not haue open wrong doone him? Especially considering that our Lord Iesus Christ in that text addeth, That all haue not the gift of continencie, and that such as haue not receiued it, haue the remedie of marriage, and that they ought to vse it. When our Lord Iesus Christ pronounceth this, thinke we that his meaning was that the poore wretched man, who hath liued blamelesse with an harlot, should bee left in dispayre? Nay; if hee see filthynesse in his house, he must, whether he will yea or no, cast forth such vnclannesse, except he will infect himselfe therewith and be accounted a partie in such wickednesse. Now if a man discharge his dewtie in this behalfe, thinke we that God barreth him of all right, and that he leaueh him in such trouble and anguish, as he may not know where to become, but must re-maine vnprouided of all remedie? It was therefore an ouer grosse folly in men not to knowe that our Lord Iesus Christ leaueh a man in free libertie to marrie agayne, when his make hath violated the faith of marriage. As much is to be sayde in the behalfe of the woman, seeing the right in this case is equall and mutuall, as I haue shewed afore. And so yee see what we haue at this day to obserue: namely, that euery man ought to consider, that the vocation which hee hath of God, is such a yoke as he may not seeke to shake off. For it is the cheefe and principall seruice which wee can render vnto God all our whole lifetime, to haue an eye vnto that which he requireth of vs: and when hee hath set vs in some estate and calling; to doe that which belongeth vnto our dewtie: and that euery one yeelde himselfe obedient in all humblenesse, to say: hath God called me vnto this ende? I must frame my selfe therunto without any reply or gainsaying. Therefore when we be of a milde and gentle disposition, submitting our selues vnto y will of our God; therein (say I) consisteth the principall seruice which he liketh and desireth.
 And without this all our vertues are nought else in his sight but dounge and filthynesse. Nowe seeing it is so, let vs consider, as touching ma-riage, what the calling of God is, and what maner of Law, or what yoke he layeth on the neck of man: to wit, that he liue quietly with his wife, bearing with those infirmities which are in her, & be a companion to liue and to die with hir: and

that

that the wife lykewise submit herselfe with all humblenes vnto her husband, so as they nourish and maintaine peace one with the other. Thus yee see how God may be honoured and how his grace also and his blessing may dwell and abide in a familie. And if a woman bee so wicked as to prostitute hir selfe, the husband according vnto the will of God, may not onely put hir away, but is in perfect and full libertie to leaue hir, and to marrie himselfe vnto another. As for the woman, there is in deede another respect touching hir than for the man. For the wife shall not bee so dishonored by the adulterie of hir husband, nor bee put to so great shame, as the husband shall bee by the wyues. But yet if the husbände bee an whooremonger, and wasteth his goods and substance vpon harlottes, so as his wife is shutte out of doores, or bee kept in with all manner of crueltie like a wretched slaue; if this mischiefe holde on still: then to leaue a wretched woman in such bondage, were against all reason and right: especially considering that which was yesterday alleged out of the Prophet Malachie, That it were better that a man shoulde put away his wife, than to haue more than one. And what shall bee sayde then in this case, when a man shall keepe an ordinarie itewes, and that no man is able to correct this vice of his: is not the wife then set at greater libertie? This is the thing which wee haue to beare in minde vpon this place.

Nowe sith our Lordes will is that marriage shoulde bee so indissoluble and inuiolable, yea, and that through the vertue of this sentence which our Lorde hath pronounced with his owne mouth, That there shall bee two in one flesh: let vs note that it is much greater reason that the spirituall vnion which wee haue with our Lorde I. s. Christ, ought to bee diligently kept and inayntained: For his will is to contract marriage with vs, and dayly he doeth so, or at leastwise rauyeth it by the preaching of the Gospell. And on what condition is it? It is (as S. Paul saith) to the ende wee shoulde bee as chaste women, not turning our mindes aside vnto false doctrines. For he comparcth all errors and all corruptions of the pure simplicitie of fayth, to fornications. As if a wife hearken vnto a bawde, beholde shee is alreadye wonne, and begynneth forthwith to breake the fayth of Marriage. Euen so is it with vs, if wee abide not in the obedience of our Lorde Iesus Christ, holding our selues wholly vnto his doctrine, wee are like vnto aduor-trous women. And therefore sith that GOD hath ioyned vs vnto his only sonne, and that our whole felicitie and glory consisteth therein, let vs learne not to decline from it in any manner of wife.

Nowe it is sayde, That the man which shall haue so put away his Wife, shall not, (if she marrie otherwise) euer take hir agayne, because shee is alreadye defiled. Heereby GOD meant for to shewe that albeit hee did not punish such diuorcements as were made without any good ground;

yet he leaueh not to condemne them: for there was heerein a remedie, that a man being grieued with his wife, myght in continuance of time beyng better aduised take hir agayne: and if the wife were married agayne, because hee had set her forth vnto fornication, and because that (asmuch as in him lay) hee had broken all order of nature, he might not take her agayne. Now in that God ordayneh such punishment, although hee permitted diuorcements, I meane as in respect of humaine policie: it shewed sufficiently that hee allowed not of them. And so the Iewes excused themselves but in vaine, as if they had put away their wiues by the authoritie of the Lawe. For this texte sufficiently declareth, that this manner of putting of them away was wicked, and that it coulde bring nothing else but all manner of euill and mischiefe; yea and farther, that it was not possible for the man to amend the fault which hee had committed, after that the wife had taken a new husband. When the Lawe declareth thus much, is it not a condemning of the Iewes? How can this serue them for a shrowding sheete to say: The law permitted vs this thing, our Lorde woulde not punish the such a sinne by any earthly iudgement? Yea but for all this, hath hee declared that he alloweth of it? Hath hee sayd that such a fact is lawfull? Nay but all the contrarie. For the thinges which of themselves are good haue alway a good end and issue, but when there followeth any wretched mishap in any thing, especially such a one as can be by no meanes reco-ured, it is a signe that the thing displeaseth God. So then let vs diligently note that God meant in this place to discover the reason of his counsaile, why hee punished not diuorcements. In effect hee meant to giue the Iewes to vnderstand that it was for the hardnesse of their heart (as our Lorde Iesus Christ thereof speaketh) and that they must needs be conuicted to acknowledge that the cause why God established no perfectnesse of ciuill government among the was, for that they were not capable of it. But they considered litle of this. Nay they bare themselves in hand rather that all thinges were lawfull for them, seeing they were not punished by earthly iudgement, and they thought that by this meane they were also precluded from the iudgement of God.

Hereby wee bee warned of that which was more fully handled yesterday, to wit, not to runne at rours, but to make a perfect tryall of those thinges which wee take in hand, by hauing our eye alwayes on the Lawe wherein our Lorde hath comprised the effect and abridgement of his wil, & that is also the true touchstone whereby we ought to try all our words, yea and all our thoughts. Seeing it is so, let vs returne thither, & although wee be not punished by men, yet let vs not cease to mislike of our selues for our vices, knowing that they must elsewhere be accounted for, albeit GOD hath spared vs in this lyfe.

And yet there are now and then some by punishmentes layde on vs in that respect, insomuch that although God call vs nor solemnly vnto the barre, ne frame an inditement precisely against vs: yet neuerthelesse he vseth some kinde of chastisement, to admonish vs of our faultes, as wee see that this hauing of many wiues was not punished, & yet our Lord ceased not to shewe that it was a detestable thing in his sight, as whereby the order of marriage was broken and violated. Let vs therefore consider of all the corrections which G O D sendeth, to the intent we may preuent his anger, and not abuse his patience although he for a long time beareth with vs.

Briefly, let vs take heede that we attempt not any thing against y<sup>e</sup> rule which is giuen vnto vs: let vs alwayes returne back vnto this point; It was not so in the beginning: For if we aledge custome, it shall not serue to exempt vs from condemnation: if we say: it hath bin in vse this long time, we haue an infinite number of examples for it: all this shall litle auail vs. For why? This one only word shall cut off all such excuses, where it is sayde, that, what G O D hath once established; it must be alwayes obserued, although men be changeable, although they be rebellious, and so through their venterousnesse, and their rashnes, make a confusion of all thinges, and enterprise whatsoeuer their lust fancieth, and thereupon carrie themselues headlong into all wickednesse, yea and one folow another; all this shall be nothing before God, but a more grieuous condemnation to aggravate, and to increase the haynoulnesse of their wickednesse. And why so? For it ought to suffice vs y<sup>e</sup> god hath declared vnto vs his will which cannot varie, and from the which also it is not lawfull for vs to swaue. Now moreouer let vs note well y<sup>e</sup> which God addeth: Least they shoulde make the Lande to sinne which hee had giuen the Iewes to inherite. Moses hath heretofore vsed the selic same manner of speaking: but seeing it is in this place rehearsed, we ought to call to minde y<sup>e</sup> which hath bin already aboue declared: that is to wit, that if a vice raigne, and men still let it slip: they make the whole land to sinne, y<sup>e</sup> it is to prouoke y<sup>e</sup> anger of God & to nourish it, & that all are made guiltie thereof. God sayth not, that he which shall so take his wife againe shall sinne before God and not abide vnpunished; & that the woman lykewise committeth abomination: but he sayth, The land shall sin. And how y<sup>e</sup> land? It may chauce that there shall not be past a three or foure diuorcementes, and yet y<sup>e</sup> there may be a million of people in y<sup>e</sup> land: and why shall y<sup>e</sup> fault be so farre & so largely extended? It seemeth y<sup>e</sup> none besides him which maketh the diuorce, ought to be accused. But God knoweth well how hee ought to iudge. And it is not for vs to teach him his lesson. Let vs therefore holde vs vnto this decree of his which hee hath here pronounced: & let vs know y<sup>e</sup> the whole land is defiled, when sinnes raigne therein, without any bridle, and the cause is manifest. For there Iustice cannot be without blame, where is no bridle of restraint. Where men haue not this consideration to say: Behold God is offended, this is a detestable thing, but are altogether carelesse of it; there iustice is idle. And so forasmuch as y<sup>e</sup> magistrates execute not their office faithfully, ye see how the sinne becommeth publike, and for the whole people is as it were consenting vnto it. And moreouer, when wickednesse is so permitted, euery man is of opinion y<sup>e</sup> all thinges are lawfull: for of custome men alwayes make a lawe. And a mans eye may bee witness, how on the one side men put away all shame, & on y<sup>e</sup> other side stand in no feare. And doubtlesse y<sup>e</sup> feare we haue of punishment, & the shame which we haue of doing cuill, are two bridles to restraine vs. When these two thinges are layd aside, so y<sup>e</sup> men set brazen faces on y<sup>e</sup> matter, & take leaue to do what they list; there is no remedie but that all mischief must proceede thereof when sinnes haue so full scope. And that is the cause why S. Paul vpbraideth the whole Church of Corinth, with the incest which was committed, although one man alone had taken to wife his mother in lawe. Yee boast your selues (saith he,) but what a shame is it y<sup>e</sup> you nourish such villanie & filchinesse among you? So the let vs wisely consider, y<sup>e</sup> as often as the scripture speaketh in this wise, it is to admonish vs both publikely & particularlie of our dutie: first of all such as haue publike charge, dissemble not y<sup>e</sup> wickednesse which is committed, but seeke to correct it; y<sup>e</sup> the Pastours which haue y<sup>e</sup> charge of teaching, doe open their mouthes wide wth all libertie, and that when they see y<sup>e</sup> mischief encrease and is augmented, they cry out at it, condemne it, & reprove, & repress it as much as lyeth in them; that so much y<sup>e</sup> more seuer punishment be vsed in y<sup>e</sup> Church: y<sup>e</sup> the magistrates who haue y<sup>e</sup> sword in their hand take heed, y<sup>e</sup> they employ theselues to doe for their part what God hath commaunded them; & besides, y<sup>e</sup> every man priuately & particularlie enforce himselfe by exhortations & admonitions to purge his house from all filchines, & to eschue & auoyde all wicked companie: y<sup>e</sup> we may at the leastwise shew y<sup>e</sup> the wickednesse displeaseth vs, & that we will not at any hand be partakers thereof, following y<sup>e</sup> which S. Paul saith, That by not consenting vnto y<sup>e</sup> workes of darkenesse, we must reprove the. Behold (I say) what y<sup>e</sup> thing is whereof we are admonished, when God declareth y<sup>e</sup> the land is guiltie of sinne, if an offence remain unpunished. And if we be not able to remedie the mischief thereof, let vs bewaile our selues, knowing that if God wold deale rigorously wth vs, we were worthy to be plunged forthwith into y<sup>e</sup> deepeit dungeon of hel. As for example, if blasphemies & fornications, & other vnruly behauiours, lewd & wicked practises, wrongful dealings, deceites & cruelties raigne in any place, & there be no end of them; let vs know y<sup>e</sup> when God giueth Sat<sup>s</sup> such libertie, as to continue such an outrageous disorder in all thinges, it is a signe y<sup>e</sup> he is angrie wth vs, & that we want his kingdom. Knowing this let vs be forrie, & walk in y<sup>e</sup> greater heedfulnesse, praying him to vse mercie towards vs, and with fatherly gentlenesse to correct that wickednesse of ours whereby we deserued to be rased and rooted out of the land of the liuing, euen out of hand, if God woulde

deale with vs according vnto our offences. Yee see in effect what wee haue to beate in minde concerning this place.

And now Moles addeth two Lawes, whereof the one tendeth to the fauoring of such as are new married: and the other serueth to barre them which lend monie, from being ouer cruel, and from being so greedy in taking of pawnes and gages, as to destroy their neighbors, and to take from them  $\bar{y}$  means wherby they might liue. Yee see in effect what the two poyntes be, which are contained here. Now as touching the first, there is no doubt, but Moses had an eye therein vnto the common profit of all. For at the first sight a man might finde it strange what the cause should be why he dispensed thus with new married folkes, that they should keepe themselves at home, that they should not be compelled to goe vnto warre, that they should haue none of those charges layde vpon them which might turne them from their familie. For to what end and purpose was this, but that God in commanding such an order by his seruant Moses, had an eye vnto that which might folow by the contrarie? For when a man taketh a wife it is good and requisite that he forme & fashion her, that is to say, that he teach and accustom her so to liue as they may agree both together all the time of their life. Now if a man take a woman to wife, and at the end of three dayes leaue her while the wife knoweth not yet the maners and conditions of her husband, and while the husband likewise is vnacquainted with the disposition of his wife it may be a cause that they shall not agree together all their lyfe long. And again we know what yong householders are, vntill they be by longer time inured to know by vse and experieñce, how to set their household in order. Now if a man be led away the first day, and forsake his wife; the yong woman not knowing what belongeth to the ordering of an house, and remaining alone may fall into many inconueniences. And though there were none other than this which we haue alleged; yet were it enough and too much, namely that the husband returning after some time shall bee as one vtterly vnacquainted with his wife, and the wife in lyke sorte shall bee as strange to him, which thing might be an occasion that they should neuer agree one with another. God then had respect vnto this: And therefore let vs not imagine that this Lawe was made for pleasures sake, to say that a man should sporte himselfe with his wife which hee hath taken. I graunt that Moses vseth this word: but that is because he would therein comprise all the profite which cometh by this meanes of the husbandes joyning and vniing of himselfe vnto his wife, wherby there groweth a conformitie of manners betwene them, so as the one is well known to the other, and they are brought to this point that they can beare each with other; but yet neuertheless God hath in this place an eye vnto the common profit and welfare of all.

Now it is very true that this law respecteth in such sort the policie and rule of government among the Israelites, that we are not bound thervnto: but yet for all that (as I haue declared afore) wee must gather some doctrine from that which God had ordayned for the people of olde time. We must euer haue an eye vnto the end which God ameth at, and from thence gather  $\bar{y}$  substance of the law which appertaineth vnto vs, and is belonging as common vnto vs together with the Iewes. Now in effect it is heere declared vnto vs, that men ought to auoyde all occasions which serue to estranging of the  $\bar{y}$  frō their wiues, & to the disordering of their house. We are already of our selues ouer frail & weake, & though no farther occasion be offered, wee see how many swaue aside from their duties, & are so ticklish  $\bar{y}$  they cannot holde themselves quiet & still in their vocation. But now if there be some other temptation &  $\bar{y}$  men wander wilfullie & trust to their own costancie, & presume vpon maruelous things in themselves, & in the meane time keepe not themselves vnder  $\bar{y}$  bridle of God: what other thing may fall out in  $\bar{y}$  end, but extreme confusioñ? Let vs therefore learne not to tempt God through ouer great boldnesse and presumption: but let euery one take heed he hold himselfe within his boundes, to  $\bar{y}$  end he may be the more inabled to discharge himself of his dutie. For euen whē we would vse all the meanes wee can possible to doe that well which God hath ordayned, yet our fleshe hath alwayes such whor boylings, that we are oftentimes as headstrong horses which are broken loose. We haue neede therefore to be held backe by diuers & sundry meanes. And therefore let vs looke vnto our selues as our Lord warneth vs. And againe on the other side we haue also to beare in minde that which Saint Paul declareth in the seuenth of the first to  $\bar{y}$  Corinthians, to wit,  $\bar{y}$  they which are married are intangled in many cares, the which according vnto rigour might be imputed for sinne, except God did vse such gentlenesse towards vs, yea, and that such fatherlie gentlenesse, as to wink at our faulrs: & this ought to be wel considered. For whē a man entreteth into marriage, if he think vpon  $\bar{y}$  multitude of troubles & incommodities which it hath, it will breede such a feare in him,  $\bar{y}$  hee will wish to withdrawe himselfe from it. And besides  $\bar{y}$ , the diuill hath indouored as much as is possible, to diffame marriage, to the intent men shoulde so become as brute beastes, in desiling themselves with fornication; yea & that vnder colour of auoyding  $\bar{y}$  bondage which in respect of marriage seemeth to be ouerhard & grieuous: as  $\bar{y}$  disciples also sayd: If it be so, it were good for a man not to touch a woman. Yea saith our Lord Iesus Christ, if so be hee were at his owne choyce. But now, least when we consider of  $\bar{y}$  incommodities & troubles which are in marriage, we should be wholly discouraged: let vs returne vnto  $\bar{y}$  which is declared vnto vs in this place. For it was a good thing  $\bar{y}$  the people of God, being set vpon, & assaulted, should go forth to warre to employ themselves in  $\bar{y}$  defence of the whole cuntry & bodie of their people, and also furnish our such other charges an offices as serued to maintaine  $\bar{y}$  Church of God. Now when God giueth vnto the which were new married, such a dispensatiō, as to beare with them in these things, hee sheweth in generall, that although they which are married cannot escape free, but that they must needs bee giuen ouer to many cares and carkings, and be inarled in many & sundrie incommodities, yet notwithstanding he beareth with them, and that of especial fauour, and that this he doth in the fauour of marriage. Therefore let the faithful comfort themselues, seeing that G O D hath pytie on them, and that although marriage bringeth with it such a nūber of troubles, wherby men seeme as it were to be held bound in this world, yet notwithstanding God for all this, doth not cast them off. And why? Because he hath ordayned marriage, and knowing y troubles it hath, he voutsafeth vs a remedie by forbearing and pardoning many faules which are in it.

But herewithall let vs also note, that this may not serue to rock vs asleepe, let not married folkes, vnder colour that God dealeth so gently and pitifully with them, behaue themselues so loosely as if all things were permitted them: but let them haue the wit to say: Go to: Had we neuer so small a care which might withhold vs from comming vnto God; yet should wee be to blame. But we see many ouer froward, we see in others much impatiencie, and many other things: againe we see much vanitie committed; insomuch that some man louing his wife too well, will exceede measure therein, & lykewise in his children, so vnruilie alwayes are our passions. If there be in vs but one smal vice, wee are already culpable before God: and if there be an infinite number, behold wee are then plunged as it were into a bottomlesse pit. And shall we then vnder y couert & cloke of marriage, selle our selues in our dreggs, & flatter our selues in our wicked doings? What reasō were in y? Nay rather let men quicken vp themselues, and know y the goodnesse of God serueth not to lead & allure them vnto wickednes: but contrariwise to make them to feele their faulces, & hauing felt them to returne vnto God, and to pray him y he wil more & more cut off y superfluities which are in our affections. Ye see the what we haue to beare in minde concerning this place, namely y the faithful haue wherewith to comfort theselues, seeing y God beareth with the as long as they liue in this world, and y albeit they cannot bee as angels to walke in all heavenly perfectnesse: they are not for all y reiected of God. For in the fauour of marriage which he hath ordayned, he vseth patience and gentleness in bearing w them. But on y contrary side also, seeing the infections wherw they are on all sides enclosed, they must not onely condōmne theselues, but sigh continually, & endeour to correct theselues, & to approach more nearer & nearer vnto God, & to vntold themselues out of y temptations, which are a let & hinderance vnto them. Ye see then what y doctrine is which we haue to gather from this lawe. Now it is certaine y God meant in this place to shew as in a looking glasse, y marriage, although it be in it selfe honorable, bringeth many incommodities with it, insomuch y a man is made more vnapt to apply himselfe freely vnto y which he ought, than he would be if he were not married. Not y this proceedeth fro y nature of marriage: for if our father Adam had remained in y integritie & perfectnes wherby he was first created, doubletife marriage, lyke as God gaue it for an ayde, had bin a perfect & angelical life. But because we are corrupted, & because we haue so many vices in vs as is pitie to behold, we turne y which was good, into euill: & that which God had ordayned for our glorie, wee turne oftentimes to our reproch and shame. That is y roote then, from whence all y incommodities which are in marriage proceede. And therefore to y intent wee accuse not God, who is the author thereof, and lay all y fault vpon him; let vs know that whatsoeuer a man may complayne of in marriage, is as it were accidentally, y is to say, proceedeth from elsewhere, than from marriage it selfe, to wit, from y corruption of sinne. Neuertheless we may see (as I haue already told you) and we may in this place behold as if y thing were paynted forth before our eyes, y if a man enter into marriage he entangleth him selfe in many things, which shall stay him from doing of his duetie. And y is the cause why Saint Paul also sayd, That if a man and woman could liue without it (considering how short a time we haue, at such time as our Lorde oppresseth his Church with so many afflictions, that we see nothing but miseries in the world) it were good to runne with all y hast we might here below, & not bee stayed or hindered by any meanes whatsoever from finishing our course. So then when we enter into marriage, let vs know y we are straight way so inarled, y wee cannot make such quicke speede as we should, to discharge our duetie: and let this caule vs to cal on God lo much the more, and to desire him to be mercifull vnto vs, and not to impute vnto vs any of all those offences which we dayly commit.

Moreover let vs enter also into this generall confession, that seeing we are so sinful as to murre every thing that is good, we ought to detest the sinne which dwelleth in vs, or rather which rayneth in vs, vntill our Lord haue transformed vs. For if we bee left in our first nature, what shall we be? Not onely we shall be cleane cōrary vnto y wil of God and his righteousness; but also whatsoever is in it selfe good, holy, and honorable, and which God had ordayned for our welfare, wee can not but turne and conuert it vnto our harme and hinderance. Whereof wee haue a notable example in this place.

But we are yet farther admonished, y although through the corruptio of sinne, we aler y which God had ordayned for our welfare, and turne it to euill, yet we may not for all y forsake and take our leaue of the good ordinances and decrees of God. And not to seeke any farther, let vs take marriage for an example in this case. We see (as I haue already told you) how many troubles and incommodities it hath, and that not alonely in respect of the body, so that when a man is married hee hath many hinderances which turne him now to one thing, and then to another, so as he is faine to carke and care how to nourishe his children, and to watch for his profite when he should sleepe: but also marriage bringeth with it more than this. For a man shall not be so free and at such libertie to employ himselfe in the seruice of God: and yet all this must not stay him from this calling. For they truly which stand in neede of marriage, must submit themselves vnto this order of God, and vse no excuse as many doe, and as we see lykewise what is happened among the Papistes, how the duell hath sharpened the venomous tongues of those hypocrites the Friars, and Monkes, and such lyke, who haue forbidden marriage vnder colour that there are these and these faulces in it. But all those things which are confusd and disorderd, let not but that marriage remaineth alwayes good and profitable for them which vse it well, although it drawe after it diuerse inconueniences, howbeit not of it selfe, but by reason of the sins of men, because we cannot nowe vse vnto our welfare this order which God hath ordaind, in such sort as is requisite, except wee reuerence marriage. And we see that the cause of these horrible confusions which are happened in the world is this, that men haue despised marriage, and that the duell hath wrought so farre as to make me trample that holy institution vnder foote, in so much that when euen the strictest varlets of all haue presumed on their abilitie of abstayning from it, and of liuing here as chaste a lyfe as the Angels of heauen: wee see suche vnriuelness in conuersation as ought to make euery hayre of our head stand on end. For if we would beholde nowadayes what the popish chasticite of the Priestes and Monkes, and of all the rest of this pestilent vermine is, wee shall finde it a bottomlesse pit and an infernall gulfe of all beastlynesse. But let vs on our side consider how to walke in the feare of God, and to keepe our selues vnder his bridle. For the doing whereof (as I haue tolde you) let vs haue our recourse vnto our calling and say: Whither vnto doth God call me? Thither must I follow him without making of any reply. There followeth in the second place the other lawe which forbiddeth a man to take the vpper or the neather millstone for a gage. When mention is made here of two millstones and then of the vppermost, it is allone as if our Lord sayd, that a man shall not rake both the millstones which serue to grinde, no nor one of them. For why? A man were as good take all, as one part. For there must be two millstones to grinde: I will leaue the lower, but he can doe nothing without a fellow. So then if I becaue a man of the profit of his rooles, what greater harme may I worke him? For he can no longer gaine his liuing. Now in deede expressly God speaketh in this place of millstones: but vnder one kinde he hath comprised the whole. As it is a common thing in the Lawe so to doe, and we haue already declared that this rule must be kept for a keye to open vnto vs the sense and meaning of many places. And in vertue deede the reason which Moses addeth, giueth a good and easie declaration of this place. For he saith, Thou shalt not pledge: that is to say, thou cuttest a poore mans throte, when thou takest fro him those necessarie tooles with which he getteth his liuing. Let vs therefore note in this place, that although it be here spoken of Millstones, yet we are generally warned yf if whē we lend monie we take a pawne for it, we must not becaue a man of those meanes by the which he getteth his liuing. As we see how the Farrouer or locksmith hath an anuel, a hammer, a pare of pinners, and other tooles: Now if a man take any of these things from him because he hath lent him mony; yee see how the poore man shall dy for hunger, and it had bin better that he had lent him nothing (for yf he had had some meanes to get his liuing by, & albeit he had pined away, yet he had gotten some small morsell of bread to eate though it could haue slaked but half his hunger) than so to becaue him of yf meanes which he hath to liue by. Now although a man take not away all his instruments from him; but leaue him his Anuel, & in the meane while keepeth fro him, his hammer and his pinners, and such lyke things, it is all one. And if he excuse himselfe and say: I haue but a part of them. No, but the other part will stand him in small stead, except he had the rest. If a man doe the lyke vnto any handicraftes man and man of occupation, wee know that all their renewens consist in getting their liuing by yf labor of their handes, they haue neither landes, nor quarter rents coming in. Now seeing that God hath put their liuing in their hand, that is to say, in their labor, if a man becaue the of these necessarie meanes by yf which they get their liuing, it is all one as if he had cut their throate; I say that their liuing, consisteth in their labor, not yf man by his trauaile can win any thing but through yf blessing of God: For wee must returne backe alwayes vnto this poynt: That God giueth rest & quietnesse vnto them whom he loueth. Whiles others rake great payne, goe late to bed, and rise early, eate browne bread, and drinke the water of tribulation, & yet profit nothing, but in stead of thriving, goe backe ward; yf childe of God prosper in all their dealings. It is then the only freebestowed blessing of God which nourisheth me, as we haue seene heretofore how Moses saith: Thou shalt not thinke in thine heart, that it is the trauel or labor of thine owne handes, which hath nourished and sustayned thee: but know thou that it is thy god which worketh with thee, & that except he looked vnto thee, thou shouldest be vnprouided of all things. Wee must (I say) resolute our selues thoroughly as touching this point. But withal, wee see how God hath an eye vnto the trauaile of men, in that when hee speaketh of their liuing, hee hath a respect vnto the order which he hath established: to wit, that when a man employeth himselfe vnto the trauell of his handes, he hath no detheis promise: I will blesse yf labour of thy handes, if thou do yf which belongeth vnto thy dutie. Therefore albeit yf we receive our food and nourishment fro the hand of God, yet hath he ordayned yf we should trauaile for it. Now is a mans trauaile take fro him? No, for then his life falleth to yf ground: & therefore it is an ouerwicked crueltie to constrainne poore men to deliuer in pawne their tooles wherewith they should serue their turne in their craft and occupation. So in effect our Lordes will is, that no man should exercise any crueltie vnder color of lending: whereby to set his feete vpon poore folkes throates, but y<sup>e</sup> we should rather aide and succour them, knowing y<sup>e</sup> their borrowing is for neede & necessitie. Now if one becaue a man of his lyfe vnder color of lending him a peece of mony, it were better that he should leaue him in that necessitie in which he found him, than so to take from him those meanes by the which he maintaineth his life. We see the that God would not that Iones should be lyned to snare poore men withall which are in necessitie; to which purpose men haue at all times vsed them, and nowadayes doe more than euer heretofore. For men haue no other deuises thā how to deceiue, to circumuent, to beguile, and to suck the bloud of poore men. They draw them dry not onely of their substance but of their bloud too, when they espy them to be in need and penurie. This (say I) is the fashion of men nowadayes. But for all that, let vs consider what the will of God is in this behalfe, to wit, that we must not onely vse no crueltie towards our neighbors vnder color of any lending vnto them: but also seeke to re-lieue the present neede of all those which are in necessitie, to the intent that they may alwayes goe forward and maintaine themselves in their estate.

Deut. 6.17.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better, yea in such wise as we may return vnto him, seeking nothing els but to abide alwayes vnder his obedience, and to cleaue vnto his word without swaruing from it in any wise: and that wee may so walke euery man in his vocation, as wee may testify thereby that wee haue God for our maister and father, and that we are of his familie, liuing according to the order which he hath commaunded vs: and that wee may liue in such wise one with another, as may be to the maintayning of loue and honestie among vs, and that such vprightnesse may raigne in vs, as wee haue not an eye vnto that which men permit vs, but looke euer at this marke, how we may serue one anothers turne in vpright brotherhoode, to the end we may bee confirmed alwayes more and more that God is our father, and that we may call vpon him, as such a one. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely vnto vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The Cxxxviii. Sermon, which is the third vpon the foure & twentieth Chapter.

7 If a man be found which hath stolen any of his brethren of the children of Israel, and he hath misused him or sold him: this thiefe shall die: and thou shalt put euill away from among you.

8 Take heede of the plague of leprosie, that thou marke it diligently, and doe according vnto all that which the Priestes the Leuites shall teach you, take heed yee doe as I haue commaunded them.

9 Remember what the Lord thy God did vnto Marie by the way, after that ye were come out of Egypt.

He first thing that God declareth in this place is, that if any stole away a man of Israel and solde him, the offence which he committed in this behalfe, was to be punished by death.

And heereby hee giueth vs to vnderstand how dearely hee loued that people which hee had chosen vnto himselfe. For we know how God appointeth punishmentes accordinglie as he esteemeth of the greatnes of the sinne which is committed. So then whereas hee punisheth that man by death which had stolen away his brother, thereby we see that the life of the children of Israel was precious vnto him. And no maner of thing. For if a father haue lost one of his children, especially if he be stolen from him, and he knoweth not what is become of him, wee know he would haue bin better contented to haue lost his goods, than his childe. Now seeing that God had adopted the stock of Abraham, he accounted those which descended from it, to be of his owne household, and named himselfe their father, and in very deed circumcision was a mark to separate y<sup>e</sup> people frō other nations. Therefore whosoever sold any one of the stocke of Abraham, he did wrong and iniurie not onely to the person it selfe, but also vnto God. Againe a man being solde vnto another people, was in daunger of being constrained by force to commit idolatrie. In deed he were better suffer death; than doe so: but lyke as many are fraile & weake in this case, so might they also bee seduced, and turned aside frō y<sup>e</sup> law, & from y<sup>e</sup> seruice of God: & therefore by this means ensued not onely y<sup>e</sup> destructiō of a mans body, but also of his soule. We see the now that this law was grounded on great reason. And morcouer we know likewise y<sup>e</sup> God had so redeemed this people, that they were called a royal priesthood. And therefore it this ho-

our shoulde be abolished, it were all one as if a man should rent in pieces the priuiledge which a prince had giuen: and like as Gods greater than mortall men, so such an outrage committed against his maiestie, were more heinous and intolerable. But we must nowe returne vnto our selues. For albe it there bee not nowadayes any certain people which God hath chosen, & shouled out from the rest of the worlde; yet are we come by succession into the roome and place of the Iewes. For God hath receiued vs into his Church, and we are at this day in the same degree of honour which the children of Abraham were in. Seeing it is so, he which stealeth away a man nowadayes, to cut him off from the Church of God, is in as great fault as he who in old time sold any one of the Israels. And although earthly iustice hath established no lawe against it, yet doth it not cease to be a grieuous sinne stil in the sight of God. Let vs therefore acknowledge the honor which God vouchsafeth vs, when he maketh vs of the number of his houhold, & taketh & alloweth vs for his childre. Now forasmuch as this is an inestimable benefit, we must endeavour to the utmost of our power to preferre and keep it: and y<sup>e</sup> not euery one for himselfe only; but for his neighbors also. Therefore when we see y<sup>e</sup> God hath assembled & gathered together any company of people to himselfe, let vs seeke to keepe them so together, as none of the<sup>m</sup> may go astray. And if we be a cause and occasion that y<sup>e</sup> congregation of God bee diminished, and y<sup>e</sup> hee which was sometime of it, be estranged from it by our meanes; we see what punishment y<sup>e</sup> lawe hath ordained. As touching y<sup>e</sup> outward policie and ciuill order, it remaineth not, yet neuertheles God hath declared y<sup>e</sup> such lawes shall not abide unpunished. For he wil acy<sup>e</sup> least haue as great regard vnto his house, as euery of vs woulde haue vnto our own houses. And therefore let vs learne by all meanes possible to keepe the<sup>m</sup> stil which are of Gods flock, and to stay men as much as we ca<sup>n</sup> from departing from y<sup>e</sup> same. Yea and we knowe how we be commanded not only to nourish the<sup>m</sup> which are already begotten the children of god, but also to do our indeuor to win the<sup>m</sup> which are strangers: what wickednes then were it to turne the<sup>m</sup> out, which are already receiued vnto y<sup>e</sup> church of God? I meane those which in very deede doe shew & declare the<sup>m</sup> selues to be y<sup>e</sup> children of god. For we know y<sup>e</sup> there is a regard to be had, y<sup>e</sup> al rag & rag be not receiued into y<sup>e</sup> church. For there are many which seeke after Christ to haue their bodily ease, & there are many deceivers: and if there be no discretion in receiuing the<sup>m</sup> in, it were altogether a mocking of god, as we haue too many examples in this case. Therefore we haue need of wisdom in this beha<sup>u</sup>r. Neuertheles if we thoro<sup>w</sup>e a cruelty, or wickednes, doe diminish the church of god, we must render an account thereof, and y<sup>e</sup> not as for some small fault, but for so weighty a crime as we see God accounteth it, and as the paine which he ordained vnder the law of Moses, declareth it to be.

Yet notwithstanding wee finde many who for their owne profites sake doe in this sort discuer their neighbors & cut the<sup>m</sup> off from y<sup>e</sup> Church of God. We see what marchandise of soules is made by them which seeke (as it seemeth) nothing els but to rent y<sup>e</sup> world: and many are not contented to steale their neighbours away, but they steale themselves too. For al they who for their tēporal & transitory profite, do turne aside and withdraw themselves from y<sup>e</sup> seruice of God, commit they not I beseech you this theft wherof I now speake?

20 O this were too heauy a burde for me to beare. Now he beareth himself in hand y<sup>e</sup> he is so excused. And thus me<sup>n</sup> steale the<sup>m</sup> selues away, both fro<sup>m</sup> god & from his church. They make marchandise & sale of their own soules, as it were for a melle of potage, as it is laid of Esau that is to say, for earthly foode they sel themselves & become the bondslaves of satan. And to we see y<sup>e</sup> this lawe is nowadayes very ill kept; and therefore we ought so much y<sup>e</sup> more to note the intent & meaning of God, to the end y<sup>e</sup> euery man after that god hath vouchsafed him y<sup>e</sup> grace to gather him into the number of his people, may keep himself among them: and y<sup>e</sup> better to maintaine y<sup>e</sup> libertie which wee haue, let vs consider (as S. Paul saith) howe dearely it hath cost the son of God: let vs not enter againe into the bondage of satan and of sin, seeing we are freed thence by the bloude of the only sonne of God; but let vs walke according vnto that priuiledge which god hath giuen vnto vs, and hold fast the possession thereof as long as we lue. And when erie of vs shall haue had such a regarde of himselfe, let vs doe the like towards all our brethren, thāt they whom God hath ioyned vnto vs depart not out of his house: but let vs so employ our paines as euery of vs may keepe his estate, that none bee diminished, that none wander nor go astray. And farther let vs be afraid to make marchandise of those soules which haue beene redeemed by our Lord Iesus Christ with so deare a price, and let vs not seeke after our owne commoditie in that beha<sup>u</sup>r, as we see howe retchlesly many giue themselves ouer in this point, and so they may finde the farther fare, they care not one whit whether they remaine in the Church of God or no. Euen in this citie without seeking any farther, we haue examples hereof, namely y<sup>e</sup> men haue bin sold for redy mony: in so much y<sup>e</sup> for y<sup>e</sup> pleasure of a drunkard or I know not of who, one hath bin sold as an open marchandise, to y<sup>e</sup> same wickednes: such leaudnes hath bin seen heere at Geneva. But let vs not take this example for a two or three: but let vs know y<sup>e</sup> God meit in this place to giue a general rule and instruction, that wee ought asmuch as lieth in vs to seeke and procure y<sup>e</sup> they which are of the body of the Church may remaine therein

Gen. 25. 38.

Rom. 6. 17.
1. Cor. 7. 33.

euen vnto y<sup>e</sup> end. Ye see in effect what we haue to beare in mind. And if the liberty of y<sup>e</sup> bodies was held so deare of God in y<sup>e</sup> time of y<sup>e</sup> lawe, let vs at this day make far greater account of y<sup>e</sup> freedome which our soules haue obtained, by the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Let vs come now vnto y<sup>e</sup> second law which is mentioned in this place. It is said: That men shall diligently iudge of the leprosie, and take heede thereof, observing all the things which were commanded in the lawe: & that the priests of the stock of Leui shall be iudges, & that the people shall stand so the iudgements which they shall giue: which they shall giue I say, nor as they list themselues, but as God had made a declaration thereof, as we may see in Leuiticus from y<sup>e</sup> thirteenth chapter to y<sup>e</sup> fifteenth, where it is fully treated of. Moses in this place speaketh of it as by y<sup>e</sup> way, and saith that they shall keepe al y<sup>e</sup> order. And for more ample confirmation he addeth: Remember what G O D did vnto Marie by the way when ye came out of Egypt. For because Marie & Aaron murmured against their brother Moses for his wifes sake who was an Acthiopian; they bare themselues in hand that they ought to be aduanced in as high a degree as hee: in somuch that Mary became so arrogant & presumptuous: that shee would needs be a Propheticke in equall degree with Moses. But God punisheth her for such presumption: Aarons born withal although he had in like sort deserved to be chastised. Mary therefore was stricken with the leprosie, and was shut vp by y<sup>e</sup> space of sevendayes. And there she had bin like a rotten carrion all her life long but that Moses prayed for her, & her sin was pardoned. Neuertheless he addeth there: If her father had spit in her face, she ought to haue hidde her self for hauing offended him: & therefore she must depart (saith he) from among y<sup>e</sup> people, that men may know the offence which she hath committed, and at y<sup>e</sup> end of seuen dayes let her returne into y<sup>e</sup> campe. Now God declareth by this example, that such as were stricken with this disease, were shut vp.

Now let vs first of al note, y<sup>e</sup> the leprosie whereof Moses speaketh in this place, and which y<sup>e</sup> law treateth of, is not y<sup>e</sup> which we call y<sup>e</sup> leproly nowa days: but a far diuerser thing from it. For this leprosie was not only in y<sup>e</sup> bodies of men & womē, but also in houses. And although we find y<sup>e</sup> other countries & nations were touched sometimes wth this disease, as we see how Naaman y<sup>e</sup> Syrian was, yet was it neuertheless as a particular disease belonging only to y<sup>e</sup> Iewes: and y<sup>e</sup> was a notable vengeance of God vpon them, to declare his anger & wrath by sending forth this leprosie as a visible signe & tokē therof. Ye see then what we haue to beare in mind in y<sup>e</sup> first place. And y<sup>e</sup> verily which among y<sup>e</sup> Papists men call y<sup>e</sup> disease of S. Mayn or y<sup>e</sup> scurfe, was a kind of this leprosie. There were indeed many sort of this disease, as a man may see by y<sup>e</sup> place which I haue alledged. And I speak no more of them in this place, than is expedient for the vnderstanding of the text, and not to make therof any great lesson. But yet neuertheless it is needefull for vs to obserue y<sup>e</sup> which I haue touched as it shall be anon more fully declared. Now then we see what the leprosie was: to wit, a certaine skurfe or sometimes a spot in the body which had no outward appearance of skurfe vpon it: but was a certaine hid and inward disease, as it were a certaine scab within the flesh, wherein appeared some whitenes. Seeing that y<sup>e</sup> leprosie was after y<sup>e</sup> sort, we see nowe that God had a regard of the instructing of his people, when hee would haue them which were touched with this disease, set apart from the rest. And why: Euen to y<sup>e</sup> end y<sup>e</sup> men should be in greater feare of y<sup>e</sup> punishment, which was knownen to proceede from the hand of God. If this chastisement had slippt away without any account made therof, it could not haue profited so much. God therefore to y<sup>e</sup> intent hee might make this chastisement more notorious, straitly commaunded y<sup>e</sup> hee which was stricken with the leprosie, should be shut vp, and y<sup>e</sup> he should serue for a looking glasse for others to look in, y<sup>e</sup> they might bee afraide at y<sup>e</sup> sight of it & say, Alas, see ye this poore wretch which is stricken wth the leprosie: And what signe is it? It is god y<sup>e</sup> hath wrought it, his had hath done it; Alas, euery one of vs hath deserved asmuch, and therefore let vs not tempe y<sup>e</sup> patience of our God: hee spare vs, let vs for our part cease to prouoke him to anger. Ye see then y<sup>e</sup> admonition & warning which was giuen vnto all mē whē they saw a man thus shut vp. And this order was obserued euen as farre as vnto y<sup>e</sup> king himself, as we haue an example thereof in Ozias, who being not content with y<sup>e</sup> kingdom, would be a priest & vsurpe y<sup>e</sup> spirituall regiment of the Church, and therefore God strake him with y<sup>e</sup> leprosie, & deposed him from his royal dignity, and he was according vnto y<sup>e</sup> law shut vp al y<sup>e</sup> time of his life. There was yet a seconde reason of this shutting vp. For this disease might be contagious. And therefore Gods wil was that y<sup>e</sup> infection therof should be removed from y<sup>e</sup> people, to y<sup>e</sup> intent y<sup>e</sup> al should not be infected with it.

But y<sup>e</sup> principall cause was, to the end y<sup>e</sup> people might be put in mind, y<sup>e</sup> they ought to be removed from vncleanesse, and from all manner of defilements. And y<sup>e</sup> is the cause also why y<sup>e</sup> iudging of the leprosie was giuen vnto y<sup>e</sup> priests, who were of y<sup>e</sup> stocke of Leuy. God appointed not the phisitions nor surgeons iudges, but he wold haue the priests take a notice of y<sup>e</sup> leprosie. And if any were spotted therewth, they had authority to reiect them: & if any were healed therof, he was likewise received by thē. For albeit y<sup>e</sup> this disease was hardly & seldom cured, yer was it not incurable. Therefore if so be y<sup>e</sup> any were healed, the priests were iudges of it, & when they which were healed presented themselues, & had done certain solemnities which were required in y<sup>e</sup> behalfe, they came and offered their present in the temple, acknowledging what a singular benefite God had bestowed on them. For when a man was healed of that disease, it was very behououfull y<sup>e</sup> he should make a solemne acknowledgment of so great a benefite, and say: Lorde thou hast raised mee as it were from the deade: for I was a wretched and miserable carrion; thou hast thrust mee out of all companie, and nowe behold Lorde thou hast made me whole and sound, thou hast restored mee vnto my former estate: therefore I aknowledge Lorde, that I haue receiued a kinde of resurrection, considering what weakenes & fraillie was in me. It was (I say) behoouful that such a solemne acknowledgement should be made. But (as I haue tolde you) the priestes were Iudges of this disease. And why? Because it appertained vnto the ceremonies of the lawe.

Now here we haue to gather a good instruction, that is, that first although this order of excluding those from our companie which are stricken with any euil disease be not obserued nowadays, yet notwithstanding wee must not cease to haue an eye vnto the hand of God, that we may fare y better by al y chastisements which he layeth vpon men; neither must any of vs waite till he feele the blowes himself, but he must make his profite by y correctiōs which our Lord sheweth vs afar off. And therefore when we see any of our neighbors afflicted, let vs take a view of our selues, and of our own faults, and let vs iudge our selues before y God iudge vs. And therupon being forie for our sins, let vs hasten to draw our selues out of them, and not stay vntill God visite vs in the like maner. This is the thing which wee haue to note as touching y first point. And for asmuch as we see that God ment to waken y Lewes to y intent they should the better know how to benefite themselves by this chastisement of y leprosie, let vs nowadays in all diseases, not onely in this or that sicknes, but in all afflictions which God fendeth vs, know y it is all one as if he gaue vs a warning not to sleepe in our sins, and not to abuse his patience. Lo what we haue to beare in mind.

Now as touching y ceremony it hath bin very fondly & foolishly abused in y Popedome, & the abuse therof rageth in y synagoge yet stil to this day. First, for that hearing y name of leprosie, they supposed it was y scurie, and so haue taken the one for the other. And therupon what haue they done? Forsooth their officers must iudge of this disease, whether any be touched w it or no. And by what knowledge? They sende to the barbers and to the phisicians, and when they haue iudged therof, then they themselves afterward giue their verdit. And by what right? Because god ordained y priests to be Iudges of y leprosie. That is true. But y priests, whom God orned were of y stocke of Lewie. Now since y coming of our Lord Iesus Christ, this Priestthoode hath bene transferred vnto him as the Apostle saith in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. I know the Papists are so shameles y they stick not to mock God openly, in saying that it came from Lewie vnto the Pope. But the Apostle expressly declarcth, y it belongeth vnto him, who by a solemne oth was appointed according vnto the order of Melchisedech. And because our lord Iesus Christ being now risen from the deade dieth no more; the priestthood likewise must remaine vnto him in his own person, & he hath no successour. The Papists therefore roo Christ of his dignity, when they snatch in such wise vnto themselves, that which is belonging vnto him. And moreover let vs note (as I haue already touched) y they play the beasts ouergroily in this point: for god spake of the leprosie which was a disease which he sent vpon the people of Israel, and they transfer it to the scurie, a thing far different from it. But for al this, they haue not left to reare vp an other tyranny: for they say y this is a ceremonial lawe: I grant it. Therefore it importeth a figure. Al this is true. We must come then now vnto the tueth & substance which is correspondent therunto. They say that sinne is the leprosie. Well let all this be granted vnto them. It must be purged therefore (say they) & the priests must be Iudges of it. Yea but let them enter into the place of Iesus Christ, and then shall they be taken for Iudges; but vntill that Iesus Christ be depofed from his priestly dignity, which God his father gaue him, it appertaineth not vnto any liuing creature in the whole worlde. Wee must therefore conclude, that the Papists are treacherous traitours in that they beare vs in hande that they are succeeded in the roome of Iesus Christ, to iudge the spirituall leprosie. And hereupon they haue ordained the law of Christ. That is the very ground of their confession or shrift. For there is not one worde for it in the holy scripture: but they vse this litle caulling: Sinne is the leprosie. & the priests must be Iudges of it, but we are priests, therefore the iudging is ours. But wee haue already shewed that by vsurping the priestthood, they are theeues and treacherous traitours, and that they list themselves vp against the sonne of God. Take that for one note. But let vs proceede farther. A man cannot iudge (say they) without hee knowe the cause; and the cause cannot be known, without there bee a confession of the sinne; and therefore it followeth that euery one is bound to confesse his sinnes once a yeare. For al are stamed with this spirituall leprosie, because al are sinners. As touching that which they say, that no mā can iudge except he know the cause, it is true; but he must not iudge by coniectures & vpon vncertainty, as they doe. For I pray you, iudge they vpon knowledge, when they cannot skill to discern whether they which confesse themselves in their cares dissemble, with them or speak the truth? Be hold, a man cometh to confession, and who knoweth what his minde or will is: Who knoweth any of these things, whether he mocke the priest or no; whether he speakeen any thing by constraint, whether he keepe any thing close for shame that he hath of it? What knowe they of all these things? And therefore these Popish Priestes cannot iudge vpon knowledge of the cause. Again it is well known how great clerks they be: insomuch that when a thing is told them; they can hardly discern either the thing it selfe or the end or qualitie thereof. And though they coule, yet were not that ynough: Men know what maner of Iudges & how competent they be. And in very deede they say well, that in confession there must be some degree of knowledge: but a little after they say, that it skilleth not greatly whether there be any or no; for authority abideth still, albeit that knowledge bee wanting: they gain say themselves manifestly, for first they say that there must be a degree of knowledge, and afterwarde they say that it is not so necessarie, but that they may forebear it. And a mans eye may bee witness, how they discharge themselves herein. It followeth then that they cannot have knowledge of the cause, at leastwise such lawfull knowledge, as may suffice them to giue their verdict and iudgement thereupon. But to speake in a word, these abuses of theirs are ouer vaine and childish, when they seek after such foolish reasons as to say: We are Iudges: for wee are the successeours of the priests of the law. But this succession (as I haue tolde you) appertaineth to none but vnto our Lord Iesus Christ. And in verie deed the priesthood of Leuie was ordayned to continue vntill his appearance in this world. And for that cause

Gen. 14. 30.

Abraham also who was the father of the church, payed tythes to him in the person of Melchisedech. For when he offered the tenthes to Melchisedech, hee offered them as it were vnto his superiour, But Leuy was yet in the loynes of Abraham (as the Apostle saith): whereby we see that the priesthood of Leuie was inferior vnto the priesthood of Iesus Christ, or rather, was nothing in comparison of it, & that the priesthood of Melchisedech must returne againe in truth.

But now hauing declared this so grosse abuse which reigneth in the Popedome, let vs returne vnto the right and pure instruction which God ment to giue vnto vs in this lawe. Wee haue already briefly declared how hee meant to warne the faithfull, that they ought to purge away all manner of defilements from among them. Wee haue not at this day the outward ceremony: but the substance and trueth thereof remaineth in his full force. Let vs therefore looke diligently vnto our selues, and remoue from vs all vnclannesse, to the intent we be not stained with it: For thereunto had God respect in this Lawe. And to this ende serueth excommunication nowadays: for God wil haue some discipline in his Church. And this is not ordained by mē: but y<sup>e</sup> holy Ghost hath deliuered a rule for it. If wee haue this order, it is grounded on God, we haue the truth of the ceremoniall Lawe. And wee haue no neede to seek farther after the pelting trash of the Papistes, whereby they make themselves a laughingstocke to the worlde: but farther besides this order of excommunication, wee are warned in general not to intermedle our selues with any filthie defilements: for we shall soone be stained by them. We see what frailtie is in vs, so that although euery of vs keepe good watch & ward, yet can we not liue in the worlde among so many defilementes and corruptions; but wee shall draw some spotting from them: and the iniquities which raigne, are as deadly poysons to infect vs, except we withdraw our selues far from such filthines, that wee be not stayned by them. And that is the cause why it is purposely repeated in this place, Take heede, looke narrowly vnto it, obserue it diligently. It seemeth that many words are bestowed vpon a thing of no great importance. But God tendeth vnto this ende which wee haue saide, that men should not thorow their little heede taking, be as it were limed with the defilements of this worlde. And by this outward order, he ment to inure the to a more diligent watching euery one ouer himselfe. Let vs therefore giue diligent heede heereunto, and when we perceiue that we are in daunger of being deprauid and corrupted by any mans company, let vs flie farre from it: for albeit I goe not and welter in wickednesse with him; yet shall I haue ynough and too much too in my selfe. And what a thing were it for me to tempt God? I see well that I cannot be but the worfe by this or by that mans company, and yet for all that, I will not shun them; but I will goe welter and wallow in the mire with them: and what a notable wickednesse were this? Am not I worthe to be infected with their filthines and vnclannesse? Yes verily. And therefore let vs in general knowe, that all wicked examples, and all offences, are to be removed and raked out of y<sup>e</sup> Church of God, & that y<sup>e</sup> discipline which God hath ordained, & which we see that the Apostles vsed, must be practised, that is, excommunication must raigne & beare rule. And moreover let euery of vs in his owne behalfe, take heede, wee haunt no wicked company, but (as S. Paul warneth vs) obserue and note them which are stained with any euil blot, and withdraw our selues from them: that it may not onely put them to greater shame, but also, y<sup>e</sup> the infection breake not out vpon al, & that the mischief being of it selfe contagious, goe not so far, as to infect them who before were pure and cleare, & so fall on the whole flocke of God. And this is it which we haue to beare in mind in this place.

And now Moses for a more ample confirmation (as wee haue already touched) alleageth in this place y<sup>e</sup> example of his sister. And hereby we are done to vnderstand, that he spareth not his own stocke & kindred. For it was to his owne infamy & reproch, that his sister had bin thus chastised of God. But what? Both in this & in al other things, we see, that he wold not couer y<sup>e</sup> shame & filthines of his own lynage. For why? Hee was a true and faithful seruant of god. And therefore hee always condemmeth wickednes with great liberty, although some shame redoued thereby, both to himselfe, & also to his parentage. Therefore in this place he setteth forth his owne sister for an example. And hereby wee are warned, not to bee won to beare with wickednes in fauour either of bloud, or of kindred; as wee are accustomed wont to do. For we had rather haue the wickednes encrease, than to grieue any of our kinsmen or friends. And therof it commeth y<sup>e</sup> all right is peruerted, and y<sup>e</sup> the truth is turned into a lie, because y<sup>e</sup> wickednes is borne withall. But wee haue in this place an example to y<sup>e</sup> contrary: that is, y<sup>e</sup> Moses to serue God y<sup>e</sup> more faithfully, hath no respect of persons, he hath no eye to any worldly considerations: in so much that euen when his own sister might serue for y<sup>e</sup> instruction of y<sup>e</sup> people, he spareth her not. Let this be noted for one point.

the tribes, when euery man sought to obtaine  $\bar{y}$  priesthood, was no such straunge or notorious a thing as is this, when his owne borne brother riseth against him on the one side, and his sister on the other, and murmure against him: whereby we may see that there was no compact made for the aduancing of the dignity of his owne house: and therefore it serued the better to authorise the calling of Moses. And in very deed God shewed that it was he who conducted and defended him. That is to be noted for one point.

Againe, what a mercifull dealing was it, that  $\bar{y}$  children of Aaron were suffered to succede still in the priesthood? For although Moses was much more great and excellent than Aaron was (as it is declared in the 12. Chapt. of  $\bar{y}$  booke of numbers): yet his children were of the common order of  $\bar{y}$  Leuites which serued  $\bar{y}$  high priest, and were kept far from that dignity. And what was  $\bar{y}$  reason hereof? If Moses had promoted his owne children, it would haue bin saide by and by, that he had brought this to passe through his craftie wilnes, & that he had pretended  $\bar{y}$  name of God onely for to aduance  $\bar{y}$  dignitie and honor of his owne house: but in  $\bar{y}$  his own children are in this wise displaced, and  $\bar{y}$  children of Aaron are preferred: wee see it is Gods worke, and that it proceedeth from his gouernment, so as the mouth of wicked mē must needs be stopped, and that all must confesse  $\bar{y}$  the law and whatsoever it containeth, is not forged nor counterfaiored by men, or suttely deuised: but that God is the author thereof. Astouching Moses it is said in that place of Numbers: If I speake vnto my seruants the Prophets, I will speake vnto them by dreames or by visions: because that Aaron & Mary said: What dwelleth not  $\bar{y}$  spirit of god in vs as well as in Moses? And must he alonely beare rule? And are we no bodie? Well (saith God) if you were  $\bar{y}$  greatest Prophets that euer were, yet keep I one measure towards my Prophets. I speake vnto them by dreames & by visions. But I speake vnto Moses as vnto my familiar friend; I speake vnto him as a man would speake vnto his fellow & companion. And so Moses was aduanced to an higher degree, and God meane to magnifie his grace & fauour in  $\bar{y}$  man. Therefore wee see how he disgraced both Mary and Aarō, because they murmured in that sort: but yet for all that, yee see that  $\bar{y}$  children of Aaron succeeded in the priesthood, although their father was vnworthy of  $\bar{y}$  honor, and deserued rather to be degraded, than to enjoy it. What befell to Core, Dathan & Abiram? The earth swallowed them vp al iue. And why? Because of their murmuring. And had not Aarō committed  $\bar{y}$  like fault? And yet notwithstanding God pardoneth him  $\bar{y}$  sinne. And when we heare that the children of Elie were deposed from the priesthood, and  $\bar{y}$  the dignitie thereof was bestowed vpon Samuel, because they behaued theselues so euilly in their office:  $\bar{y}$  is also a like example. And why then doth not God  $\bar{y}$  like vnto  $\bar{y}$  stocke of Aaron? Let vs (as I tolde you) acknowledge in this case a meruallous mercy of God. Yea, and againe when it seemeth good vnto him, he punisheth faults rigorously. If he will pardon them:

it is at his choice. Therefore we must not binde God to any Law, to haue him to punish sins according vnto our lusting: he will doe it when hee shall find it good. And moreouer if it please him to vse mercy, such sins as are committed shall be wiped out; at leastwise they shall not be so hardly nor so grieuouly punished. That is to be noted for one point. But let vs now returne to apply  $\bar{y}$  example of  $\bar{y}$  present matter which is treated, to  $\bar{y}$  end we may know  $\bar{y}$  intent & meaning of god. Remember (saith he) what was done vnto Mary by  $\bar{y}$  way when ye came out of Epypt, as if he had said, my minde is that who so is stricken with the leprosie, shall be separated and removed from the people, to the intent hee may serue for a looking glasse for others, that they which see him may be put in mind to say: see here a plague which God hath sent, behold a testimony  $\bar{y}$  God is Iudge. Seeing this is his appointment, let vs fare  $\bar{y}$  better by such examples. So we see  $\bar{y}$  which I declared more plainly afore, to wit, that God meane  $\bar{y}$  this withdrawing and ieiuing of such as were leprous, shold serue for a common instruction & lesson vnto  $\bar{y}$  rest of  $\bar{y}$  people, to occasion them to walke in their duties in all feare & heedfulness. And here first of al Marie was taught to humble her selfe before God. For if he would not knowe her fault & be ashamed of it, & confes it, he deserued to be cleane cut off without any remission. And God had begun to work so violent a correction, that she seemed but a carrion & rottennes, and was changed in a moment in such sort, that a man would thinke he could not but fall in pieces through such an infectious filth & rottennes. And therefore it stood her in hand to knowe her own case. And hereby we are warned,  $\bar{y}$  when any of vs are visited by  $\bar{y}$  hand of God, it is high time to humble our selues, and to know  $\bar{y}$  it is all one, as if God did spit in our face. When a father spitteth in his childes face, it is a signe (as it is saide there)  $\bar{y}$  he detesteth him. Now if so be we be afflicted by  $\bar{y}$  hand of God, we haue great occasion to looke vnto our selues, & to be beaten down & to feele our own filthines, & not to feele it onely in hart: but also frankly to confes it before men, to  $\bar{y}$  end  $\bar{y}$  God may be glorified. That is one thing which we haue to do according to  $\bar{y}$  exhortation which we haue in this place. And secondly let vs be willing to serue other for an example. If when we haue offended God, he chaistise vs; let vs be an instruction vnto others, and let vs beare it patiently, and not be grieved with it, if so be that all may turne vnto the glorie of God and the welfare of our neighbors. Let vs be contented with it, as good reason is we shold be. For we may not be more priuiledged than the sister of Moses, & if we be rubbed on the gall (as we say) we may not grue at it, seeing that Moses spared not his own sister. For when God taketh on him the office of a Iudge, and giueth men commission to denounce his wrath or other like things by his worde, it is good reason that they shoulde discharge their duties in that behalfe. As for them which thinke thus; We our selues shall be hindered thereby, let them know  $\bar{y}$  it shall profite them nothing to seeke to auoid it in that wise: for if they breake the ordinance of God, they shall be confounded. Therefore sith we see so notable an example in the person of Marie, let vs knowe that God ment to warne vs, that we ought not to take it in euill part to be chastised at his hand; but rather to know our fautes and to be forie for them, and thereupon to endeour that the punishment which we haue suffered, may serue all others for an example.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiesty of our good God with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to make vs to feele them better than we haue done, & that we may endeour wth all our might, not only to keepe our selues in that holy vnion which he hath made with vs, but also to win them which are yet estranged, and to confirme those which are already called with vs into his Church; and that therewithal we may not suffer the name of our God to be vnhalowed, but endeour to remoue our selues from all filches and defilementes, that seeing it hath pleased him to sanctifie vs for himselfe, we may remaine temples of his holy spirite, and sacred vessels to be applied vnto any vse wherunto he hath appointed vs, that is, that his righteousnes may shine in vs, so as wee may neuer desire any other thing than to frame our selues in all points vnto the obeying of his holy lawe. That it will please him to graunt this grace not onely vnto vs but also vnto all people and Nations of &c.

10 When thou lendest any thing vnto thy neighbour, thou shalt not enter into thy house to take his pledge.

11 But thou shalt abide without, and the man which borroweth of thee, shall bring the pledge out of the doores vnto thee.

12 And if the man be poore, thou shalt not sleepe with his pledge:

12 But shalt restore him the pledge when the sunne goeth downe, that he may sleepe in his raiment and blesse thee, and it shall be righteousnesse vnto thee before the Lord thy God.

We must call to minde in this place, the sentence of the Prophet which our Lorde Iesus Christ also allegeth: Mercie is more worth than sacrifices.

For if we think to pay God by offering him this or that which we haue spoyled from our neighbours, he will detest and abhorre both vs and our offerings also. For why? God will not change his nature according vnto our lust: and there is nothing more properly belonging vnto him than kindnesse and goodnesse. For hee indeede is the very fountaine and roote of it. And therefore seeing it is so, must he not either transfigure himselfe, or detest vs, when hee shall see vs as cruell as wilde beastes, so as euery of vs endeoureth nought else but to deuour the substance and goods of his brother? Yes verelic. For he cannot like of cruelty as long as he abideth like vnto himselfe. Let vs therefore diligently note, that except wee be pitifull, except wee haue compassion on them which stande in neede of our aide to succour them, except we vse gentlenes and humanity towards our brethren, we can haue no access vnto our God, but all the offerings we can present him withall, shall stinke in his sight, and he will refuse them. And that is the cause why the Prophet expressly saith: That mercie is better than all the sacrifices in the worlde. True it is indeede that God setteth more by his owne honour than hee doeth by the life of men: as reason good hee shoulde fo.

But here the case standeth, to know whether we serue God truly or hypocritically. For if I loue God, doubtlesse I will declare this loue of mine towards them which beare his ymage: and wee must haue recourse vnto that which saint Iohn saiet: That if when we dwel with men and liue together with them, wee beare them no loue, is it not plaine mockerie to protest that wee loue G O D, whome wee see not? Therefore all such as vaunt themselues, that they loue God, and yet are so ful of crueltye that they will spoile poore folkes of whatsoeuer they can possible catch from them, without all pitie or compassion; are no better than hypocrites & shamelesse lyers. And so wee see the reason of this sentence, and why God, albeit hee priseth his honour highly, hath saide notwithstanding, that he will not esteeme so much of all the sacrifices which men make vnto him: as he will do of the mercie which men shewe one vnto another. For indeede our almesdeedes are those sweete smelling sacrifices, which God accepteth: as the Apostle saeth in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. And heereupon is that lawe of God which wee haue nowe hearde, grounded; wher it is saide: That if wee lende monie vnto a poore man, wee must not goe and ransacke his house to finde out a pledge for our owne liking, but that hee must bring that which hee hath. And then we may keepe the pledge without doing of him any wrong. And why lo? For God permitteth vs so to doe: If not, hee will haue them to carie backe againe the gage which which the poore man brought, as for example: if it be his bed whereon hee sleepe, or his couerlet, or his coate, or his gowne, so that hee remaineth naked & vnclodeth, God will not haue vs to keepe such a pledge. For when wee haue confessed that wee ought in deepe to be pittfull, and that wee are farre from being of the number of the children of God if we vie no brotherly loue one towards another: when we haue said all this; yet wee know not what the thing meaneth, when we should come vnto the practise of it. For if any stande in neede of our helpe; wee haue forgotten this generall doctrine: Wee are alwayes good diuines to speake in the ayre. If a man set vs down a doctrine which presseth vs not, euery man is readie to yeeld his consent thereunto, but the practise thereof sheweth that we bee verie loath to accorde vnto it. And although wee confesse that God hath wel spoken; yet wee will not put that in practise which is tolde vs, if it preiudice our gayne and commoditie; and therefore GOD is faine to specifie things vnto vs more particularly. When hee hath once declared that there is nothing more acceptable vnto him, than the pitie which wee haue on our neighbours to succour and relieue them, he must point forth some speciall kindes thereof with his finger; and when he hath taught vs to bee mercifull, hee must shew vs how and in what maner, & so condemne our crueltie, which we (if it were possible) would excuse. As for example, if this so speciall declaration should not be made, the sentence of the Prophet would be receiued without any gainesaying, That mercie is better than sacrifices: but none for all that will come to this point, & to this reason, that a man must not take such a pledge of a poore man, as he shall account necessarie for his owne vse. For men will say: Is this any crueltie? He commeth to borrow of mee, and I may deny him if I list; but if I doe him such a pleasure as to lend him my money: I wil haue some assurance for it. And so a mā wil not acknowledge it to be crueltie to take any mans coat or couering to gage. It will be alwayes sayde, Why? I may lawfully doe it. For I lende him my money, and it may be gaynfull vnto him: I leaue him the whole profite of it, I desire but to saue my selfe harmlesse, and not to loose the principall, deceiue him not of a farthing: I take no vsurie for my money, nor any thing at all: and why then should I be condemned? Thus men would excuse themselves. But what? God will bee the Iudge of our dealings. Yee see then the cause (as I haue told you) why God presseth vs to a speciall poynt: because the generall doctrine is, ouer coldly taken of vs, and would not leade vs so farre as were requisite. Let vs therefore heare in minde that which is here declared. First it is sayde: That a man shall not goe and ranfacke his neighbours house to take a pledge from thence, when hee would lende him a peece of money. Nowe the cause why this is spoken, is not onely (as some haue thought) for that it were a putting of poore men to shame, to goe and see howe naked their whole house is: God had no regarde of any such thing: but hee meant rather to brydle the couetous desires of the riche. For wee knowe howe couetous our eyes are to drawe things away, and euery man is verie sharpe sighted for his owne profite. If I enter into an house, I will haue an eye by and by on all the fayrest things: and when I haue requested to haue this and that corner shewed mee; if I see any thing which liketh mee, I beginne to say: This is good household stuffe; yea this will stande mee in steede. I will haue it (say I); and the poore man cannot tell what to answer: for hee is at my mercie. If hee denie it; O (say I) there is no dealing with you: goe your wayes: it is no pitie to helpe you. And thus a poore man shall bee helde as it were vpon the racke. Yee see then the meaning of this lawe, when our Lorde forbad a man to enter into his neighbours house to ranfacke it for a pledge. For why? He which entrench cannot iudge what the poore man, which desireth to bee succoured might best spare: but lucre (as I told you) blindeth vs; and when wee bee once forepossessed with such desire, we iudge no longer what is rightfull, because euery of vs will conclude: O I must aske this. And why? Because it will bee good for mee. Wee see then now the reason of this first part.

But if a man bee at his owne free choyce to bring what pledge hee will, so as hee bee pressed: hee may then withdrawe himselfe aside & beware that hee bee not trodden vnder foote, nor pinched beyonde measure: hee may beethinke himselfe what is to bee done, hee may aduise himselfe by his owne counsaile, there is no man to control him, or to disturbe the stiffe of his house: and then a man may take the pledge to assure his money. Nowe because there may bee sometimes such vrgent necessitie, that a man will some time shift him selfe to his shirte to haue somewhat to eate: our Lorde prouideth farther in this case to remedie it, and therefore hee commaundeth the pledge to bee restored againe, when a man shall perceiue, that a poore man cannot misse it. For in such a case a man must bee touched with greater compassion, for two causes: the one is, because that when a man putteth himselfe beside his bedding and his clothing, it is easie to iudge and to gather, that hee is come to greate extremitie, and to the farthest degree of pouertie. That is one poynt to bee noted. The other is in considering of this poynt, what difference there is, whether a man dye for hunger or for colde. This is but to change his torment: this is not to succour him.

I lende a man money, and hee buyeth bread therewith to eate, and in the meane time, hee is frosen to death through mee, and doe I releeue him then? So then wee ought in such a case to bee moued with compassion, or else there is no humanitie in vs. So then for this cause GOD will haue the pledge restored againe, when wee see that the thing wee take is necessarie for the preseruing of a mans life: as is his cote, his doublet, his bedde, his couering, or such like things.

I graunt that according vnto the rigour of ciuill iustice, this is not obserued: and God also hath not giuen it in this place for a ciuill order: but hee meane to prescribe a rule for euery man to followe of his owne free will. As many things are permitted vs before men, of which notwithstanding wee shal bee accountable before God, although wee escape the handes of earthly Iudges. There is no man will let mee from vsing the vtmost rigour I can, towards him which oweth mee any thing: and yet when I see hee is behinde hande with mee, and that there is no guile nor malice in him, if I for that do cause him to bee cast into prison, if I rid him of al that he hath, if I leaue and forsake him, doubtles I do him wrong in the sight of God. Nowe ciuill iustice can set downe no other order, but that all must be done as I will haue it. Yea, but (as it hath bene declared heretofore) when we shal haue bene excused before men, it is not to be sayde therefore, that we shal not bee culpable before God. For the lawe requireth a farre other perfection than earthly and common iustice doeth.

So then let vs note, that although it was lawfull for the Iewes as touching earthly iustice, to take any gage they listed; yet doeth God condemne it for intollerable crueltie. And if this were in the time of the lawe; how much greater reason is there for the practising of it nowadayes, when wee haue more occasion of exercising such humanitie and gentlenes one towards another? For we must returne vnto this principle & ground, that Gods will is that wee should resemble him, because hee hath adopted vs for his children, and shewed himselfe to bee our father. God hath in deede alwayes shewed himselfe such a one: but at this day in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, he hath displayed and shewn forth the bowels of his mercie, as the scripture speaketh: for it cannot sufficiently expresse the infinit bountie and goodnes, which God hath shewed vnto vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ. Sith it is so that God hath made vs to feele more than euer heretofore his inestimable loue, so much the more ought we to enforce our selues on our side, to followe him, & to conforme our selues vnto his example. Therefore if wee be so cruell as to let them dye for want & neede, which desire and seeke after our helpe: or if wee spoyle them of that which they cannot forbeare and liue; there is so much the lesse excuse for vs, and our sinne is double and farre more haynous nowadayes. And therefore let vs knowe that God spake not onely vnto the Iewes for the time of the lawe, but that this rule must abide in full force, vntill the ende of the worlde: and that as this sentence was alleaged by our Lorde Iesus Christ: That mercie is better than sacrifice: to shewe that it appertaineth vnto the Christian Church, so all the kindes of mercie which are dependant vpon it, are belonging vnto vs: and wee must exercise mercie, not according vnto our owne fancie, but as God sheweth vs, according to the declaration thereof which wee haue in this place. For what else is this lawe which Moses hath here set downe in writing, but an exposition of that sentence which the Prophet hath more generally set downe? Yee see then in effect what we haue to beare in minde.

And hereby wee are taught likewise not to ouer greue such as for their needes doe come to seeke releefe at our handes. Euery man must haue an eye vnto his owne abilitie what hee may doe, and not trample his neighbour beyonde measure vnder foote. The very thing wherein wee ought to holde our selues straight, is that euery of vs hauing an eye to his owne abilitie, must doe his indouour to the vttermost without sparing of himselfe. For wee must exact of our selues that which our Lorde hath commaunded vs, and wee must strayne our selues in that behalf to the vttermost of our power. Wee must succour those whom wee see in necessitie, and not tarrie vntill men constrayne vs thereunto. For (as I tolde you) God will peradventure lay the brydle on our necke as touching ciuill order, howbeit that shalbee but to trye our charitie the better. If men restraine vs from being cruell, and from vsing such outrageous libertie as otherwise we woulde vse: it is a signe that wee beare no reuerence vnto God, and that the seruice which we yeeld vnto him is not of good will, but of compulsion. But if men let vs alone, so as wee may doe the worst wee can, in tormenting and vexing poore needie wretches, and yet wee are lead through a courteous and gentle affection, not onely not to vex and harme them beyonde al measure, but to deale indifferently with them, and (in fewe wordes) not to deale otherwise with them than we woulde haue others to deale with vs in the like case: our so dooing and our succouring of them, when no man driues vs thereunto, is a signe that there is sounde charitie in vs, and y in louing God wee do also shew and prooue in deede that wee are his children, and that wee liue in good brotherhood, and mutuall agreement with our neighbours.

Nowe to the intent wee shoulde be the easier led hereunto, Moses alleageth in this place two reasons the better to persuade vs. First he sayeth: That hee vnto whom wee shall restore and bring the pledge againe, shall blesse vs. And secondly hee addeth: That it shalbee righteousnesse vnto vs before the Lorde our God. Nowe these two reasons are not superfluous, considering what holdfastes we are, and how euery one wil safely prouide for himselfe. We think that the whole earth will sayle vs; and when wee lende, it is with an heauie heart: when the money is once escaped out of our handes, wee thinke our selues so much impayred, and wee fetch deepe sighes for it. God therefore seeing men so giuen vnto their owne lucre, and that they haue no free-hearted liberalitie, or at least wise are not so much enclined vnto it as were requisite, vseth first a persuasion and sayeth: That the poore shall blesse vs, that is to say, hee shall pray for vs.

Nowe I knowe, that the wealthie, and these greate deuourers, and these seagulfes which seeke seeke nought else but to swallow vp all, will make none account of this blessing. Thus he (say they) he is but a poore beggarly knaue, and what care I whether he pray for mee or no. See I pray you what these despisers of God, & these heathenish folke say. But let vs note wel, that it is not without cause that God declareth in this place, that it is a singular benefit to haue a poore man pray for vs. For if a poore man crye (as it is sayde) hee shall bee heard. Hee needeth neither man of lawe, nor Proctour to handle his cause before God with any great Rhetorique. If a poore man bee vniuited bothe downe by mee, and I haue wrought him any oppression or violence, or haue spoyled him of that which was his, or if I haue greued and troubled him in any sorte, although hee vtter not a worde, but onely sigheth to himselfe: yet may not I thinke that I shall escape the hande of G O D. There shall neede neither witnessnes nor writings, nor great inequest to cast mee; for one alonely sigh of the poore man, shall kinde such a fire of Gods vengeance vpon mee, as shall neuer bee quenched. For the playninges which the poore make against them which haue molested them, are heard of God; they pearce through the cloudes, and come into heauen.

Also on the contrarie side when a poore man hauing receiued releefe of any man, shall say: Blessed bee hee which tooke pitie on mee. This worde is as if an Angell of heauen had made suite for him. Nowe seeing God sayeth it is so, let vs not thinke that it is in wayne, or by way of mockerie. And therefore let vs learne to esteeme more than wee are wont to doe, of the prayers which the poore make that are releued and succoured by vs. For although we beare our selues in hand that they are nothing, yet hath God declared of what force they are, & commendeth them vnto vs in this place for a singular thing.

Nowe this ought to teache vs, not to despise the poore, nor to disdain to heare them, or to giue them a good looke: for God saveth that hee heareth them, and that they are such as haue readiest access vnto him. They are heard both in their complaintes and in their prayers and petitions. For God doeth more for them by an hundredth part than wee which are but wormes of the earth, will vouchsafe to doe. The thing then which wee haue to beare in mynde is, that if a poore man come and desire helpe of vs, and wee thinke wee shall but loose that which we bestowe vpon him, because hee is not of abilitie to recompence vs, & that although hee should liue an hundred yeres after his death, yet he should not requite vs the good turne and pleasure hee receiued of vs. We ought to bethinke our selues thus: Well: in dede as touching the worlde he cannot benefit mee, he can neither coole me nor heat me: but before God such a blessing as proceedeth from him, shall bee heard. If wee consider this: is not the recompence which wee shall haue in the kingdom, better than all that which might be bestowed vpon vs in this frayle and transitory life? Yes verily, if wee haue any faith; if we haue any assurance of the heauenly life, & dare not altogether beastly bestowd with this present worlde.

And although a poore man become vnthankfull, yet shall not wee therefore faile to be blessed of God. For the heate which hee shall haue receiued by vs, when wee haue giuen him his coate or his couering, shall blese vs. And if hee bee so wicked as to forget it, as many are, with whom it is grown as it were vnto a common custome, that when they are releued they will not vouchsafe to acknowledge the good which is done vnto them: but rather there is nowadayes such pride in some of them that they will thinke a man is the more bounde vnto them for that hee hath done them all the pleasure in the worlde; in so much that some will say, what hath he done vnto mee, but hee was bounde to doe more? And what is this in respect of all that which hee oweth mee? Such is the vnthankfulness which yett shall see some poore folke to vse. But, as I haue sayde; although they bee dumbe and speake not a worde: yet the good turne which wee haue done them shall serue vs for a blessing before God. As on the contrarie side men are wont to saye: When a man shall holde his peace and suffer him selfe to pyne away in his miserie, and yet men will not vouchsafe to take pitie on him, let him remaine quiet and patient in his aduersitie as long as he will. (Though I say such exmples are wondrous rare: for wee shall heare nothing but complaints and murmurings although there bee no greate cause why.) But let vs graunt that some man were so quiet, that hee will not vtter one word, though hee bee not releued at his neede: Shall wee for all that bee quit before God, although there bee no crye made against vs, to endure vs? No, no: for wee see what is sayde concerning Abel. After hee was murdered, did hee crye for vengeance at Gods handes? No, but his bloude cryed. And therefore the necessitie which a poore man endureth, cryeth lowde & shrill ynough in Gods eares, so that hee needeth not to make any complaint and to saye: one hath greued mee in this or in that sorte: but if hee dye for colde because wee keepe his coate or his couering from him, there shall neede no other thing to condemne vs before God. So then let vs learne, that albeit the poore discharge their ductie verie ill, and that beeing succoured they blese vs not; wee may not therefore cease to doe that which G O D commandeth vs, knowing that the almes which proceedeth from vs, shall serue vs well ynough for a blessing, although they whom we haue releued holde their peace. As on the contrary side, wee must bee afrayde least the cueltie which wee vse may accuse vs before G O D, although no man doe open his mouth to speake.

There is also in this place an instruction for the poore: that because God hath made them subiect to that state that they must be sayne to desire succour and helpe of their neighbours, they must bee so much the more humble, & lay aside the arrogancie and presumption which is in many of them. Some when they aske an almes, thinke they require nothing but their own: insomuch that to their seeing they haue wrong if they bee made to wayte for it, and that men preuent not their necessitie: they woulde that a man shoulde put off his cappe and desire them to receiue an almes: there at some which bee full of this presumption. But God contrarily declarcth, that hee will haue him which receiueth a good turne, to acknowledge it, and to blesse him by whome hee is releued. And in vertie deede, if a man bee holpen in his neede, and hee forget it, and seeketh not at leastwise to God to requite it, when himselfe according to the worlde hath no meanes to do it, hee is a theefe: and pretende hee neuer so fairely, that a man graue him such a thing: yet because hee abuseth the liberalitie which was vsed towards him, hee is a theefe. A man helpeth mee, and on what condition? God bindeth mee to pray for the prosperitie of him which hath in such wise succoured mee, and to protest at least, that I am bounde vnto him: and when I am able to recompence him I must do it. But if I cannot, I must haue God for my witness, that I acknowledge my selfe bound vnto him for his curtesie: if I doe it not, verily it is theft, as I told you. So then as the rich are taught in this place, and as God sheweth them that they ought to be contented when they whome they haue holpen do blesse them: so on the other side, the poore are taught to knowe, that if they borrowe, or haue any thing giuen them, it is to the intent they shoulde bee moued to pray for their neighbors, so: so much as they haue succoured and releued them, that charitie may by that meanes bee maintained. For the true bond thereof is, that they which haue of themselves no abilitie shold knowe that God calleth them vnto himselfe, & that they ought to doe that which belongeth to them to doe, namely, resort vnto prayer, because they are able to doe no other thing. Yee see then in effect what wee haue to beare in minde. And so let vs note that when wee can discharge our duties towards our neighbours no otherwise, wee must haue recourse vnto that remedie which is set downe here, that is, to pray.

It followeth afterwarde: that it shalbee reputed vnto vs for righteousnesse before God, & this is according vnto that which I haue to note already, namely, that mercie is better than sacrifice. For Moses meant to declare that if wee vse not such humanitie towards our neighbors, wee may well beare a countenance of seruing God, wee may haue great appearance of vertue in the sight of men, wee may well bee honoured and esteemed of them: but yet neuertheless: God will condemne vs for wicked men, when wee bee so cruell. Briefely Moses hath in this place declared, that there is no righteousnesse acceptable before God, except there bee such humanitie in vs, that wee liue so with our neighbours as euery of vs enforce himselfe to succour the poore and needie to the utmost of his power. Yee see then the intent and meaning of Moses when hee sayeth, That is shalbee reputed vnto vs for righteousnesse before God. And this is a worde which ought well to be weyed. For wee see howe men thinke to discharge their duties notwithstanding that they bee set altogether on pilling and spoyling. And in what order trowe yee? Looke mee among the Papists: if a man haue erected a chappell, if hee haue taken order that so many Masses shalbee sung, or if hee haue done some such like things; then hath hee his hands cleane; or at leastwise thinke them to be cleane: and yet in the meane while, extortion, deceite, and other lewde and wicked practises haue their full sway with him, and no pitie hath any place in his heart. Nowe, the man which shall thewe such a faire appearance shalbee accounted a iust and holy person. But yee see howe God in the meane while pronounceth the cleane contrarie, that all this is but doung and filthinesse in his sight, and that there is no righteousnesse where there is no humanitie and gentleness. When a man hath no compassion on his neighbors, when hee tormenteth them, when hee troubleth them, when hee spoyleth them, when hee hath no pitie nor mercie with him, whatsoeuer hee is able to doe besides, is but abominable before God: hee reiecteth all besides, and will none of it, except a man be so kindehearted as to take pitie of them which are in neede, and to releue their necessitie. Beholde (I say) in what sort wee ought to fare the better by this place. For (as I haue said) men woulde alwayes thinke to discharge their duties towards God and yet giue no almes.

Wee see also as touching almes giuing, that there is in many men much hypocrisie and no little raffines: in so much that men neuer deale vprightly with God in that behalfe. What is the cause why our Lorde Iesus Christ forbiddeh men to blowe the trumpets, and to make such greate and open shewes when they giue their almes, but because many are ledde with ambition, and when they deale their doales, there must bee a greate pompe of it at their gate? Such as haue pilled and polled all their life long, and haue done nothing else but eaten and deuoured the poore, thinke to burie their finnes and to wipe them cleane out, by bestowing a peece of money at their decesse. For why? They beare the eyes of men thereby: and they beare themselves in hande that they are able to deceiue God too. But they abuse them selues too grossely. So then it standeth vs in hande the more diligently to note this sentence, wherein wee are taught, that if without all vanitie of shewe, wee haue pittie on them which seeke for refuge at our hands, & helpe them without grieuing them at all: it shalbee reckoned vnto vs for righteousnesse. And before whom? Before the Lorde our God. We are in this place summoned before y<sup>e</sup> heauenly throne, to y<sup>e</sup> intent y<sup>e</sup> we seeke not for our reward before men. For y<sup>e</sup> also is an other thing where-

Matt. 6. 3.

our Lord Iesus leadeth vs when he saith that we must not blowe with the trumpet when we giue our almes; but that wee must rather hide our selues; and not let our lefthand knowe what our right hand doeth; nor be desirous of many witnesses by whom wee may vaunt our selues: And in verie deepe if it suffice vs nor that God liketh of vs, and that hee accepteth the seruice which wee doe vnto him in bestowing of our almes, we seeke for our payment here below: and therefore we are then recompenced when men praise vs and say: O this man is a great giuer of almes: O hee dischargeh his dutie faithfully in this behalfe. If we haue once gotten such a report, & that the same do please vs, verily wee haue our rewarde. Let vs not thinke that God will set it any more in his booke of account: for so should wee bee twice payed; I say if wee seeke through ambition to bee seene of all men. For although when wee giue our almes, wee may sometimes make it knowne: yet neuertheless wee must take heede that wee be not ledde away with a vayne desire, to bee esteemed of in this worlde: but whatsoeuer wee giue, let vs conuice it as it were into the bosome of God. And forasmuch as the good which wee haue done, shalbe received and esteemed of him: let vs seeke no other thing but that euery one bee edified thereby, & that euery one for his parte enforce himselfe to relieue the necessitie of his neighbours. But howe euer the worlde go, seeing it is God vnto whome wee ought to lende the almes which we bestowe vpon a poore man, and that he receiueh it, this consideration ought so to rauish vs, that wee shoulde not desire to leane vnto the worlde, nor to any of the faire praises which we may receiue, nor to the reputation which wee may get by it. God sayeth, that when wee giue vnto a poore man, wee lende vnto him himselfe. Beholde heere a manner of speach which might seeme strange at the first sight, to say, that wee lende vnto God. But yet neuertheless he vseth this manner of speache, and that not without cause, and sayeth that hee is well able to pay vs vsurie and gaime for our money, so as wee neede not feare that wee shall loose any thing by our long tarriance for it, for hee wil recompence vs to the vtmost. Seeing that God hath once declared that hee becommeth detter vnto vs, and that hee putteth all those Items into his bookes of accounts, as though hee had borrowed them at our handes: I pray you are not wee ouerblockish if wee for all that seeke for praye here belowe and hang wholly vpon it? Nowe therefore let vs learne to fare the better by that which is sayde here: namely, That is shalbe accounted for righteousness vnto vs before God. It is in effect all one as if Moses had sayde: Deceiue not your selues by thinking to please God after the common order and fashion of men, who make many faire shewes of diuers things: they will needes offer sacrifices, they will come vnto the temple, they will set a good countenance on all things, yea, they will make men beleue that they haue all the vertues in the worlde, & that nothing is wanting in them: but you are deceiued if that you thinke to discharge your dutie towards God by such meanes. For there is no righteousness in you which pleaseth God, and which hee liketh of, except you bee so gentle and kinde hearted as to haue pitie on the poore, and to releene them in their neede: that is to be noted for one poynt. Againe, for the other hee sayeth thus: Go to, you are of opinion that all is lost which you giue vnto a poore man; and that because hee hath not wherewith to recompence you, or because hee is vnthankfull, as wee see many are. But holde your selues contented with this, that before God it shalbe accounted vnto you for righteousness: feare you not seeing that God accepteth that which you offer vnto him. Ceasse to regarde men. This ought to suffice you: Yea, put the case that one render vnto you euil for the good which ye haue done, yet notwithstanding your God will not reiect your prayers and requestes; but will acknowledge that wherein you haue serued him. And because hee maketh a tryall of your charitie by this meanes, and will knowe howe you loue him by your helping of those which hee offereth vnto you in his owne name: if you receiue them which flye vnto you for succour: Let it suffice you that God accepteth both of you and of that which you haue bestowed on him which sought vnto you. That is in effect the thing which wee haue to beare in minde in this place.

But here a man may demaund a question, & aske what it meaneth that Moses sayeth a mans almes shalbe accounted vnto him for righteousness? for it seemeth therefore that our selues obayne righteousness before God, and that we deserue rewarde by our good workes. And this were against the chiefe and principall article of our saluation, where it is sayde, That wee are iustified by faith. And what else importeth this worde Faith, but that wee are accepted of God for his owne merites sake, without bringing any merite or desert of our owne? If wee bee iustified by faith, why doeth Moses say that wee are iustified by our workes, as by our almes deedes? Let vs note that when the scripture speaketh in this wise, it presupposeth that God hath alreadie receiued vs so to mercie, that hee pardoneth vs all our sinnes: yea, and that albeit there bee some imperfection in our workes, hee regardeth it not, but accepteth that which wee offer vnto him, as though it were worthe to bee accepted. But forasmuch as this matter cannot bee handled at large as nowe: therefore let vs note, that where as it is sayde that faith was reckoned vnto Abraham for righteousness: it is to giue vs to vnderstande, that men when they come before God, are all of them to bee condemned: yea, the most perfectest of them. For if a man will seeke for vertue and holinesse in the worlde, it may bee founde in the person of Abraham: for hee is as excellent a man as euer was: but yet if GOD would haue iudged him with rigour, he might haue condemned him with all the rest. For what is there in Abraham to make God to bee beholding vnto him? So then wee are all confirmed in our felues. And therefore there is no other remedie left vs, but to beleue in the free promises which hee hath made vnto vs, embracing his mercie and fatherly loue, & hanging thereon the assurance of our saluation. The cause (say I) why we are iustified by faith; is that in our woorkes there is no righteousnesse which may answer for vs before God; but wee are all to be condemned. But nowe God hath so receiued vs with this condition that hee forgiveth vs all our sinnes; and that not onely for a day, but for all the time of our life: not that wee shoulde sinned vnder colour that God will be mercifull vnto vs (let vs take heede of that) but because we are frayle and weake, God will alwayes continue his goodnesse towards vs. And farther when wee doe any good, there is yet some euill enen in that good which wee doe. For wee neuer giue any almes with such perfectnes as were requisite; but God may alwayes finde some fault or other in it. It is with our woorkes as men vse to say of wine, that there is still some fault or other in it: It is good wine will one say, but it hath taken winde; it is too sharpe, it is trustie, or there is I know not what in it; it is turned: and so the wine is nothing woorth. Euen so is it with our woorkes, there is alwayes some spotte or other in them: so that God shall haue iust cause to reiect them. Seeing it is so, wee had neede to be borne withall at his hande, as a chylde is borne withall by his father. And in verie deede hee hath made vs such an expresse promise by his Prophet Malachie, That hee will spare vs euen as a father spareth his chylde, who perceiuing his chylde to be willing to doe that which hee commaundeth him, although hee doe not his worke so perfectly as were requisite hee shoulde, wil not deale rigorously with him, if so be hee goe about it with a willing and cheerefull mynde. So then yec see why it is sayde that wee are iustified by faith.

But whereas it is sayde on the contrary side, that our woorkes shalbee reckoned vnto vs for righteousnesse; it is because God accepteth them. And why? Is it because they are worthe to be accepted, or for that they haue any merite in them? No. But because of the councant and agreement which hee hath made with vs: that seeing wee are members of our Lorde Iesus Christ, hee beareth with vs, hee pardoneth vs our sinnes; and accepteth that which wee offer vnto him: although it be woorth nothing, yet is it ynough that hee accepteth of it. According vnto this reason, it is sayde in this place, that the almesdeedes which wee doe for Gods sake, shalbee accepted at his hande for righteousnesse. And this letteth not but that wee be iustified alonely by faith: for when righteousnesse is referred vnto his fountaine, from whence proceedeth it? From the free mercie of God in that hee forgiveth vs our sinnes. Nowe, sith it is grounded vpon that; wee must not imagine that there is any contradiction in these places. And therefore let vs briefly note, that when our Lorde sayth, that the almes which wee bestowe shalbee reckoned to vs for righteousnesse; it is to encourage vs the more, to the intent wee shoulde not feare that eyther our payne or our money is lost, when wee haue relieued the necessitie of the poore. And when wee haue this lesson, we will not come and laye the foundation of our saluation vpon our woorkes: but wee will alwayes buylde the assurance of our saluation on the onely mercie of God, and vpon the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ; by whose sacrifice wee are reconciled, and through whose obedience all our sinnes and iniquities are done away. This (saye I) is the meanes to assure vs of our saluation. And thus when wee haue settled our trust and confidence in the onely mercie and goodnesse of God, wee will haue no mynde to stande vpon our woorkes: but it will suffice vs that being accepted by the free mercie of God without any merite or deseruable worthinesse of our woorkes, hee will giue vs will, strength, and power to serue him, to serue him I say, not after our owne fantasie, but accordingly as hee commaundeth vs.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to take them away, and therewithall so to resourme vs by his holy spirite, as our whole iudicour may bee to please him, and to obey his holy will, as hee hath declared it vnto vs in his lawe. And because we cannot come vnto such perfection as were requisite wee shoulde; pray wee him to reache vs out his hande alwayes to supplye our wantes, and to strengthen our infirmities, vntil hee hath cleane ridde vs of them. And so let vs saye, Almighty God & heauenly father, &c.

Mal. 3. 17.
Psal. 103. 13

On

On Munday the x. of February, 1556.

The CXL. Sermon which is the fifth upon the foure and twentieth Chapter.

14 Thou shalt not defraude the hired seruaunt which is needie and poore, neither of thy brethren, nor of the straunger which is in thy lande within thy gates.

15 Thou shalt giue him his hyre for his day, before the sunne goeth downe: for he is poore, and therewith sustaineth he his life. Least he crie against thee vnto the Lorde, and it be sinne vnto thee.

16 The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children die for the fathers, but euery man shall be put to death for his own sinne.

17 Thou shalt not wrest the right of the straunger, nor of the fatherlesse: neither shalt thou take the widowes rayment to pledge.

18 But thou shalt remember that thou wast a seruaunt in Egypt, and that the Lorde thy God deliuered thee thence. Therefore I commaunde thee to doe this thing.

If there were not great wickednes and crueltie in men, it were needles to set downe anie such law as is here contained, to wit, That we withhold not from a poore man the wages which he hath earned.

Gen. 3. 19.

For we knowe that it is as it were his blood, according as it is written: In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eare thy breade. Therefore when a man bestoweth himselfe in our seruice, we ought at leaste wise to giue him that wherewithall he is sustained and nourtished. And therefore I tolde you that if we had but one droppe of kindnes in vs, we needed not to be taught this doctrine. For nature teacheth vs what is right and indifferent. Let vs therefore conclude when we reade y<sup>e</sup> which is written here, that we are accused before God, of beeing as brute beastes towards our neighbours. For God would suffer vs to followe on our owne course, if he sawe that euery of vs did discharge himselfe of his duetie. But forasmuch as men are so peruerse and wicked, that the rich seeke nothing but to deeuie the poore, & to deuour their sustentance & the labor of their hands; it was needefull that he should prouide some remedie against them. And this is the way for vs to fare the better by that which appertaineth to the ordering of our life. Oftentimes when we reade of any admonition in the holy scripture, we are of opinion that it is superfluous. For why? We haue no consideration of the cause which moued God to command this or that, to wit, that forasmuch as he seeth y<sup>e</sup> vices which are lurking in vs, he meaneth to correct them. Wee must therefore examine ourselues, and that will teach vs, that God exhorteth vs not in vaine to do that which is our duetie. For albeit we know well y<sup>e</sup> now what men say vnto vs, and euery of vs can confesse that the things which are sayd are true: yet is it not ynough for vs to haue the reasonableness and rightfulness of y<sup>e</sup> thing proued vnto vs, vnlesse wee be also informed to followe that which we knowe to be iust and acceptable vnto God.

Nowe whereas it is sayde that a man shall not withhold the hyre of a poore man, it is all one as if God in generall did thewe, that men ought to deale vprightly, & y<sup>e</sup> all kinde of curtsie with those which are poore, and employ themselves to doe vs seruice. And hee speaketh expressly of the poore, because there is no pitie in this case towards the rich man: for if we owe him anie thing, he may tarrie for it, he is not so hastie to haue his monney payde him from day to day, a man that not be so soudainly pressed to giue him his payment. In deede we ought not to tarry til we be plucked by the eares, to pay that which we owe. That is alwaies to be condemned: and we excuse ourselues vaine, if we say: this man is aforehande, he hath no great neede: I may therefore withhold that which is his. But I speake of the precise houre of payment, when a man is contented that I shall deferre the payment of my dette from this day vntil to motow. If I offer to pay him, he will answer me, I shall haue it time ynough. And why? He knoweth that I am readie to paye him any day: and as for himselfe hee hath no such hast but hee can well staye. But a poore man hauing trauailled the whole day, hath nothing to eate but what he getteth by his labor: what crueltie then were it if I (when I haue had a mans sweat, and labour) will for all that withhold: from him his dayes hyre? And therefore this reason is expressly added: for he sustaineth his soule therewith, or he eateth his soule thereby. For y<sup>e</sup> word which Mose vseth may be so expounded: that is, that a poore man hath an eye alwayes vnto his labour. Like as the rich man which is well furnished with al plentie, and hath his garners and his sellars fully, retheth himselfe thereon: so a poore man which hath neither reuenewes nor inheritaunce turneth his soule, that is to say, his heart vnto that which he maketh reckening to get: and sayth, wel, I haue trauailed, I shall haue at leastwise as much as wil finde mee to day: to morrowe I will returne againe to my labour, and I will get more towards my meate and drinke. The poore folke haue their minds set vpon that not that we must haue such an eye to our owne trauaile and labour, as if it were that alone whereby wee are sustained, and not rather the blessing of God: for we haue seene what God hath sayde to the contrarie in the eighth chapter of this booke: namely that we must take heede that wee darken not the grace and fauour of God by perswading ourselues that we haue done this or that. Men therefore must attribute nothing vnto themselves. Howebeit, Moses in this place hath meant no other thing, but that the meanes whereby poore folke are sustained in their trauaile, all their goods, rents, and landes is the labour of their handes. Seeing it is so that they haue no farther abundance, and that God hath as it were locked them vp in such necessitie, is it reason that a man should deprime them of the fruite of their labour. If one spoyle a mans corne field, if hee mowe downe the grasse of his medowe, or if hee make an haucke of all the whole worlde will cry out vpon him for a murderer: And yet it is a more haicous crime to haue deceiued a poore man of the labour of his handes. For he hath (as I tolde you) no other landes nor inheritaunce: and besides that, he spareth neither his labor, nor his bloud to get his living. This reason therefore ought to wey well wich vs in this case of rendering hie vnto them which haue serued vs.

And let vs note by the way, that God meant here to commaund generally all maner of kinde-nesse towards poore folke. For if I constrain a poore man to labour for me, and I will pay him but by halves; doubles I defraude him of his labour. If I covenant with one to serue me; well [sayth he] you shall pay me thus much for my dayes worke: but in the ende I eate his hyre so short, that the poore man after he hath done all hee was able, shall not haue wherewith to feede himselfe. For why? I wil see: This man here must needes labour, he hath not else whereton to liue, and hee must needes passe through my handes, therefore I will haue him for what I list. After that maner do the rich behaue themselves often times in this behalfe, they espie some occasions or other, to the intent they may cut off the one halfe of the poore mans wages, when he knoweth not what to set himselfe about. The poore folke offer themselves to labour, they desire but to get their living if they could tell where. Hereupon ye shall haue a rich man say: this fellowe is out of money and out of worke, I may hire him now for a morrell of bread. For he must yeelde vnto mee spyte of his teeth, I will giue him but halfe wages, and hee shall be glad and fain of that: therefore when we vse such rigour, although we haue not withheld their hyre: yet is it a point of crueltie, and we haue defrauded the poore: and this cloke of paying the money the same day, wil stande vs in no steede before God. For it is to be known whether the poore man be contented or no. When a rich man hath wares to sell and one comes vnto him for them, he will say, you shall not haue them for any lesse: And why? His wares diminish not in his shoppe. But if there be a poore man which liueth frō hand to mouth, and hath neither pennie nor halfe pennie in his purse, hee shall be forced to sel his ware for nought, if one buy them at that price, and knoweth the necessitie which the poore man is driuen vnto, he is a manifest oppressour: and we can skill to say in comunon proverbe: It is a holding of our foote vpon a poore mans throat: it is a kinde of robbrie. We haue skill (I say) to speake thus by them which buy such penie worthes of the that are in neede, and are so farre pinched, that they can be at no other choyce but to doe what they will haue them. Let vs note well then, that God in this place not onely commaundeth vs to pay them without driuing off from day to day, which haue laboured or taken paines for vs: but also would haue vs to haue a dewe regarde of euerie mans neede, and that when we let a poore man a worke about our businesse, wee should pay him his dayes hyre: yea and that euery man should set a price of his owne wares, so as if we come to driue a bargain, the seller should not be faine to say to vs, make what price you your selfe list: And againe, that when a poore man hath trauailed for vs, [wee should not deale so vnconscionably] as to make no further account of him than to haue the fruit of his labour: but rather enter in to iust tryal with ourselues, whether if we were in his case which pineth away & hath no other meanes to sustain himselfe but this, we ourselues would be contented to be so handled. We would haue men to vse gentlenessse towards vs and relieue and succour vs: let vs therefore do the like or else we shall be accused before God. For it is sayde, This is shalbe sinne vnto vs when a poore man shall so crie out against vs. And yet for all this wee heare euerie day the cries and clamours which the poore eate not in lamentable wise to make, and thinke we that God is deafe all this while, & that he heareth not their complaintes? I grant that the poore in deede are sometimes vnthankfull and spitefull, so as there is no dealing with them, and they would as it were rake vnto themselves other mens goods; and when they are requested to lend their hande to some worke, they would haue a double and treble recompence, & they will haue great wages. Ye shall see some so stoue and presumptuous, that they will not bestowe paines in any thing, except they be greatly intreated: and yet they are so lasie, that they will scarcely put forth one hande to doe their worke aright: and for all this there is such a doe to please them, that they will haue their full payment, yea and double the price of their dayes worke. This is to be seene. But yet for all that, there are many ( as I tolde you ) which are pinched . And therefore their cries must needs ascende vp into heauen: and let vs not imagine that we shalbe founde guiltlesse before God, For whereas it is sayd that it shalbe sin vnto vs, ic is to shew y<sup>e</sup> albeit men sue vs not ne cōmence any action against vs for it in this world: yet notwithstanding we shall not faile to be culpable before God: yea although the poore should not crye at all, as it hath beene declared heeretofore . The thing then in effect which wee haue to beare in minde, is that we ought to haue an eye vnto euery mans neede, and not to oppresse him which is in necessitie, thinking that we haue an occasion of making our owne profit by an other mans losse, when we see that he can not be without vs. Let vs beware that we be not so cruell . For although he make no complaint against vs in this world, yet before God we are culpable: and that ought to quicken vs vp to much the more in our duty, considering that God reproveth vs of cruelty in such wise.

Nowe Moses addeth a seconde lawe : That the fathers should not be put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers, but that every man should beare the punishment of his owne sinne . This Lawe was ordamed because of a wicked & beastly custome which then reigned among the men of the East country, who made it a matter of no conscience to put the children to death for the fathers offences, and so to shed the bloud of the innocent. God therefore meant to withhold his people from following such barbarous dealing of the Paynims and Infidels . And it is a point which we must diligently note . For wee might muse why it is sayde, that the father shall not be killed for the childe, nor the child for the father. It seemeth that it is needefulle to forbid this thing, because we knowe that where sinne is founde, there the punishment ought to be layde without seeking any farther . Nowe therefore forasmuch as we are giuen to vnderstande, that men haue bin so blockish as to put him to death who was in no fault, so as the father hath sometimes beene drawn to death with the child; we perceiue thereby that God hath not without cause established this lawe . It is true in deede that this is spoken vnto Iudges and vnto such as beare the sword in their hand: that the children should not be put to death for the sinne of the fathers, nor the fathers for the sinne of the children: but yet notwithstanding God in generall warneth vs also, that wee ought not to hate the children for their fathers sakes . Whensoever we see a wicked man, forasmuch as he is a reasonable creature, we ought to pitie him, and not to hate him, although we must alwaies detest the vice, and puniſhe the person for his misdeedes. But if we hate the father for the sonnes sake, or the sonne because of the father, albeit wee haue not the sworde in our hande, yet neuertheless this wicked affection which we haue, is as one as if we did put the father to death for the childe. And to let vs noe well, that this lawe appertayneth vnto vs all. And although we be not armed with power and authoritie to punish whome we list. Yet notwithstanding God putteth vs in mind not without iust cause, that he which hath offended must beare his owne punishment, and not any other guiltlesse person besides.

Heere a man might demand a question: what is the cause then why God threateneth that he wil punish the wickednesse of fathers vpon their children, and cast it as it were into their bosome? This is sayd, because that GOD is at libertie to curse not one man alone, but his whole race and posteritie also. For what are we, if it please not him to beholde vs with pitie? If he once turne his mercie from vs, we can not but goe into vnter destruction. And therefore let vs learne, that when God leaueth vs such as we are, it is a kind of punishment which he layeth vpon vs . Ye see then howe he punisheth the wickednesse of the fathers vpon the children, and yet doth wrong vnto none. Let vs mind that. And in very deede we ought to obserue what difference there is betweene God and men. An earthly Iudge punisheth the faultes which are knowen vnto him; but before God it is not so, for we are al of vs gilty. He which before men is faultlesse, and can be charged with nothing, let him come before God, and there he shall finde himselfe short. Againe we see not the cause why God punisheth young children, euen such as are yet in their mothers wombe: but he knoweth a reason why he doth so: and we must with al humblenes of mind reuerence his iudgements, when a thing seemeth straunge vnto vs, and wee be tempted to reason against him; wee must submit our selues, and know that we are too raw & too weake to comprehend the iudgements of God, which are so high. And therefore let vs not measure God by men, to binde him to doe that which earthlie Iudges are commaunded to doe: for hee is not subiect vnto the same lawe, and the reason why we haue declared. And in deede he protesteth also by his prophet Ezechiel, that he wil not punish the children for the fathers sake. For it was nowe growen to a common prouerbe in Israel, that they which were troubled with warre, famine, and other calamities, would say, What we are not so wicked that GOD should handle vs with such rigour, for wee haue serued him, wee haue done the best that we could . Therefore we must needs say that God punisheth vs now for the faultes which were committed an hundred yeeres agoe, and should nowe haue beene buried . Thus men complained of God . As in deed we see how men are too much inclined to iustifie the selues by condemning of God. Hereupon our Lorde answereth them : no no, this prouerbe shall be no longer vsed in Israel, That the fathers haue eaten sower grapes, & the childrens teeth are set on edge: for he which sinneth shall beare his owne burden, & the chastisement of his offence . We see then that God doeth so punish the sinnes of the fathers vpon the children, that notwithstanding all are culpable, and there is not one which hath a sufficient excuse to aske a reason why God punisheth him . And if any alleadge that he corrected Dauides fault by causing the childe to die which was begotten by him, it is answered (as I haue already touched) that God will sometimes punish the children for the fault of their fathers, but this is after his own maner which is incomprehensible vnto vs, that is to say, that he doth nothing but iustly and vprightly. We shall not alwayes see the cause why hee doeth it, for we haue already declared that our wittes are ouer grosse and dull to enter into the bottomlesse gulfe of Gods iudgements. But how fouer the case stande, we must vouchsafe him so much honor as to confesse, that when he punisheth the iniquite of the fathers vpon the children, he doeth it on good right. And howe? Will we say: It is not for vs to enquire beyonde our measure: Let vs content ourselues with this, that Gods goodnesse is an vblamable iustice, and in the meane while let vs walke as hee hath commaunded vs. Let vs not say: he doth this, and why may not wee doe the like? Yea: but what are we? For GOD knoweth his rule full well; but we for our parte hadde neede to be helde in awe and vnder subiection: and if wee would be at libertie to doe what seemed good to ourselues, there would be tooo great confusion. Yee see then what we haue to beare in minde, when it is sayde in this place, that the father shall not be punished for the childes fault, nor the childe for the fathers: but that he which offendeth shall beare the punishment of his offence himselfe. Nowe we are warned also by the way, not to in tangle ourselues in the condemnation of those which haue offended. For many are of opinion that they discharge not their dewtie, except they maintaine an other mans wickednesse. Oh, [say they] he that hath doone this offence is my neighbour, or my cousin, or I knowe not what. If I holde him not vp by the chinne, if weeke nor to violate and corrupt iustice, I shall not be thought to haue dealt with him like a kinsman, like a friende or like a neighbour. But we see what is sayde to the contrary: namely, that hee which hath offended, shall beare his owne sinne. Therefore when wee see any one to offend, let it grieue vs, let vs indeuour to the vtmost of our power to bring him into the way againe: but yet for all that, let vs beware that we wrap not our selues in his condemnation, seeing God hath exempted vs out of it. And that is a thing which wee haue to remember yet further vpon this place.

The thirde lawe which Moses addeth in this place is, That they shall not peruers the Iudgement and right of the stranger, that they shall not reade the fatherlesse vnder foote, that they shall not wring a pteage from the widowe. And why? Remember (sayeth he) that thou wast a seruant in the Lande of Egypt, and that the Lorde thy GOD hath drawen thee out from thence, to the intent that thou shouldst pitie them which are afflicted, and that thou shouldst not grieue them. We haue already seene heereof, that as men are..of lesse credit and countenance touching the worlde, so are they more specially recommended vnto our care by God. For they which haue means to helpe themselues, seeke not willingly eyther to this or to that man for helpe. For why? They can helpe themselues well ynough. Hee that hath good friendes, and is of credit carrieth his prauiledge, to gette him fauour himselfe: a riche man likewise and he that hath policie and courage in his dealinges. For men are afrayde to deal with them, they dare not offer to treade them vnder foote, because they see they are able to worke their owne reuenge. And that is the cause why God maketh no mention of such persons. It is true in deede that generally he alwayes appointeth vs this rule, Not to do vnto others otherwise than we would haue doone vnto ourselues; and y<sup>e</sup> we must abstaine from al wrong, deceites, and violence. He sayth this in deede to all in generall, but he sayth nor: Take heede of iniuring and oppressing a riche man and one which is in credit and authoritie. For why? We are withelde from offring of such a one any wrong, because wee are afrayde of the like. But God sayeth: Let not any man grieue the poore man, let none afflict the stranger, let none trouble the fatherlesse, let none molest the widowes. And why speaketh he thus of them? Because when wee see that they are not defended by men, we thinke that they are set foorth vnto vs, for an open pray. And y<sup>e</sup> is the cause why wee be so venterous beyond al reason & conscience, to snatch from them whatsoeuer we can take holde of. Let vs therefore note well, that God in this place (as he hath done before) declareth, y<sup>e</sup> he is the protectour & defender of all such as are destitute of mans ayde, and are net vnder propped in this worlde. And herein there are two points which we ought to note: y<sup>e</sup> one is y<sup>e</sup> if we doo good vnto a stranger, vnto a poore man which is forsaken of all men, or vnto y<sup>e</sup> fatherles, we shall not loose our labour. For why? God acknowledgeth and accepteth it for a seruice done vnto himselfe. If a man being acquainted with such as are rich and well friended, do for them; hee maketh alwayes this account, wcl, he is able to requite me for my paines: & againe he hath good friends, & as he seeth y<sup>e</sup> a man doth for him, so will he seeke to shewe him the like curtesie. We will alwayes consider whether men be able to make vs recompence. But when a poore man cometh vnto vs, he shall hardly speake with vs or find any fauour at our hands. For why? we thinke y<sup>e</sup> we must doe him good for grauercy, because he is not able to recopence vs. That is y<sup>e</sup> cause why God putteth forth himselfe, & protecteth y<sup>e</sup> he is bounde vnto vs, and that if we thinke we profit ourselues nothing at al by helping the which be in necessitie, we are deceiued: for he accepteth of the thing, as if it were done vnto himselfe. This is to be noted for one point. For the second let vs note, y<sup>e</sup> he threatneth on the contrary side, y<sup>e</sup> if we molest a poore man, if we vex & trouble the widowe or the fatherles, if we be cruell towards the stranger, although a touching y<sup>e</sup> world this wickednes of ours be not punished, yet shall we render an account of it before him. And why? For we haue set light by his protection. Like as princes and other greate states will giue protections vnto them which are hated, and whome they see to be in daunger: so god giueth his protection vnto the fatherles, to the widowes, to the poore, and to the strangers. And why? Because they haue no meanes to the worldward to defend themselves withall, he supplieth this want of theirs, and declareth that hee will not haue men to treade those vnder foote whom hee hath receiued vnto himselfe, telling vs that hee is their protector. If one for all this, doe enterprise any thing against them, is it not as much as to doe him wrong, and as it were spitefully to despise him? So then let vs note well, that as often as mention is made vnto vs of the poore, of the strangers, and of the widowes; wee haue to deal with God, & wage battaile against him, if we vse not all equitie and right towards them, and if we be not so gentle and kindharted as to releue and to succour them. Ye see then now what the cause is, why it is sayde in this place, Thou shalt not peruert the right of the stranger.

Now to peruert the right is, to skorne a man when he hath a iust and good cause. And this is at all times to be scene. In dedde in the courtes of Iustice there will sometimes such regarde be hadde, that a stranger shall haue the more speedie dispatch of his matters: and men will say that they must proceede more quickly in giuing of sentence when a stranger commeth to demaunde iustice, and not suffer him to linger in his suite as those which are at home at their ease and may goe about their businesse: these may better bee delayed, but as touching a stranger which commeth from a farre place to require iustice, men by nature ought to be moued not to make him linger, but to make a quick dispatch with him. But this notwithstanding when the thing is to be practised in places of Iustice, ye shall see the cleane contrary. Let a stranger, whose case is as cleare as the sunne, come to demaunde his right, and hee shall be put off vntil eight dayes, and yet from that time hee shall bee further delayed. And then in the ende, when he is wel wearied, hee shall be new to beginne againe: and if he will followe on his suite, it shall growe worse and worse. This is at all times to be scene, and men make but a sport and game of it. The poore stranger knoweth not to whome to make his mone: if he meete by chance with a lawyer he lamenteth and sayeth: what a thing is this? I thought to haue founde some iustice, but there is nothing but confusion: I see that all things are ruled by fauour. Such cries (I say) and complaints a man shall heare every day: and yet for all that, men care not for them, but passe on still: but yet these things must come to a reckning before God. And why? It is not sayd, Thou shalt not peruert the right of thine owne countryman or Citizen. For why? It is sufficient y there is this generall rule for it. Thou shalt not peruert any mans right. But let vs knowe that strangers are to be more specially maintained, and y God taketh not on himselfe y defence of them without iust cause: insomuch that whoeuer offereth the any outrage or wrong, shall be called to pleade his cause before him. When we heare this, let vs looke more narrowly vnto ourselues, and not think to dally with such a maister as God is. But let vs learne to vse such rightfulness towards men, y if a stranger come before vs, he may haue as much right done for him, as if hee had all the fauour of the whole worlde, or as if he were well knowen vnto vs, and as if we did feare least some reproch should come vnto vs by the contrary, & as if he were able to seeke further to make vs punished for our euill dealing. Let vs on our part doe that which our Lorde comanndeth vs: especially seeing that besides the promise which he maketh, he also threatneth vs. On the one side hee seeketh to winne vs by mildenes and gentlenes, saying: Harken to mee: yee shall not loose your labour when you doe good vnto strangers and such as are vnknown vnto you. And againe on the other side (as I told you) he threatneth vs, to the intent we should not thinke that we are escaped although men complaine not of vs. Yet notwithstanding there be many with whom this warning beareth no sway at all. The Lawe of God hath alwayes bin: and yet what iustice hath bene shewed vnto strangers? Men haue doone the worst they could vnto them, and the faulte is nothing accounted of. And why? For if I bee to doe iustice, and I see that in dooing the stranger right I shall offend him whom I knowe: O I will nor doe it. And verily I knowe oot through what madnesse it cometh to passe, that all folke although they knowe that it is ill doone, cease not for all that, to procure the bolstering and bearing out of their owne countrymen and citizens, and of such as are of the same place that they themselves be of. And why? O will one say, our acquaintance must not be iniured. That is the common speech. But in the meane while we pull the wrach of God vpon the whole towne and country, and yet we thinke not of it. If men be asked in this case, what will ye be at defiance with God? They will say: No. We must doe Iustice, we must execute punishmentes. Againe if a man speake of the oppression which hath bin vsed towards a stranger, euerie man will bee a Iudge in the case and say: there is no reason that one which is in credit and estimation should be borne withall, and a stranger troden vnder foote, but that hee to whome the right of the matter belongeth should haue it. And yet for all this, when the thing commeth to the proofe, there is nothing but fauour and corruption; The poore strangers are left and forsaken, and there is no Iustice to be had for them. Yee see howe this Lawe of GOD hath bene euill practised in all times. But this is no excuse for vs. Let vs therefore bethinke ourselues to pitie such as are despised of the worlde, knowing that if wee vex and grieue them, we offer God the iniurie. And if we helpe them, God wil accept of such seruice. As much is to be sayde concerning the widowes and fatherlesse. The fatherlesse are sometimes deuoured. And why? They seeme to be left for a pray. The case is like as touching widowes. But God opposeth himselfe against this wickednesse of men, and sheweth that he hath a care of them. Let vs therefore walke in such sort in the presence of God, that we respect not the worlde to say: O I feare that if I do not well I shal heare of it. But let vs alwayes mind this poynt, that nothing can be hidden from the sight of God: and although men beare with vs and we stand stil in their fauour, yet if the curse of God light vpon our heads, all the friendships in the world shall stand vs in no stead. Let vs mind this; and in minding thereof, let vs be moued thereby to abstaine from all wrong dooing, although wee be perwaded that in respect of men wee may well and lawefully doe it. Nowe God purposely alleadgeth: That the people ought to remember howe they were sometimes seruauantes in the Lande of Egypt, and that God brought them from thence euen to the intent that they should walke as he appointed them. Willingly ought wee to haue compassion on an other mans miserie, when we for our part haue bene pinched with the like. For he which neuer knewe what miserie meant, hath no pitie on them which are distressed. But when we ourselues haue tasted of many miseries and afflictions, it ought to make vs the more pitifull to relieue those which are in the like estate, which are presently afflicted as well as we haue bene. And that is the cause why God in this place putteth the Iewes in minde, that they had bene seruauantes in the Lande of Egypt. For one which is borne in a rich house, which hath bene dainerily brought vp, which hath bene alwaies crouched vnto, which neuer had a crooked word giuen him to grieue him withall, such a one when he seeth a poore man thinketh that hee is one of another kinde than himselfe is of, and hee vouchsafeth not to looke vpon him as on his neighbour. <sup>15</sup> But if a man haue endured much trouble, when he seeth any one to be grieued and troden vnder foote, he be thinketh himselfe thus: Alas I my selfe was sometimes thus rampled on, and now albeit GOD hath exempted me from the like miserie, yet must I not forgette that which I haue tasted of heretofore. And heereupon he calleth to minde all the afflictions which he hath suffered. What? I was grieued at the verie heart when such wrong was done me; therefore I must now shewe that I pitie his case, who is presently so oppressed. This affection is in vs by nature. God therefore leadeth vs vnto this consideration. And heere we be warned howe greatly euery man is added to himselfe. For if our affections were so well ruled as they should be, there woulde bee greater kindenesse in vs to take pitie of them which endure afflictions. For there is not that man in the world, which ought not to bee a lookingglasse for vs, to behold our owne nature in him, because that God hath ioyned vs al together. So when one endureth griefe and miserie, we should open our bowels (as I may say) vpon him, and suffer part of his griefe with him. But what? We are far ynough from doing of any such thing. For euery of vs is too well contented to be at his owne ease and rest. yf we see others in miserie, we leaue the in the same case; nay we shut our eyes, and will not looke vpon them. Now for this cause it is needfull that God should bring vs home to our selues, to teache vs to say: Looke on thy selfe: what if thou wert in the same state? It is a signe then that wee are too much wedded to our owne profite, when we haue so litle compassion on them which are in miserie; and that we are worse than the brute beastes, when wee are no other wise moued in that behalfe. Yet neuertheless it is not for nought that God leadeth vs in this wise vnto the minding of our owne condition, to shewe what wickednesse and corruption is in our nature. And seeing wee knowe it, let vs learne to vse such prickes as these are, to quicken vs vp to the discharge of our dueties, that when wee see any man molested, we may endeavour to helpe him according vnto our abilitie. And why? Because he is a creature made vnto the Image of God, because he is our brother, because the like miserie may betide vs, or hath alredie happened vnto vs, at which time we also desired to be relieved. Let euery man therefore quicken vpe himselfe by this meanes, as with a goade which we see God vse to pricke vs forward: and when we foreslowe to do our dutie, let euery man accuse himselfe and say, What? It seemeth that thou art become a beast in that thou takest no pitie on him which endureth miserie: If thou wert in his place thou wouldest haue all the worlde runne to relieue thee: and canst thou any longer number thy selfe in the aray of men, when thou takest no greater care of a creature which is made vnto the Image and likenes of God? Thus a man ought to quicken himselfe vp in his dutie. Now if we be exhorted to haue such pitie on the which are in any kind of miserie, how much lesse may it be lawfull for vs to come & lift vp ourselues against the like wilde beastes, and to tread them vnder foote, which are destitute of all ayde and helpe? God comandeth vs to relieue & to succor them, and what wickednes were it then for vs to come to molest and trouble the? So then let vs learne, first of all to abstaine from all iniury and harme doing: and yet let vs not beare ourselues in hande, yf we are so discharged, when we haue done no harme: but let vs further more endeavour to relieue yf oppressed, by helping them, and by bringing to passe yf they may find a way to be deliuered out of their miserie: let euery man employ himselfe hereunto. And if we thinke yf in respect of men our labour is but lost, let vs know yf such seruice of ours is acceptable vnto God, and that we shall not faile of his blessing: and let this stirre vs vp, accordingly as we are warned in this place.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledging of our faulces, praying him to make vs feeble them better than hithcrunto wee haue doone: and that aboute all, (seeing hee hath ioyned vs together as brethren, adopting vs all into the number of his children) we may so serue and honour him, as we may therewithall liue in brotherly loue one with an other, succouring one another in all our necessities, and abstaying from all mallice, outrages, and deceites, in such sorte as our conuercation in this worlde bee a true testimony-stimonie vnto vs that our God gouerneth vs by his spirite, and hath giuen vnto vs the marke of that inheritaunce wherunto wee labour to come. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely vnto vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The CXXI. Sermon which is the sixth vpon the foure and twentieth Chapter.

19 When thou cuttest downe thine haruest in thy feelde, and hast forgotten a sheafe in the feeld, thou shalt not returne backe againe to fetch it: but it shall bee for the stranger, for the fatherlesse, and for the widowe, that the Lorde thy God may blesse thee in all the workes of thy hands.

20 When thou gatherest thine Oliues, thou shalt not returne againe to seeke ouer the branches, but it shall bee for the stranger, for the fatherlesse, and for the widowe.

21 VVhen thou gatherest thy vineyard, thou shalt not gather the grapes which thou happenest to leaue behinde thee: but they shall be for the stranger, for the fatherlesse, and for the widowe.

22 Remember that thou wast a seruant in the lande of Egypt, therefore I commaund thee to do this thing.

Deut. 23. 24

WE haue seene heretofore howe God ordayned, that in gathering in of the haruest, and of the grapes of the vineyarde, they which were hyred, might whyle they were reaping and gathering of the grapes, eate their fill. And this permission hee gaue vnto them, to shewe, that the rich must not so swallowe vp all thinges, but that they must alwayes bestowe some portion on the poore: euery man according vnto the plentie and aboundance which hee hath. For see heere with what condition God leaueth his goods in rich mens handes; namely, to the intent that hauing the abilitie, they shoulde also take occasion to relieue their neighbours which are in necessitie. And so this kindnesse and gentlenesse ought to bee amongst vs, that hee which hath wherewithall to bee liberal, shoulde bestowe some parte of his aboundance vpon his neighbours. And although none bee rated touching his liberalitie, by way of taxe or fessement, yet neuerthelesse euery man ought to thinke that God hath giuen him plentie of corne and wine vpon condition, that he should bestowe some parte thereof on them which are in neede and necessitie. That which we haue nowe recited, tendeth to the same effect. For God ordayneth that when a man cutteth down his haruest, gathereth his grapes; or beareth his Oliue trees, (as wee with vs doe our walnuttes) hee shoulde not bee so couetous as to rake in the vtmost care of corne, to looke for the last grape, or to seeke after euery Oliue: but that hee which gathereth in the corne of his feelde, shoulde leaue somewhat after him for the poore to gleane, as for the fatherlesse, for the widowes, and for the strangers which haue no landes nor possessions of their owne. Yee see what a reasonable lawe God setteth vs downe in this place, to the intent wee should knowe, that if God hath giuen vs aboundance of goods beyonde our owne vse, wee ought not to bee ouer nigghish of them: but that they which stande in neede, must bee some way releued and succoured by vs. There is also a promise added to correct that distrust which is in men. For God sayeth that when men shall sodoe, hee will encrease their wealth which haue beene liberall to helpe the poore and needie. And besides this, hee putteth the Iewes in minde, that it is hee by whome they were brought into that lande which they possessed, & that they helde it at his hande. As if the chiefe Lorde of the see shoulde say vnto them which holde of his tenure: What? The lande you haue is mine, and I haue graunted it vnto you with condition that I shall receiue at leastwise the rentes and seruices. God therefore in token of a kinde of homage, referueth vnto himselfe, the gleaming and other thinges for the poore that come after to gather the grapes and the oliues which are left behinde. God sayeth that these are royalties which belong vnto him, and that hee giueth and bestoweth them on such as haue neede: and therefore, that the riche men ought not to bee grieued therewith, as if they had lost any thing, or as if their owne goods were taken from them: for God saith, is mine. Ye see then in effect what is here contained. Now let vs note well, that God meaneth not  $\bar{y}$  the poore should be in such wise relieued, as that the rich should be spoyled of that which they possesse. For what a confusion and disorder would that breede? We must therefore note, that God leaueth vnto euery man whatsoever he possesseth, either by way of inheritance, or by buying, or by any other iust and lawfull title. And hereby the poore are warned, not to ransack or make hauck of whatsoever commeth in their way, as many doe, which think they may snatch away any thing by good right, so they be not punished by law, nor haue any to witnesse against them. What? I haue great neede sayeth one. Yea, but what neede foucer a man standeth in, yet God will not haue the ciuil order broken, and all right peruerted. If the rich discharge not their duties, but be so cruell as to suffer the poore to dye in their neede, they shall render an account thereof, but that shall be before the heavenly Iudge. But in the meane while the poore ought to take things patiently, they must abstaine from all malice, from all taine, from all pilling and spoyling. This then ought to be diligently obserued in the first place. For our Lord sayth not in this place: he which hath need of corne in haruest time, let him take a reaphook, and go and cut his neighbors corne to carrie it to the mill: but he speaketh only of leasing after the haruest is in. But a man shall see perillous gleaners nowadayes. For if a man set not diligent watch ouer his possessions, euery body will take his share; men are growen to such vnrulinesse, that there is no vpriht dealing vsed: men haue no regarde to thinke that God hath distributed the goods of this worlde according vnto his owne good pleasure, and that his will is, that hee which is richest should possesse that which hee holdeth, and that no man should doe him any wrong for it: no not although hee bee one of the vn-satiabie gulfes, which thinke they haue neuer ynough. Yet for all that God will not haue any man to touche their goods or to doe them any wrong. But this is little regarded. And so although God directes his talke in this place expressly to the riche; yet neuertheless hee giueth the poore a lesson also, and meaneth to brydle them from going into another mans feelde to conuey away secretly what they can catch, and from entering into their neighbours vineyarde to gather grapes at their pleasure. Nay, he will haue them to abstaine from other mens goods, vntill such tyme as they may glean after the haruest, and gather the grapes which remaine after the vintage. For this leaue is granted them, so they come not to spoyle like theeues, but to take that which God hath reserved for them. And in verie dede we suffer dogges to eate the crummes and other scrappes which fall vnder the tables: and shall wee not suffer our brethren, which are made to the image and likenesse of God? Ought not they to haue part of our abundance, so as they might come and haue at leastwise some little pittance to licke vp? What great matter is it to gather the grapes which are left when the vintage is gathered?

What great matter is it to glean after the haruest? Verilie it is but a small thing. And therefore it were too too excessiue crueltie in men, if they which haue lands & possessions, after they haue gathered in the fruite of them, will yet bee such niggards as not to permit  $\bar{y}$  poore to haue that which they might gather after them. But because men are so distrustfull, that they thinke the whole earth will fayle them, God to make this doctrine more available sayeth: I will make thee to prosper, thou shalt bee increased and multiplied through my blessing and fauour, when thou dost so. There is no doubt but God meane in this place to correct the vnbeleefe which raineth ouermuch in vs, in that euery of vs thinketh that hee shall neuer haue ynough: O sayeth one, such misfortune may betyde mee. I must prouide for such a harde time. And this is the cause why men snatche and scratche to themselves on all sides and cannot bee satisfied, but the more they haue the more is their covetous desire inflamed, as hee which is sicke of the drop sicke, the more hee drinketh the more hee thyrsteth. And what is the cause hereof? Euen our diuells vnbeleefe and distrustfulnesse in that wee consider not that it is Gods owne office to nourish vs. And whereas wee aske of him euery day our dayly bread, there is not one among a hundred which vnderstandeth what is meant by that worde: for wee desire to be fedde at Gods handes. The riche vse this forme of prayer as well as the poore; and confesse thereby that they so possesse their goods, as if God gaue them a portion euery day for their nourishment, and that that whatsoever they haue in their garner, they doe receiue it at his hande. But none thinke hereon. And that is the cause why men are so insatiabie, and burne with such covetousnesse, that they are alwayes raking to themselves, and making vp huge heapes of wealth, and are neuer contented. Will wee then liue contentedly? Let vs haue our recourse vnto God, knowing that if hee blesse vs, wee shall haue sufficient wherewithall to bee sustayned and nourished. To this intent therefore is this promise set downe here, that God will blesse them which are no such niggards towards the poore, but that they suffer and permit them to bee someway relieued by gleanng and gathering the small frute which is left behinde. And so as often as wee are moued to doe any almes, let vs call this warning to mynde and correct our niggardlinesse thereby, which proceedeth (as I tolde you) in this distrust of ours, that wee consider not that it is God which must prouide for vs.

Nowe it is true in dede, that when we giue an almes wee are not constrained to ridde our selues cleane of all that we haue. For Saint Paul sheweth that God spareth vs heerein. I say not (sayeth hee) that the poore must take that which the riche haue, but that at leastwise of your abundance, you must succour such as are in neede, and see them somewhat relieued by you, as who woulde saye: It is not ynough that I haue for mine owne vse, and that God shewe himselfe so liberrall towards mee so as I want nothing; but forasmuch as I see my neighbours pync away through neede, they must haue some portion of that which is mine, and they must at leastwise feele somewhat of the blessing of God, when I am at mine ease. That is the thing whereunto saint Paul leadeth vs. So then let vs profite our selues by this place where it is sayde: Thou shalt gather in the fruite of thy vineyarde, thou shalt cutt downe the barnesse of thy feelde, thou shalt beate thy Olive trees, knowing that it is a speciall priuiledge, which God giueth vnto men, and which we ought to esteeme well of, when euery man possesseth his owne without gaine saying, so as hee which hath a feilde, gathereth the come to maintaine himselfe & his familie, and hee which hath a vineyarde, reapeth the commoditie of the wine. Seeing the Lord grantedh this vnto vs, let vs acknowledge his fatherly goodnes towards vs: and let it stirre vs vp to releuee and succour the which are in neede and distresse: and when wee see the poore languishing in their miseries, and oppressed with necessitie, let vs be moued with some pitie towards them; let their case touch vs to the quicke: and albeit in respect of men wee may say: This is mine; yet notwithstanding, let vs haue an eye vnto GOD, who hath bestowed it on vs vnder condition that we should not keepe all of it in our owne handes, but distribute it in such wise as wee see agreeable on the one side to our owne abilitie, and on the other, to the neede and necessitie of our neighbours.

But let vs returne to the promise. For as I tolde you, a man might say: Well, I haue wherewith to finde mee this yeare: but what shall I haue for the yeare which followeth? A man must not assure himselfe of that which he hath: For the corne which hee hath in his garners may be consumed: God can soone cause it to vanish. And it must not be in way of hypocrisie that wee must saye, Giue vs this day our daily or ordinarie breade. For thereby wee confesse, that they which haue neuer so much, haue nothing at all, except God make it auailable to their vse. So then let euery man haue consideration to say: What may this boote mee? Although I be stored and furnished with all thinges; yet God may bereaue mee of all: he hath the heauens in his hande to shut them vp, and hee sayeth that hee will make the heauens as hard as yron, and the earth shall bee hardened like brasse, so that wee shall not wring out of it one droppe of sustenance for vs. Will wee then that the Lord who hath hitherto fed vs, and beene our foster father, euen vnto this present time, shall continue to doe the like vnto the ende? Let vs take heede that wee distrust not his goodnes, and thereby be hindered to be kyndhearted towards them which haue neede of our helpe. Let vs therefore helpe them, yea, euen without staying vpon any other thing than this present promise, That the blessing of God shall be vpon vs. Let vs be enclined vnto pitie and compassion, to releuee them which stande in neede of our helpe, knowing that when God hath giuen vs one good yeare, if wee be gentle and kyndhearted to succour our neighbours, hee will alwayes encrease his benefices and blessings more and more vpon vs: as Saint Paul also sheweth in the second Epistle to the Corinthians, where hee handleth this matter at large. Let vs therefore haue this alwayes before our eyes, as y<sup>e</sup> verie point whereunto the scripture leadeth vs: namely y<sup>e</sup> we must be fully assured, and thorowly resolued, that our Lord will neuer forget vs. Whē we are once thorowly perswaded of this, doubles we will esteeme more of the onlic blessing of God, than of all y<sup>e</sup> euere we might haue gathered & heaped vp together. Though we haue al y<sup>e</sup> prouision in y<sup>e</sup> world: it would not suffice vs so well as this onlic contentment will doe, to say: I haue my God which hath promised not to forget me, but to continue his bountifullnes alwayes vnto me: I haue euer found him liberrall towards me euen vntill this day, and hee will doe yet more for me, if I comit my selfe wholie vnto him and to his prouidēce. Ye see then what we are to learne as touching this promise.

Let vs come now vnto that which God addeth, that is: That the Iewes were seruants in Egypt, and that he brought them out from thence: (as we saw yesterday.) But he repeateth the same thing againe, & that not without good cause. For as it was yesterday touched, if men be welthie, there is much crouching vnto them because of their riches, they separate themselves as it were from mankind, and they beare themselves in hand that they are a degree aboue them, & the poore may not touche any thing of theirs. To be short, if God would haue beleueed them, he should haue made a feuerall world for them: for to their seeming, the poore are not woorthie to haue any dwelling with them. And that is because they are not touched with other mens afflictions, to saie: Alas behold he is my flesh, how wreched soeuer he be, as the prophet Esaiæ saith, who leadeth vs to y<sup>e</sup> minding of this point, when hee woulde haue vs enclined to pitie and compassion, so as our bowels should yeerne at the afflictions of our brethren, as the scripture speaketh. But there is not one which thinketh hereon. God therefore perceiuing that riches doe blinde men in such wise, and that their eyes are readie to burst, (for that is the similitude which Dauid vseth in the 73. Psalme) sayeth: Remember that thou wast a seruaunt in the lande of Egypt. And so whereas the Iewes are exhorted in this wise, it is to the intent they should not be puffed vp with pride through their abundance, or that beeing fatte and well fed, they should not become like restie Iades as it is saide in the song: but that they should alwayes be thinke themselves thus: Wee were sometimes in bondage, and that in such cruell bondage, as none could be greater, we were in thraldome like poore slaues, but God hath deliuered vs. The remembrance of this one thing ought to abate all the pryde of the Iewes, and moreouer to leade them to pitifull compassion to helpe those which were poore and needie among them.

As for example, if there were strangers which had neither vinyardes nor other possessions: if there were widowes and fatherlesse among them, they ought to thinke: Alas, when our fathers were cruelly afflicted in the lande of Egypt, they woulde faine haue bene somewhat releuced: is it not reason then that wee now should doe the like? This (say I) is the meaning of God, when hee speaketh of the bondage of Egypt. Moreover, hee warneth the Iewes (as wee haue declared afore) that they possess not the lande of Chanaan for their inheritance by any other title, than because it was giuen them by GOD. It is therefore all one as if the chiefe Lorde should require his royalties, his homage, & his other right, which are due vnto him. For God seemeth thus to say: I haue giuen you the land of Chanaan: but I haue reserved the gleaning & such like things for my selfe. And therefore deceiue mee not of that which is mine. Beholde, I appoynt the poore in my behalfe to goe and gather vp these things.

Nowe as for vs, it is true in deede that wee dwell not in the land of Chanaan, as did the Iewes, wee haue no such order of gouernement as they had, neither are we of the stocke of Abraham, there are no such portions of land allotted vs as are written of in Iosua; and yet neuertheless this ought always to bee in force amongst vs; that hee which is of wealth, is bounde according to his measure and abundance, to releuee them which are in need. Saint

2. Cor. 8. 14.

Paul speaketh not vnto the Iewes, he speaketh not for the time of the figures vnder the lawe, but hee setteth fourth this doctrine & this rule vnto all the faithfull in generall, and will haue men obserue it vntill the ende of the worlde. Therefore let vs note that whensoever through our niggardlinesse wee withdrawe our selues from helping our neighbours as wee ought, we are reprooued by this worde: What? whatsoever thou hast, thou hast it from the hande of God. And vnder what condition? For see I pray you, how men discharge them selues with slightnesse; What? sayeth one. Is not this mine? Yes, but yet oughtest thou to bee kindehearted towards such as are in neede. For art thou riche? It is not because of thy faire eyes [ as they say. ] In deede God hath giuen more to thee than to many others: but for all that, hath hee reserved nothing for himselfe? Hath he giuen all ouer vnto thee to make hauock of it? Although euery man enjoy his owne feeelde, and his owne vineyarde, although euery man eate of his owne corne and drinke of his owne wine, must charitie therefore cease and bee layde aside? Must it bee diminished? Is it not in degree aboute all the ciuil orders and lawes in the worlde? Is it not the bonde of perfection? So then they which are by nature such miserable pinchpennies and such niggardes, they which whyne so when they should giue an almes, and

are as willing to doe it as a Beare to goe to the stake: let them fight against that vice of theirs, in such wise as our Lorde sheweth vs in this place, and let them say: Howe nowe? That which thou hast is none of thine, sauing that thy God hath giuen it thee. Consider nowe what couenant hee hath made with thee. It is not that thou shouldst bee a gulfe to deuour and swallowe vp all, but to the intent that thy brethren should bee somewhat reliued by thee, and hee vouchsafeth thee the honour to bee the disposer of his goods. If God gaue me no more than I needed, yea, if I had not a crum of breade more than woulde feede mee: yet were that verie much: and coulde I euer discharge my selfe of my duetie to magnifie him sufficiently for that his bountifullnesse & goodnesse towards mee? No verily. But when as hee giueth a man more than hee needeth, hee appointeth him after a sorte to represent his owne person, as if hee should saye, Whereas it is my propertie to doe good: for all good things proceede from mee: It is I which make the earth to yeelde fruite: It is I which do giue it strength to bring forth her frutes: I doe as it were giue him mine owne office, and assigne him to bee as it were my licuenaunt: and howe greate an honour is that? All the riche therefore which haue wherewith to doe good, are doubtlesse as it were the officers of God to exercise that which is properly belonging vnto him, to wit, to helpe their neighbours to liue. Therefore sith God vouchsafeth vs such honour; are not we too shamefully malicious and more beastly than the beasts themselves; if wee bee not moued with pittie and compassion towards the poore? So then let vs remember this worde when it is sayde, that God gaue the land of Chanaan vnto his people on condition, that the rich should pittie the poore: and at this daye let vs applye this doctrine vnto our selues, according vnto that forcalleged warning which Saint Paul giueth vs.

Nowe wee are likewise warned in generall, to acknowledge the miseries wherein wee were when God reached out his hande vnto vs, to the intent wee may bee so much the more seruent to serue and honour him, and to yeeld our selues wholly vnto his obedience. And that extendeth verie farre: for in generall when God meaneth to presse vs more neerely to discharge our duties towards him, and that euery one should dedicate him selfe wholly vnto his seruice; hee putteth vs in minde that hee hath drawn vs from out of the deepest dungeon of death, and that wee were sometimes the bondslaves of Satan, that wee were helde fast bounde vnder eternall damnation, & (to be short) that we were as good as plunged in hell. Lo what inheritance wee haue by our birth, vntill GOD cast his eye vpon vs, and of his mercie drawe vs out of the horrible confusion wherein wee are and which wee bring with vs.

But nowe let vs looke vnto our first birth of all: Our Lorde created vs after his own image and likenesse. It is true: but that was wholly defaced and wiped out in vs by the sinne of Adam: wee are accursed, wee are by nature shut out from all hope of life: but behold our God hath redeemed vs by the blood of his sonne, & hath opened vnto vs the gate of heauen. How much therefore are wee bounde vnto him, if we consider our first estate, and what wee were before hee aduanced vs vnto this dignitie? And this is not yet all, we were also wretched vnbelleuers. For albeit that Iesus Christ was the redeemer of the whole world, yet had wee as much as lay in vs, renounced that benefite, nay wee had falsified our baptism, whereby God from our infancie had marked vs, to say that we should bee of his house and of his Church. And howe haue wee lued all the time that wee were Idolaters? Wee haue annihilated Gods grace, whereby he had called vs to him, at leastwise as much as laye in vs: but the goodnesse of God alwayes surmounted, and his truth was so firme and sure, that it hath overcome all the wickednesse of men: in so much that though they haue beene vnfaithfull, yet notwithstanding G O D continueth still to shewe himselfe faifull, so that the baptism which we had defaced, remayneth still in his full force: but it is not long of vs; for as I sayde afore: wee were plunged in all vncleanness: and filthines: and were so defiled both in bodie and soule with all manner of defilementes, that wee coulde not bee but estranged wholly from God. But yet hath hee plucked vs backe againe; and as nowe we bee become citizens of the kingdome of heauen, and are reconciled vnto him, and are adopted for his children, and yet wee are vnthankfull vnto him, yea, and we growe proud against him; insomuch that diuise presume wonderously of themselves, and yet knowe not that they are beholding vnto God for all the good which they haue. Yee see then howe wee be moued to humble our selues, and that in acknowledging the benefites and giftes which we haue receiued of God, wee ought to endeuour to vse them so, as all may bee referred vnto his honour, that hee may bee serued of vs, and euerie of vs apply himselfe, first vnto his obedience, and then to haue compassion of our neighbours.

When wee beholde the wretched vnbelleuers in the Popedome, which are still carryed away so headlög in ignorance and in the damnable superstitions of Papisitie: alas wee ought to thinke that wee were like vnto them, vntill God deliuered vs from thence: and that wee are forgetfull hereof through contempt, as wee see that many disdaine the Papisites and mocke them, and haue no pittie of them. And why? Because they consider not what they themselves haue bene; ne magnifie the grace of God to saye: If God had not reached vs his hande, what had become of vs? Wee had remayned in our destruction, wherewith we had bene ouerwhelmed. Let vs therefore thinke hereupon when wee beholde them which are yet as it were reiected and forsaken of God: let vs knowe that our case and theirs was alike: and let it moue vs to humilitie, that all pryde may bee cast downe, and wee endeuour to winne them, as much as lyeth in vs, which are yet wandering from the way of saluation: let vs acknowledge that wee had once neede of such helpe and succour, and that God was not ingardly towardes vs, to the intent that wee for our parte shoulde not bee negligent to employ our selues likewise for our neyghbour, & by that meanes shewe that wee are his children, seeing it hath pleased him to shewe himselfe a father towardes vs. Nowe I graunt that there are many which are wonderfully greued when a man putteth them in minde what they haue bene in time past.

If a man bee become riche and is aduanced to honour, hee woulde haue no man to remember him what hee was afore: but hee is carryed away with such an headlesse ouerweening, that hee surely thinketh that hee is fallen from the cloudes, and woulde gladly so blinde the eyes of the whole worlde, that men shoulde consider nothing but his present excellencie. But our Lorde, not without cause, bringeth vs backe againe. And why? For (as I tolde you) men are subiect to this forgetting of themselves when God hath once exalted them, and thereupon they disdaine their neighbours, and pride ingendreth crueltie: (as it is said in the sixteenth Chapter of Ezechiel,) where Sodome is set downe for an example thereof. God sayth that the pride which was founde in Sodome, prouoked his wrath and vengeance against that citie. For when they had once aboundance of all things, and were grown fatte, when they had meate and drinke at will: then began they (saith hee) to bee puffed vp in pryde, and afterwarde withdrewe their bandes from the poore, and thought that it was ynough, so that they themselves were furnished. Let vs therefore know, that our Lorde perceiuing the vice whereunto wee are ouermuch enclined and giuen, meant to prouide such remedie for it, as hee knewe to bee fit and conuenient for our saluation. So then if wee bethinke our selues well, wee shall alwayes finde iust reason to moue vs vnto kindnesse towardes our neighbours. There is yet another thing which ought to induce vs heereunto, namely, if wee consider thus with ourselves: euen that I am a man, and that I am endued with some speciall qualitie aboue others, it is of God; I am beholden to him for it, it is he that hath giuen mee that prerogatiue. But how soeuer I saie, I cannot cut my selfe off from mankind: I am defended from the stocke of Adam which is wholly accursed: and as for that knowledge which I haue of Gods trueth, it is a speciall gifte which hee hath giuen mee: I haue it not by nature: and farther I am subiect to all the miseries and wretchedneses in the worlde: if I bee to day in honour, to morrowe God may put mee to infamie and shame: if I be in health, God may cast mee into sicknesse. Wee see how

Kings and Princes themselues haue bene eaten vp sometimes with vermine and with rottenesse, and haue bene so stinking, that they haue loathed euen themselues; whereby a man might perceiue the hande of God visibly vpon them. Therefore when we see such examples, it ought to humble vs. And shall not this humilitie breede a brotherly kindeheartednesse in vs to helpe our neighbours, or at least wise to bewaile and to pitie the miserie wherein they are, seeking as much as lyeth in vs to relieue and succour them? So then let vs alwayes thinke on this: Thou wast a seruaunt in the lande of Egypt, and therefore I commaunde thee to doe thus.

Nowe when our Lorde sayeth, I commaunde thee to doe so, he taketh that as granted, which I haue already touched, to wit, that because hee is the Redeemer of this people, therefore they are bounde vnto him. You we all things vnto mee (sayeth hee): and seeinge it is so, I will haue you pay such a tribute in way of reknowledging of those goods and lands, which you holde of mee: and I require nothing but that which is mine. Nowe when we haue wel considered hereupon, let vs take the exposition hereof as Saint Paul deliuereth it vnto vs in the fourteenth Chapter of his Epistle to the Romans: and wee shall see howe profitable this doctrine is for vs. For, for this cause (sayth he) Iesus Christ dyed and rose againe, to the intent that wee should be his, both while wee liue and when wee dye. Beholde here a bond which wee cannot escape, and woe be vnto him which seeketh to exempt himselfe from it: to wit, to dedicate both our life and death vnto his seruice, who hath so loued vs and helde vs so deare, that hee hath not spared his owne life, to winne vs vnto himselfe and vnto God his father. Seeing then that hee hath so redeemed vs, that we are his inheritance, and that hee declareth that we are wholie his, & that wee belong properly vnto him, it is good reason that whensoever hee commaundeth vs any thing, wee should lay our hande on our mouth, and receiue without any gainesaying whatsoeuer he putteth vnto vs. For seeinge hee is our Redeemer and that wee hold of him whatsoeuer wee haue, are wee not our blockish, if wee submit not our selues vnto him and rest altogether on his will? And that is the cause also why GOD vseth this preface in his Lawe: I am the euerliuing thy God which haue brought thee out of the lande of Egypt. Before that God setteth downe any commaundement to rule the life of his people by, hee saith: Know yee that I haue alreadye purchased you to serue mee. I graunt wee haue not bene brought out of the lande of Egypt; but yet the redemption which hath bene wrought for vs is much more precious: for wee are deliuered from the bottomlesse pit of hell. For as much therefore as wee of our owne nature are so slowe to serue God, or rather so restie, that wee drawe cleane backwarde from his will: because wee receiue not the yoke quietly, but are as young vntamed and vnhandled heiffers, or rather as stiffnecked buls. For we see howe some are so headstrong and brainsicke, that a man can by no meanes rule them; and others are spitefull and froward, full of rebellion, and vnreclamable. Sith we see it is so harde a matter to bring vs in subiection vnder GOD; let vs quicken vpon our selues in this sort and saye: Howe now? Knowest thou not who it is that speaketh? Is it not hee who hath redeemed vs? And seeing that wee are his, must hee haue fo much a doe to winne vs vnto himselfe? Shall wee so resist him? Must hee bee fayne to fight with vs when hee woulde frame vs to his will? Doe not we shewe our selues monsters in so dooing? And are we not to be holden for detestable persons? Verily if wee looke well to our selues, wee shall finde that this is not the onely cause whereby wee are bound vnto God: hee might vprayde vs with his creating of vs. And if wee bee his creatures, is it not good reason that hee shoulde quietly haue the maystrie of vs? And what creatures are wee? Hee shall bee serued of the Oxen and Asses, hee shall bee serued of the earth which is without all sense and feeling, and of corne and of wine and of all other senselesse things: for wee see howe God employeth them as it seemeth good vnto him. But hee hath created vs after his owne image and likenesse. Was hee bounde to make vs reasonable creatures, and to giue vs such excellencie and dignitie? Nay verily. Let vs knowe then that it ought to moue vs to yeeide our selues wholly vnto his obedience, for asmuch as wee see that hee hath preferred vs before asses, horses, dogges, and other beastes, and before stones and other dead and senselesse creatures. But there is yet more (as I haue sayde) to wit, the redemption which God hath wrought for vs; which deserueth that wee shoulde suffer our selues to bee governed by him: and that whensoever hee speaketh, it is to be presupposed that he hath all authoritie ouer vs, and that hee borroweth it not any where else, but hath it deuie vnto him, as vnto our soneraigne King.

But let vs farther note, that God meaneth not to wrest from vs any seruile or forcible subiection, but woulde haue vs of our owne good will quietly to yeeide vnto that which hee saith. Why vseth hee these wordes: Thou wast a seruaunt, but I haue nowe set thee at libertie? There is no doubt but that hee meant to winne vs vnto himselfe by this myldnesse. As if hee had said: Go to, I might in dede constrayn you to serue mee: but I will haue you to serue me with a free heart: I will haue you like a chylde which taketh pleasure in obeying and pleasing of his father: I will not holde you as slaues and bondemen, but I woulde haue you offer your selues vp vnto mee as it were in sacrifice. Nowe wee knowe that the sacrifices which wee offer vnto God must bee offered with a free good wil & alwayes he requireth of vs, hee calethe sacrifices. And therefore let vs note, by his receiuing of vs vnto himselfe, after hee hath redeemed vs, he giueth vs to vnderstande by hee meaneth not to hale vs

to him by force, nor to hamper vs with cordes and chaines, nor to wrest I knowe not what from vs, neither cometh he like a snerke or baylife to leuy any thing of vs; but exhorteth vs mildly: and sheweth vs that sith he hath redeemed vs, it is good reason that we should be his and also all that euer hee hath put into our handes: And that seeing wee holde all of him, and by those things hee testifieth his fatherlie goodnesse rowardes vs: therefore wee ought to bee so much the more moued and inclined too doe whatsoeuer it shall please him to commaund vs. And that is the cause also why the holy scripture vseth such amiable speeches as these: I exhorte you: I pray you. When Saint Paule spake, hee might haue vsed the authoritie of God: For when we bring the lawe, when we reprehende vices, when we exhort vnto that which is commaunded vs; surely it is God that speaketh: and wee take it from him whatsoeuer wee vtter with our mouthes. But yet God in the person of saint Paul prayeth vs: and therefore wee ought to be ashamed, if wee yeelde not thereunto, ne be meekened therewith, what hardenesse soeuer be in vs. So then let euery of vs learne to quicken vp himselfe, when we seee such loosenesse in our selues, and that we are so slowe that wee rather reioyce backwarde than set ourselues forward to any good thing. Consider O wretched creature after what sort thy God directeth his speech vnto thee: hee cometh familiarly vnto thee: hee sayeth not, Beholde I am your king: I haue all rule and superioritie ouer you, and therefore I must handle you roughly: hee speaketh not after that manner: but he sayeth: I am come nigh vnto you. And for what cause elte but to be your sauiour? And this hee doeth not for his owne profite, but for our saluation: therefore sith wee seee that our Lorde vseth such gentlenesse and mildenesse towardes vs, wee ought to fare the better by it euery one of vs, & to take occasion thereby to quicken vp ourselues the better in our duties.

And let vs note also howe God sayth: I commaunde thee to doe so. And why? To the intent we should listen vnto his mouth, & depende wholly thereupon: and not euery man order himselfe after his owne fancie and say: O I doe this in the honour of God, and is it not ynough? Euery man must bring his owne opinion before God, to say: We must do this or that because we thinke it to be good: but God will haue men simply to hearken and to follow without any exception, whatsoeuer hee calleth them vnto. And whē he leadeth vs in this wise vnto his own will, it is all one as if he had cut off all those excuses to say: And when I doe thus, will it not doe well if I vse such a meane? GOD (I say) will not haue vs to take such aduantage of him, that euery one should order himselfe according to his owne pleasure: but hee will haue his worde hearkened vnto, and obeyed without any gaine-saying. So then will wee haue a certaine rule? Will we not wander in our life as wild and sauage beastes? Let vs heare God speake; and hauing heard him, let vs hold ourselues vnto that which he sayth: and let vs not presume to bring in our replies and say: yea and this would doe well, and that were not amisse. But let vs berinke ourselues thus: Doth God commaund vs to doe so? It is not ynough to put y whole world to silence, and to bridle not onely our tongues, but also our heartes, so as we presume not to go against him, but yeelde him the honour which he requireth, and say: Lorde we are heere: And then if we wil speake; it must be but to say, Amen Lorde. And therefore when he commaundeth vs any thing, let vs knowe that we must yeelde our consentes vnto it, and that not by force or constraite, but willingly; and we must obey it, not by halitic, but fully and wholly, and not vsurpe any such libertie, as to doe whatsoeuer wee thinke good, but suffer him to gouerne vs and to beare rule ouer our thoughtes and workes, that we may altogether be his.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs to feele them more and more. And because he hath bestowed all things vpon vs, and sheweth himselfe so liberall a father towardes vs, let vs for our parte endeouour to shewe ourselues his children, enforcing ourselues to doe well, and to relieue and succour them which are in neede. And forasmuch as we feele ourselues so far indebted vnto our GOD, let vs be stirred vp the more to acknowledge this incestimable benefite that hee hath done for vs when it pleased him to draw vs out of the gulfe of hell, and hath called vs to the hope of euerlasting life, in the which he maintaineth and preserueth vs dayly by his worde: and pray we him to confirme vs therein better and better, vntill hee hath brought vs into the full possession and enjoying of that euerlasting inheritance which he hath promised vnto vs, and which hee hath purchased for vs by the bloude of our Lorde Iesus Christ. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely vnto vs, but also vnto all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

When there is any strife betweene men, they shall come vnto Iudgemēt: and they shall haue Iustice done them, by declaring him iust which is iust, and by pronouncing him wicked which is wicked.

2 And if the wicked be founde worthy of beating, the Iudge shall cause him to be layde down and to be beaten before his face, according to his trespasse, vnto a certaine number of stripes.

3 Fortie stripes shall he cause him to haue, and not aboue: least if hee shoulde be beaten aboue this number of stripes, thy brother should appeare despised in thy sight.

4 Thou shalt not mussell the oxe his mouth which treadeth out the corne.

Vr Lorde in this place sheweth the which haue the charge of Iustice, what they ought to do when anie man hath wronged his neyghbour. For wee

knowe that ciuill order is ordayned on earth, to the ende that euery man might lue quietly, so as the weaker bee not borne to the grounde by the stronger, but that right and equitie might beare rule. If this were not, men were better to be bestes to raunge in the wilde Forrestes: for the bestes yet can maintaine and keepe themselves one with another. But wee knowe that men are of so peruerse and crooked a nature, that euery one woulde scratch out his neighbours eyes, if there were no bridle to hold them in. Seeing then it is so that God hath ordained magistrates to repress the leaude behaviours of men, and not to suffer any iniurious and wrongfull dealings to escape vnpunished: it is not without cause that our Lorde commandeth heere, that if a man be vniuently molested, and complaine of it, he shall haue Iustice done him. And although it be here expressly spoken of such iniuries as men complaine of; yet meaneth he not, that if any wickednes be committed and not complained of, the magistrates should winke at it, and dissemble it. For when a man is offended and seeketh thereupon for Iustice, he shall haue peraduenture some reasonable amendes. But in the meane time yee shall see God offended, ye shall see a crime committed not against one man onely, but against all; and yet no plainetife founde in this case; for wee knowe that such zeale is not to be founde in the worlde; nay we are false nowe into those times of which the prophet Elias spake: That there is not one which standeth vppe to maintaine the quatell of God: and except wee see that either we ourselues are like to sustaine losse, or may make the matter gainefull vnto vs; we withdraw ourselues, our mouthes are shutte vp. And therefore the magistrates may not thinke themselves excused, although they haue no alarmes rung in their eares, nor complaintes made vnto them: for they ought to bee watchfull to punish such faults as are committed: they ought to enquire after them although they be not first made priuie vnto them. Neuerthelesse GOD will haue them to heare the cries of those which are oppressed, and to reach out their hands vnto them. And in very deepe it is sayde that God will be on their side which are wrongfully intreated, & will defende them. The holy scripture pronounceth oftentimes that their cries are heard vppe into heauen. Nowe God hauing first declared that; appointeth such here below as shall execute Iustice in his name. Seeing hee heareth them which complaine vnto him, from the heauens; if earthly Iudges play the deafe men, shal they escape for it? Doubtlesse nay. The register bookes shall one day be opened, & God will shewe that there were these and these outrages and violences committed, & no redresse of the. Let vs therefore note well, that God meant in this place to declare, that he wil cal those which beare the sworde of Iustice to their account and reckening, if they wittingly permit any man to be iniured and troden vnder foote. And in very deepe nature hath taught vs that. The Psalms

1. Kin. 19. 10

nims which had not the lawe of Moses knewe full well that euery man ought to haue right, and that he which was oppressed, if he had desired it, ought to haue Iustice doone him, or else that too great disorder and crueltie shoulde bee shewed. And yet for all that we see howe carelesse men are in this behalte, and howe that if a man be but a litle fauoured, his fault shalbe winked at, and hee which is beaten or otherwise ill entreated, shall be sent away with some floute or other, and he which offered him the wrong shal escape. This is common to bee seene. And therefore our Lorde had neede to declare what interest himselfe hath in this matter, to put magistrates in mind that if they discharge not their duties faithfully, they haue a soueraine Iudge, and that if there be no place of Iustice to appeale vnto in this worlde, hee will in the ende holde his Assises, and heare those causes handled, which haue bene cast aside and buried. As we see that the Iudges are oftentimes deafe in a poore mans sute, so as if he come to demaunde Iustice, in dedde there is not any that will bee so bolde as to say: Gette thee hence for thou shalt haue no Iustice heere: there is none that will speake so impudently. But some will say: well, put vpp your bill: and at eight dayes ende, yee shall haue one giue him a flurt with his finger to doe him to wit thereby, that hee doeth but grauell himselfe in vaine. For there shall be so many shuffles, and so many delayes vsed, that hee shall be at his wittes ende, and not knowe what to doe: may you shall haue one or other come and whisper in his eare and say: Alas poore fellowe why doest thou trouble thy selfe? Thou seeest heere is no helpe for thee: Nay thou shalt bee made belecue that thou beganst the quarell and that thou werst the author of the riot, and so thou shalt be punished thy selfe. And therefore thou werst best to put vp the blowes which thou hast without farther pursuing of thy cause. The Iudges all this while will not say a worde, they will shewe some good countenance like Idolles, but yet notwithstanding they giue their consent vnto such wrongfull dealing, and they are partakers of such trecherie, that hee which is molested and afflicted, after he hath spent his monney and taken great paines, goeth away and is mocked. Beholde in what estate we are. And this wickednes is ordinarily practised, And therefore we see that this lawe wherein our lord declareth that he will haue him which complaineth, heard, and his case tried, is not superfluous.

And he addeth afterwards: That he which is iust, must be declared such a one, and he which hath offended must be condemned. We see that God is not contented to haue the ceremonie only vsed, and that men should receiue the inditement, or bill or supplication which is put vpp; but he will haue the Iudge to proceede to definite sentence. For this long differing of sentence, serueth to no other ende, but to hinder all right and to wearie the partie whose cause is iust, & thereby to make him giue ouer his sute. That is the very ende of it. In dedde this is ill dealing; but yet it commonly vsed. So then for this cause God hauing first commaunded that mens complaints shoulde be hearde, addeth that they must proceede vnto sentence. As if he had sayd; that the Iudges must deale simply and vprightly, and not thinke that they haue discharged their dutie, when they haue made men belecue that they haue done somewhat: but they must make a riddance of such causes as come before them, they must condemn him which hath done wrong, & maintaine the iust man, they must declare themselues to be the protectours of good causes. Thus we see in effect what Gods meaning is in this place. And hereby we may gather howe farre we are from following the rule which is giuen vs. For a man may see oftentimes the clean contrarie. But yet for all that, this doctrine ought to be receiued, and although corruptions be ouercommon in the worlde, yet seeing God hath vouchsafed to teach them with his owne mouth which sitte in the seate of Iustice, lette them thinke so much the better on their dutie, lette them take the bite in their mouthes as we say, and suffer themselues to be ruled by G O D, and let them knowe that if they abuse their estate and calling, it is not for nought that G O D hath spoken. And therefore let them be the better instructed to their saluation. But if they make no account hereof, they shall perceiue that G O D dallyeth not in pronouncing his vengeance against them: but that he will speedily execute it if they be so negligent in dooing that which hee commaundeth. And in verie dedde men are too too blockishe, (I meane those which were placed in the seate of Iustice) in that the honour which G O D vouchsafeth them, moueth them not to doe their duties. Is it a small thing to mayntaine right, and to condemne that which is euill? Nay verily: For it belongeth vnto God. It is G O D that is the fountaine of all Iustice, and of all truth: it is hee which is the maintayner of it. Therefore when we see that God hath exalted mortall creatures so much and aduanced them to so high degree, as to maintaine his owne cause to say: This is right, and this is wrong; when God (I say) hath giuen men such autoritie, is there not in them an ouer wicked or rather an ouer beastlie vnthankfulnesse, if they bee not moued hereby with some zeale to discharge their duties?

But heere a man might demaunde, whether he which is wrongfully hurt may complaine or no. For we are commaunded to be patient: and we knowe the exhortation of our Lorde Iesus Christ: If one strike thee on the cheeke, receiue two blowes rather than seeke to reuenge thy selfe of him which did thee wrong. Nowe then, if wee must bee patient in iniuries as we are commaunded: howe is it lawefull to make our complaint before a Iudge? This matter shall be handled more at large anon. Neuertheless let vs note heere, first that when God ordaineth a forme of ciuill order, hee treateth not alwayes what is lawfull for querie parties: but he sheweth what is the office of Magistrates.

that is to be noted for one point. Secondly let vs note, that God meant to arme the magistrats to defende euery mans right and to see that no man bee wronged either in his bodie or in his goods: and his so doing is to this intent, that we should vse this benefite of his: but yet no otherwise than according to his will. Now then albeit the magistrats ought to consider that they haue authoritie to punish euill doers, so as euerie man may liue in peacc and not be oppressed by any other which is stronger than himself: yet notwithstanding, this letteth not but that we may suffer those iniuries which are doone vnto vs, euen as God commaundeth vs, and not be ledde with any desire of reuenge. A man will inuere thereupon, that then it is not lawfull to complaine. Nay, that followeth not. For when our Lorde Iesus Christ forbiddeth all his to reuenge themselves, it is no let but that they may procure the punishment of outrages almuch as lyeth in them, so it be doone without all malice and heart burning. In deede I graunt that this is a rare case and verie harde to be founde. For as soone as a man is iniured, he is kindled straightway, and thereupon he conceiueth rancour, hee fretteth and fumeth, and when he cometh before the Iudge, he speweth forth his poyson in such sort, that any man may easily perceiue his heart and minde is enuened. Ye see then where the whole mischiefe lyeth, to wit in this, that we are set vpon reuenge, wee maintaine our owne prouate quarell, so that in effect we desire nothing else but y<sup>e</sup> which hath done vs harme, may haue his payment, and we by that meanes be reuenged. But if a man desire to liue at peace, and when any wrong is doone vnto him, he is ready to procure y<sup>e</sup> welfare of his enemye, then, so his heart bee still cleere, let him not forbear to complaine vnto some magistrate that the offender may be punished. And why? To the end that the euill may be repressed and practised no more; for it is a kind of granting of libertie to doe euill, when euill doings be winked at and scape vnpunished. But yet for all this, let vs beware that wee shroude not our selues vainly vnder this pretence of saying that wee may haue recourse vnto the lawe, so we conceiue no wicked desire nor enmitie: let vs not (say I) make this our buckler, as though we were escaped from the hande of God. If there be any hypocrisie in vs, let euery man haue an eye vnto himselfe, and if we breede any rancour in vs, so as we desire his harme & losse which hath wronged vs; let vs condempne ourselues before God. Although Iustice be ordained to maintaine vs, yet we deceiue ourselues if we bring thither any vnuly possion of our owne, and followe not this rule of rendering good for euill, and of praying for them which curse vs, and of doing good vnto them which persecute vs. If wee followe not this rule, we shalbe alwayes condemned before GOD. We may well protest, I seeke not to reuenge my selfe with mine owne handes, I attempt nothing but that which I may doe: but yet for all that, we abuse Iustice, when we proceede not with such vprightnesse and simplicitie as GOD commaundeth vs. Let vs therefore note wel, that although it be sayde in this place, that the Iudges shall heare the plainetifes and iudge their cause: yet it is not lawfull for any man to accuse his neighbour, if he doe it thorough enmitie and euill will. And this letteth not but that we ought alwayes to be patient for those iniuries which men doe vnto vs. For what doeth patience import? Not that wee shoulde not onely not bee set vpon reuenge; but also that wee should seeke to doe them good which persecute vs, and that we should pray for them which curse vs. This is the thing which we are commaunded, and therefore let vs followe it; and then it shall be lawfull for vs to flee for refuge vnto them, which are armed with authoritie to maintaine the good and to punish the wicked, and to repress all wrongful and outrageous dealings: we may then I say haue our recourse vnto them.

Nowe it followeth: That the wicked man shalbe condemned according to his desert. There is here no mention of such offences as were to be punished by death. For if there were murder committed, or adulterie, or such like things; they were punished by death. We haue seene howe God commaunded that all such kinds of wickednesse should be vtterly rooted out: but here he speaketh but of such iniuries as deserue some other chastisement. And that is the cause why it is sayde, That the malefactor shall be punished according to his desert, yet so that he shall not haue a boone for his stripes. For they vsed a whippe made of an oxe hide, to chastise them which dealt wrongfully and outrageously with their neighbour, alwayes prouided that the offence deserued not death. It is sayde: That they shall not passe the number of forty stripes. And why? To the intent that the man shoulde not be mangled or disfigured in his body, but remaine whole and sounde. Ye see then in effect what is here declared, to wit, first that the sentence must not be giuen in vaine: and secondly that some moderation must be vsed, so as the rigour be not excessiue. First I say the sentence must not be in vaine, but it must be put in execution. For sometimes yee shall see Iudges make a countenance of thundering at a man: howbeit, that shalbe but for some policie. When they are munded to let an offender escape they will condempne him to double and trebble punishment. What? [say they] This wicked fellowe is not worthy to liue. A man would maruaile to heare them: but when the thing should be put in execution, it falleth out to a mockerie. But our Lorde sheweth that they may not dally so with him: and that seeing the magistrats beare not the sworde in vaine nor are armed with authoritie in way of dallyaunce; they must vse their power, and when they haue pronounced sentence, they must afterwarde doe Iustice in executing of it. And that is the very cause why they are called the soules of the Lawe. For a lawe without magistrats, is as a bodie which hath neither sense nor mouing. And when the bodie is idle and stirreth not, it is a signe that the soule is altogether altogether blockish . And therefore when there are good lawes, and some outward forme of Iustice, and yet for all that there is no execution thereof; Inſomuch that it ſhalbe ſayde: Thus it muſt be, and yet the Statutes ſhalbe diſobeyed; yea and ſentence ſhalbe giuen, and yet ſlippe away vnexecuted: Surely it is a token of too groſſe blockiſhneſſe in thoſe which ſhold giue ſtrength to ſay law, y<sup>e</sup> it might not be vnprofitable. That the<sup>e</sup> is y<sup>e</sup> thing which God declareth in the firſt place For ſpeaking of the executing of ſentence, hee ſayeth: Lette the iuſt be declared for ſuch a one, and lette him which hath doone wrong bee condemned; lette him bee puniſhed according to his deſerts. Nowe hereby he giueth vs to vnderſtand that we muſt not lette any ſuch faultes ſcape as ought to be puniſhed; neither behoueth it vs alone to ſhewe our zeale in puniſhing of greates enormities: but alſo to conſider that ſmaller faultes drawe on the greater when they are let alone as buried . God therefore pronounceth expreſſly that the malefactor ſhall be puniſhed . And when? Not onely when hee hath offended ſo grievouſly that his fault is vnpardonable: but if the fault be litle, he will haue the puniſhment and correction unanſwerable thereunto: hee will not haue men to ſay: O it is a ſmall fault: lette it paſſe. Well, the matter is not great, he may ſcape the better cheape. No: howe ſmall ſocuer his offence be, hee will haue him ſmart for it, and be an example vnto others. Let vs therefore weigh this worde well, yea, let vs weigh it ſo much the better becauſe wee ſee that the praſtiſe noweadayes runneth cleane contrarie: for men ſeek nothing elſe but to leſſen their faultes . In deede a man ſhall not be altogether excuſed when he hath offended: but yet neuertheleſſe hee which doeth the wrong ſhall finde alwayes ſome aduocate to plead for him, yea euen without bearing the name of it. He ought to be as a Iudge in the caſe; and yet he will ſo mitigate the faulte as it ſhall not be puniſhable, faire gloſes ſhall ſtill be founde to colour the matter withall: O ſir will one ſay: There is ſuch a circumſtance, there is this and that to be conſidered in the caſe: & ſo the tenth part of mens faultes ſhal not be puniſhed . For why? They be not found ſogriuous and hainous as they be in deede. No, but yet for al y<sup>e</sup>, if the fault be ſmall, God will haue the chaſtiſement anſwearable thereunto; and if it be greates, he will haue the puniſhment the more ſeuere and grieuous . Thus yee ſee in effect what wee haue to beare in minde.

Nowe whereas G O D ſpeaketh thus vnto earthly Iudges, let vs knowe that for his parte he might well puniſh vs by his iuſtice, and that not for petie faultes, but for notorious tranſgreſſions . Who is ſo iuſt and innocent among vs, that he ſhould not himſelfe faultie before God, yea and that in many offences? Moreouer how many faults do we commit through vnadvisedneſſe, when we thinke not on them? And therefore if God vſed not great mercie towards vs, he ſhould liſt vp his hand againſt vs, and drowne vs in the pitte of deſtruction euerie minute of an hour . So then whereas wee liue ſtill and are preferred; lette vs acknowledge that it is thorough the infinite goodneſſe of our God . For if as touching earthly Iuſtice hee commandeth the leaſt faultes to be puniſhed, he might himſelfe by greater reaſon lay his hande vpon vs, euen to roote vs out of the earth, eſpecially conſidering the infinite number of faultes whereof we be guiltie before him . And if it be alleaged, Well then, ſeeing God is ſo mercifull, ought not men alſo to be mercifull, and ſo to followe him? It is eaſily anſwered: That G O D hath this libertie to forgiue, whome hee will: beſides this, he hath alſo his latter iudgement which hee referueth vnto himſelfe . We ſee in deede, that he beareth with the contenters of his maieſty, and with thoſe which are moſt harde hearted, and vnmenendable, he winketh at them, he maketh no reckening to puniſh them: but the time which he giueth them ſhall coſt the vry deere. They may well vſe that diueliſh proberie of theirs: That the time is woorth a mans monie: but it had bene better for them that they had bene reformed at firſt, than ſo to haue nourished the vengeance of God againſt themſelues. For after that they haue deſied him to y<sup>e</sup> vtmoſt, they ſhall in the ende feele that they abuſed his goodneſſe ouermuch, which waited their leaſure ſo long and allured them vnto repentance. God then referueth vnto himſelfe a iudgement which appeareth not yet vnto men . But as for mortall men which are Iudges, they muſt doe their due tie, they haue their rule and their leiſon deliuered vnto them, let them ſticke to that, and diſcharge themſelues . So then lette vs learne to vnderſtand, that our Lorde ſheweth himſelfe very gentle and pittifull towards vs, in that we liue ſtill in this worlde and are nourished ſtill at his handes, and in that he beareth ſo mercifully with vs. For why? Our faultes towards him are innumerable, and wee ſhoulde be killed with ſtripes if he vſed not this inextimable goodneſſe which I haue ſpoken of.

Moreouer ſecondly in this place here is mention made of moderating the chaſtiſementes which are vſed . For the Iudges ought alwayes to conſider that they ſitte in Iuſtice in the behalfe of G O D, and therefore into that ſeate which is holy and dedicated to the dooing of right, they may not bring their owne paſſions, to feede their owne cholet, and to deale croſſely and ouertwardly as they themſelues liſt . God therefore in ſaying, that there ſhalbe a certaine number of ſtripes, declareth expreſſly that there muſt be a reaſonable meaſure vſed in puniſhing . Verily when a man is not to be cleane rooted out, but to liue ſtill in the worlde, God will not haue him maimed that he ſhould become vnprofitable as touching his body . For what a thing were it if a man ſhould be ſo rigorouſly handled as to be made a cripple ſo as hee can no more helpe himſelfe? It were better hee had bene put to death at the firſt, than to be left to pine away in this worlde, and to be as a blocke. Nowe therefore when a man is to bee liſt aliue ſtill, G O D will haue the Iudges to haue haue a regarde that he be not beaten or scourged in such wise as he be disgriged or made vnable to helpe himselfe. That is the very thing which God will haue men to looke vnto. And for the same cause he setteth downe heere the number of stripes, to wit, fortie stripes, and that as the most. Nowe the Iewes being ful of Ceremonies tooke away one stripe: and it is the manner of men to adde alwayes somewhat to the lawe of God, as though all perfection were not contained in it. Truly GOD hadde sayde vnto them, Ye shall nor adde, nor diminish any thing from that which I haue spoken: but mennes affections are euer boyling, and men will alwayes bee wiser than it is lawfull for them to bee. And that is the very cause of the inuenting so many rules & obseruations; of the which fort there are a number of things in the Popedome. And why? it is good to doo so (say they): a man can not do too much. In dede a man can not do too much in conforming himselfe to the will of God. For howe great soeuer our care bee in that behalfe, yet our weaknesse will not suffer vs to be linked thereunto in such sorte as were requisite. But to adde any thing vnto that which GOD commaundeth, is alwayes an ouerweening and presumption worthe to be condemned. Yet neuertheless it was the manner of the Iewes to giue thirtie and nine stripes. And why? They thought thus with themselues: Oh it is to be doubted least when a man hadde giuen fourtie stripes hee coulde not withhold himselfe from giuing one more, and so by that meanes he shold goe beyonde the Law. Ye say well: but our lord had no respect of such small tryfles. He ordained onely that there should be a moderation in all the chastisements, which were made: I meane alwayes when the offence deserued not death, as we haue declared afore. But as touching this obseruation, it hath bene a long time among the Iewes it is yet in vse among them at this day. Saint Paule sheweth it where hee reporteth that he was fise times whipped. For albeit that at that time the Iewes had no iurisdiction nor rule in their owne handes, yet some kinde of chastisement was left vnto the in their Synagogues. so that when any offended among them, if the crime touched not the publike estate, they had authoritie to correct him after the manner of their countrey. And Saint Paule sayth that he was beaten in this wise fise times. And I receiued (sayth he) fortie stripes saue one. When he sayth saue one, he giueth vs to vnderstande, that the Iewes neuer tormented him but with extreme rigour: I meane as farre as their power stretched. For if they coulde haue killed him and eaten him vpp, they would haue done it: they sought nothing else but to teare Saint Paule in peeces as farre as their rage and furie draue them. But because it was not lawfull for them to passe any farther, they scourged him vnto thirtie and nine stripes, according as it was sayde, that the punishment must be made according to the desert. But a man could finde no such desert in Saint Paule: for it was for the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ that he suffered such punishment. But we see the crueltie of the Iewes who could not be satisfied without they had vsed the vtmost extremitie that they coulde against Saint Paule. Beholde how hypocrites would obscure the lawe of God in vsing of some formalitie: but in the meane time they misse alwayes in the substance. So much the more therefore ought we to be warned to haue an eye vnto Gods meaning: and when wee see what it pleaseth him to commaunde vs, lette vs holde ourselues vnto it, let euerie man stay himselfe thereupon, let vs not turne aside from it neither vnto the right hande nor vnto the left, and in so doing we can not erre. And that is the thing in effect which we haue to beare in minde vpon this place. Nowe if such chastisements must be vsed for the smaller iniurie, where a man can not complaine of any great matter, as that his arme is cut off, or such a wounde is giuen him as will sticke by him all the time of his life, but only that one hath hurte him either in his good name or in his bodie: if God (I say) will haue such a fault so punished, and that the malefactor shall not escape; what shall be done to those faultes which are more haynous? Shall the Iudges bee helde excused if they lette them scape? Doubtlesse nay. And therefore let vs conclude, that seeing God will haue the rigour of Iustice vsed, (howbeit with such moderation as it behooueth,) euen where the violence that hath bene doone is not of any greater importance. Surely it is a much more likelihood in reason, that if there be any greater trespassse committed, (as if a man be maimed in his members) the offender shall not in that behalfe be spared, (as we haue seene in an other place) that an eye shall be giuen for an eye, an arme for an arme, a foote for a foote. Infomuch that if a man haue offended in such a case, it is not for men to shewe mercie; but the malefactor must passe vnder the edge of the sward, and be made an example for all others, to the intent that euery man by that meanes may be occasioned to holde himselfe short from presuming to offer any such like outrage vnto his neighbors. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to beare in minde.

And farther, if it bee expressly sayde: that no one man shall be suffered to haue wrong, but that hee which doeth it shall bee chastised and punished according to his desert, lette vs note that if anie man passe his boundes so farre, as to sette himselfe against a whole state, as it were in defiance both of God and the world, hee must bee the more grieuously punished: and that if the Iudges and Magistrates suffer such wickednesse vnpunished, there is no excuse for them. And why? For if there be a poore man, a man of no account, such a one as men might bobbe out his eyes, and hee complaine, God will haue him hearde, yea and hee wil haue right done vnto him. Howe much more then, if there be as it were a waterfludde, that ouerfloweth all, wherein euery man hath interest, and the whole state of a people standeth in hazard by dissention? If that bee not repressed, wee must not looke that some one man alone will cry out vnto GOD, but the ayre must needes ring loude with outcries: in so much that all the confusions and disorders which wee shall haue suffered will bee as outcries and complaynings vnto GOD against them which haue not vsed the authoritie and power which was committed vnto them. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to beare in minde vpon this place.

Nowe it is sayde by and by after: That the Ox which treadeth ouer the Corne shal not be misfed, and that wee must not binde his chappes together, so as he shoulde not open them to feede. No doubt but that in this place GOD meant to perswade men vnto gentlenes and humani-

tie: as before he forbad vs to keepe backe the wages of the hyreling, which hath bestowed himselfe in our seruice. And why? Bicause he sustaineth his life by his labour. It were therefore an ouergreat eruelte to defraude him of his labour when hee hath doone his worke. And so in this place it is expressly spoken of the ox which laborerth: as if our Lord had saide, that vprightnes and equitie ought to be ministred euen vnto the brute beastes. The Ox cannot complain though he bee defrauded of his foode when he hath doone his worke: but God taketh pitie of him, bicause he is his creature; and hee will not haue vs to abuse the beastes beyonde measure, but to nourish them and to haue care of them. And that is the cause why Salomon saith in the Prou. 21. 10.

12. Chapter of his proverbs; That the iust man hath a care of his beast. If a man spare neyther his horse, nor his Ox, nor his Ass, therein hee bewrayeth the wickednesse of his nature. And if he say: tush I care not, for it is but a brute beast: [I answer again:] Yea but it is a creature of God.

Psal. 104. 27

It is said that the goodnesse and mercie of God extendeth to all the beastes of the earth. It is not said onely of men whom God hath made after his owne Image and likeness: but the beastes also are comprised therein as well as they. If God vouchsafe to consider of beastes, if he vouchsafe to haue a care of them; what ought wee to doe which are but poore wormes of the earth, which are nothing but rottennesse? Wee thinke it were much against our honour to take care of beastes: but whē God gaue them vs in subiection for our vse, it was vnder no other condition, but y<sup>e</sup> employing them to our labour, wee should also vse kindness and gentlenes towardes them. And Salomon saith, not onely that the iust man hath a care of his beast, but he saith also that the bowels of the wicked man are cruell: as if he had said, a frowarde and churlish man hath no pitie nor compassion in him, no not euen towardes his like; he tormenteth his brethren, hee trampleth on one vnder his feete, he oppresseth another, he would suck the marrow out of a poore mans bones if he might possibly do it, he would eat his flesh, he would drinke his blood: to be short, there is nothing but crueltie in him which is of a malicious nature. But if there be any equitie and vprightnes in vs, we wil shewe it not onely towardes our next neighbours & such as are of y<sup>e</sup> same bro-thhood with vs, but euen vnto y<sup>e</sup> brute beastes also: bicause God hath formed & created them, and bicause he vouchsafeth to preferre them through his prouidence, and prouideth them of foode, and (at a word) careth for them: and lastly bicause that when he did put them in subiection vnto vs, he did it with condition y<sup>e</sup> wee should handle them gently: that as we deale rightfully with men, so we should vse the like ductie euen towardes the brute beastes, which haue no reason, nor vnderstanding, nor cannot complaime of the iniuries which are done vnto them.

But yet neuer thelesse God hath not in this place respected simply the brute beastes: as S. Paule also sheweth in the ninth Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. Hath God care of Oxen, (saith he?) S. Paul meaneth not by these wordes, y<sup>e</sup> God careth not for the beastes which he hath created, as wee haue already declared: for then shoulde hee gainesay all the holy scripture: and experience also sheweth vs that God must needes haue a care to prouide for the beasts. For the earth yeeldeth not fruit of it selfe; but as it hath vertue giuen vnto it from above. When we see herbs and such like things to grow, we are giuen to vnderstand thereby, that God is the puruicour for the whole world, euen for the beastes of the earth, and for the birds, and for all things. He prouideth them of foode to nourish them withal. By this (I say) we see, that God hath a care of oxen: but S. Paul meaneth y<sup>e</sup> his principal care is not for them. He treateth purposely of the ministers maintenance, and sayth, that they ought to be fedde and susteined, and not skanted of their liuing; and he sheweth that seeing they are appointed of God to deliuer forth foode for mens soules, it were an ouergreat wickednesse & crueltie to abridge them of such wages as is due vnto them. And hee will hath to make them the more ashamed which would play the niggardes in this behalfe, he saith vnto them: What? God hath not onely ordained that the man which laborerth should be fedde and maintained, but hee speaketh of oxen also. Is it bicause he hath a care of them? That is to say, is it bicause that oxen are in the highest and most soueraigne degree? No. For we know that the oxen were created for mens sakes. Let vs cast our eye on all things whether they be aboue or beneath, in heaven or in earth; and we shall see that all is for our vse and profit. When God created the sunne, it was not to lighten himselfe, but to giue light vnto vs. As much is to be said of the Moone and of the starres: they are ordayned to serue vs, as it hath bin elsewhere already declared. Agayne, although the earth bring forth herbes for the brute beastes, yet neuer thelesse all is referred vnto men, and God would haue vs to acknowledge therein his fatherly goodnesse, and the great loue which he vseth towardes vs. Seeing then it is so that

1. Cor. 9. 10

50

GOD hath neither created nor sustayned the brute beastes, but onely in respect of referring all vnto the vse of manne: Let vs knowe that when hee sayeth wee must not defraude the beastes which haue traauayld for vs, but nourish and sustayne them: it is to the intent that wee shoulde learne to exercise all manner of kindnesse, and that when men haue spent both their sweate and bloud in our seruice, it standeth much more with reason that wee shoulde not deale niggardly with them by withholding from them their due wages, but rather that wee shoulde sustaine them, nor onely by paying them their dayly wages and by giuing them sustenance and foode, but also by giuing them wherewith to maintayne them: for there are some which coulde bee contented at three dayes ende to haue a poore man killed, when he hath serued them; for all is one with them, so they may reape any profite by him. But contrariwise God sheweth vs that we ought to deale so friendly with those which labour for vs, that wee grieue them not beyond measure, but that they may continue and bee occasioned to giue GOD thanks in their trauaile. For there is no doubt but God ment in this place, to correct the crueltie which is in the riche who employ poore folke in their seruice, and yet recompence them not for their paynes.

On the other side hee sheweth also that hee which is ydle and vnprofitable deserueth not to be nourished or regarded. For we see that God hath commaunded euen the beastes to labour that they may be nourished. Seeing it is so, what shalbe saide of men who ought to consider for what ende they are created. A beast in deede hath his naturall inclination: but hee hath no discretion to say: There is a God which hath created mee. There is no such thing in a beast. And yet God putteth beastes in subiection vnto men, to the intent that they should not be vn-profitable. Therefore if a man who hath reason and ought to thinke thus: Gods will is that I should labour; and it is a general law for all of vs, that we must eate our bread in the sweate of our browes; if that man for all this, will be vnprofitable, and not vouchsafe to put his fingers to any worke; he is not worthy (as faint Paule saith) to be nourished and sustained. So then on the one side let vs note that God meant to perswade euery man to vse equitie and rightnesse towards men, and not to tread them vnder our feete which serue vs, nor to defraude them of that which appertaineth vnto them: for that were crueltie. And on the other side let vs note, that those which haue not wherewith to finde themselves, must take heede that they labour diligently euery one in his vocaion, so as they be not condemned by the example of the oxen. For if they doe not, the brute beastes must rise vp in Iudgement to condemne such as bee ydle and employ themselves to nothing, seeing God hath called them to serue their neighbours.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue doone, in such sorte that returning vnto him, we may craue pardon and mercie at his hands: to the intent that being gouerned by his holy spirite, hee may guide vs in all things according to his hol<sup>y</sup> will, vntill that hauing drawn vs vnto himselfe, and ridde vs of our infirmitie and vices, hee cloth vs fully with his righteoutnesse. And so let vs all say: Almighty God and heauenly father, &c.

On Thursday the xiiij. of Februarie, 1556.

The CXLij. Sermon, which is the second vpon the fise and twentieth Chapter.

5 If there be two brethren dwelling together, and the one of them die with children: the wife of the dead shall not marrie abroad to a straunger, but her brother in law shall come in to her, and take her to wife, and marrie himselfe with her.

6 And the first borne which shee shall beare, shall succede in the name of his brother which is dead, that his name be not put out of Israell.

7 And if the man will not take his sister in law, then his sister in lawe shall goe vp to the gate vnto the elders, and say, my husbandes brother refuseth to rayse vp vnto his brother a name in Israell, and hee will not marrie with mee.

8 Then the Elders of the Citie shall call him, and speake vnto him if hee stand in it and say: I will not take her:

9 Then shall his sister in lawe come vnto him, before the elders, and loofe his shoe from his foote, and spit in his face, and aunswere and say: So shall it be done vnto the man that will not build vp his brothers house.

10 And his name shall bee called in Israell: The house of him, whose shoe is pluckt off.

11 When men striue together one against an other, if the wife of the one come neere to ridde her husband out of the hands of him that smiteth him, and put forth her hande and take him by the priuities,

12 Then shalt thou cutte off her hande: and thine eye shall not pittie her

We haue heere a lawe which might seeme altogether superfluous among vs: for as it is at this day out of vse, so the reason also of it remaineth no longer. And therefore we must take it patiently, if all the things which are declared heere doe not wholly belong vnto vs, or else if they bee not so fully vnderstoode of vs, as we meete: and yet for all that we will assay to gather some profitable doctrine out of it. For indeede, God hath left nothing in his lawe, but wee may fare the better by it, if hee giue vs the wisdom to knowe howe to vse it. First wee see howe Gods will was that the houses should bee maintayned in Israell. And this was not for any such respect as men haue commonly in the world; for noble men would be spoken of after their death, and therefore they would build vp a kinde of immortality heere on earth. God meant not to foode this follie among men. And verily if we were so wise as we should be, we would consider, that lyke as our lyfe passeth, and glydeth, and vanisheth away out of hand; so GOD would not haue our heartes settled here belowe, to desire to bee renowned vpon earth: but that as our inheritance is in heauen, so wee should consider that it ought to suffice vs that wee haue our names written in the booke of lyfe. This is it wherein our reioyng ought to be, as our Lorde Iesus Christ telleth his disciples. So then wee haue to note, that GOD meant not to rocke men asleepe in this foolish ambition, whereunto they are ouermuch giuen; to wit, to bee of fame and renowne heere: hee had another respect than so. And that was, that by cause the parting of the land of Chanaan was made according to his will, hee would haue this order maintained and no change made to the contrary, so as the inheritances should returne alwayes to the same they were at the first, as we know they did in the yeere of iubilie. In respect wherof when a man deceased without children, to the intent there should be some stocke of him, and that the kindred should alwayes continue, and that the inheritances should not goe out of y name; it is said, that one of the kinfmen should take the wydowe to wife: although in truth, before y people were come into the land of Chanaan, we see that this law or custome was used through out the east country, to wit, that a woman whē she took an husband out of any house, bound her selfe, (in case that she had no childe, but her husband departed without issue) to take another husband of the same house: which thing we see to be true in the example of Thamar whē she married Iudas sonne: and we must not imagine that this serued but for one house only, but that it was rather a generall lawe growen vpon custome (as we say): It was therefore a strait bond or rather bondage for the women. For if a woman married in any familie, it was vnder this condition: Is my husband dead? I must take an other of the same house, yea if he offer himselfe I must take him, and he must haue children of me, and that to raise vp a stocke vnto him, who is already dead. For the first childe that she brought forth, bore not his name that begat it, but his who was already dead.

Nowe when the Paynims brought vp this custome, no doubt but they were ledde thereunto through this worldly vanity wherof I spake. And heereby wee see, that there be many thirges lyke, which notwithstanding are not of one selfsame qualitie. And why? Because their end is diuerse. There are which would haue a seede and stocke rayled vnto one which is dead: and why would they so? To the intent that their name should not perish, or be cleane put out. So yee see that pride driueth them vnto that thing. But I haue already told you that we must hasten to finish the course of this life, knowing that God calleth vs vnto an cuerduing estate, and therefore we ought to forget this world: and that if we be held backe by this vaine glory, of being heere in honour and estimation, it is a shutting of the gate of heauen against vs. Let vs therefore take heede howe wee wedde our selues vnto this foolish desire, that men should speake of vs after our death: and let vs knowe, that God will haue vs to bee of no account in this world, that wee may be restored vnto our heavenly inheritance. But let vs note in the meane time that God hath a contrary respect: for when he gaue the land of Chanaan to his people to inherit, hee ordayned that if a man which had taken a wife and doone his parte to leaue issue behinde him, departed without issue, an other of his kinsmen should supply that default, that hee myght haue as if were an adoptiue childe after his death. And why did God this? To the intent that the order which hee had established by the hande of Iosua, should not perishe, and that the partitions of the Lande should continue as they were first made. We see then what the intent and meaning of this law is: the effect wherof was not to nuzzle men in that foolish desire which wee haue condemned. And moreover God meant to shew the priuiledge which hee had giuen to the stocke of Abraham, cūen for his sake who was the cheefe of it. For whē God chose Abraham he sanctified all those which were to come of his race, he had chosen them for his Church: he would therefore haue the Iewes stirred vp to magnifie him for vouchsafing of them such honour as to choose them about all the worlde; hee woulde haue them to knowe howe much worth this adoption of his was. Indeede it is true that they abused this goodnesse of his, as well as others. For they were puffed vp with exceeding pryde, as who woulde say: We are the holie stocke, wee are the royall priesthoode; but yet for all that, they minded not this point, that whatsoever they had, they enjoyed it through the meere goodnesse and fauour of G O D: and therefore that they ought not to bee proude of it; but rather to acknowledge themselues so much the more bound vnto him. Yee see how the Iewes peruerted the grace and fauour of God which hee bestowed on them: and yet hee exercised them in as sundry fortes, as hee might, to cause them to acknowledge the priuiledge which he gaue them in choosing them for his Church, and as it were for his owne children. As if nowadays we would onely make a buckler of baptisme, and of the Lords supper, and of the other giftes and benefites of God, and yet continue an heathenish kinde of people, dissolve in life, and giuen ouer to all wickednesse: it were a point of notable treachery in vs. For G O D meaneth not that those gifts which he bestoweth on vs shoulde bee but as vaine pictures: his will is, that they shoulde bee profitable vnto vs. Therefore when we speake of baptisme, when we speake of the holy supper, when we speake of the order of the church, it standeth vs in hand to haue an eye vnto the vse of those things, for which God hath ordained them among vs. Yet notwithstanding it behoueth vs to acknowledge it to be a singular yea and an inestimable benefite which God bestoweth vpon vs, in y we haue libertie to assemble our selues together in his name, to cal vpon him, to make confession of our faith, to be taught at his mouth, and to be more and more confirmed in the truth of the lawe and of the Gospell: we ought (I say) to esteeme this treasure, and to exercise our selues therein. Nowe then for as much as God had chosen the stocke of Abraham, hee woulde haue the Iewes to acknowledge it for an excellent dignitie, that they were blessed in such wise about the rest of all the world. But let vs note that (as I haue told you) this was in fauour of their cheefe head. For it was not sayde, In thy seedes shall the blessing bee; but, In thy seede. Now this seede betokeneth not all those which were descended from the stocke of Abraham: for Ismael was cut off from it, although hee was Abrahams sonne according to the fleshe: and so was Elau also. Therefore when a stocke is named, wee must vnderstand a body, and a body presupposeth an head. So then let vs note, that this dignitie which was in the person of Abraham had his roote and foundation in our Lorde Iesus Christ. And therefore whereas it was G O D S will that the families and kindreds shoulde be mayntayned; it was not to the intent the Iewes shoulde place their whole nobilitie in this worlde, to buse themselues there: but hee meant rather to turne their mindes vnto him who was promysed to bee their redeemer, and to make them knowe that because hee shoulde come of their race and their lynage, they ought by great reason to be partakers of that benefite which hee brought vnto them. And so this Lawe referred to direct the Iewes vnto our Lorde Iesus Christ, and they were put in minde heereby, that G O D had a care to keep them in this bonde of onebody, because of the head which hee had ordayned. Thus wee see that albeit the order which was vsed in olde tyme vnder the Lawe, be no longer nowadayes in vse; yet notwithstanding we may gather some profite by it, because wee are giuen to vnderstand thereby, that before our Lorde Iesus Christ was manifested in the flesh, God ordayned that lawe in fauour of him. Let vs therefore acknowledge, that we in these dayes ought to be stirred vp by this place to maintayne our selues by raying vp spirituall feede in Israell, not in the visible Israell, or that which is according to nature: for we knowe that the Church of God hath his reache throughout all the world: we knowe that nowadays the children must not be borne of flesh and blood, as it is sayde in the first chapter of S. Iohn: but of the will of God and of his onely grace. Therefore let vs take paynes and enforce our selues to the utmost of our power, to raise vp this spirituall feede vnto God, that the Church may be preserued and encreased more & more. Thus yee see in effect what we haue to beare in minde.

Nowe by the way wee see what vprightnesse ought to be vsed in bondes. For because the women for their parte were bounde in such wise, it was requisite that there shoulde be a mutual bond also on the mens sides. There is no reason that y one partie shoulde be bound, and the other left in full liberty. Yee see then how we be warned in this place, that if two parties doe contract or covenant together, the one must not be greued, & the other borne withall: for that were vniust and against al reason.

And we ought to apply this vnto al contracts, couenants and bargains which we be to deale in. Therefore if in bargaining with a man I stand altogether vpon mine own aduantage and be ouer straiely laced: in so doing I am wicked. And if I say: let him loke to his own profit if hee will; well, but yet shoulde a man haue so much honestie in him, as not to pinch the party too much; though he be able to compass it. We think all is lawfull so a man yeeld to that which we would haue him. Oh (say we) seeing it was his owne will to bind himselfe so, what wrong do I to him? Yea, but his agreeing to al thy deniaundes was by compulsion. And againe the poore man was so ouerpressed, that hee perceived not the damage which hee ran into. Indeede hee agreed to al that was demanded of him; howbeit, y was because hee was in neede, & wist not how to leape otherwise. Let vs looke to it therefore y we beare such an euill hand, as one mā bee not troden vnder foot by another.

And

And when there passeth any bond betwene man and man; let it bee indifferent for both parties, so as either of them may seele himselfe releued. Thusee see one point more which we haue to beare in minde vpon this place.

Leuit. 18. 6.

Nowe heere a man might demaunde howe it comes to passe that GOD woulde haue the brother which fouer liued to take the wife of him that was dead, seeing that such marriage was not lawfull, as we see in the eyghteenth chapter of Leuiticus: Seeing it was incest for one to take his brothers wyfe after his death, howe happeneth it that GOD not onely permitteth, but also inioyneth it? The Iewes confesse that this is not spoken of brethren in the first degree, that is, of borne brothers as we call them, but rather of such as were further off of kin; and the verie woorde it selfe also dooth properly extend no further than to such as might contract marriage together. In dede in the example which we haue afore alledged, the brethren which were of the first degree rooke Thamar to wyfe, and GOD rooted them out for their filthinesse; but the Lawe was not yet made. And in the East Countrey they had no great regard of honestie, but behaued themselues lyke beastes in marrying, in so much that they made no conscience to couple the brother and sister together like dogges and bitches. There was (I say) such wickednesse vsed in that Countrey, yea euen among the kinges and Princes. In dede they be the persons which take vnto themselues greatest leaue and libertie in this behalfe: but the common sort (as I tolde you) did the like too. And according to this common custome Iuda (after the deareh of his eldest sonne) gaue his second sonne also vnto Thamar. And herein wee see the rather, what it is to bee carryed away by custome. When wee haue no other consideration than to doe according to the custome which hath bene maintained afore tyme: among men, we fall into horrible confusion: & when one followes anothers fashion after y<sup>e</sup> sorte, there is no rule. But what our men do, let vs learne to behaue our selues according vnto the wil of God, and not turne either to this side or that side, but abide stable and constant in that which God liketh of. That is y<sup>e</sup> thing which we must beare in mind, when we see that things haue bin so farre out of square through out the world, and that the fathers of old time haue bin blemished with them: for when wee dwell in a lawlesse Countrey where euery man hath the bridle laid on his neck and may do what him liketh, we be then as in a tempest or in a whirle winde, a man cannot stay himselfe but that the winde will driue him to and fro. The like force hath euill custome; and therefore we ought the more as it were to imprison our selues vnder the obedience of God.

Let vs nowe returne vnto this present law. It is sayde that the next brother shall take the wife of his brother deceased, without Children. When we heare the woorde Brother, according as the Hebrewes also take it, wee may not restraic it vnto this first degree of borne brother: but of coufcs both in y<sup>e</sup> first and second degree, as wee call the which are brothers & sisters children. For y<sup>e</sup> Iewes do vie this word Brother generally, and not as wee doe: and therefore one lawe must bee conferred with an other. For when it is sayde: Let the brother take the wife of him which is deade: It is to bee vnderstoode so farre forth, as it is lawfull and permitted, and so farre forth as GOD hath established the degrees of marriage: to as incest bee neuer commuted. Nowe wee haue the meaning of the law.

And it is sayde exprelly: If the brethren dwell together. For that a woman when shee taketh an husbände in an house, should binde her selfe in bondage generally vnto all the kindred, were against reason: and bondes as well as al other lyke things, ought to bee bounded within some measure. Where things are set downe without limitation, there followeth confusion by and by. If a man should by his last will appoint so many heyres as could not bee numbred; and therewithall would haue his will to endure vnto the ende of the worlde; what a confused thing were that? As much is to bee sayde of other like things. And therefore if a woman should be bounde to marrie in a house till the whole kindred had refused her: in what a strange case were shee? But heere it is spoken of those kinns which are nigh at hande, euen of such as dwell together, that they may bee knowne. For if a woman should be bounde shee wotterh not vnto whome, and confrayned to take one which the neuer sawe: shee should be kept vnder too cruell bondage, and there were no reason in it. And therefore our Lord meant to limit this law within certaine bondes.

It followeth, That the woman shall make hire request to bee provided for. Not that shee was to beginne to seeke hir an husbänd; for it pertayned vnto the next of the kinne to come and demaunde hir for his wife. But in this place the case concerneth the setting of the woman at libertie. For if none of the kinne would haue hir, shee was to take hir leaue after this manner, by offering hir selfe to accept the condition which God had ordayned hir. For when a man is bounde vnto any condition, and is desirous to bee ridde of it, and to fet himselfe free; he must offer himselfe to doe his duetie so as men may vnderstand that it was not long of him, that the former bond stode not still in force. The thing then which God hath ordayned in this place is, That the woman shall come vnto the Elders of the Citie, that for as much as none of the kin would take hir, they myght seee shee was ready to doe hir duetie, and that thereupon shee myght prouide for hir selfe, where GOD would appoint her. And therefore shee was to come before the Iudges and to cause the next of the kinne, (that is to say, him which might lawfully take hir to wife,) to be called: and the Iudges were to doe what they coulde to perswade him.

For our Lorde meant not to compell men to take those women, although hee might wishly ynough haue done it : But he had this consideration; That forced and constrained marriages, neuer come to good end. In deede God might haue precisely let downe and commanded, that the next kinman should haue bene bound to marrie the wife of him that was deceas'd without heires : GOD might haue so commaunded. Why doth he then permit that a man might to his shame refuse hir ? Verily bycause that if the husband and the wife doe not agree and loue together, it is an vnhallowing of marriage, or rather (to speake properly) no marriage at all. For the good will is the chiefe bond : in so much that it behooueth the husband to acknowledge his wyfe to bee as his owne body, and the one halfe of himselfe. Shee is bone of my bone (sayeth Adam) being inspired of God. Wherein hee giueth a common rule vnto all men : for it was not spoken in respect of Eue onely, but of that which must bee kept and obserued for a rule vnto the ende of the worlde. Seeing then that this mutual agreement is required in marriage : let vs note that our Lorde meant not precisely to constrain kinsmen to marrie those women which were wydowes and without children : but hee was contented to release them somewhat in this behalfe. And hereof wee are to gather this instruction; that when a man is to take a wife and to marrie hir, hee must take hir of his owne minde and good wil, knowing that where there is no true and sounde loue : there can bee nothing but confusion, and wee may not looke that GOD will prosper such marriages. For the issue of them can not bee but ill, when both parties seeke not first to loue together in the name of GOD; that they may lue together in quietnesse of conscience. And let fathers also haue this regard. For what a thing were it for mortall men to take more vpon them, than God himselfe would doe? And yet he is the chiefe and soueraigne father of all : neuertheless hee will not force any to take such a one to wyfe as hee liketh not of. In deede GOD is grieued and angry with him which will not take hir, and setteth on him a marke of reproche and shame. But yet for all this, he which hath infinite power, hee which hath all soueraignie ouer vs in all things without exception, euen hee (I say) doeth vse a measure, hee stoopeth vnto vs, and hee beareth with vs, that wee may see hee woulde presse and ouercharge no man. And what then shall we thinke of a man who is lesse than nothing, if hee will needs marrie his sonne or his daughter at his owne lust and pleasure ? It is verily contrarie to the whole order of nature : nay it is a blasphemie against God for a mortall creature, and a worne of the earth, to presume so farre as to take more vpon him, than GOD himselfe hath taken vpon him. So then such as haue children, let them take diligent heede when they intende to marrie them, that they obserue this reasonableness and rightfulness, so as they doe not compell them to marrie.

Nowe morcouer it is sayd in this place : That the Iudges may persuade the man, and if they see him to stande stiffe in his opinion, then the woman shall plucke off his shoe from his foote, and spite in his face, as by waye of reproche : and shee shall say, GOD doe so vnto all them which will not raise vp a stocke in Israel. Nowe heere wee haue farther to note, that God would haue the Iudges speake vnto the man to persuade him as farre as they were able. And if the man woulde not consent vnto them, they should content themselves with this kinde of punishment. Whereby wee see that the Magistrates and other Iusticers ought to abstaine from vsing any force and violence in that thing which they cannot simply commaund. As for example : if there bee a thing which is good, and yet there is no lawe for it : and I being of power and authoritie would constrain a man to doe what I thinke good; were there any reason in it? For the law constraineth him not to doe it, and I ought not to passe those boundes. Let vs therefore note wel, that such as are armed with the sword, must containe themselves within their boundes: and not challenge to themselves any Lawes lesse libertie to say: What? I commaunde nothing but that which is good, and therefore yee must doe it. No: For there is no constraining, where there is no Lawe. When there is a Lawe a man must holde himselfe to the rule thereof: but yet in the ende the poynt that must bee come vnto, is to presume to bring men into no further subiection than the Lawe byndeth them vnto. Ye see then what wee are farther to beare in minde vpon this place.

Now as touching the shame that was done in plucking off of their shoes, & in spitting in their faces, it serued to prouoke men to discharge their duties the better. Yet neuertheless if a man had rather sustaine this reproche, than to take wife against his wyll, hee was discharged thereof. And heerein wee see (as I haue already tolde you) that GOD sheweth the authoritie of a Father in beyng grieued when the families was not maintayned in Israel: and yet was hee contented to beare with such as could not finde in their heartes to stoop to that voke, bicause it was so hard. Therefore if any had rather to suffer such shame, than to take a wife after that maner, he came to declare it publicly.

But wee must nowe returne vnto that which I sayd in the beginning, namely that there is not now any carnall kinred priuiledged as the race and linage of Abraham was. For God adopteth vs nowadayes vnder condition, that wee be ingrafted by faith into his Church: and so made the children of Abraham. For so much therefore as the kinred which we haue at this day is spirituall, the order of raising vp issue to succcede [in the inheritance of] houses, landes, or meadows, is no longer in force. And why? For it behoued that the stocke of Abraham should bee maintained vntil the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And yet was the cause why the land of Canaan was giuen in possession vnto the people. Nowadayes the whole earth is the dwelling place of the children children of God; & although they be dispersed throughout the whole worlde, yet are they knit in one body by agreeing in one consent of faith to call vpon G O D: and although they do it in diuerse tongues, yet it skilleth not seeing that one selfe same spirit gouerneth them, and that they haue all one hope of the euerlasting saluation which is promised vnto them. Those are the things wherein they are all knit and conioyned together. Seeing it is so, let vs note that G O D will haue euerie of vs nowadaies for his owne part to do his indeour, to multiplie the church. And the seed of Abraham is no longer begotten according to the fleshe through carnall marriage, but it is begottee of the incorruptible seede of Gods worde, as Saint Peter saith. And when God vouchsafeth vs his grace to winne anie man, and to bring him into his flocke, then are we as spirituall Fathers. And that also is the verie cause why the Ministers of the worde bee called Fathers: and likewise the Church hath generally y name and title of Mother; because she conceiuethe the children of God. Nowe albeit that all haue not that office of Preaching the worde of God, yet a priuate person being a member of the Church, may begette spirituall children vnto God, if hee haue occasion and abilitie to winne a poore soule & to enlighten him with the faith of the Gospell. Let vs then bestowe our paynes to this ende, knowing that if the carnall marriage was so precious vnder the lawe in the sight of God: Surely the meane whereby we be made members of our Lorde Iesus Christ, is a thing now farre deerer and of greater estimation with him. And therefore let euerie man employe himselfe that way to the vttermost of his poore. For here is no forcing of vs to marie against our willes, but of the winning of wiuies vnto our lord Iesus Christ, that by the multiplying of the Church, we may alwayes bee the more firmly linked vnto him. Seeing then that our condition is more gentle and sweet than that which was vnder the lawe, we ought to be stirred vp so much the more to the discharging of that dutie, and we shall haue so much the lesse excuse if we be carelesse and negligent therein. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in minde in effect as touching this Lawe. And nowe wee see that although it bee no longer in vse, yet may we gather some profite from it to bee edified thereby: For of all the things which the holy Ghost hath vouchsafed to leaue vnto vs, there is none vnprofitable, if wee haue the wisedome (as I told you) & the discretion to applie it wel vnto our vse. It followeth, That if in women be as strife, and one of their wiuies come to deliuer her husbande, and take his aduersarie by the prinities, her hand shall bee cut off. This lawe becometh in effect that honestie is to be kept continually: And that if a woman forgoe shamefastnesse, it is a wicked and intollerable thiong, and therefore ought to be punished to the intent honest sobrietie and stayednes in conuersation may be maintayned among the people of God, and no lawlesse libertie of shamefull beastlinesse suffered. That is the thing in effect wherat God aimed in this law. And so let vs note that vnder one example, he meant to giue vs a generall instruction as touching all things which wee ought to take heede of. Now as concerning the speciall case which is set downe here, we see howe the woman might haue somewhat for her excuse, when she cometh to helpe her husbande; she might alleadge, that she tooke not great heede, and that she was astonished or amased. but God holdeth her not excused for all that. Nowe then if euen in trouble, in daunger, and amasednesse, God will haue honestie regarded, what shall wee say to it, if when no necessitie presseth vs, when nothing constraineth vs, when we are in no such furie as that we alleadge: I was afrigted, I knewe not what I did: Yet euen then if wee bee giuen ouer to leawednesse and commit heathenish and dissolute deede, ought that to be tollerable among the people of God? No verilie. And therefore let vs not stande so much vpon the present example, as regarde the whole intent and meaning of our God: to wit, that he will haue vs honest in all our behauiours and in all our conuersation, and not dissolute and shamelesse. For if it come once to that point, we by and by open the gappe vnto al wickednes, and one wickednesse will drawe on an other. Therefore like as fornication is forbidden vs, euen so consequently all that which may leade vs thereto is likewise forbidden vs. As for example, what else is filthie and leawde talke, than a kinde of baudrie? And therefore Saint Paul saith that they are able to infect good manners. Nowe when one speweth out as filthie speeches as any may bee, yet will hee say that hee meane no harme, and that hee doth it innocently: For when folke sing their vile and bawdie songes, their common saying is: I meane no harme. Such folke would make God a lyer. Nowe if they bee not in any wise to bee borne with when they commit euill through ouersight: what is to bee saide to them, when they doe it of set purpose? Albeit they say: I meane it not: yet (as yee see) their spuing out of such leawde speeches breedeth corruption of manners, and yet they cease not to doe euill still. What confusion then must they breed when wee knowe that they do it of a set and wilfull malice: Therefore if there were a good and godlie reformation among vs, such lewd speeches should not haue their swinge. And seeing that they serue but to infect all, so nothing may remaine sounde and holy in our conuersation, are they to bee excused which corrupt good manners after that fashion? Yee see what the thing is, whereunto God had an eye in this Lawe. And at this day this ciuill order might bee well obserued. And when fouer such a case befell; although there bee no written law for it in anie certain place; yet ought we alwayes to consider that wee can not el. where haue better counsell than at the nouth of God. Indeede we are not bounde vnto the order of the lewes through any precise necessitie: Neuerthelesse wee must in the ende resolue our selues on this point, that God ordeyned nothing for his people, but that which is iust, and that wee are bound at this day (in case that such a thing shoulde happen) not to suffer it or to leaue it vnpunished: and that to doe otherwise were not good, or to be liked of. But the principall thing is that wee must receiue some generall instruction by it. And verily it were a soule and shamefull thing to see any woman so bolde as this example importeth. And to say the truth, GOD meant not to punish that which was committed through some ouerfight, or amasnednesse: but hee considered that if a woman shoulde haue so small regarde of shame & honest reuerence as to come running vpon a man after that sorte, and touch that part of him from which she ought to flee backe; if she should be suffered in such shamelesse dealing, it were a kinde of dispensing with all leawdnesse and loosenesse of behauiour, so as no honestie shoulde be kept any more. What is then to be doone? Wee must note here briefly two points. The first is, that God requireth such modestie in women as that they must alwayes consider what their sexe will allowe them to doe, and that they become not like Iauceknights, as wee see some are, which will handle an Harquebuse as boldly as anie man, and march with ensigne displayed as couragiously. It is so monstrous a sight to beholde such wicked women, that a man ought, not onelic to spitte at them, but also to take vp durt and cast at such impudent creatures, when they are so bolde to peruert the order of nature. Thus yee see what God requireth of womē in the first place, nameilie such a modestie as may holde them within the bonds of honestie. For if a woman haue all the vertues in the worlde, yet if there be such a Virago that shee wil counterface the man, all the rest is but dounge and filthinesse. For we haue scene heretofore howe God did straidlie forbid women to disguise themselves: And that tended to this purpose. Let women therefore learne here their lesson, to be modest, and to haue alwayes that vertue which is proper vnto them, to wit, shamefastnesse, that they attempt no such thinges as may shewe them to be past shame. In the second place wee haue a cōmon rule for vs all (as I tolde you) y<sup>e</sup>, that wee must not onely abstaine from all fornication, but also be honest in our whole conuersation, and be haue our selues according as God commandeth: so as neither in our deedes nor in our wordes there be any such thing as is contrarie vnto the honestie of nature, and that which God commandeth, or which may leade vs to euill. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to beare in minde vpon this place. And therefore although this order was made for the people of olde time, yet the instruction and substance of the lawe abideth for euer, and wee may gather from it a profitable lesson for our selues. Let vs then apply this to our benefite which is contained here, as we may shew that forasmuch as God hath adopted vs, and made vs holy as he himself is holy, & forasmuch as Iesus Christ also hath gathered vs into his body to the intent wee should liue in al holinesse, let y<sup>e</sup> fame be declared indeed both in al our talke & in al our conuersation, so as there is not any part or member of our body, which is not answerable vnto that honestie.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our fault, praying him to make vs so to feele them, that acknowledging the wretchednes which is in vs and in our nature, wee may labour to draw our selues out of it, by fighting against all our carnal affections, & by ridding our selues whollie of that which wee holde of our father Adam, vntill this good God hath clothed vs with his owne righteousnes, and that wee be made newe creatures in our Lorde Iesus Christ, to come vnto that glorie which hee hath purchased for vs. And pray we him that while we be inclosed with our infirmities, it may please him to beare with vs, vntill he hath cleane deliuered vs from them, and to giue vs grace in the meane time, to doe our indeouour that his Church may be multiplied, so as we may enioye that blessing to see his name glorified throughout the worlde, and that when we haue company our minds may euer be the more stirred vp thereby to follow that holy vocation wherunto he hath called vs. For the doing wherof it may please him to raise vp true and faithfull ministers of his worde, &c.

On Fryday the xiiij. of February, 1556.

The CXLIII. Sermon which is the third vpon the fise and twentieth Chapter.

13 Thou shalt not haue two manner of weightes in thy bagge, a great and a little.

14 Thou shalt not haue two manner of Ephas in thy house a great & a litle.

15 But thou shalt haue a iust and a right weight, thou shalt haue a perfect & a iust Epha, that thy dayes may be prolonged in the lande which the Lord thy God giueth thee.

16 For all they which doe such things, and all they which deale vnrighteously are an abomination before the Lorde thy God .

17 Remember what Amalec did vnto thee by the way after your coming out of Egypt.

18 Howe hee came against thee in the way, and in the hindmost of thy traine strake all the weake which followed thee when thou wast fainte and wearie: and he feared not God.

19 Therefore when the Lord thy God shal haue giuen thee rest from al thine enemies which are round about thee in the lande which the Lord thy God giueth thee to possesse, then shalt thou put out the remembrance of Amalec from vnder heauen: forget it not.

Here are two things especiallie wherein wee offende our neighbours, to wit, deceyte and open violence. For some are giuen to deceite and malicious wilnesse, to deceiue and beguile men: others vse open wronging and injuries. In priue deceite the most mischeuous meane of beguiling that any man can vse, is the falsifying of weightes and measures. For the vse of them is the onely way for men to buy and sell by, without strife or variaunce. If we hadde not monie wherewith to buye things; what a disorder should wee haue? And wares also are comunly solde by weight and measure. Nowe then if there bee deceyte eyther in monie or in weightes or in measures, the bonde of that intercommunion which men haue together among themselues is broken: so as they become like dogges and Cattes, and there is no meanes for them to deale one with another. And therefore no maruell though our Lorde doe greatly mislike the falsifying of weightes and measures, and tell vs that it is the worst and detestablest robberie that can bee. If a theefe purpose with him selfe to take a bootie, hee will fet on a man, and from one hee will goe to another. But wee are sure there is no theefe can passe his boundes so farre, as to pilpoye and robbe the whole worlde. But he which vieth falsie weightes and falsie measures, hath no regarde at all, when hee robbeth; but doeth wrong vnto all ingenerall: and that is the next way to peruert all ciuill order, so as no humanitie or common honestie may remaine any longer among men. What shall Lawes doe? Or to what purpose shall iustice serue, whe there is no more anie playne nor vpriight dealing in those things which shoulde helpe men to maintaine their estate? Wee haue therefore a verie necessaric law in this place, where mention is made of weightes and measures. It is sayde: Thou shalt not haue diuerse stones in thy bag. And that is because in olde time they were wont to make their weightes of stone. And this importeth asmuch as if it were sayde: Thou shalt haue a iust weight and a iust measure. Moreouer let vs beare in minde alwayes that which hath bene sayde before, namely that G O D oftentimes vnder one speciall kinde, giueth a generall doctrine. And so it is all one as if we were commaunded generallie in all buying and selling, to vse reasonable and vpriight dealing without anie fallchoode. For when a man selleth one kinde of ware for another, it is all one as if hee falsified his weightes or his measures. A simple man commeth to a shoppe and asketh for cloath: hee knoweth it not, but trusteth the Marchant, and the Marchant sayeth vnto him, here is cloath of such a place: and hee knoweth well that hee lyeth: now this is all one, as if he had giuen him halfe a yarde or three quarters of a yarde, for a whole yarde. So then wee see how G O D ordcyneth in generall that our trayding shoulde bee after such a sorte as that hee which buyeth doe bring lawfull monie; and that hee which selleth doe deliuer his wares at a reasonable price and vse no fallchoode, neither in weight nor in measure, at leastwise if it bee such wares as are wont to bee measured by the yarde or ell, or weyed in scales or balauces, but that on either part there bee true and iust dealing vsed.

And sith wee see so manie lawes tending all to this end, that no man shoulde be deceyued, but that euerie man shoulde haue his right; let vs alwayes remember this saying, That G O D will haue mercie, iudgement and iustice. And therefore let vs haue compassion on them which are in necessitie, to releuee and succour them. And secondlic let vs not onelic yeeld to euerie man his right, but also when wee see anie man wrong his neighbour, let vs not suffer it, nor bee consenting vnto it in anie case. Loe wherein wee exercise our selues if we will order our life according to the will of G O D. For excepte wee doe so, what fayre countenance soeuer wee sette vpon things, yet all shall bee but detestable hypocrisie in the sighte of G O D, vntill wee haue learned to liue charitable with our Neighbours

bours, and to obserue this vprightnesse which nature hath taught vs, of not doeing otherwyse vnto others than wee woulde haue doone vnto our selues. Heere withall also wee be made to knowe our owne naughtinesse. For if wee were enough to haue warned vs in one word, if wee were disposed to doe well, and had not such a rebelliousnesse within vs, that wee euer drawe backwarde from that which is good.
 Then if men were inclined of themselves to do right and to exercise humanitie: it were enough to make but a signe vnto them, and to say: Yee see what your duetie is: But nowe God is faine to make often repetitions, hee is fayne to strengthen the lawes which hee hath giuen, hee is fayne to expounde them, hee is fayne to heape commaundement vpon commaundement.
 And what is the cause hercof, but that wee are ouerharde to bee ruled, and that our desires are as fell and furious bestes: so that one bonde is not strong enough to binde vs, but wee must be hampered with many cordes, nay wee must haue chaynes and fetters layde on vs? So then let vs know that our willes and minds are farre from being disposed to obey God. And therefore let euerie man quicken vp and inforce himselfe the more, considering how it is not without cause that God maketh so often rehearsal of that which serueth to bring vs to brotherlie faithfulness and friendship; for asmuch as wee drawe cleane backwarde from that which hee commaundeth as I haue tolde you before.
 Morouer let vs beare in minde, that the more a thing maketh to the common benefite of al, the better is it alwayes to be obserued. Nowe I haue tolde you howe there woulde bee extreme confusion, if there were no weightes nor measures: and therefore if weightes and measures should bee falsified, there woulde scarce remayne any ciuill order in the worlde.
 Therefore seeing the thing is so requisite and necessarie, that without it wee could not liue together, but shoulde bee as wilde and sauage bestes; let vs knowe that who so breaketh any part of this order, offendeth GOD most greuously; and as the faulte is punishable by earthly iustice: so let vs assure ourselues, that such offenders when they shall come to render an account before the heavenly Iudge, shal not escape the hande of God: For it was not long of them that all vprightnesse was not cleane abolished. Wherefore let vs stande in feare of that which is tolde vs here, and let euerie man deale vprightlie with his Neighbours; Let those which vse any trade of Marchandise haue a iust balance and a iust measure, and lawfull wares, and let them take heede that they vse no de-ceyte. Let both the buyers and the sellers vse such iustie dealing, as it may appeare that they haue a Lawe which beareth rule in their hearts: and although wee had neither threatens nor punishments; yet let it suffice vs that God hath declared his will vnto vs. Let that bee of force and power with vs, to guide and governe vs.

And morouer whereas it is sayde. That all those which doe such thinges, are an abomination un- to GOD: it is spoken to the intent that men shoulde not deceyue themselves by subtiltie or Sophistrie: as wee are alwayes seeking for some starting holes: Such as are desirous to winde in their neighbours with craftinesse, haue alwayes some colour to paint their case withall.

 But although men holde vs excused, it is nothing seeing wee must come before the heauenly Iudge. For Moses saith, That such a thing is an abomination before GOD. Therefore let not men beguyle themselves anie more with any of the trifling excuses wherewith manie men doe shroule themselves, but rather let them thinke thus: Beholde it is our GOD that speaketh, it will not boote vs to disguise our matters. For hee will not suffer himselfe to bee mocked: and it is before him that wee must an-swere. And therefore let vs walke in such wise as our owne conscience may beare vs good witnesse, and as wee may protest not onelie with our mouth but also within with our heart, y we haue liued vprightlie with our neighbours, that there is no secreete wickednesse within vs, and that wee haue not made our owne gayne by an other mans losse. Lo (I say) what we haue to beare in mind vpon this place.

And whereas Moses addeth: Whosoener doth vnrighteously: it is to confirme that which I said in the beginning: that is, that albeit GOD ex-presseth here but two kindes, to wit, Weight and Measure: yet notwithstanding, it serueth to put vs in minde generally, howe men ought to liue with their neighbours without hurting of them. For if GOD leaue no kinde of wickednesse unpunished, whether wee plucke other mens goods vnto vs by force or vse deceite to beguile the simple; if GOD call all such thinges to account: what will become of vs when wee shall haue committed more outragious crymes, so as wee shall haue peruerted all common order, by playing the robbers & theeues in raking to ourselues whatsoeuer we could come by, as those doe which vse falsse weightes and falsse measures? For certaine it is, that vnder pretence of buying and selling, such foolkes doe play the rancke theeues, and are worse than those which robbe in the woods.
 And therefore let vs knowe that whereas God pronounceth himselfe a Iudge to punishe all manner of wickednesse, hee sheweth that by greater reason, vengeance shall fall on them which make no conscience or remorse, to rake other mens goods vnto themselves without discretion, or rather which haue guen their lustes so large scope, that they russe forth into all euill, and all men both greate and small are faine to passe their pawes. Thus yee see in effect what the thing is which Moses meant to declare vnto vs in this place. Nowe if at that time it was behoouefull and necessarie, that GOD shoulde repressse such deceytes as were committed in weightes and measures, howe much more needefull is it that hee shoulde doe the like now? For certainlie there is nowe no such vpright dealing in the worlde as was at that time: but corruptions are still increased:
 and

and therefore so much the more ought wee to exercise our selues in this lawe. And let vs not thinke that wee may excuse our selues by the great number of deceiuers and pollers which are nowadayes: but let vs knowe that the lawe of G O D is euermlasting; and that if wee will bee taken for the children of G O D, wee must keepe that vprightnesse whereof Moses here speaketh, notwithstanding all the wickednes that is comitted in the world. And that is the cause also why he thinks it not enough to say: Those which doe such things are an abomination in the sight of the Creator: but he addeth also: Before thy God. And therefore wee must alwayes returne vnto this point, y because G O D hath adopted vs for his children wee must not bee carried away with euill customes. Though this man misbehaue himselfe and that man bee offensue through his euill life; yet must wee still abide constant in obeying our G O D, seeing that he hath chosen vs, and keepeth vs for his owne. Thus ye see what we haue further to beare in minde concerning this place.

Nowe this lawe needeth not any long exposition. For there is no man which of himselfe knoweth not what confusion there would bee in the worlde, if the meane of buying and selling were taken away. Yet neuertheless ye see howe G O D doeth further open his mouth to teach vs. Haue wee then his lawe in three wordes? It ought to suffice vs: but yet the practise of it is verie rare. Yea verily: and therefore wee ought not to buye our selues so much in saying our the words, which are set downe here, as to minde them throughly, and to be thinke of them carely and late, and to say, Go to, G O D hath commaunded that we shoulde haue iust weightes and equall measures, that wee might deale vprightly one with another. When wee shall haue refreshed our minds with the remembrance hereof, it wil serue to perswade vs to order our life in such wise as it behooueth vs to do.

Moreouer let vs note that vnder false weightes and deceitfull measures, all acceptings of persons are condemned by G O D. For if it be not lawfull to falsifie a weight or balaunce, if it bee not lawfull to falsifie a measure or yarde; what shal we say of falsifying of iustice? If in a garner, if in a sellar, if in a shop, God will haue men to vie vpright dealing among the selues: what is to be thought when it commeth to the iudging of a case in Lawe? If a man shoulde swarue aside to the fauouring of any person, what a dealing were that? As I haue already touched, we must returne vnto this generall commaundement of walking in vprightnesse with men, as wee neuer swarue aside but holde on right soorth as God hath commaunded vs. And if in Marchandise which are transiourie things God will haue vs to obserue such vpright dealing: what ought wee to doe in the case where God is to be seruued? Neuertheless wee see howe men shape and vnshape themselves, and make lawes after their owne fancies, nowe one way and now an other. But let vs note that G O D boweth not anie way at our pleasure, but when hee once giueth a lawe, which is vnchaungeable, euery man must frame himselfe thereafter. And let vs not beare our selues in hande that wee shall bee our owne Iudges: for wee are not competent enough, but let vs alwayes abyde in that which God hath commaunded.

Nowe let vs come vnto that which Moses addeth concerning Amalec. A man might at first blusie, thinke it an harde case, that it shoulde bee lawfull for the Iewes to reuenge themselves vpon the Amalekites, and that when they were at rest from their enemies, they shoulde then roote them cleane out. Remember Amalec also, because hee would haue cutte thee off by the way, and made an assault on thy hindermost people, and sought to make haocke of thee. Forgesse it not, but pursue it with fire and sword. This is a verie seuer and sharpe condemnation. But wee haue to note that the Amalekites had prouoked the vengeance of God against themselves and were intangled in the condemnation which was alreadye giuen vpon the people of the lande of Chanaan, as vpon the Amorites, the Pherezites and such like. Wee haue before shewed that wee may not account this sentence of G O D anie way cruell, when he ordayned that all these people should bee rooted out of the worlde. For hee had spared them nowe by the space of foure hundred yeares and more. And although they had then deserued to haue bene vtterly overwhelmed with destruction; yet was it said that their wickednesse was not then come vnto full measure. But amended they in all that tyme wherein G O D waited for their repentance with so great patience? No, but of badde they became worse. And therefore it behooued that cleane riddaunce shoulde bee made of them, seeing they were such a stubborn and vn-amendable people. The like reason was of Amalec also. And hereby wee see what it is to bee intangled among the wicked, when they are altogether forsaken of G O D. It is all one as if a man would cast himselfe into the midst of an hoate burning fire, where hee must needs bee consumed with the wood. Let vs marke well then that vnder the example of the Amalekites, GOD hath warned vs in this place to take heede, that when wee see men giuen ouer vnto all wickednesse and hardened in their sinnes, wee come not neere them, nor haue any thing to doe with them. And why? For it is the next way to binde vp our selues in the same bundell with them, and then must wee needs perishe together. Wherefore let vs keepe our selues aloofe from foolke when wee see them so peruerse, and that they bee despisers of G O D, & are become as brutishe as beasts in their wickednesse. Let vs I say, flee farre from them, vnlesse wee will haue their condemnation to take holde of vs also, and bee carried away in the same tempest with them. And that is the cause also wherefore Esay the

Prophet

Gen. 15. 16.

Esa. 48. 10.

Prophete cryeth with a lowde voyce, Flie farre from them. Hee is not contented to say: withdrawe your selues from them, but flie, flie. And yet hee repeateth the same again and saith: separate your selues farre from them. And why? Wee see howe he meant it of such as Moses speaketh of in this place. Let that therefore be noted for one point.

Nowe herewithall we must consider farther, that the Amalekites resisted G O D to the vtmost of their power, and woulde haue hindered the Iewes from conning into that inheritance which he had already appointed out for them. Indeede they thought they had waged battell with men: but in verie deede G O D was their aduersary partie. For the Iewes came not thither through their owne power, but God had called them to possesse the Land of Chanaan for their inheritance. Therefore when the Amalekites banded themselves in multitudes against them, it was as if they had bidden battell vnto God. And therefore wee may nor maruell that their condemnation was so greuous, seeing they flang soorth into so great rage [euen against God himselfe.] I graunt they knewe not certainly that the Iewes had any such promise made them: and yet for all that, they were not altogether ignoraunt of it: It sufficed for their condemnation, that they ought to haue knowe by certaine signes that it was a power exceeding mans power, and thereupon shoulde haue beene feared from rushing so venterously and at rande against those which were gouerned by the hande of God. And therefore wee are warned, when wee take any thing in hande, to beware that wee haue not God our enemy and aduersarie partie. Nowe hee hath declared, that forasmuch as the Church is in his protection, if we attempt any thing against the faithfull, whether it bee generallie or particularlie, it is all one as if we came to warre against God. And what shall wee get by that? It is not for nought that he hath saide, That hee keepeth vs as the apple of his eye. And therefore let vs learne to abstaine from all doing of wrong, and consider well that if we prouoke the liuing God to anger, it must needs bee to our great confusion in the end.

Now as this doctrine ought to serue vs for a bridle, to make vs to abstaine from all outragious and wrongfull dealinges: So we see on the other side what a consist it is vnto the faithfull when they know that God hath such a care ouer them, y he will take their part and be their defendour, and that if any man harme them hee declareth that the iniurie is doone vnto himselfe. Therefore sith wee see that God setteth himselfe expressly on our part, ought wee not to take courage vnto vs, and to yett our selues wholly vpon his promises? Yet notwithstanding there are but fewe which can tast of this doctrine. For what is the cause that wee bee so kindled with desire of reuenge as soone as any man molesteth or troubleth vs? It is because we knowe not that God watcheth ouer vs, and hath his hande stretched out to maintaine vs, and that hee will not suffer anie outrage to be doone vnto vs, but hee will redresse it and send vs helpe and succour in time conuenient? Were we throughlie perswaded hereof, wee would be as meeke and quiet as lambes, wee woulde bee patient in our wronges, wee woulde tarie till hee redressed them. But what? Because we haue no trust in him, curie of vs shifteth for himselfe by right or by wrong, wee regarde not what is lawful for vs to doe: nay wee thinke we shoulde deceue our selues if wee shoulde staye vpon the promises of God. And therefore let vs learne to consider more deepele of this doctrine, where it is saide: Thou shalt not forget what Amalecke did vnto thee by the way. For God sheweth that although we passe it ouer and make no matter of it when wee haue beene vniustly vexed, but forget that anie such thing was doone vnto vs: yet will hee remember it. Wee are tender enough in our own iniuries; but yet God sheweth, that hee taketh them more to hearte than wee doe, and that hee will punish them which haue vexed vs and deale ouerrigorously with vs, so as hee will call to remembrance all the euill which they haue done vnto vs. Ye see then what wee haue to beare in munde as touching this place: to wit that wee must take heede of doing any violence to our neighbours; for God will take their cause in hande and we must needs haue him for our aduersarie party. That is the first point to be noted, Secondly let vs walke in all simplicitie and gentleness, knowing that if wee will bee as sheepe, wee shall haue a good shepheard which will keepe vs from the wolues, inso much that although wee seeme to be euen in their chappes and readie to be denoued; yet God will prouide a remedie for all, if wee can put our trust in him and feede our soules with patience, as our Lorde Iesus Christ declarcth.

Deu. 2. 34

But now we must also call to remembrance that which wee haue treated of before, to wit, that God is then speciallie moued vnto anger, when his people are troubled and hindered fro taking possession of their inheritance. And if hee haue declared such signe of anger against the Amalekites, because they would haue withheld the Iewes from entering into the Land of Chanaan: what will hee doe, if wee nowadayes doe turne away the faithfull from entering, (not into the Lande of Chanaan, but) into the kingdome of heauen? For nowadayes God calleth vs not to possesse the Lande of Chanaan: but to the immortal and incorruptible life. And therefore we must keepe on our way and labour to come thither. Nowe then, if anie come to trouble vs: they which shall haue cast such stumblingblockes in our waye, that is to say which shall haue helde vs backe from seruing our G O D; shall bee driuen to feele a double curse in comparison of the curse that lighted vpon Amalecke. Nowe let vs consider howe many there are nowadayes which seeke to turne the children of G O D out of their right waye, some by crueltie and persecutions, others by leawde and wicked examples:

amples: to bee short, wee cannot set one foote forwarde in this waye, but wee are troubled, and Sathan deuifeth still I knowe not what to hinder vs; and euer hee findeth ministers fitte for the purpose. What is the caule that all Churches are not so well ordered, as that God may bee serued with one common accorde, or that wee haue not such loue and agreement among vs as may shewe in verry deede that wee call vpon GOD as our Father? It is because wee are mingled among Amalekites. Wherefore let vs take heede that they hinder vs not: and let vs also on our partes beware that wee trouble not the children of GOD, but rather let euerye of vs take his companions by the hande as the Prophet Esay speaketh, and saye, Come, let vs goe and mount vp into the hill of the Lorde, that hee may shewe vs his wayes, and guide vs in his righteousnesse. Nowe then if wee will not be coupled with them whom GOD hath here ordayned to destruction, let euerye of vs take payne to guide his neighbour and to further him in the good way, and let none of vs staye or hinder them which are already on their way to goe whither God hath called them.

Nowe it is sayde: When GOD hath giuen thee rest from all thine enemies in the Lande whither thou goest to possesse it, then remember the Amalekites. By these woordes wee are giuen to vnderstande, first of all, that the people to the ende they myght bee the more encouraged to execute that which Moses had in GODS name commaunded them; are certiyed in this place, that in the ende they shoulde haue the victorie ouer all their enemies. For it had beene a matter of laughter, if Moses had sayde, Remember Amalec, and when thou hast made a dispatch of all the rest, roote him out also. For the Iewes myght haue answered: What are wee to roote him out? Why? Wee are yet Windlers; wee lue as it were at the courtie of another man; wee knowe not what will betide vs. In deede God promised vnto vs, the land of Chanaan, but hath here norled vs vp and downe in the wildernesse, as if we were worthy to bee altogether depriued and defeated of the possession of that land which he promised vs? Why? Wee are yet to enter into it. And what are we the able to do vnto Amalec, seeing we haue so many and so strong enemies? For this cause Moses setteth downe this promise, When the Lord thy God hath giuen thee rest from all thine enemies, (saith he.) Nowe hereby wee are warned, that when God commaundeth vs any thing which seemeth harde, yea or altogether vnpossible, we ought to haue an eye vnto his power: for otherwise our courage cannot but fayle vs. And they which of themselves presume to execute whatsoever GOD teacheth by his woorde, doe breake their neckes in the ende through their foolish presumption. Seeing then it is so, let vs humbly and earnestly desire of GOD, so to strengthen vs as wee may bee able to obey him. For the dooing whercof let vs haue an eye vnto his promises. For when GOD saith vnto vs, Doe thus: he addeth, care not though men withstande you: if you cannot accomplish that which I commaunde you, I haue power sufficient in mee to supply your weaknesse: I will vpholde you: and when it shall seeme that you are fallen downe, I haue meanes wherewith to helpe you vp agayne: and if the thing be more than you can doe, I will bring it to passe for you. Let vs therefore arme our selues with these promises, and thereupon take courage to marche forward in our waye; and what threatens soeuer wee heare, or what stumbling blockes soeuer are layde in our way; let vs yet keepe on our course still. And why? Because GOD will take care of all, and wee cannot bee deceyued by waiting for his helpe. In deede if wee haue not the woorde from his mouth, wee may not trust vpon our owne opinion and say: I hope GOD will helpe mee. Wee may not bee so presumptuous, but wee must assure our selues vpon the warrant which hee giueth vs; as wee see in this place: Thy GOD will giue thee rest from all thine enemies. And therefore Moses sayde not simply, When thou hast conquered the Countrey, when thou hast the victorie ouer all thine enemies; but hee referreth all vnto GOD. Whereby hee declareth (as I haue already touched) that men may not grounde themselves vpon their owne power and abilitie: but wee must haue our recourse alwayes vnto GOD, and acknowledge that it is in him onely to make vs inuincible against all our enemies. And if it was needefull that GOD shoulde worke in such wyse to make the children of Israel to overthrow the Chanaanites, Phereites, Iebusites and the lyke: it is much more needefull that hee shoulde woork nowadayes with a greater power in vs, because wee are to encounter with more mightie enemies. For (as Saint Paule sayeth) our combat is not against fleshe and blood, that is to say, mortall creatures onely, but also against the Princes of the ayre. In so much that if wee compare the power which wee our selues haue to resiste, with the aduantage which Sathan hath ouer vs; alas, hee is the prince of the worlde, and besides that, hee is aboue our heades, so as hee myght ouerwhelme vs out of hande. And therefore GOD must put to his helping hande and fight for vs, or else wee shoulde bee a hundred thousande times vanquished. So then, whensoever wee are to aduventure vpon any thing, let vs learne to haue an eye alwayes vnto the power of GOD, assuring our selues that the same is mightie ynough to strengthen vs. And thereupon taking courage, let vs boldly defye all the forces of our enemies be they neuer so dreadfull: and let vs knowe that they are nothing in comparison of the helpe and succour which GOD hath promised vnto vs, and which he is readie to shewe in verry deede. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to beare in minde vpon this place.

Ephes 6. 12

Nowe it is expressly sayde : That the Iewes shall bee reuenged vpon Amalec when they haue the lande in possession, which was promised vnto them: And it serueth to shewe that wee ought to bee as quiet as may bee in executing G O D S vengeance. For when men reuenge themselves of their enemies, wee see they are altogether troubled with those bickerings which they haue with them, and they are set all on fire by their passions. And that is the cause why reuengings are forbidden vs, when they proceede not from G O D, but that men thrust themselves so into them without any measure or discretion. Will wee then iustifie any reuenge of ours? Wee must bee at peace within our selues: that is to saye, wee must not haue an eye to our owne losse or gayne; wee must not bee moued with any excessiue passion; to bee shorte, wee must haue a stayed and fetled minde; and aboue all, the zeale of God must abide in vs and gouerne vs. Neuerthe-later, we may not vnder this colour that G O D sayde vnto his people, Remember the Amalekites, for I will haue them rooted out of the worlde; wee may not ( I say ) take occasion thereupon to reuenge our selues after our owne lust and liking. And why? For God layde not the bridle on his peoples necke, to say, Doe what you thinke good; you shall haue leaue to doe what you liste: but hee woulde haue the reuenge to proceede from himselfe: whereupon wee haue to note two things. The one is that wee must bee appoynted of God, or otherwise it shall not be lawfull for vs to lift vp so much as a finger to punish any offences. The other is that although wee haue this calling, and that God putteth the sward in our handes, yet neuerthelesse wee must not bring with vs our owne affections which alwayes driue vs on foreward and ouermaster vs: but wee must behaue our selues so simply and plainly in this vocation of ours, that the spirit of G O D may gouerne both our heartes and our handes. As touching the first poynt, I tolde you that hee which hath no expresse commaundement of God to that purpose, may not punish offences. If I see a man offend, although I ought to set my selfe against him to the vtmost of my power, and to withstand his wickednesse: yet because I am a private person, I may not attempt to punish the offender any way. For G O D hath charged mee with no such thing: and men may not on their owne heades, take vpon them any such charge. For although at y first sight a man would take it for a great vertue if I should fall vpon a wicked man and apprehend him: inso much that if he beate or abuse a poore man, & I come and maintaine the good cause, it would be taken for a good deede; yet in verry deede I passe my boundes, and take mote vpon mee than God hath commaunded mee; and this deede of mine may not be accounted for a vertue. Yee see then what stayednesse the faithfull ought to keepe in their liuing, to wit, that they attempt not any thing but what God hath giuen them in charge to doe. That is to be noted for one poynt. Nowe for the second, wee must note that vnder colour that God hath armed them with authoritie to punish vices, men must not fall into heates through their carnall affections and passions, to reuenge their owne quarels, but must doe that which they knowe G O D liketh of, and yet to no other ende or meaning than hee hath appoynted.

And herewithall let vs note, that they which are ordained and appointed of God to execute Iustice, ought to keepe themselves in the high beaten way, wherein God willet them to goe without taking vnto themselves any new lesson. For it is not for earthly Iudges to make lawes at their pleasure, and to say euery day: I will doe thus, and I will doe otherwise: but they must haue a careful eye to their office and duerie. Beholde it is G O D which speaketh, wee must execute that which hee commaundeth; and therefore let men holde themselves thereunto, and not presume to aler his commaundement in any wise: for otherwise a man may pretende goodly excuses, but God liketh better of the obedience which men yeelde vnto him, than of al that euer they can alleage in reason, although it haue neuer so great likelyhood. Morcouer (as I haue alreadye rouchted) when wee heare concerning Amalec, that G O D woulde haue him cleane rooted out: a man might reply and say: What if a man should handle this people gently and spare them? Were it not a reasonable thing? Should a man deale so extremelic with them? Surely when the people of Isracl left it vndone, their shewing of mercie was a kynde of despying G O D; and it is certayne that their so dooyng turned to their owne confusion, according whereunto wee see howe it was sayde, You haue not executed the vengeance of your G O D, and therefore those whome you haue suffered to lye must bee as thornes in your sides to pricke and to punch you; or rather to put out your eyes: you shall surely finde it so because yee haue not doone as G O D commaunded you. This serueth then to shewe vs that euerye man must followe that which is appointed him, and when hee once knoweth what his office and calling requireth, hee must simply obey God.

And moreouer let vs alwaies haue recourse to this point, that seeing God sheweth himselfe a friend to our friends and an enemy to our enemies; we must put our whole trust & confidence in him; & hiding our selues vnder his wings, wee must not doubt but that he will shew in the ende what care hee hath had of our welfare. For hee sayth, I am moued with ieaulouse, I am inflamed with choler, because of y injuries which my people hath suffered. In deede God is not subiect to any passions, he is not moued after the maner of men: neuerthelesse, to shewe howe dearely hee accounteth of our welfare, and because wee conceiue it not excepte hee doe ( as yee woulde say ) transfigure himselfe and vter himselfe vnto vs in such wyse as wee maye

conceyue some passions in him: that is the verie cause why hee sayeth that hee is moued with choler, and inflamed with a ieaalousie to defende his people. Let vs therefore settle our trust thereupon: and although he doe not by and by lift vp his hand and thunder vpon our enemies, let vs not thinke therefore that hee hath forgotten vs, but let vs bee patient and sorowfull, and let vs desire him to accomplish his promises. And if wee so doe, hee will raise vp such men as we thought to haue bene against vs; and they shall spend themselues in our defence, and wee shall bee armed in such wise agaynst all our enemies, that wee shall beare awy the victorie; and as it is heere declared that hee was the defender of his people in olde time; so he will nowadayes doe much more for vs, because he is come nearer vnto vs in the person of his onely sonne.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the Maieie of our good G O D, with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to make vs feeble them more and more, and to receyue vs vnto mercie although wee bee altogether vnworthie of it, and that in the meane tyme hee will so gouerne vs by his holy spirite, that wee may apply both our handes and our eyes, and our feete to his seruice, and not attempt any thing without his worde, but that whatsoever wee doe, wee may doe it with such a zeale, as hee may bee glorified and our lyfe may bee in all poyntes referred vnto his will, without turning of our selues aside eyther to the right hand or to the left, and that wee may learne to rest our selues wholly vpon him, and not bee tempted to iniurie any man, but that whatsoever wickednesse wee see in the worlde, wee may alwayes walke vprightly and soundly, to the intent that when wee bee vniustly and wrongfully tormented, he may shewe himselfe our defender. That it may please him to grant this grace not onely to vs but also to al people & Nations of the earth, bringing backe all poore ignorant people from the superstitions and idolatrics wherein they are helde: that so hee may leade them to the knowledge of his truth: And that for this purpose it woulde please him to raise vp true Ministers of his word, &c.

VHen thou comest into the lande which the Lorde thy G O D giueth thee for an inheritance, and possessest it and dwellest therein, 2 Then shalt thou take of the first of all the fruite of the earth, which the Lorde thy G O D giueth thee, and put these fruites which thou bringest out of thy land, in a basket, and goe vnto the place which the Lorde thy God shall choofe, to place his name there.

3 And thou shalt come vnto the Priest which shall bee in those dayes, and shalt say vnto him; I acknowledge this day vnto the Lorde thy God, that I am come into the land which the Lord sware vnto our fathers for to giue vs.

4 Then the Priest shall take the Basket out of thy hand, and shall set it downe before the Altar of the Lord thy God.

5 And thou shalt speake and say before the Lorde thy G O D: My father was a Syrian, a poore man, and hee went downe into Egypt, and sojourned there with a small companie, and grewe there vnto a Nation great, mighty, and full of people.

6 And the Egyptians vexed vs, and troubled vs, and loaded vs with harde bondage.

He haue in this place
the Lawe of y first fruits which was made for this ende, y
the Lewes shold thereby acknowledge vnto GOD, that they helde

the lande of Chanaan of his mere and onely giste : as when a Lorde graunteth any Lande in Fee, hee referueth some Rent and some kind of seruice to himselfe to testifye that the Lande is helde of him. So likewise GOD meant to haue a certayne memoriall among the Lewes, wherby they shoulde bee put in minde to serue lum, for so much as hee nourished them, and that whatsoever they had in possession, they helde it of his freebestowed goodnesse. In deede GOD did it not after the manner of mortall men : for those which are Lordes of any land, bee they neuer so riche, haue neede of Rentes and reuenues : for the mayntenance of their estate. But GOD who standeth in neede of nothing, ordayned this Lawe, onely for the profite and welfare of his people. For the first fruites werē not brought vnto the Temple as though GOD were to receiue some commoditie of them to himselfe : but the bringing of them was to this intent, that the people shoulde bee the better stirred vp by that meanes, to discharge themselues of their due-tie towards GOD. For the first fruites went not for full payment, but they serued onely for a solemne protestation, thereby to shewe that the people was much more bound vnto GOD.

And let vs note that GOD by appointing this Lawe, meant to giue vs to vnderstande what great vnthankfulnessse there is in men, when there must bee such meanes deuised to quicken them vp to acknowledge and confesse his goodnesse. For if there werē but one droppe of reason and vnderstanding in vs, neede we any exhortation to magnifie and extoll our GOD, for enjoying so great benefites as hee hath bestowed vpon vs? Hee sheweth himselfe so liberall towards vs that his blessinges doe euen (as yee woulde saye) stoppe our eyes. And is there not great reason then that this bountifullnesse of his shoulde waken vs, to declare that wee haue not beene forgetfull of those benefites, which hee hath bestowed vpon vs? Yes verily. But what? Wee must bee spurred forward in this behalfe like Asses : wherby wee see what vnthankful-nesse and vnfaithfulnessse is in vs : for that is the cause why GOD ordayned this ceremonie among the Lewes, that they shoulde offer euery yeere the firstlings of their fruites. Before they shoulde presume to cate breade of newe Corne, or taste anye other thing, they were enioyned to offer their first fruites vnto the Priest. And through this obligation all the fruites of the earth were as it were hallowed, I meane in such wise, that then they myght lawfully vse them.

In deede whatsoever the earth bringeth forth, is of his owne nature pure and cleane, neuerthelesse wee our selues are so defyled, that wee corrupt whatsoever wee touche, vntill GOD sende his blessing vpon his creatures, that by that meanes they maye bee sanctified agayne to our vse. And that is the cause why Saynt Paule sayeth, that thorough fayth and praye, the meates which wee receiue are hallowed : not that there is any vncleanenesse eyther in the breade, or in any other meates themselues, but by cause wee are not woorthie to bee partakers of them, vntill GOD giue vs leaue to vse them as to his Children. And this wee obtayne through fayth, and by calling vpon the name of GOD, by cause it pleaseth him to shewe himselfe our foster-father. Yee see then howe the first fruites serued to make all the fruites of the yeere pure and cleane, that men myght lawfully vse them, and bee made partakers of them, receiuing them as it were from the hande of GOD. And whosoever they bee which without making this confession, and without yeelding this homage vnto GOD, doe glutte th. misclues with meates, although they may saye it is of their owne goods and lyuing, yet notwithstanding they playe the thecues with GOD : and they are not woorthie to keepe any longer those things which hee bestoweth on them : as hee which deceyueh his Lorde of his lande, and wyl yet receiue profite by it, is woorthie to bee thrust out of all the ly-uing which hee holdeth of him. So then wee see for what purpose this Lawe was ordayned.

But before wee procede any further, it shall bee good first to consider of that which is contayned in this texte, and then wee will gather vp altogether, and applye it vnto our instruction. It is sayde, Thou shalt take euery yeere of the newe fruites which thou receiuest out of thy grounde, and bring them in a basket vnto the place which the Lorde thy GOD shall appoyne to place his name there. In that it is spoken of e-uery yeere, thereby we doe the better vnderstande the thing which wee haue already touched, to wit, that it is not ynough for menne to bee taught their duetie once for all, but GOD must pull them often by the eares, and put them often in minde of that which hee hath once tolde them. For that which wee shoulde beare awaye, wee forgotte by and by : but if wee haue once learned any tryflyinge toy, or I knowe not what thing elie, which serueth for no other ende but to marre vs ; that shall bee throughly imprinted and ingrauen in our memorie. But whica

1. Tim. 14. 5.

when we haue knowne the wil of God and haue heard his promises, and he haue commaunded vs any thing y<sup>e</sup> shippeth soone out of our remembrance; except euery man for this part doe diligently minde the thing which he hath learned. Ye see then what the cause is why God thinke it not ynough for men to make this acknowledgement in their life tyme, or at the yeere of Iubile onely, because that then y<sup>e</sup> possessions were reoued, and there was good opportunitie to vse this acknowledging in such a chaunge. GOD could haue contented himselfe with it, were it not that men (as I tolde you) haue so short memorie, when the case concerneth their duetie towardes God.

And this may profit vs, not onely to teach vs to condemne that vice, which is ouer great and too too wicked in vs; but also to leade vs to the quickning vp of our selues. For in as much as we perceiue what slothfulness is in vs, and that there is nothing more easie than to go so a stray, as we shall neuer thinke on God; euery of vs ought to be so much the more watchfull to say: What shall become of mee, if I withdraw not my selfe out of this way and call to minde the will of God which hee hath already declared vnto mee? Surely I shall by and by become a very beast. Wee must therefore take occasion to quicken vp our selues seeing God for his part stirreth vs vp & waketh vs in such sorte, which thing hee doeth because hee cannot otherwise compasse vs. Let this be noted for one poynt.

Nowe to the intent that the people shoulde heere haue nothing to plead, nor seeke any starungholes to shirte themselves from dooing their duetie: it is expressly sayde, When thou comest into the lande which the Lorde thy GOD giueth thee to inherite, and possesse it, and doest dwell therein. For it is all one as if GOD did heere auouche his tittle; as when a synic is set, and any chufage required, it is to bee layde forth and declared, that hee which is to receive the fine is the chiefe Lord, and owner thereof, & that his graunting of it at the first was with such condition. Such is the case heere. For God sheweth that the Iewes enioyed that lande, eyther by right of conquest as gotten by their owne force & power, or by inheritance, or by purchase, or by gift of man: to bee thort he declareth that they can make no tide vnto it by any inferiour meane, but that they must looke vp vnto GOD about, and say: Our Lorde hath vouchsafed to plant vs in this land which was none of ours: wee cannot say that it belonged vnto vs, our fathers had no right vnto it: whence then doe wee receiue this benefite but of the free gift of our GOD? It behooueth vs therefore at leastwise to acknowledge this benefite, and to confesse howe greatly wee are bounde and indebted vnto God.

Men ought in deede of their owne meremtion to consider the goodnesse of GOD when it is vttered vnto them by effect: but yet wee haue neede to bee put in minde of it, and GOD must bee fayne to goe to lawe for his owne right and to defende it. And the reason is, because wee are too too wicked, and seeke by all meanes as much as wee can possibly, to darken the grace and fauour of GOD, except hee himselfe bee a witnesse thereof, and shew that hee wil nor haue it misbestowed. Therefore albeit this bee spoken vnto the Iewes, yet notwithstanding let vs note, that GOD meant to vprayde all mankinde with the wickednesse which wee seele to bee in vs, that is, that hee himselfe is fayne to speake and shewe howe lowe wee are beholding vnto him. For except hee did so, there is not one of vs which would not priuledge himselfe from the obedience and subiection which he oweth vnto him.

Nowe it is expressly sayde, That they shall come vnto the place which GOD will chosse to put his name there. This was expressly conuinced to the intent that the Iewes shoulde bee reyned the thorter, as in deede men must bee so vfed, or else there is no dealing with them. Wee see howe euery man draweth backe with myght and maine, as if hee woulde exempt himselfe from the seruice which he oweth vnto GOD. True it is in deede, that when wee doe any thing beyng forced and constrained thereunto, GOD will none of it but reiecteth and refuseth such seruice: neuertheless hee ceaseth not to giue vs the spurre, when hee seeth vs on our side to bee lasie, and that is to bring vs vnto willing obedience to make vs to goe to it with a free courage. But wee must needes bee driuen forwarde at the first, or else wee will neuer bee brought to yeelde our selues vnto him. But wee must also note that which hath bene declared afore, to wit, that GOD by ordayning a certayne place wherein hee woulde bee worshipped and haue sacrifice doone vnto him, had an eye vnto the weakenesse and rawenesse of men. True it is that GOD passeth not for these outward thinges, neither doeth any holynesse consist therein: but ceremonies are ordayned for our sakes, if wee were Angels, wee shall neede no such helpe, but because wee hee intangled with our flesh and bee so lumpish and earthly as wee are, God is fayne to stoope vnto vs, that hee may lift vs vp vnto himselfe. God therefore vnder the Lawe chose a certayne place wherein he woulde bee worshipped. And why? Because the people coming thither, and hauing the Sanctuarie there, had a witnesse of the pesence of GOD, which was in the arke. Againe the Aulcar for sacrifices was there, and all the rest, as it was seene in y<sup>e</sup> heavenly patron whereof mention is made in Exodus. In y<sup>e</sup> place therefore there was as it were a looking glasse whereby a man might direct his eye higher. For like as when a man hath a weake & dimme sight, he must vse spectacles to helpe his sight: euen so because men are ouergrosse, and cannot see farre, it was requisite that GOD shoulde giue the Iewes a kynde of spectacles, whereby they might bee the better inabled to seeke him, yea euen in such manner as behoued them. And that is the cause why no mention is made heere but onely of the name of God. For there was daunger least the people would stande too much on the corruptible elements. For this cause God saith not, I will dwell in this temple, as the Iewes sometimes imagined that hee did: and therefore it was requisite that they shoulde bee vpbraided with that imagination by the Prophet, saying: What house will ye builde mee? And in another place it is saide, that the euertuuing God dwellerh not in any temple made with mans hand. But he saith, I will put my name there: that is to say, I wil giue you a certaine signe and marke, that I am neere vnto you, if you worship me after a spirituall manner, and intangle not your selues in your superstitions, ne transforme mee at your owne pleasure, as men will needes be alwayes forging of ydoles: but knowe you that I come neere vnto you, to the intent that you might come the more familiarly vnto mee: and for the leading of you thereunto, you shall haue my worde preached and sacrifices offered among you. And hee saith further, before the Lorde thy God, or In the presence of the Lorde thy God. For why? The ceremonies must profite vs, or otherwise they shall bee no better vnto vs than childrens toys. If in baptisme wee had nothing but the water, ne knewe what the vse and vertue thereof is; it were but a contemptible thing. But forasmuch as we knowe that the water is a certaine warrant that wee are washed with the bloude of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and that it liuely representeth vnto vs the spirite of God, by the which wee are regenerated and borne a newe: wee see that baptisme is a certaine warrant vnto vs, that wee are clothed with the righteousnesse of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and that by this meanes wee are reconciled vnto GOD as beinge cleansed and washed with his bloude, so as wee bee made newe creatures by his holy spirite. All this wee see there. In the supper of the Lorde, when wee heare Iesus Christ say vnto vs, This is my bodie which is deliuered for you, wee knowe that it is not for nought that a morcell of breade is giuen vnto vs: wee knowe it is not for the nourishment of our bodies, but to leade vs to the food of our soules. Yee see (I say) in what sort wee may feele the presence of God, not (as I haue already saide) that hee is enclosed in these corruptible elementes, and that wee must seeke him there: but that these visible signes must leade vs vp on high. Wee could not mount so hye of our selues, were it not that God reacheth vs forth his hande. Hee reacheth vs his hande by those meanes which hee hath ordained, as himselfe knoweth most fitte and conuenient for our weakenesse and rawnesse. Let vs therefore beare in minde that where as God in this place commaundeth the Iewes to offer their first frutes in the Sanctuarie, hee did it to this ende, that men shoulde exercise themselves in such ceremonies as are conuenient for them, and that they shoulde knowe that they seeue to drawe them vnto God, and that they stande in neede of them, euen because their nature is earthly. Moreover, by this saying that God will put his name there, men are warned to worshipping God spirituallly, and that the hauing of ceremonies serueth not to tye religion and holinesse to them: but to make them goe further, and to mount vp higher, namely to doe them to vnderstande that therefore GOD ought to bee worshipped in spirite and in trueth, as it is saide in the fowerth of Iohn.

Allo there is this saying; That God will choose the place: And that serueth to beteaue the people of all libertie of inuenting any thing at their owne lust and pleasure. For wee knowe howe venerationly men presume on such libertie, in so much that when God is to bee seued, euery man forgeth some priuate deuotion to himselfe, saying it is better for mee to doe thus; and then must I doe that: And why? For to my seeming it is good; I weene so. Euerie man groundeth himselfe vpon his owne fancie. And by this meanes the worshipping of God is vtterly corrupted. And euen that also hath bene the verie cause of the bringing in of such confusion throughout all Christendome, as we may yet perceiue to bee among the Papistes. What is it which they terme the seruice of God? Euen that which hath bene forged by men. For they cannot shewe one syllable in the holy Scripture to warrant that which they doe. And therefore God liketh not of it, but reiecteth and refuseth it by good right. For hee will haue men to holde themselves altogether vnto his will without swauing aside one way or other. Yea, hee will haue them to waite for the worde from his mouth, and hee telleth vs that hee vtterly mislyketh all that euer men doe bring of their owne, and that it is not only vaine but stinking and abhominable in his sight. Neuerthelesse it is an ordinarie matter in Poperie, to forge such pelting trifles and gewgawes without number. Yea, and it is a common prouerbe among them, That whatsoeuer is doone of a good intent, is well done: yea but God saith the cleane contrarie. So then let vs note that as the people is in this place warned that they haue no libertie graunted vnto them to choose what place euerie man listed, as who shoulde saye, we will serue God in this place, and hee will accept well of it: but that they must come vnto the place which hee himselfe had appointed, and not attempt any thing vpon their owne heades, but onely followe the saide rulse of resorting to the place which God had marked forth. Whereby we see that when the case concerneth the seruice of him, we may not attempt any thing of our selues, but holde vs vnto that which hee hath ordained. Nowe in deede it is true that at this day there is no such peculiar place appointed wherin God wilbe worshipped, or wherein he will haue sacrifices made as was the temple of Ierusalem; yet notwithstanding, vnder one particular we haue here a generall instruction, that it is not lawfull for vs to doe what we thinke good to worship God withall, but that we must haue an eye vnto that which he requireth and lyketh of, and neuer passe beyond those boundes.

Let vs come now vnto this saying, That the man shall offer himselfe vnto the Priest and say: Beholde, I protest here that my father was a Syrian, a very beggar, and came into this land lyke a poore hungerstaruen soule, and was afterward driuen into Egypt, from whence at length God brought him backe againe, and gave vnto vs this Land, wherein wee dwell now through his fauour. Now by this manner of protestation, the Iewes were done to vnderstand that they ought to come vnto GOD without compulsion, as if it were sayd, I looke not to be thrust forward, I looke not to be called vpon by process, as one that minded not to do his dutie but by force: but I protest, that is to say, I offer myselfe here of mine owne good will, (so nee aforehand.

In deede God had appointed this law, & (as I haue already tolde you) it was to reprove the people of their vntowardnesse: but yer for all that, his intent was that the people shoulde come their owne good will: and that is the thing which I haue already toucht. It might seeme at the first blush, that GOD constraineth vs; but yer hee meaneth not to stand vpon this poynt: it is but to inure vs to an vnfayned and freehearted obedience. At the first wee be lyke the young Heifers which cannot skill to beare the voyce. For when a man setteth a young Heifer first to the plowe, he turneth away his head, he strugleth, striueth, and chafeth, and instead of going forwards, he draweth backward, vntill he be tamed. In lyke case is it with a horse: there is much a doe with him at the first before hee can be broken. God vseth vs in the same manner; howbeit but to make vs tractable, that wee be once brought to subiection, then we may come with a free & franke wil to yeeld ourselues obedient vnto him. Let vs not therefore abide stil in this slauish feare: but let vs know y God is our father, and that we ought to take pleasure in framing our selues according to his will. Let every man therefore enforce and set forward himself herein, that we may truly say, Behold I protest that I am bound vnto my God.

Now it is sayd afterwards: My father was a Syrian. No doubt but this is meant of Iacob: not that he was borne in Syria; for he was borne in the land of Chanaan; and his father was a stranger there, and had not one foot of ground to dwell on, he had onely a burying place which he bought for his monie; and they were faine to remoue often out of one place into another, as men draue them out. They were lyke byrdes vpon a bough. Besides this, Iacob was banished out of his fathers house, and forced to get him away, because his brother Esau threatened to kill him. By reason whereof he abode a long time in the land of Syria: he dwelled there fourteen yeere to get him those wiues which hee had, namely, Lea and Rachel, and after that he serued his father in Law Laban for sheepe, because he would not depart home altogether naked. Ye see then how Iacob was first a poore wanderer; and had soone forgotten the land of Chanaan when he was gone out of it. In deede God alwayes kept him in sure trust of y promise which was made vnto him, concerning that land: and that was the cause why hee made that vowe of his, when he went out of the land which was giuen vnto him: yet neuerthelesse he was olde before he went out of Syria. Behold, being a man broken with age, and stricken farre in yeares, he entrencht againe into the land of Chanaan, & that as a Syrian: for he is altogether new, he cometh thither as one that had neuer bin there before: and although he had then some wealth, yet were all his miseries there brought new againe to his minde: My father, a Syrian, was in the very way of destruction. For how was he afflicted when hee was constrained to leaue his fathers house? He hath the knife held as it were to his

throate, for behold, Esau his brother seeketh to put him to death: Esau is possessed as it were w a diuclish spire to persecute his brother Iacob. And when Iacob meant to returne into the land of Chanaan, behold, that cruel beast, namely Laban deuoureth him, not onely fleecing the wool from his back, but also oppressing him after a tyrannous manner. In the end he must yer appease his brother Esau: in which miserie of his he is as it were halfe dead, and maketh no other account, but to be vtterly cast away: he thinketh neuer to saue his familie: Neuerthelesse he diuideth it into foure bandes, that if the one might not be saued, the other might escape. Beholde to what thife hee is put, and how hee deuisseth with himselfe; well, if there bee no remedie but that thou must dye, well, yet some one of thy children may escape: and although I cannot saue all, yet God will keepe some one aliuie to performe his promise in him. Such was the coming home of Iacob. So then it is not sayd without cause in this place that hee was at the poynt to be destroyed: yet did God succor him as it is sayd here. Neuerthelester, Iacob is yet farther constrained to fly into Egypt by reason of famine, wherewith he is so pinched, y he goeth to seeke food in a strange countree, and for a time forsaketh the inheritance which was promised him. Afterward hee remaineth there in cruel bondage, and his offspring is after a sorte drowned in Egypt. They were not onely put to great taxes and tallages, but also oppressed as bond slaues: yea and in the end commaundement was giuen that all their male children shoulde be destroyed, so as that people might neuer be spoken of any more. Thus ye see in what horrible bondage they were, and a man would thinke that the children of Abraham dwelt in Egypt as in a graue, so as all was now past hope of recovery. But it is sayd, wee cryed vnto the God of our Fathers and he heard vs, and hath giuen vs this land in possession. And therefore I protest this day that I held it of him. Here we see first of all, how men are led to acknowledge the state and condition wherein they were, when God first tooke pittie on them. For alioone as we are once at our ease, we beare our selues in hand that it is a fit occasion for vs to runne astray: and thereupon followeth pride, & this pride is accompanied with  $\bar{y}$  contempt of God. There is therefore no other way to humble vs, & to make vs to feele the goodnes of God, than to know  $\bar{y}$  before he reached vs his hand and helped vs, we were the most wretched & miserable of all creatures. And this is a very necessary poynt to be noted. For ye shall see men so blinde, or at leastwise so beare eyed, that they will thinke we are of I wote nor what abilitie, vntill our Lord bring vs vnto this poynt of knowing and acknowledging our selues to be the children of Adam, and consequently accursed, and that from our mothers wombe. Wee bring nothing with vs but sinne and destruction. If this were not declared vnto vs in the holy scripture; how wonderfully would men stand in their owne conceites? For euen yet for all this they cannot stay themselves from boasting, (such beastes are they) neither vnderstand they how it is a certeine kinde of drunkeynesse that turneth them so away to vaunt themselves after that fashion, and to beare themselves so in haud, that they haue this and that [which they haue not.] Thus yee see how men presume maruailously of themselves vntill their prating bee daunted: but when God once thundreth vpon all mankind, and sheweth that we are all heires of death, that we are the bondslaves of Satan, that there is nothing in vs but cursednesse, that all our wisdome is starke foolishnesse,  $\bar{y}$  we cannot bring any thing vnto him which he shall not mislyke and condemne. Where we see that the holy scripture painteth vs forth after that maner, so as there remaineth nothing to vs but vtter shame: then wee beginne to hang downe  $\bar{y}$  heads. But vnlesse God vsed this maner of dealing with vs, it were vnpossible to win vs, but we would alwayes lift vp our hornes. Let vs therefore beare this lesson well in minde, as it is taught vs here, which is, to bethinke vs of our first originall, whence we are come, whence wee are sprung, what we were when God first tooke pitie of vs, and what we shoulde yet haue bin if hee had not preuented vs with his goodnesse. After that we haue once known this in generall, let every man particularlie also haue an eye vnto himselfe. He which thinketh that he hath somewhat to glorie in as touching the world (as there are many which will say, I am borne of such a kindred, there is such a thing in me, and another will glory in his wisdome, and another in his vertue, and another in his riches, another in his byrth) let him I say looke vpon himselfe and say, yea: but for all this, how many shamefull markes hath God imprinted in me, as well as in all others? And first of all, that how highly fouer a man be exalted, yet as soone as God withdraweth his strength, behold he is no better than a wretched carrion: and again, what is the soule but a bottomlesse gulfe of all wretchednes? And if any man haue a good vnderstanding: it is without doubt the especial giue of God. And moreover they which are the most excellent of all others and best accounted of in the world, haue yet many spots and staines in them, so as they

haue wherefore daily to lament. For although a man haue something in him which is worthe to be accounted of, yet shall hee finde so many wantes and defaultes in himselfe, as shall make him to cast downe his head. So the  $\bar{y}$  let vs learne, not onely to haue an eye to that wretchednesse which is in vs, inasmuch as we are the sonnes of Adam; but also let euery man throughlie examine the fauldes, vices and infirmities which are in him, and thereby learne to stoope, and enforce ourselues to yeeld vnto God the glorie which belongeth vnto him, reseruing nothing at all vnto our selues as in deed we haue nothing good of our owne. To be short, let euery man exercise himselfe in the vewing of his owne miseries, and let vs not doe as some fooles doe, who take a glasse to behold their own beautie in: but let vs rake it rather to see what blemishes wee haue. And that is the very thing whereat God also aimed, when he meant to haue the Iewes eue of purpose put in minde, that their father was a poore begger, & that he was as a creature halfe dead. For he was so despised a person in the eye of the world, that they had no cause to be proud of him, or to presume to attribute any thing vnto themselves in that behalfe.

Againne not only he speaketh of their father Iacob: but they also say: Our kindred went downe into Egypt, and there were we trampled vnder feete aboute measure: which thing serued well to beate downe the pride of the Iewes, to the intent they should no more attribute any worthinesse to themselves, seeing they were so euill intreated in Egypt: Also it serued well to make them forget whatsoever moued them to pride, when they were there as bondslaves, and were so heauy burdened, as it would pitie a man to beholde: yea, and  $\bar{y}$  in the end they were condemned to haue their remembrance rased from out of the earth. When they were so far oppressed, it was an occasion to make the to forget all their hautes and ambition, and to confesse that they helde their lyfe of God. Now in the end it is sayd, We called vpon the GOD of our fathers, and hee heard vs, and hath placed vs in this lande which wee doe nowe possesse. True it is in deed that God tarried not vntill he was called vpon, for he had already made a promise vnto Abraham, that at the end of foure hundred yeres, hee would take pitie of his seede when it had bin so oppressed: so that God would haue the Iewes to know that they had no other deliuerance, than that which had bene promised so long before. For had not that bin: they might haue borne themselves in hand that their deliuerance from that bondage had happened by mere chaunce. But when they were oppressed to the vttermost, the it made them to bethinke themselves thus: What? Our fathers haue promised vs that God in the end will drawe vs out of this vknowne countrie, and straunge bondage wherein wee are. This was then a preparatiue to make the Iewes to feele that fauour and grace which was promised vnto them: For nowe the fit time was come to bring it to passe.

Now whereas here is speaking of the GOD of the fathers; it is to bee referred to the promises, least men might thinke themselves excused whē they call vpon such a G O D as hath bin taught them, as the Papiſts nowadays do ground themselves vpon their fathers: O (say they) I haue bin so brought vp, I haue bin so taught from a child, mine ancestors haue lued after this sort. They beare themselves in hand that this is a sufficient warrant, & such a one as may not be gainſayd to make good whatſoever they doe: but in deede it is ſtarke ſollie, because it is not for men to forge Gods vnto themselves at their owne pleasure: for what else are they than very Idols? But when as here is speaking of the God of the fathers; it is because of y promise that was made vnto Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. So then if we will call vpon the living God, let vs returne vnto this point and say: It is true in deede that there lued many men in the world before Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: but they neither ought nor deserue to be accounted for fathers. For why? They withdrew themselves from God, of whome cometh all fatherhoode, and all kindred as sayth ſaint Paul. We must therefore followe the Patriarkes and bee their children; and secondly let the Apostles bee our fathers, and let vs followe them; and if wee frame our selves after their example, let vs not doubt but that wee shall keepe the straite way vnto God, and that hee also will take vs into himselfe. Ye see then in what sense it is here sayd, that the Iewes called vpon the God of their fathers. And here wee are warned in fewe wordes, to gather together all the proofes and argumentes that can bee to assure vs the better, that all the good things which wee haue, doe come vnto vs from G O D. For why? Wee are not so shapely sighted as it were needfull; it is soone dazeld (as I haue tolde you afore.) Yea, rather we bee as blinde men: we must bee quickened vp to consider Gods benefites towardes vs, or else wee shall neuer attaine thereunto. And therefore let vs take as much paynes as wee can to consider it and say, Go to, God sheweth mee here, how it is he that worketh, and he giueth me a token thereof. I must therefore apply it vnto mine instruction: & not say, this happened vnto mee by chaunce: I haue had good fortune: but I know that my God hath holpen me, that it is through his goodnesse that I prosper, that it was his hand which hath succoured mee in such an extremitie. Forasmuch then as wee are so rawe and weake of our selves, that wee consider not the benefites of G O D, except wee haue many helpes to guide vs thereunto: let vs take all the proofes that wee can get, to assure our selves the more thoroughly of them. And to this ende is it that the Iewes say, We haue called vpon the God of our fathers: whereby first they put themselves in minde of the promise, and secondly they see that God redeemed them by vertue of the same promise, whereby hee freely bound himselfe vnto Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And hereupon they might thus conclude: We are not come out of Egypt by the hand of man: that is to say, wee cannot attribute it either vnto our selves or to any creature liuing: but God must bee acknowledged for the onely author of our redemption and saluation. Now in effect wee see here, that whereas God deliuered vnto the Iewes such a sette forme of acknowledging his benefites, it was to conuict them, that in possessing of the land of Chanaan, they could not say: We haue conquered it by y power of our owne arme, we haue gotte it by our owne labour, we haue bought it with our mony, or wee haue some other title vnto it in respect of men: No, it was nothing so: but we hold it of our God; we possesse it vnder his hand, the proprietie thereof is alwayes his. Ye see then whereunto this confession whereof mention is made here did serue. In deede all cannot bee handled at this time. Let vs therefore learne this one short lesson, that in this example God hath put vs in minde to acknowledge how much wee bee bound and beholden vnto him for all the benefites which he hath bestowed vpon vs. Wherefore considering our owne slownesse in this behalfe, let euery of vs quicken vp and pricke forward himselfe to confesse and acknowledge in deede, that wee holde all of the hand of God: and let vs shewe in deede, that we come to make such acknowledgement, not as forced thereunto, but of our owne voluntarie and free good will; and that we be not vnthankfull for the good which hee doth vs in this worlde: but doe attribute all vnto his freebestowed goodnesse, wayting for the possession of that heavenly life whereunto he calleth vs.

Now let vs kneele downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to touch vs with such a feeling of them, as our whole seeking may bee to rid our selves of all our corruption from day to day, vntill wee bee renewed with his righteousnesse: and that wee may grow and increase more and more therein, in such sorte as wee may come in the ende into his heavenly glory, and bee wholly fashioned lyke to the glorious immortalitie, which hee hath already shewed vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ. And so let vs all say: Almighty God heavenly father, &c.

5. 6 And thou shalt speake and say.&c.
 7 Then wee cried vnto the Lord God of our Fathers, and the Lord heard our voyce, and looked vpon our affliction, our labour and our oppression.
 8 And the Lord brought vs out of Egypt with a mightie hand, and a stretched out arme, with great terror, and with signes and wonders.
 9 And he hath brought vs into this place, and giuen vs this land, euen a land that floweth with milke and honie: 10 And nowe loe I haue brought the first fruites of the land, which thou O Lord hast giuen me, and thou shalt set it before the Lord thy God, and thou shalt bow thy selfe before the Lord thy God.
 11 And thou shalt reioyce, in all the good things, which the Lord thy God hath giuen vnto thee, and to thy household, both thou and the Lewite, and the straunger that is among you.
 12 When thou hast made an end of tithing all the tithes of thyne encrease in the third yere which is the yere of tything, and hast giuen it to the Leuite, to the straunger, to the fatherlesse, and to the widowe, that they may eate in thy gates and be sufficed.

W<sup>e</sup> haue declared afore, whereunto the confession which the Iewes made in offering of their first fruites, did tend: namely that on y<sup>e</sup> one side they should therby acknowledge the wretchednesse and miserie from which God had deliuered and set them free: and againe on the other side, that they should so much the more prayse and magnifie the grace and fauour which God had bestowed on the, for we see how men forget themselves in prosperitie: pride blindeth them, or at leastwise maketh them drunken, so as they thinke no longer eyther on themselves, what they were, or on God. And therefore it is more than needefull for vs to haue an eye vnto our owne estate, to thinke how miserable it were if God had not taken pitie of vs. For wee haue skill enough to protest and say, that God hath shewed vs fauor: neuertheless, our doing thereof is but fro the teeth outward vntil it be proud to our faces, that if GOD had not v<sup>e</sup>d mercie towards vs, we should haue bin in a cursed case, we should haue bin vndone, there had bin no way to saue vs. If we be not touched with a heuily feeling of these things, all the protestations which we make of the benefices of God, will be nothing but fainednesse and hypocrisie. For we see commonly that men will readily say: It is God that hath done this for me, it is his worke;

but yet for all that this goeth no farther than our mouth. Now as touching the wordes themselves, I will note you something by the way. Where as we reade, My father a man of Syria was lost or vndone, others reade, The Syrian woulde haue destroyed my father, refering it vnto Laban. But (as I tolde you before) Iacob is called a Syrian, because he was banished a long time out of the land of Chanaan, and was so settled there, as if it should haue bin his graue, I meane in the countrie of Syria. But yet the word signifyeth rather to be destroyed, and vndone, than to intend or to minde to destroy another. It is most agreeing then with the sense of the wordes, that the Iewes shoulde in this place protest that their father Iacob was driuen out of his owne house, and accounted as a Syrian, and that when he came vnto the Lande which God had giuen him, it was as if hee had newlie come thither, and as if he had neuer entred into it before. This berokeneth therefore a more full expressing of that which I tolde you of before; to wit, that men haue neede to be warned, that whatsoeuer they haue, they receiue it from the freebestowed goodnesse of God, and that he saued them, yea euen when they were in a most miserable case.

Now as touching the second point, we see, how Moses hath here declared their coming out of Egypt, in such maner, as the Iewes must needes needes bee awakened to consider how mightie God had wrought for them. For hee sayth not simply that God deliuered them out of the land of Egypt, but hauing made a long rehearsal how the Egyptians had fet their feete on the throate of this poore people, how they had afflicted and molested them, how they had exercised grieuous and cruel tyrannie vpon them, it is sayd: Wee called on the G O D of our fathers, and hee heard our voyce, hee saue our affliction and miserie and hee deliuered vs out of it. And how? By strong hand and stretched out arme. Neither yet is this all, with terriblenes, with signes, with wonders. Loe in what sort our God succoured vs. We see then how Moses is not content to say in one simple worde, that G O D was the Redeemer of that people; but hee hath largely shewed, that the Iewes cannot attribute their deliuerance, neither to fortune, nor to their owne policie, nor to any other meanes in the whole worlde: but they were forced to knowe the wonderfull power of God, who so stretched forth his arme, as if hee had come after a visible maner to redeme his people. Now then if wee will yeelde vnto G O D the honour which hee deserueth, let vs learne to consider of his power, not as it were at a glance or slightly; but as diligent markers of the things which he sheweth vs, so the intent wee may bee the more thoroughly certified, that when it pleased him to shewe mercie on vs, hee meant not to leaue vs in doubt whether it were hee which wrought our deliuerance or no: but that hee hath so playnly certified vs thereof, that the thing cannot bee but knowne and apparant vnto vs. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in minde concerning this place.

And let vs note by the way, that albeit God heard the cries of his people, yet he shewed it not by his dooings at the first. Wee see how the people came to extreme miseries, ere they were succoured. And that is the cause why it is expressly sayd in Exodus, I haue seene, I haue seene the affliction of my people. God sayth not simply that hee hath seene their affliction, but hee repeateth it againe, as if hee should say, Because I made no countenance of helping you altho as you cryed, you thought that I was deafe at your requestes, or that I thought no longer vpon your miseries: but I tell you, that they were alwayes before mine eyes, and yet I haue delayed, and deferred to helpe you vntill now: howbeit, that was not because I had no care of you whom I had adopted for my children. So then let vs note well, that when we are of opinion that wee profit nothing by praying vnto God, wee must continue and not bee greeued as if our prayers were vaine and vnprofitable. For God considereth of vs although we perceiue it not, and in the ende hee helpeth vs. But we are warned here to be patient, & not to be greeued at the matter, though God satisfie not our desires at the first. Loe what we haue to gather concerning these words, where the Iewes expressly confesse, That G O D heard

Nowe remaineth that wee speake of the signes and wonders. But because this hath bin handled already, it were needlesse to stand longer vpon it: it sufficeth to be put in minde y the deliuerance which G O D brought at that time was such, as a man might perfectly perceiue that it was his hand which wrought it, and that it came not through any creature. G O D coulde well ynough haue subdued Pharaoh and his subjects without shewing any miracle. But he would haue him stubbornne. And why? It is said, I haue raised him vp for this end, that my name might bee the better knowne in the world. Pharaoh therefore resisted G O D to the vtermost of his power; but this was to the greater setting forth of the redemption, which he wrought. So then it is not without cause that mention is here made of terriblenes, of signes and of wonders, and how G O D astonish'd men to the intent that feeling his power, they might submit themselves wholly vnto him.

But the conclusion ought to suffice vs where it is sayd, I come therefore to offer the first fruites of the increase of my lands to the L O R D E my G O D. The Iewes in this place declare, that when they yeilded thanks vnto G O D, it was not by way of any outward ceremony, but for that they felte it in their heart that they were bound vnto him, and that they owed all vnto him. Doe we then desire to haue God to accept of the praises which wee yeelde vnto him? Wee must first confesse the benefits which wee haue receiued of him, and acknowledge them with our mouth, wee must doe it from our heart, not for fashion sake as the hypocrites doe which speake readily of his praytes, but not with the heart nor with any affection. On the contrary side wee see how God especially requereth that we should be thoroughly perswaded that it is hee which hath begunne to doe vs good, and that hee also will continue and goe on in so dooing vnto the ende. And that euery of vs should acknowledge the same, not onely secretly, but also openly before men, so as wee may edify our neighbours thereby, and that God may bee glorified of all men with one common accord. I graunt wee haue not now adayes the ceremony any longer as it was vnder the Lawe: but yet wee must come vnto that poynt which I tolde you of before; to wit, that the substance and truth of the ceremony remaineth vnto vs at this day: so as if wee bestowe any almes, or apply the benefites of G O D to such vses as hee commaundeth, wee offer vnto him of our first fruites. And so let vs note well that they which give any thing of their goods which they possesse, must not bee pinching and niggardly as if they gaue any thing of their owne. For wee must alwayes beare in minde to say, I offer vnto my G O D. And whereof? Euen of that which I haue receiued at his hand. In dede I am the owner of it; but yet G O D hath hath reserved some chiefeage for himselfe, so as I may not rot oustle wast that which he hath giuen me, but I must learne to vse it soberly, and to receleue my neighbours which are in necessitie. When we haue this consideration with vs: then shall we offer sacrifices of sweete sent, and such as shalbe acceptable vnto God (as saint Paul termeth them): for without this consideration we may wel rid our selues of al our goods, and yet doe nothing y<sup>e</sup> shalbe aught worth. For why? We want the principall thing, which is to feele how much we are bound vnto G O D, and that our offering vnto him some part of that which he hath giuen vs, be to shew that it is he of whom we hold all that we haue. Now hereby we see, y<sup>e</sup> they which haue no pirie on the poore, but hold fast and locke vp things without any kindnesse; are not only cruell towards men, but also vothankfull towards God. For why? Were we thoroughly perswaded vpon knowledge y<sup>e</sup> God sheweth himselfe a liberal father towards vs, certainly we would not stick to spend y<sup>e</sup> goods which he hath committed vnto vs, according to his wil, but euery of vs would discharge his dutie in that behalfe: and whereas we do the contrarie, it is a signe that wee would deceue God and not mortal creatures.

Exod. 7. 3.

Exod. 7.

And it is by and by added: Thou shalt leaue thine offering before the Lorde thy God, and afterward thou shalt worshipping before the Lord thy God. These two things do shew that we must not be the colder in doing our dutie, though there be no man to beare witness there of. And y<sup>e</sup> is a poynt which we ought to marke wel. For we ate alwayes led with vaine glorie, and we cannot practise this doctrine of our Lord Iesus Christ where he saith, When thou giuest thine almes, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doth. We would alwayes haue some or other to see vs and to praise vs. And although we cause not a trumpet to be sounded: yet are we desirous that men shoulde know what we doe. And what is the cause thereof, but that we haue not our eye so fastened on God as were requisite? Therefore this foolish vainglorie must needs beare rule in vs, by meanes whereof we seeke nothing but to please the world. And therefore wee may not looke that God should acknowledge that which we do for his seruice: for wee are turned aside from him. Let vs therefore learne to practise the doctrine which is set downe here, which is to leaue our offerings in the presence of our God and to hold our selues contented that God auoweth himselfe to receiue that which we giue y<sup>e</sup> poore, and that which we bestowe according vnto his will, euen as though he were come downe, and receiued our gifts from our hands into his owne hand. And seeing it is so, let vs not feare y<sup>e</sup> any thing is lost, though y<sup>e</sup> worlde perceiue not what we do, and that we seeme to haue done nothing at all. Let it suffice vs as is shewed vs heere by this saying, that our Lorde G O D is come before, and accepteth of that which we haue doone, to obey him. Let this be noted for one poynt.

Now the other poynt is, that the Jewes were commaunded To worshipping before the Lorde God. Whereby we may see, that men must not make themselues beleue, that they haue deserued any thing when they haue accomplished that which God appointeth them to doe, as we are alwayes readie to swell with pride, to vaunt of our owne power, as if G O D were much beholding vnto vs. Let vs lay aside all such diuelish imaginations; and when we haue endeoured and taken paynes to doe that which God commaundeth vs; let vs worship before him in token that wee are much more bounde vnto him: as it is sayd in the seuenteenth Chapter of Saint Luke, When you haue done all things, yet you must confesse that you are vnprofitable seruantes. And why? For let vs come to account: If God would require his due of vs, is there any of vs which coulde performe the hundreth parte thereof? Wee deceiue him of that which wee haue, if we giue him but a peece of it whereas hee demaundeth the whole. Nay, though wee gaue him the whole, yet were wee not discharged; for wee cannot doe it with such minde as were requisite: and therefore wee runne alwayes into arrearages with G O D, and hee can owe vs nothing. Wherefore let vs learne to worship before him, that is to say, to shrink downe our heades; and although wee haue laboured to the vtmost to offer him our sacrifices, and to present vnto him our owne persons, and to giue vnto him of our substance, and to doe all that we can possibly doe: when wee haue endeoured to dedicate all vnto him; yet let vs say, Alas Lorde: In deede we would gladly doe our dutie, but wee can neuer doe it perfectly; wee are farre wide from it; may it please thee therefore to accept at our hands that which is vnperfect, and to beare with vs in our weaknesse; and although there be many staynes and blotches in the seruice which wee yeeld vnto thee, yet let the not hinder thee from receauing and accepting of it at our hands. Behold with what modestie men ought to present themselues vnto God when they make their offerings vnto him.

Now let vs note by the way, that the presence of God is here put for the sanctuarie, or for the altar both of sacrifices and of incense, and for the Arke of the covenant: not that God was therein enclosed, but because hee meant to drawe his people vnto him by that meanes. The shadowes of the Lawe then serued to guide the Jewes vnto God, because wee are not able to mount vp into heauē except God reach vs forth his hand. To that vse doe ceremonies serue vs. In deede we haue not nowadays any longer the Arke of the covenant, nor any thing of all the rest: but we may thoroughly assure our selues of y<sup>e</sup> presence of God, because he hath openly shewed himselfe vnto vs in y<sup>e</sup> person of his only son, and because we haue now this warrant giue vnto vs, that wheresouer two or three be gathered together in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, hee siteth in the midst of them. Wherefore let vs not doubt of the presence of our G O D, when wee come to make confession of our faith vnto him: and especially seeing that our Lorde Iesus Christ dwelleth in vs, wee haue well wherewith to content vs, forasmuch vs God sheweth himselfe there, not in figure, but in full force. Again we haue the two helps which are most conuenient for vs, as Baptisme, and the supper of the Lorde: where G O D declareth that hee commeth neare vnto vs, and that we are clothed with our Lord Iesus Christ, that we are washed with his blood, that we are renewed with his holy spirite, that we lue in him and of his very substance, that we are graised into his body. Seeing we haue such sure warrantes, wee neede not doubt any longer of the presence of G O D. Yet notwithstanding we must alwayes mount vp higher: we must not abuse those helps which God hath giuen vs, as wee see men doe in Poperie: the wretched people there, are become as brute as beasts, and are of opinion that G O D is to be sought no farther, than in the visole and outward things. But contrarywise wee know that we must lecke G O D after a spirituall maner. And therefore let the Sacramentes guide vs higher, and rayse vp our faith about the world. And then lets not doubt but that our G O D is neare enough vnto vs, so as wee may be bold to put our selues and all that euer we bring vnto him, into his handes. This it is in effect which wee haue to beare in minde.

Now as touching that which followeth, of reioycing in the presence of the Lorde; it serueth to shewe vs that all the reioycings of men are accursed, except they haue an eye vnto God, to yeeld him thanks for them. This hath bin touched afore: but yet is it not without cause that Moses repeateth it here againe. Wee see how men are wont to make themselves merrie, that is without any thinking vpon G O D. If we haue well dyned, when wee bee once full, we waxe frolike. But what? Wee thinke not that it is G O D that hath fedde vs. If a man be encreased in wealth by his sparing; he reioyceth, but God is still set aside. Nay which more is, wee thinke that wee cannot bee merrie, except wee turne tayle vnto God, and get vs away from him. It is not therefore without cause, that it is so often tolde vs in the lawe, that we must reioyce in the presence of our G O D: that is, that as often as we haue any occasion of mirth, our mindes must be called backe vnto God, and we must giue him thanks for all: and this being done, we must vs his benefites as they carrie vs not away, and as wee be not blinded by the things of this world, as the wretched vnbeleuing sorte are. Loe what wee are to beare in minde as touching this worlde. And it serueth to vpbraid the vnthankfulnesse of them which glut and cramme themselves with the benefites that God sendeth the, without giuing him any thanks for them, which vice wee see is ouer rife. In this place then, God blameth the vnthankfulnes of men, and sayth, What do you? For you gather the frutes of the earth and who hath giuen them vnto you, but I? And yet for all that, when euery of you hath locked vp his corne in his garner, you bring it and other frutes also to your tables, and in the meane time I am no body with you: you thinke you may shut me out of your doores. Nay, but reioyce yee in my presence: or else, all that euer you doe shall be imputed vnto you for theft. For why? We knowe that God feedeth vs with condition, that his goodnesse should bee acknowledged among vs. Therefore when we burie the remembrance thereof, wee steale from him all that we haue, and wee are not worthy to eate one morsell of bread. So much the more heedfuller therefore ought we to marke these wordes, where it is sayd, Reioyce in the presence of thy God.

Now by and by it is added, with the Leuites, with the widowes, the fatherlesse, and the strangers. Wherein wee are farther warned, that they which giue thanks vnto GOD, and haue their handes shut vp from releuing the neede of their neighbours, are but counterfeites and hypocrites: as wee see many of this sorte, which bee ready to say, O, prayfed bee God, and vse many other benedicities, when they haue scraped together on this and that side, and haue made vp an heape of riches. Oh say they, God hath blessed mee, hee hath prospered mee: but as for giuing of almes, and kinde dealing, they can no skil of them, they be strange newes to them. Such folke doe but mocke G O D, and anger him as often as they prayse him with their mouth. And why? For to reioyce in the presence of our God, and to haue the company which hee hath appointed for vs, are things vnseparable. First of all hee commendeth vnto vs here such as were occupied in his seruice, and had the charge to teach the people. Hee sayth therefore: Thou shalt reioyce with the Leuites. And secondly vnder the name of strangers, of widowes, and of fatherlesse, hee commendeth vnto our care, all such as are in necessitie, and haue need to be helped. Therefore when they reioice with vs and take their course; then will G O D blesse our ioye; and it shall bee acceptable vnto him. But without that, all that euer wee doe shall bee disliked of him, it shall be filchie and vncleane in his sight. And here is expresse mention of the houlholde, to the intent that euery man shoulde bee exhorted to deale gently with those that are of his houlhold. For yee shall see some which coulde finde in their heartes to eate and drinke till they burst, and it greueth them that others shoulde haue one morsell, so faine would they that all were thrust into their owne paunches. So they themselves fare well, they care not though their meinic fast and starue for hunger. Yee shall see such greedinesse, or rather crueltie in some, that they coulde finde in their heartes to sucke the very blood of those that serue them, and in the meane time take no care to suiteyne them. For this cause our Lorde sayth that wee cannot reioyce in his presence, that is to say, in such wise as hee may lyke of our myrth, except wee reioyce with all our houlhold, and that wee thewe our selues so kindhearted and pitifull, as wee may all with one comon accord sing prayes vnto God. Yee see then how our mirth and melodie may agree very well together. Also we are exhorted to instruct them which are comitted to our charge to blesse the name of God: that whether we eate, or whether we drinke, God may be prayed both of great and small. This is the meaning of the doctrine which is conteyned here.

Now it followeth That when the people haue payd their Tythes, in the third yeere, which is the yeere of tything, every man shall bring his tythes vnto the Leuites, for the poore, for the widowes, for the fatherlesse, & for the strangers. For the vnderstanding of this place, we must note, that besides the ordinarie Tythes which serued to sustayne the tribe of Leui, and the Priestes, which serued in the temple, there was the tything of Tythes as they called it: & this was made from three yere to three yere, excepting euer the seventh yere whē their landes were not tilled: for it was expedient that the rest or Sabbath should be kept in that behalfe also. They followed not their ground from yere to yere or euerie eche other yere as wee doe in this countrie: for the fruitfulness of that land might well away to yeeld fruite sixe yeres together. So then, twice in sixe yeres they receiued y second sort of Tythes. And these are they wherof Moses maketh mention in this place, which serued to susteine the poore of the countrie: to the intent that not onely the Leuites might receiue the offerings, but that the fruite of them might reach farther, and that none in all Israel might want or neede. As touching the Tythes which were payd vnto the tribe of Leui, I haue tolde you already, that there was a double reason thereof. First forasmuch as God reserued the Leuites for his own seruice; there was great reason why they should be susteyned. They which serue at the altar ought to liue of y altar. That is y cause also why they had a certain portion in all the offerings, saue in the whole burnt offerings. But in the ordinarie sacrifices they receiue their part of them. Besides this, wee ought to note also, that because they were the children of Abraham, they ought to haue a part in y land which was promised vnto him, for they were heires aswell as the other tribes of Iuda, Benjamin, Issachar, Dan, and all the rest. Leui (I say) was an heire of Abraham and of Iacob aswell as the other. And why is he bereaued of his inheritance, but because God recompenceth him after an other maner? Yee see then how they which come from Leui, haue no parte of the land, they haue onely their medowes in the suburbes of their cities to sustaine their cattraile, but yet doth he assigne them the Tythes of the whole countrie to lnde them withall, and he will not haue them so bereft of their heritage: but that men should haue a regarde to maintain them. And why? Because he occupyeth them in his seruice: they must teach the people, they must offer the sacrifices, they must doe that which was appointed in the temple: For this cause God will haue men to haue a care to sustaine them. And herewithall, when they made the second tything, thereby they were done to vnderstand, y somewhat was to be taken as it were from their portion, to giue vnto the poore: whereby they were put in minde that they ought not to glut themselves with the offerings no nor yet to enrich themselves with them. And why? For they were the goods of the poore. Yee see men wherunto God had an eye, when he appointed the second tything which was made euery third yere. It behoued the priestes and Leuites to acknowledge and say: Well, Truly we haue enough, yea, and more than enough to susteine vs. And to what end hath God giuen vs this plentie? Is it that we should make monie of it, and hoorde it vpe in our cofers? Is it that the people should be diminished, and we increased? No: but he poynteth to vs with his finger, & telleth vs that they bee the goods of the poore, and that the poore must haue a portion out of it to susteine them withall, and that such as are in neede and necessitie must be relieved by that means. Thus yee see in effect what is contayned in this place.

Now it is not without cause that God putteth his people againe in minde of that which he had already comanded them: the simple law might haue bin sufficient for them, but our Lorde putteth them in minde, that they must discharge themselves, aswell of the second Tythe, as of the ordinarie tenth. And the reason why he doth so is because the world is alwayes set on scraping, without caring how or in what manner: men consider not what is lawfull, so they may make their gaine. And wee see also the vpbraidings which the Prophet Malachie maketh for the same thing. You haue defrauded me (sayth the Lorde) and the people come shamelesly & say: Wherein? They woulde needes pleade against God, and deny the matter stoutly and stiffly: For it is a very rare thing to haue men to confesse their debtar the first. They come here bleating out the tongue, and aske, whereof doeth God complayne? And wherin haue we defrauded him? In your Tythes (sayth the Lord.) For whereas I haue reserued the right of tythes and offerings to my selfe; you defraude me of my right. When you pay me your tythes, it is but by halves; when you bring me your offerings, they are very leane and thinne, so as a man may see how your whole seeking is to catch from me, and to withhold that which is due vnto me. Now this vnthankfulness of men is the cause why God ratified his lawe in this place. Yet notwithstanding wee see the shamelesnesse and wickednesse of the people in that which we haue rehearsed. Hereby wee are taught, that when God hath taught vs our ducie, it is not enough for vs to haue heard what we ought to doe; but we had also neede to be waked, we had neede to be stricken as it were with blowes of a Beetle, to haue y imprinted in our mindes which we haue not well borne away: we haue neede (say I) to haue one lesson often sung vnto vs, because our memorie is so short when the case concerneth our ducie towards god. But whatsoeuer God do, & by how many exhortations fouer he stirreth vs vp; yet we haue forgotten al in y turning of an hand: we thinke no longer vpon it, and continue still in our woonted trade. God cryeth out to vs, and putteth vs continually in mind of our dutie: but our lustes and affections doe so trouble vs, that wee cannot lend him an care to receiue that which hee sayth. So much the more then ought wee to take heede vnto our selues, knowing, that if the Iewes were dull vpon the spurre, and discharged not their dutie in the things that were commaunded them, the same vice also reigneth in vs: and therefore for this cause wee had neede to bee quickened vp. And let vs not think that the exhortations which men giue vs euery day, be superfluous. When wee haue heard a thing an hundred times, yet are wee as scholars still. God therefore must be faine to beginne againe with vs, and sometimes doe as he sayth by his Prophet Esay, and say A, A, B, B: for so doth hee speake, and telleth vs that we are lyke a childe that is hardwitted & dull to learne. For a man must tel him A, A: and when hee seemeth to haue learned it, it is by and by forgotten. Then comes he to B, B: and yet for all that he is still newe to beginne. Euen so is it w vs: & that is the thing whereof God complayneth and saith: What? I haue plyed this people as a man would ply litle children; and yet for all my teaching of them, they be still in their principles, they remaine still in their A, B, C: And what a shame is that? That is the thing which we haue to note, to the end that euery one of vs doe pray to be so guided by the spū of God, as wee may be the more apt to be taught, and more quicke and ready to beare in minde that which he hath sayd, and to receiue his worde in such humbleness as we ought. And moreover if we yet feele such weaknesse in vs, that God must be faine to speake againe, and returne the second and third time, whē he hath taught vs once already: let vs thereby consider and confesse his goodnesse towards vs, for bearing with vs: and let vs take heede, that when he hath spoken once or twice, we shew at leastwise, that hee hath not lost all his paines, nor bestowed it vnprofitable.

Further more for a conclusion, let vs note that if in time of the Lawe the things that were consecrated to the vse of the temple, and to the Ministers, was employed to the behalfe of the poore, when the others had more than needed; surely the same lawe remaineth still in force euē at this day. Truly the rule which S. Paul setteth downe ought to be obserued, namely y<sup>e</sup> if in old time the Priestes were sustained because G O D had called them vnto that state: they which nowadayes preach the Gospell and offer as precious offerings vnto God as those of the Lawe, ought to be fed and sustained. Yet notwithstanding it is not meant hereby that they should deuour all, as wee see is done in the Popedome. When offerings are made there, it is but to haue them wasted in pompes and heathenish vanities, or rather in other villanies: as the Bishops, and Abbates, and other euery one in their degree, spend their reuenues not only in gaming & hunting, and other vain pastimes: but also in whoredomes, & in al other shameful things: so as there is no such corruption to infect the whole world, as the wealth which is in the Church, as they term it, that is to say in the Synagogue and sink of the clergie. Now when we see these Church-robbers fall into such excessse that all goes to confusion: let vs for our part know that we must alwayes come back to that which God telleth vs here; to wit, that if we will haue our offerings acceptable vnto God, when we haue fedde and sustained them vnto whome he hath bound vs, we must come vnto the poore, to the widowes, to the fatherlesse, to the straungers, and to such as are in need. Thus ye see how our almes ought to be bestowed. On the contrary side, we see that the dealing of things in the Popedome was but to fill the bellies of the Monks & Fryets, and of y<sup>e</sup> other shauelings of their Clergie. But God disliketh of all such thinges. And why? It is not for y<sup>e</sup> cause that he requireth offerings of vs. We see whereunto he calleth vs. But now we may perceiue also our leawdnesse. The wretched Papists spared for no cost, euery one was ready to open his purse to caft somewhat into y<sup>e</sup> iawes of those greedie wolues: euery man brought them somewhat, & all this was no cost: they founded obites or yearemindes, they built chappels, they set vp gay and costly puppets, they caused manie Masses to be sung: there was continuall going to them: and these cormorants ceased not in the meane time to deuour all, and yet the people ceased not to vse such deuotions stil. And to what purpose? Surely y<sup>e</sup> Papistes make their offerings to the diuel, for it is certaine that God reiecteth them. But we on our side knowe y<sup>e</sup> when wee giue our almes, when we distribute our goods accordingly as the Lord commaundeth, he lyketh and accepteth of them all. Such we know this, should wee not at leastwise doe as much as the Papistes, who worke at aladuentures? In deede they thinke not to serue the diuel, but yet they haue no assurance to the contrarie. But as for vs, God auoweth that he wil receiue at our hands whatsoever we offer vnto him as he hath commaunded. Should we then bee slacke in this behalfe? Nay rather, let vs be the more heedfull to stirre vp our selues to doe our dutie the better, when we see that which is tolde vs in this place. Let vs be diligent in discharging our duties, that God bee not occasioned to blame vs for defrauding him of that which appertained vnto him, but let vs faithfully yeeld vnto him that which hee demaundeth of vs, or at leastwise let euery man streine himselfe thereunto, that we may truely make that protestation, which to morrow God willing we shall see.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs to feele the better than we haue done: and in the meane time to teach vs so to offer our selues vnto him, y<sup>e</sup> being reformed in our mindes and affections. We may endeour altogether to please him in all pointes, and y<sup>e</sup> therewithal we may also apply that which he hath put into our hands to such vse, as al may be derted vnto him, and that we may offer vnto him the firstlings of all our fruites, that is, y<sup>e</sup> our liue may be answerable to that which hee hath ordayned, so as we abuse not his benefits to defile them, but turne them to his glory, and to the common benefite and commoditie of the whole Church. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely vnto vs, but also to people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the xxv. of Februarie, 1556.

The Cxlvij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the fixe and twentieth Chapter.

13 Then thou shalt say before the Lord thy GOD, I haue brought the hallowed thinges out of mine house, and also giuen it to the Leuite, to the straunger, to the fatherlesse, and to the widowe, according vnto all thy commaundements which thou hast commaunded me. I haue transgressed none of thy commaundementes, neither haue I forgotten them.

14 I haue not eaten thereof in my mourning, nor held backe aught of it in vncleanesse, nor giuen aught thereof for the dead, but I haue obeyed the voyce of the Lorde my GOD, I haue done according vnto all that which thou hast commaunded me.

15 Looke downe from thy holy dwelling place of heauen, and blesse thy people Israel, and the land which thou hast giuen vs, as thou swarest vnto our fathers, the land which floweth with Milke and Hony.

Here is not one among vs which desireth not to be esteemed of in the face of the world, eury man boasteth himselfe of the discharging of his duetie: and we are also enclined by nature to set out our selues before men: for ambition driueth vs thereunto. But in the meane time there are very fewe which enter into their owne conscience, to know howe they haue behaued themselues before God, and which haue such a regarde in ordering of their life, as to say: I walke in the sight of the heauenly Iudge, it is he vnto whome I must bee accountable: I must therefore rest my selfe vpon him, and not ioy in the estimation of men, for that is but a vanitie: there are very fewe (I say) which enter into this confidencio. Now God seeing that vice to raigne in vs, seeketh to remedie it: as we may see in this place where it is layd that we must returne vnto him, to haue a good testimonie of our life. Thou shalt say (saith he.) And how? hee setteth vp here no scaffold for vs to make protestation before men, what we haue done: No: but he appointeth him selfe to be the Iudge, and will haue vs to speake as in his presence. Thou shalt say before the Lorde thy God: sayth hee. And so wee are warned, that to order our life well, we must not haue our eyes fastened on this world, nor take great care what men thinke of vs: but we must take especial paynes to approue our whole life, with all our workes and all our thoughts vnto him, before whom we must appeare at the latter day. I graunt we must diligently auoyde all offences, and put the doctrine of S. Paule in practise, to doe well not onely in the sight of God, but also before me, to the intent we may edifie others, and winne others by our example to doe that which they ought. But yet neuertheless we must labor aboue all, to haue God to lyke of vs, and albeite the world speake ill of vs and slander vs, and turne al y into euil which is good: yet must not y turne vs aside from our duetie, but we must hold our selues vnto God. To be shorte, to fare the better by this doctrine, let vs learne both euening and morning to summon our selues before God: let eury of vs enter into himselfe, as if he were out of the sight of mortall men, and say: Alas my god, I must liue as I were in thy presence, and I cannot escape thy handes nor thine eyes: giue me grace therefore so to order my life as I may referre it wholly vnto thee, and frame it vnto thy will. Behold what we haue to doe. And when we haue passed the day, let vs thinke: Alas my God, how haue I behaued my selfe towards thee? When we haue such a care, we shall not make any pompous shewes before men, as those which would haue men flatter or reioyce in the, and haue their prayes preached; when in the meane time they fall asleepe before God; neither can they consider their owne blockishnes, but although they finde themselues guiltie, yet they thinke all is well so men lyke of their doings here below. This is the thing which we haue to consider, in y God hauing spokē of the offering of the first fruits, adde that wee may not thinke that wee haue gayned much when men accuse vs not, nor vpraide vs for defrauding GOD of that which is belonging vnto him. Therefore although men charge vs with nothing: yet wee may not sleepe thereupon: but eury man must examine himselfe, and consider whether hee hath done that which was commaunded, and that not to the intent to bee commended of mortall creatures, but of the heauenly Iudge.

Now it is expressly sayd: I haue done all thinges which thou hast commaunded me, and according vnto thy statutes, and I haue not forgotten them. Wee see here, what is the rule of good life : Namely to doe according as God hath commaunded vs ; which suffreth vs not to dwell in doubt, as the ignorant wretches doe, who know not at what ende to beginne, because they are not instructed in the word of God. Ye see how in Poperie, when a man would lue as he ought to do, he listeneth to y<sup>e</sup> which one saith, & to y<sup>e</sup> which another saith, he is turned and returned with euery wind, and euery mā bringeth in his peece, so as they are always to learne how to begin. To the intent therfore that wee be not wauering nor doubting : let vs holde our selues vnto that, which is so often warned vs in the holy scripture, and whereof we haue a confirmation in this place : that is, that wee may be at defiance with all the worlde, if wee keepe on in the way which God hath shewed vs. Now I graunt that men may finde things enough in vs wherefore to blame vs : as, wee see what outcries the Papistes make, and how they storme and say that we despise the traditions of our holy mother the Church, and the decrees of holy councils, that wee ouerthrow all order, that our life is loose and licentious, and that our whole desire is to leade a brutish and beastly life. These be the things which they vpbraide vs withall. And why ? Because wee forsake their tyrannie, because we will none of their pelting baggage which they haue deuised, because wee will not be hampered with their cordes, ( for all their lawes and statutes which they haue forged, are as cordes to strangle poore weake soules with all) and because wee cast aside all those things. Now hercupon they indite vs. But let vs appeare before God, and then we may defy them: yea, we shall haue sufficient for our defence, if we can make this protestation truly ; God is my witness that I haue behaued my selfe according to his worde. Surely this is an inestimable comfort that all they haue, which swaue not from the pure and simple plainesse of the worde of God; but followe this playne path ; respecting nothing but howe to obey him which hath all soueraignetic, and authoritic ouer vs ; When we haue done soylet vs be contented that God lyketh of our dooings, though men condemne vs for them. For their iudgements are no weightier than leaues, they are soone gone, and we see here whereunto God calleth vs. But let vs note withall, that whereas it is sayd here ; I haue done according to al thy statutes : and the commaundementes which thou hast ordainyd, and haue not forgotten the same : wee are thereby put in minde to mure our selues throughtly to the knowing of our dutie; for what is it which maketh vs to transgressioe so many wayes against the commaundementes of our God, but our negligence in not thinking on our dutie ? By means whereof, we are easilie taken tardy. For the duell is crafty, and alwayes prying and watching how he may entrap vs : & we for all that are carelesse to think vpon that which God hath commaunded vs. In deede we would note of purpose dese God ; nor rebel against him: but howsoeuer the worlde goeth, we haue little care, we apply not our whole studie to consider of our dutie, and to say, Go to, what is it that God requireth of mee ? And because we haue not an eye herunto, wee stumble and fall, and go astray. We are therefore exhorted in this place, to looke more narrowly vnto our selues, & to bee more watchfull, that we forget not our dutie. For we haue a very short memorie, if God did not often refresh it. Let vs learne to consider whether we haue followed the good will of God or no in this behalfe : let vs continue therein, and keepe all one course still, and holde on in that trade all our whole life. If this were well imprinted in our heartes, wee would be more diliget to heare and to reade the worde of God than we are. We had neede to be put in minde of that which God hath commaunded vs, or else we wil soone forget it, euen in the turning of an hand; and yet we vouchsafe not, either to heare, or to reade any thing which should be for our instructioe. God therefore is iustly prouoked to punish our negligence, & we must needs fall into many ouergrosse faultes. And why ? Because we seeke not after that remedie which he hath put into our handes.

But here a man may demand a question, how God wold haue men to protest before him, y<sup>e</sup> they haue walked according vnto al his statutes & that they haue forgotten nothing of the. Is it possible for vs (how much soeuer we enforce our selues,) to obey God in such wise, as there shall be nothing but perfectnesse in our life ? That were cotraie to all y<sup>e</sup> holy scripture. For it is sayd that none shall be found righteous in y<sup>e</sup> sight of God. Psal. 143. 2. If God would vse rigour, we should all perish before his face. And y<sup>e</sup> place is spoken euen of the y<sup>e</sup> are y<sup>e</sup> righteouslest. Verily, when S. Paul went about to proue y<sup>e</sup> we cannot be iustified but by faith onely, and through y<sup>e</sup> mercie of God & the fauor of our Lord Iesus Christ: he alledged onely y<sup>e</sup> which is writen in y<sup>e</sup> law: Curled are they which performe not all those things. For he taketh this for a ground, y<sup>e</sup> it is not possible for any man liuing, to performe y<sup>e</sup> law, because it surmounteth all their power. It seemeth here then, that God meane to traie vp his people in hypocrisie, when he taught the this lesion to say, I haue obserued all thy statutes, I haue let passe none of them. Now to answer this hard question ; let vs note y<sup>e</sup> the holy scripture in speaking of y<sup>e</sup> faithfull, faith in deede y<sup>e</sup> they haue walked according to y<sup>e</sup> statutes & ordinances of God, as whē S. Luke speaketh of Zacharie, & Elizabeth his wife, he saith y<sup>e</sup> they walked vprightlie & perfectlie according to y<sup>e</sup> commaundementes & ordinances of God. And this manner of speech is often to bee found in holy scripture. And yet this proueth not, y<sup>e</sup> Zacharie was altogether perfect, y<sup>e</sup> he had an holyrie of Angels, y<sup>e</sup> he had no vice in him, & that his wife also was such another. No; but the scripture in so speaking presupposeth y<sup>e</sup> God of his goodness beareth with y<sup>e</sup> faithfull, & that hee imputeth not their faultes vnto them; when they ouershoote not theselues too far, nor become rebels and despisers of God : but intend alonely to walke according to his wil, & submit theselues vnto him, and enforce themselves and take paynes y<sup>e</sup> way.

Forasmuch then as the faithfull haue such affection and zeale to giue theselues ouer vnto God; although they trippē, although they stumble, although there be much amisse in the; and that God in rigour might cōdemne their whole life, and that there is nothing in them which is not stayned with some blot or other: yet doth GOD accept their doings, as if they were found & perfect. And why? For when we are iustificed through the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ, then doth GOD receaue vs vnto mercie, not onely to accept of vs as of his children, but also to take in good worth whatsoeuer proceedeth from vs, although it be worth nothing, ne deserueth any such lyking. Seeing then that God sheweth himselfe so gracious and fauorable vnto vs; let vs endeouour to doe well. Although we performe not that which is required of vs, and bee but in the midway: yet shall it be allowed vs in our account as if we had performed the lawe. Now according hereunto, the faithfull protest, that they haue walked according to Gods will, that they haue kept his statutes, that they haue forgotten nothing of them. And why? They meane that they haue had an vpright affection, that they haue not bin double minded, that they meant not to serue GOD by halves as many do; but that in all respects they haue bin willing to bee subiect to the Lawe. Yet for all this, they are not so blinde, but they acknowledge their imperfections, and bewaile them, and knowe themselves to be miserable in that respect: but it sufficeth the that God hath vouchsafed them such grace, as to walke vprightlie, and not to halt on both sides as hypocrites doe. Wee see that they which were the iustest in all the world, haue confessed their wretchednesse, and bin ashamed of their whole lyfe. Job in deede sayth,

Job. 29. 15. that he was an eye vnto the blinde, a foote to the lame, a defendour of the fatherlesse, a father of the poore, the refuge of the widowe, that he deceiued no man, that he abused not his credit, and that his hand was not thru vnto the which were in neede. And yet after he hath said all this, hee sayth, Alas; when I come before my Iudge, I must haue my mouth shut vp. Wee see how the seruantes of GOD haue not bin so presumptuous, as to set forth their owne lyfe as perfect. Dauid had such a witness of God, as we may wonder at: I haue found Dauid (sayth God) according to mine owne heart. Beholde how God speaketh and auoweth that Dauid was the holiest of all creatures, and yet for all this we heare what he sayth: Alas Lord enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, for neither I nor any man liuing shall be founde righteous in thy sight. Lord if thou deale lyke a Iudge, who shall stand before thee? Beholde we are all of vs confounded. It these men haue thus spoken, what shall be sayd of vs which are farre wide from such perfectnes as was found in their lyfe? And therefore we see how all the faithfull y euer were, haue alwayes acknowledged their faultes, haue euer bin humble, haue euer bin beaten downe.

Rom. 7. 24. Saint Paul also who was so excellent in al vertue, saith, Alas wretch that I am, who shal deliuer me from this bodie of death? And aiterward in the end, although he was a prisoner, although hee waited for nothing but death, and prepared him selfe to receiue it, and beheld euen then y crown of righteousnesse which was prepared for him: yet he faith, I am not yet come to my marke; but I must enforce my selfe yet farther. S. Paule herein confesseth his infirmities. So then let vs note that the Saintes neuer vaunted themselves before God to haue performed all that he commaunded them, and to haue discharged themselves of their dutie. But when they had taken holde of the free fauour which was promised vnto them, namely that GOD pardoned their sinnes, and that he would not call them to any precise account, that he forgate and buried all the sportes and staynes which were in their workes; when they tooke holde (I say) of this promise, and hung wholly vpon it: then could they protest and say, Lord we haue done all that thou hast commaunded vs to doe, yea because they were grounded vpon the meeke fauour of God, who will not examine their workes with rigour. After that manner ought this place to be vnderstode. It is not that any man may say that he hath fully discharged his dutie, and that he hath obserued y whole lawe: for we are all accursed because it is vnpossible for vs to obserue it: but that God meant to stir vp men to enforce themselves to doe well. And moreover because we haue alwayes our recourse to the freebestowed goodnes of God, he hath giue vs this leaue and libertie to say, Lord, I haue done that which thou commaundest; that is to say, I haue sought to do it. For when we tend to the seruing of God, it is all one as if we had serued him: whē we haue the affection, it is all one as if we had y effect: whē we are in y way, it is all one as if we had ended our course: when we desire, it is all one as if we had put the thing in practise. And what is the cause hereof? Eue y infinit goodnes of our God, who sitteth vs not seuerely, but spareth vs & beareth with vs as with his children. We see now in effect what is sayd. And hereby we are warned to doe our iudouour to walke according vnto the commaundementes of GOD, that wee may vnfaignedly say: Lorde, I haue doone all that thou commaundest me. And yet in the meane time let vs also acknowledge our vices, and craue pardon for them. But howsoeuer the worlde goeth, let vs not double with GOD but let vs endeouour willinglie and vnfaignedly to obey him. This is the thing which wee are taught in this place of Moses.

Now because the fruits of the earth are treated of here, it is saide, I haue not eaten of the first frutes in the anguiste of my beare. This saying may be expounded two manner of wayes: either that men haue not eaten with griefe that which they ought to offer vnto God: or that how great soeuer their neede were; yet it constrained them not to swaue from doing well, but that they alwayes discharged their offerings. As touching the first, it is certaine that albeit men bee at defiance with GOD so as they harden themselves to offend: yet notwithstanding they haue alwayes some remorse within them.

In deede when men are come to the fullnesse

Eph. 4. 19.

Eph. 4. 22.

of all wickednesse, they haue no longer any remorse of conscience (as S. Paul saith,) they make no conscience of doing any thing as we see these robbers which are altogether brutish, and not onely such as beset the high wayes, but those also which are giuen to pilling and polling; they are so settled in crueltie, that they make no conscience of dooing any thing. The adulterers likewise, after the duell hath once blinded them, are no longer ashamed of their owne filthinesse. As 10 much is to be saide of all others, which are set to followe their carnall affections and desires. These seeme to haue no feeling nor remorse of conscience at leastwise as in respect of themselves. But yet in the meane time God presseth them in such wise, that spite of their teeth they are constrained to haue within the many blinde sightes, they are awaked when they would rest, and they haue secret stinges which torment and vexe them, as the Prophet Esay saith, That the wicked man hath no peace, & that his thoughts are as the waues of the sea which meete together, and beate themselves one against another. In this case are all such as offend God. So then it is not without cause that it should bee said: I haue not eaten of it with anguish of my heart: as if it were said: Lord I haue not eaten my bread in such sort, that I haue bin touched with any remorse of hauing giuen any thing vnto thee fawnedly, or of hauing kept backe y offerings which thou hast commided me to make. Now hereby wee are warned, so to content our selues with y which God giueth vs, as y no prick of conscience might grieue vs for keepinge backe other mens goods. Yea but in y meane while wee must note also, that we must be diligent in considering what we haue done: for they that flatter themselves may wel protest y they haue no anguish in their hart; but in y end it must needs be stirred vp by God, and they must feele his anger in despite of their teeth, & know howe guiltie they are in his sight. Let vs therefore on our part take good heed, and consider whether we haue wronged any man: & let vs eate our bread in such sort as we may truly declare before God, that we haue neither remorse nor prick of conscience. But the true and natural meaning is that which we haue set down in the second place, that is, that God would haue euery man to protest, that he hath not ceased to doe his dutie for anie necessitie or extremitie wherein he was. For we thinke we are dispensed withal when we cannot discharge our duerie your great paine & much adoe. For example, he that hath nothing to pay, thinketh he is quit of his debt. And it is commonly said an y prouerb, That neede hath no law. And so because me are wont to make necessitie a shield & buckler for al the euils which they committe, therefore it is sayd, I haue not withheld mine offerings in the anguish of my heart. As if wee confessed, that although we haue bin so distressed, that we knewe not on which side to turne vs, that we had no bread to eate, yet we haue not bin tempted thereby to doe euill, but wee haue walked according to the will of God. Although wee haue bene in extreme neede; yet haue wee not ceased alwayes to deale vprightly and indifferently, what neede foer we were in. This is in effect which is meant by this place. And mention is purposely made of the anguish of the heart, to the intent we should know, y although there bee much weakenesse in vs, yet is it not a sufficient excuse to doe euill. There are many which when they haue vsed any deceyte, pilfering or extortion; will allege and saye: Oh consider I am weake, I haue no such constancie as others haue, the temptation overcame mee. But GOD in this place alleageth, that his children may bee tempted (for the anguish of the heart is a signe that wee bee made neither of Steele nor stone,) that wee haue stinges in vs, to prick vs and to holde vs in bondage; but yet y wee must fight against them whatsoeuer commeth of it. Therefore let vs learne that although pouertie be hard and grievous; yet notwithstanding we ought to resist all the temptations which wee feele in our heart, and therewithall to walke vprightly. This is a fitte lesson for poore folke, to the intent they beare not themselves in hand, that in their need it is lawfull for them to catch what they can get, and to seeke their aduantage as many doe; saying: Yee see there is none that pitieth mee, I must looke vnto my selfe: thereupon they make no conscience eyther to sell counterfeite wares or otherwise to discharge themselves verie yll of their dutie. And it is purposely sayde (as wee see) that although wee bee distressed; yet wee must eate but of the bread which God giueth vs, and not whatsoeuer wee can catch by vnlawfull means.

There is afterwards mention made of Filth and vncleanesse, and of the dead: And that is by cause of the ceremonies of the Lawe. For we knowe howe GOD meant to keepe the people of olde tyme occupied in these figures, to the intent wee myght knowe that men are subiect vnto many defylementes, and that they become vncleane at euerie turning of a hande. And heere is mention made of the dead, by cause if one touched a dead man or entered into an house where hee was; he was defyled. Heereby the Iewes were warned, that in this present life wee are beset with so many defylementes, that wee cannot steppe a foote forward, nor turne a finger, but God shall espie something woorthye of blame in vs: and for that cause were the washings appoynted. And the Iewes had a looking glasse and a liuely picture thereof, when they sawe a deade bodye. For behold, it is a carrion: and whence proceedeth this lothsomnesse which we see to bee in a man, when hee is deade? For the body of man is the house and temple of the holy Ghost, and the dwelling place of the liuely Image of GOD. Yet notwithstanding, the body of man being dead is more stinking than the carrion of a dog or of an Asse. Nowe then, the sight heere of serueth well to humble vs in beholding the fruites of sinne. For God sheweth as it were with his finger, that the spirituall filthinesse which dwelleth in vs, vttereth it selfe euene in the body.

And this was y<sup>e</sup> meaning of the figures which the auncient fathers had vnder y<sup>e</sup> law. Now it is true in deede y<sup>e</sup> figures themselves are no longer in vs; but yet y<sup>e</sup> substance of them shall alwayes remayne, to do vs to vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> forasmuch as we be subiect to many defilementes because the world is so corrupted as is pitie to beholde, we ought to keepe good watch, & that as oft as we perceiue any staine in vs, or that we haue not followed Gods commandmentes roundly, or y<sup>e</sup> we haue bin allured by any wicked affection, or that we haue not walked in the way of God with so feruent zeale as we should haue done, or y<sup>e</sup> we haue bin held back & hindered with some worldly care: we must bewaile it before God, and seeke for refuge to y<sup>e</sup> bloud of our Lorde Iesus Christ: for there is no talke to be had of other washings. The holy water of the Papistes is but a charme, whereby they haue renouced y<sup>e</sup> benefite of the death & passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Vnto his death therefore must we haue our recourse. And moreover, although we feele not our faults, (as in very deede many escape vs, & we knowe not y<sup>e</sup> hundreth part of them) yet must wee not cease to walke in carefulnes & humblenes, and to craue pardon of God. After that maner must we deale that we may be answerable vnto the figures which were vnder the lawe.

Now as touching this place, it is expressly said, I haue held backe nothing of it in vncleannes, neyther haue I applyed any of it to the seruice of the deade: to shew vnto vs y<sup>e</sup> we ought not to mingle y<sup>e</sup> seruice of God with the corruptions of y<sup>e</sup> diuill. As how? We shall see many, who hauing wel to spend, doe consume it ill: some of them in whoredome, and some in I knowe not what riot and excess: And when they haue to their seeming giuen some little peece of it vnto God: they dispense with themselves to fall to y<sup>e</sup> working of all wickednesse. As for example; when the Papistes cause some Masses to be sung, or whē they haue had some other priuate deuotions: they thinke y<sup>e</sup> God ought to be contented with that he hath had his morsell. Therefore when a man hath spent much money vpon an whoore, one Masse (as he thinketh) will set him free in respect of God. When a wicked varlet hath spoyled & robbed this man and that man, hee will come as it were in scorne to make some small offering vnto God, & he thinketh all is well. And euen here among vs a man shall see such as flatter themselves after the same maner. For they beate themselves in hand, y<sup>e</sup> they haue made amendes for their robberies, when they haue giuen a small part of their booty vnto God.

But the scripture telleth vs expressly, y<sup>e</sup> God abhorreth such sacrifices as are mingled with our filthies, & that we doe but vnhallow his name by them, & that we work him most horrible treacherie. So then let vs note, y<sup>e</sup> Moses meant to declare vnto vs, y<sup>e</sup> if we will offer such offerings as God may accept, we must not mingle them with our owne defilementes. In deede (as I haue alreadye tolde you) we cannot bee so pure and cleane; as that no fault may be found with vs: but yet we may come and serue our God purely, and not be fraughted with such hypocritie as to doe his commaundements by halfes, but serue him with an vpright and pure affection. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to beare in mind concerning this place: where it is said, I haue taken none of it in filth and vncleannesse.

Now in the end Moses heareth that againe which he had alreadye touched, of obseruing the commaundements of God. But he expresseth it more fully than he had done before. Fro<sup>m</sup> whence proceedeth this obedience, & from what roote? Verily from hearkening vnto God whā he speaketh, and when he sheweth vs the way which we must keepe. I haue hearkened vnto the voyce of the Lord my God, and haue followed that which hee commanded me. By these words all such as follow their owne likings are condemned. Wee see how puerly the most part of men doe walke. Euerie man will say & confesse that we must serue God; but after what maner, and fashion? There is not that man which in arleth not himselfe in his own fantasies. Well (saith he) I must serue God. And how? I will doe the best I can. But no man regardeth what God commaundeth, no man considereth what is pleasing vnto him: ye goe & offer vnto him at randon whatsoeuer our owne braine conceiueth. But all such inuentions of our owne are heere in one woord condemned, where it is said that first we must hearken vnto the voyce of God: If we will haue him to receiue our offerings and sacrifices, all our offering vnto him must be according vnto his word, which we cannot doe except we be taught in his schoole. Will wee then walke as we ought? Let vs take paines to bee taught in the woorde of God. And this is the thing wherein we shall differ from the Papistes, to wit, if we profit in the Gospell. For those poore beastes goe astray, and knowe not in what case they are: for they neuer knew, y<sup>e</sup> ground of all sacrifices is obedience: And therefore they do whatsoeuer cometh in their heads; and no wonder: for they neuer had the wil of God declared vnto the, they are deprivied of y<sup>e</sup> doctrine of saluation. But as for vs, seeing God hath vouchsafed to declare his will vnto vs, let vs heare vnto y<sup>e</sup> which he commaundeth, let his voyce ring in our eares, & while he speaketh let vs not be deaf. Moreover let vs not think our selues discharged by knowing what we ought to doe, but let vs also put it forthwith in practise. What are we y<sup>e</sup> better for the hearing of our duetie at a Sermon, or for the reading therof in the holy scripture; vnlesse we proceede to put the same in practise, knowing that Gods speaking vnto vs is to make tryall of our obedience?

Now here vpon it is said, Looke downe therefore O Lord from thine holy dwelling place, euen from heauen, vpon thy people Israel, and blesse them in the land which thou hast promised and sworn to giue them, in the person of our fathers. Heereby God meant not to say that the people should ground themselves vpon their owne merites; but he ment to stirre vp the faithfull to walke simply in his feare if they woulde haue him for his part to continue his benefites and his blessings towards them. This would bee darke if it should not bee layde forth more plainly. In deede all that euer

God promiseth vnto vs, proceedeth from his owne freebestowed goodnesse: But yet for all that he will not haue vs to neglect our dutie, and to abuse his promises, as if we might binde him vnto vs, and wee in the meane time bee his enemies: he will not haue vs to spurne in his face, and to pinne him in the meane time to our floure & say: Thou must shewe thy selfe a father vnto vs, although we be not thy children: thou must bee at peace with vs, although we make war against thee. Now we may not dally with God. But will we enjoy his fauour vnto the ende? Will we haue him to continue beneficiall vnto vs? Let vs take heed then that we serue and honour him, let vs take heed y<sup>e</sup> we walke according vnto that, wherunto hee hath called vs: for we must alwayes beare this saying of his in minde: Turne ye vnto me, and I will turne vnto you. God saith that he turneth himselfe from vs, when he leaueth vs alone, and taketh his blessings from vs, and hath no pittie on vs, neither eth vs though we call vpon him, but giueth vs vp for a pray, both vnto the diuell and vnto all our enemies. For when we turne our backs vnto him, it is good reason that he should also forget vs. Neuertheless hee willet vs to turne vnto him, and hee will turne vnto vs, that is to say, if we walke in his feare, hee will neuer forget vs, but we shall feele his hande ready to aide and helpe vs in all our needs and necessities. This is the common doctrine of the holy scripture. And according hereunto it is saide in this place, Lord, seeing wee haue walked in thy commandementes, looke thou also mercifully vpon thy people, and blisse shine inheritance, and the lande which thou hast promised vnto our fathers. True it is that the Iewes knewe verie well, and wee haue seene the same oftentimes heretofore, that this lande was not giuen vnto them in respect of the obedience which they had yelded vnto God: and that neither they, nor their fathers had any maner of way deserued it. But God was moued by his own only good pleasure, to giue it vnto them. The Iewes ought to haue bene thoroughly perswaded thereof. Euen so let vs looke well to our selues, and say: Lord, true it is that whatsoeuer we haue, we holde it of thy meere goodnesse: for thou hast also bound vs vnto thee, and hast put this bridle vpon vs, that we be thy children, in so much that thou hast prevented vs with thy mercy, and shewed thy selfe a father towards vs in adopting vs: And we Lord likewise haue followed the calling wherunto thou calledst vs; we haue indououred to shewe that thy bountifull liberalitie towards vs is not vterly misbestowed. Now therefore continue thou thy good doing towards vs. To bee short, this case admitteth not any bragging or boast- ing (as I haue already tolde you) but rather it serueth to stirre vp men to walke in the feare of God and to cerifie them that although they haue not behaved themselves in all pointes as they ought; yet God will continue his goodnesse towards them vnto the ende. And surely wee haue neede of such an assurance. We see howe distrustfull we be; in so much that although God haue powred out his benedictions vpon vs long time together; we haue left his steps of obedience: yet are we alwayes in doubt, and we cannot tell whether God will continue his fauour vnto vs or no. For this cause he will haue vs most certainly assured, that when we walke in his obedience and depende wholly vpon him, he will not forsake vs, but will continue in doing vs good still; and not leaue vs in the middle way, but performe that which he hath promised; and as he hath saide, so will hee doe. We see nowe in effect wherunto Moses had an eye, and what doctrine we haue to gather out of this place. Will wee then abide in possession of Gods benedictions; yea euen as touching this present life? Let vs sticke fast vnto our God, and neuer seer our selues from him; let vs doe our indeuor to serue and honour him: If we do so; surely we shall neuer haue any mind to turne away after our owne vanities: but when we see that he is come so neere vnto vs to doe vs good; wee also shall be readie to giue our selues wholly ouer vnto him, th<sup>t</sup> hee may make vs to feele the performance of his promises, and to knowe that he will continue to doe vs good, and reach vs his hand to take vs to himselfe, not for a day or two onely, but for euer both in life and in death.

Nowe let vs kneele downe before the maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, and therewithall seeing it pleaseth him to vs: such fatherly goodnesse towards vs as to vouchsafe to accept the things which we offer vnto him, notwithstanding that there bee much amitie in them: Let vs pray him y<sup>t</sup> thus his so doing may encourage vs the better to yeld our selues wholly vnto his seruice, and to imploy our selues therein, so as we may truly protest, that we haue not doubled with him, but that we haue endeouored to frame our life vnto his holy commandements: that hauing obtained such grace of him through our Lord Iesus Christ by the benefite of his death and passion, we may bee so clothed with his perfect righteoufnesse, that we may appeare before God his father at the latter day, as if there were nothing in vs but all perfection. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the xxvj of Februarie, 1556.

The CXLVIII. Sermon which is the fourth vpon the sixe and twentieth Chapter.

16 This day the Lorde thy G O D commaundeth thee to doe these ordinaunces and lawes, and to keepe them and doe them with all thy heart and with all thy soule.

17 Thou hast set vp this day the Lorde to bee thy G O D, and to walke in his wayes, and keepe his ordinaunces and his commaundementes, and his lawes, and to obey his voyce.

18 And the Lorde hath set thee vp this day, in that thou art vnto him a speciall people, as hee hath tolde thee, to the end that thou shouldest keepe all his commaundements.

19 That hee may make thee very hie in praife, and in name, and in glorie aboute all the nations which he hath made, and that thou maiest be an holic people vnto the Lorde thy God as he hath saide.

Moses in this place continueth the matter which was handled yester day, to wit, in shewing vnto the Iewes for what ende G O D had chosen them to bee his people and his flock. It was not that they should liue as the Gentiles, which were in ignorance; but that seeing they had the lyght of lyfe and saluation, they should follow it. For there is no reason, that seeing G O D hath adopted vs for his children, wee shoulde bee as brute beastes, euery man wandering after the fantasies and lustes of his owne heart: wee must order our selues vnder the direction of him which taketh and admitteth vs for his owne. It is therefore sayde in this place, This day the Lorde thy G O D commaundeth thee to keepe all his statutes, and his commaundementes: so doe them, and so obserue them, yea, and shew with all thy heart, and with all thy soule. This worde To day, betokeneth, that when wee are taught in the worde of G O D, we are much more straiter bounde, than if hee had onely created vs and placed vs in this worlde, and in the meane time left vs to walke after our owne liking. It is true in deede, that the vnbeleeuing sort shall not bee excused, although G O D neuer vouchsafed to make them partakers of his worde. Although they bee as poore blinde wretches in darkenesse, yet shall they not fayle to bee condemned in their ignorance. He that hath sinned without the Lawe, shall perih (sayeth Saint Paul.) And in deede [without the Lawe] there is not that man which hath not some wittnesse ingraued io his owne heart, that there is but one G O D whome wee ought to serue, and whome wee ought to honour. They which knowe this by nature, deserue sufficiently to bee condemned: but when G O D commeth neere vnto vs, and vouchsafeth to vse the office of a teacher to declare vnto vs his will, there is the lesse excuse for vs. Then must double condemnation needes fall vpon all them which receiue not the yoke of G O D, when it pleaseth him to guide them, and to shewe them that hee will not leaue them to goe at randon, as the wretched and vnbeleeuing Gentiles. Ye see the what Moses meant by this worde, To day the Lorde thy G O D commaundeth thee. And that is the cause why this word also is put in the 95. Psalm. To day if ye heare the voyce of the Lorde. And the Apostle hath well weyed the same, in the Epistle to the Hebrewes: saying, that this worde To day, betokeneth that when wee once haue the worde of God preached vnto vs, we must vse that occasion, and that if it escape vs, we must needes bee iudged by them, which neuer knewe what good and euill meant to make any sure difference betwene them. And to this purpose also Saint Paule allegeth the place of Esay, Beholde, nowe are the acceptable dayes, loc nowe is the time of saluation, seeke the Lord whyle hee is neere at hande, call vpon him while hee sheweth himselfe. So then let vs learne, not to let slippe the opportunite of time while the Lorde calleth vs, and allureth vs vnto himselfe, let vs not play the deafe men, let vs not bee slowe to come vnto him, but let vs be in an vnfayned readinesse, and say; Lorde, behold we are heere, what is it that thou commaundest vs? We are prest and ready euery of vs for himselfe to obey thee. Thus yee see what we haue to beare in minde out of this place.

And moreover in this place Moses setteth downe these wordes, The commaundementes and statutes, in the same sense which we haue heeretofore already touched: namely, to shewe that G O D teacheth vs not by halves when wee haue his worde, but that wee haue a perfect instruction, so as the knowledge of no good thing shall be wanting vnto vs, if wee be not stubborn vnto God, and of sette purpose stoppe our eares: as there are many

many which are ready ynough to make a countenance of not knowing what it meaneth : although GOD haue taught them. If we therefore on our part bee tractable to bee taught, there is no doubt but that our lyfe shall bee in all poyntes well ruled, when we haue the word of God.

And if this was said of the time of the Lawe, which was much more darker than the Gospell is, doubtlesse wee haue nowe more plentie of doctrine and instruction. Let vs learne therefore to profite in the schoole of our GOD, while it pleaseth him to vse the office of a schoolemaster towards vs, and let vs not doubt that any thing shall bee wanting vnto vs, when we come to him to bee taught. And that is the cause why Saint Paule also sayeth, that in the Gospell there is such a fulnesse of wisdom, as a man can not wish any more. So then let vs not bee vnthankfull;

Col. 3. 3.

but when our GOD speaks vnto vs, let vs inquire after his will, and order our lyfe according vnto that which hee telleth vs. But with all wee must bee diligent. For seeing GOD forgetteth not any thing, he leauech any thing behinde which myght serue for the well ordering of our lyfe, should wee on our part bee negligent? Or if wee heard but one woorde of that which hee will tell vs, should wee ouerpasse it without thinking vpon it? No: but for as much as wee see that GOD hath such a care of ordering our lyfe, let vs also on our side take paynes to profite in his woordes; let vs apply our whole studies thereunto, knowing that it is not losse time which is spent; let vs occupie our selues in observing his statutes, his commandements, and ordinances: and let vs let our mindes well vpon them. In deede GOD hath in ten wordes comprised what focuer hee requireth of vs, but these tenne woordes haue in them great substance. Our knowing of the ten commandements must not bee to prattle of them lyke a Pye in a Cage as they say: but wee must consider well of the meaning of them, and marke whereunto they tend. When our Lorde hath spoken the woordes, wee must first consider wherunto it tendeth: and secondly, what things depend thereon: and wee shall finde that wee haue neede to thinke vpon it, and to occupie and to employ our selues in it, at the time of our lyfe.

Nowe heerewithall Moses sheweth after what sorte wee must keepe the commandements of GOD, to wit, With all our hearts and with all our soule. It is not ynough then to employ our handes and our feete to doe well, but our heart must marche foremost. For if wee serue GOD through constraint, all is nothing worth. After which manner, Hypocrites feare to bee punished make some fayre shewe of godlynesse, and in the sight of men, yee would thinke there were cause why they should bee prayed; but their heart is full of wickednesse and rebellion, so as they desyre GOD, and woulde haue him abolished if it were possible. The first thing therefore which yee haue to doe in framing our lyfe to the obedience of. GOD, is to serue him with a pure and free good will, so as wee bee not forced to doe that which he commaundeth vs, ne grynd our teeth at him, as who shoulde say wee woulde scape his hand, in doing the cleane contrarie, if it were possible. But wee must offer our heart in sacrifice, that God may bee so serued of vs, as wee may shewe that his Lawe is not such as the ciuill orders and lawes of men are. For they ordayne what seemeth good vnto them, to the intent that men should bee bridled but from the outward actions: but it is not ynough to please GOD withall, nor to haue doone euill, vnlesse our heart also bee answerable in all purenesse. And yet farther Moses speaketh not simply of the affections, but hee will haue the heart also to bee pure and vpright. Thou shalt serue mee therefore with all thy heart, and with all thy soule: that is to say, soundlye or vnfaignedly, so as wee double not with GOD as wee see some doe; which make a fayre shewe for a time, but it soone vanisheth: and againe, they haue a backe shoppe so as they serue not GOD but agaynst their will. Wee must therefore laye open our heart before GOD, wee must offer our thoughtes and desires vnto him, wee must endeouour to submitte our selues wholly vnto him. Thus must hee bee serued and honored of vs, howbeit not after our manner, but according to his owne lawe.

But heere a man myght demaunde, howe it may bee possible for men to giue themselves to serue GOD with all their heart. For as long as wee remayne inclosed in this fleshe of ours, there will bee alwayes many infirmities and vices in vs which will holde vs backe and hinder vs. And verily wee heare how Saint Paule sayeth, I can not doe the good which I woulde. But if the heart were wholly giuen vnto GOD, the performauce of things woulde followe out of hande. It followeth then, that when wee bee so letted and hindered, wee obey GOD but in part. But as I haue already declared, this letteth not, but that wee may serue GOD in singleness of heart: for hee imputeth not vnto vs those infirmities which hinder vs, when there is no faynednesse in vs, but that our chiefe desire and seeking is that hee shoulde quietlye possesse vs and gouerne vs by his holy spirit, and that our lyfe may bee conformable in all poyntes to his woorde. Therefore when we haue this desire in vs, although wee be helde backe and hindered with the infirmities of our fleshe, yet GOD imputeth not that euill vnto vs. That is the thing which wee haue to beare in mynde out of this place. But a man may yet farther demaunde, whether GOD chargeth a man with any thing which is about his power and abilitie? For it seemeth an inconuenient thing that GOD shoulde require things vnpossible to bee doone. But this demaunde is easily answered: for when God published and let forth his lawe, hee respected not what we coulde doe, or what our power or abilitie is, but what we owe vnto him.

There.

Therefore when he saith: You shall serue mee by keeping my Statutes with all your hearts and wish all your soule: hee speaketh not according to our ability: hee knoweth full well, that wee are not able to compass it, wee are farre wyde from it: but yet for all that, wee cease not to be bounde vnto him, and there is good right why hee shoulde require his due, although wee are not able to performe it. For whence cometh the faulte? Of the corruptnesse of our nature. Seeing it is so then, let vs conclude that GOD must not be barred of his right. And therefore although men can not wholly discharge themselves, yet GOD ceaseth not to say, You owe mee this, and therefore doe it. Now whereas the Lawe was in such sort giuen vnto vs, wee are so farre vnable to performe it, that wee knowe not howe to haue one good thought onely to beginne, much lesse haue wee any ryght affection to stirre one finger to doe it. That is no newes: but wee must mourne, knowing that wee are altogether rebelles vnto GOD, and that there is nothing in our nature, which is not repugnant to his righteousnesse. Haue wee done so? Haue wee condemned our selues? Then let vs pray him to ayde vs with his holy spirite. And moreouer when hee shall haue ayded vs, let vs knowe that if there be anything wanting in our duecie, yet shall it not come into account, but GOD will accept of the seruice which wee yeelde vnto him, so it proceede from a free and syncere mynde, as I sayde afore. Wee see then that the thing which wee haue to gather vpon this place, is, that GOD will be serued, not by piece meale nor by force or constraint, but of a pure and free-hearted deuotion and with all our heart. Moreouer let vs note, that wee cannot discharge our selues of all that which wee owe him, and as in respect of our owne nature, wee can not any way beginne. But whereas hee hath published his Lawe by the mouth of menne, and hath caused it to be set downe in wryting; hee must also write it in our heartes, as he promisseth to doe; both by Ezechiel and also Ieremie. And it is a common doctrine (as wee shall see hereafter) that hee promysed the Iewes to circumsise their heartes. After that manner doeth GOD speake vnto his elect, that is, that through his holy spirite, hee imprinteth his commandementes in their heartes. Moreouer wee must knowe that although GOD haue touched our heartes by his holy spirite, yet wee are alwayes rebelles against him, and wee neuer come to the perfect and substantiall seruing of him which is, sette downe heere. Wee must therefore alwayes bewaile our selues, crauing forgiuenesse of the faultes which remayne in vs. But yet notwithstanding wee must inforce our selues to come vnto GOD, yea euen with willing seruice, that our heartes may be so disposed, as wee may take a pleasure to be obedient vnto him, for vntill wee be come to that poynr, GOD will accept of no seruice which wee doe to him. Thus yee see in effect what wee haue to beare in minde concerning these words of Moses.

Nowe hee addeth; The Lorde thy GOD hath made thee to promise this daye, that thou shalt bee a people vnto him: and thou hast caused the Lorde thy GOD to say, that hee shall bee thy GOD. This place heere is taken in two sortes. For the verbe which Moses vseth, signifyeth sometyme to exalt or to sette vppe on high: howbeit not in his originall signification, but after a certayne manner; and sometime whereas yee woulde saye, according to the roote of the woorde, A man is exalted; it may also be construed, hee hath made himselfe to saye: by cause it is to be gathered, that bragging and boasting doe make a man to set out and to aduance himselfe highly. Therefore commonly this place is taken as if it were sayde, the Lorde thy GOD hath chosen thee this day to be his people, and thou also hast exalted or sette him vp to be thy GOD. I graunt that this sense maye well be borne with. But when all is more nearely considered, the naturall meanyng of Moses is as wee haue turned it, to wit, this daye thou hast caused the Lorde thy GOD to say, that hee will by thy GOD; and hee hath made thee saye, that thou wilt be his people. For in this place Moses meant to shewe the fauour which GOD had vttered towards the Iewes, in making his couenaunt with them. And to prouue this to be so, wee see that the same thing is declared many tymes in the holy Scripture, both to the Iewes, and also vnto vs: that is, that GOD vseth incalimable goodnes towards vs whē it pleaseth him to cal vs into his church, and to receiue vs as it were into his own house, for then he couenāceth with vs as if two persons shoulde meete to passe bondes on eyther part. As for example; Some gift is to be made. Now hee that is the grantor speaketh first, and he that accepteth is there also. Then are conditions annexed; and the partie that maketh the gift saith: This I except, This I referue, or I will haue him to whom I gieve it, to be bounde vnto mee after such a maner. The graunter (as they terme him) accepteth of the gift, & bindeth himselfe on his part, and both of them make promises, I (saith y. one) doe renounce all my right, & giue all ouer into this mans hand. And I for my part (saith the other) doe accept it with condition to performe y. which he requireth of me. So then like as Conuencances doe passe betweene men: euen so dealeth God w. vs in that it pleaseth him to admit vs for his people, & to take vs for his owne. Now let vs see what honor this is, whē he stoopeth so vnto vs wretched creatures. We are poore wormies of the earth: as touching our bodies we are viler carions & rottennes: & as for our soules there is yett farre greater wretchednes in them: and yet notwithstanding God entrencheth into couenants w. such as we are: & what equal match is there betweene vs? Would an earthly king or some great Prince vouchsafe to come vnto a swineheard or some other man of base degree, & say, we wil couenant one w. another, we wil haue a Notary be-

twix vs. A Prince (which yet is but a mortall creature) would think himself too much disgraced, if he should enter into couenāt with such an abiect as in respect of y<sup>e</sup> world: and yet our God vouchsafeth to stoope as lowe vnto vs. And therefore we ought to magnifie so great a priuilege. When we heare the worde of God preached vnto vs, it is all one as if God came down hither vnto vs and saide; Come on. As for mee, I am readie to couenant with you, onely be you likewise disposed on your side. When wee haue such a neare accessē vnto God, and he acquainteth himselfe so with vs, and woulde haue vs foioyned vnto him: are wee not voyde of al sense and reason, if this doe not moue vs, yea and inflame our heartes to giue our selues wholly ouer vnto God, who vseth such & so incredible gentleness towards vs? So then it is not without cause that Moses sayeth in this place: This daye the Lorde thy God hath made thee so giue thy 20 wordes, that is to iaye, hee hath made thee to couenant with him, that thou wilt bee his people, and thou hast made him to couenant with thee, that hee will bee thy God. Thou hast this libertie, or rather this priuiledge to speake with thy God. Goe to then, let vs couenant together, let vs haue our mouthes open to demaunde and to aske, seeing our Lorde stoopeth so lowe vnto vs. It is verie true that hee can owe vs nothing, but yet neuertheless, of his meere liberalitie hee will haue vs to aske him, that wee may bee his; hee will haue vs to require him that hee may bee our God, and we his inheritance; hee our King, and we his people: wee his children, and hee our father. Seeing then that wee may come so farre; ought not the great pitifulnesse which our Lorde sheweth vnto vs, to make vs ashamed? What a shame were it if wee shoulde remaine so blockish as to bee no. bing at all moued, after that God hath so allured vs, and after that hee hath so presented vs aforehande with his infinite goodnesse? Nowe then to the intent wee may profite our selues the better by this place, let vs note once againe this worde, To daye. For Moses alwayes putteth the Iewes in minde, that when the law was published, God was present with them, and called them to enter into couenant with him as I will declare anon. But nowe as touching vs, we haue the Gospel, wee see the time reasonable, we see the dayes of saluation, we see the acceptable time of God; let vs therefore make hast, let vs enter in whyle the doore is open, while the way is readie let vs goe forward in it, let vs not foreflowe it; for if God perceiue that wee despise his grace, doubtlesse hee can well ynough skill howe to withdrawe it, as hee also threateneth to doe. Let vs not therefore delay the time vntill to morrowe, to followe whither God calleth vs; but whyle he speaketh let vs be attentive to heare him. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in mynde vpon this worde, To daye.

Moreover it is true, that in substance God maketh no other couenant with vs nowadayes, than hee made in olde time with the Iewes: but yet hee speaketh much more familiarly vnto vs; hee sheweth him selfe to bee our God, and our father, and hath made vs a farre greater assistance thereof in our Lorde Iesus Christ, than the Iewes coulde haue vnder the shadowes and figures of the lawe. In deede the auncient fathers were saued by no other meanes, than by that which wee haue, to wit, that they were the people of God; for this betokeneth as much, as that God held them for his childre: & they had their saluation grounded in Christ Iesus, as wee haue; but that was after an obscure manner, so as they behelde the thing afaire off which was presented vnto them. As for vs, seeing God is come so neere vnto vs in the person of our lord Iesus Christ, that wee be vnited vnto him, and haue the truth and substance of the ancient figures: wee bee so much the more surer y<sup>e</sup> God maketh vs to saye that wee are his people, and that we make him to say that he is our God. And how doth he make vs to say it? Truly altogether of his owne good will, without being tyed or bound vnto vs. For God hauing adopted vs for his children, certifieth vs that the inheritance of heauen is made readie for vs, and behold hee giueth his own sonne vnto vs for a pledge of his loue, & whatsoever our Lorde Iesus Christ hath is all ours, with all the fullnesse of riches which wee reade was giuen vnto him. And why? Euen vnto the ende that wee shoulde bee enriched by them. The obedience which hee yielded vnto his father is our righteousness. To be short, hee hath nothing whereof he maketh not vs partakers. Seeing that he is ours, and that hee is giuen vnto vs, how shall not all the rest which hee hath be giuen vnto vs also with him, as S. Paul saith in the eighth to the Romanes? Seeing the 40 that we haue this, and that wee may make our God say that he is our fauour, and that nothing can be wanting to vs after hee hath receiued vs into his fauour and loue: let it lift vs vp vnto heaue, so as euery of vs may forget & renounce him selfe. Let vs bid the world farewell, and let vs be rauished to giue our selues ouer altogether vnto him, who sheweth himselfe so liberal & fauourable vnto vs. And let vs note, that seeing we make God to speake so, that is to say, to graunt vs libertie to come vnto him, & to require him to accomplish his promises; we must at leastwise be mutually bound vnto him, & he take promise of vs, that we will be his people, that is to say, that because hee hath redeemed vs by the blood of his onely sonne, we will liue no longer after our own lusts & fleshly desires, but be ruled by him; & that as he is our father so we will be his children, so as none of vs wil yeld to do wickedly, but hold fast the seale of our adoption which is the holy spirite to be governed by him. There must (say I) at leastwise be this mutual bonde betwix vs, that seeing God bindeth himselfe so vnto vs, we also must come and submit ourselues wholly vnto him.

Now herewithal we ought to wey wel this word which Moses addeth. He saith twise As the Lorde hath said vnto thee, whereby he sheweth, y<sup>e</sup> when we come vnto God, we must not come vnto him with

with stoutnes & pride, as though he were beholden vnto vs; but we must know that we come because he calleth vs. What mortall man will presume to present himselfe before God & say, bind thy selfe vnto me, & let vs couenant here together, y<sup>e</sup> thou wilt be my God, & that I shalbe of y<sup>e</sup> number of thy people? Were not men stark mad if they shoulde presume to speake so vnto God? Now then let vs note, y<sup>e</sup> it is for him to open our mouthes, & to giue vs such warrant. And that is the cause why Moses sayeth ( & that not once only, but with a dubler repetition) that it is God which hath spoken. Therefore if men shoulde of their own mind come vnto God & say, bind thy selfe vnto vs; it were a diuellish rashnes; but let vs wait vntill our Lord call vs. And when it pleaseth him to offer speech vnto vs, then let vs knowe y<sup>e</sup> it is no presumption worthy to be condemned to say, wel Lord, seeing we know thy wil, we will vse the liberty which thou offerest vnto vs. That is the maner of proceeding which wee must obserue when we come vnto God. But herein wee see how the wretched world hath bin blinded wth horrible abuses. When we speake of the certeinetic of our saluacion, the Papises say it is a presumptuousnes; & that we must alway stande in suspence & dout of it. Their beleefe is, that no man ought to assure himselfe of his saluacion, but that he should only weene & suppose it. Neither is it y<sup>e</sup> ignorantest sort which speake thus; but it is the resolute determination of all their diuellish schooles. But in the meane while what do they? Eury of the bindeth God at his own pleasure; and looke what they haue forged & deuised, y<sup>e</sup> wil they haue God to admit for good; although he neuer spake word of it. These are two extremities which are too excessiue. For on y<sup>e</sup> one side the Papises stande alway in dout saying, I cannot tel in what case I am with God: in deed I thinke I stand in his fauor, but I know not how y<sup>e</sup> matter goeth. And what is the cause [why they vse such maner of speaches?] Forsooth they are afraid of presumptuousnes. Is it presumptuousnes to hang wholly vpon the goodnes of God; & to doe him the honor to beleue his worde; and to answer Amen, as soone as he speaketh; and to account of these things vtterly vsfallible? Is that presumptuousnes? Nay, it is rather true obedience; & obedience importeth humblenes. In deede there is in this behalfe a kind of boldnes; and S. Paul also ioyneth those two together in 3. Chap. to the Ephesians, saying, By faith which we haue in Christ Iesus, wee haue trust giuen vs with boldnes & hardines to come vnto God. Faith therefore engendreth boldnes; but this boldnes proceedeth not of pryde; but rather thereby we learn our humblenes in that we receiue quietly that which God telleth vs, & accept it, as a thing wherof we ought not to dout. That is the first extremitie, which raigneth too shamefully among the Papises. But what do they in the meane rime? They haue their deuotions eury man after his own fancie. I wil do this, & I will do that. I must win heauen; I must make satisfaction for my sinnes in such wise & such. God is iust, & think we that seeing he is iust, he wil deny vs our hyre when wee shall haue serued him? And although we serue him not in full perfectnes, yet he wil like of that which wee shal doe, or else he should be cruel & vniust, if he shoulde not accept of our seruice; and if there be any default in it, we wil make an amends for it: for we haue meanes to satisfie him. Nay we wil do more than he hath comanded vs; wee wil take vpon vs to keepe his law, but yet wil wee haue some farther deuotion in store, & it cannot bee but y<sup>e</sup> all this must be taken into our accounts; for whatsoeuer is done vpon a good intent cannot be bad: neither ought God also to reiect it. See how the Papises plead with God, not onely as with their match, but also as with some little play fellow; & if he like not of al y<sup>e</sup> they do, & account it good, he shalbe condemned although he declare that he disliketh of it al & say, I wil not put it into my account; Deceite not your selues, it is vtter abomination vnto me. No sir (say they) you will like of it wel ynough for al that; you cannot but accept of it, seeing we think it to be good. After that maner do the Papises talke. In deede they wil not vse those very woordes; but yet is it the very effect of their doctrine, without adding one syllable thereto. And surely it is a diuellish presumption, when men take so highly vpon them as to make God beleue that whatsoeuer they haue deuised, is good, & that he must needs receiue it: & againe, when they wil binde him vnto them, as who would say, God will receiue me, I haue purchased y<sup>e</sup> kingdom of heauen, I must be receiued therinto for my desert, & if God will not admit me for his pities sake, yet must he do it for his iustice sake: for it is not his simple merite that I stande vnto, I wil not bee saued by his mere grace, but I will haue him to take mine account, and as he shall find me worthy, so let him deale by me. See how the deuil bewraeth himselfe, and fitteth vp his horns against God. But wee for our part are taught here an other lesson. For Moses saith it is the Lord which hath sayd it. And he doth expressly repete this kinde of speach to do vs to vnderstand, that it is not for vs to sue God or to make any couenât with him: but he must first call vs and we must stand aloofe without preacing to come at him, vntill he of his owne good wil do seeke vs. Norwich standyng y<sup>e</sup> we be thus shaken off, our God telleth vs that he wil haue acquaintance with vs, and y<sup>e</sup> although we haue bin his mortal enimies, yet hereafter we shalbe of his household. And that wheras we haue bin bondslaves to satan & holden captiue vnder the bondage of death; he will make vs his children & heires. Doth our Lorde once say so? O then there remaineth nothing for vs to doe but to come vnto him; for then haue wee leaue & libertie to set our selues forward. But here there is nothing of our owne: all is because we are called from aboue, yea, giuen of his meere grace, so as wee bring nothing. It is not said, because thou hast done this or that, or because God hath giuen in thee some cause why he should shew thee such fauour. No, but according as he hath spoken, according as the Lorde hath said it. The purpose of God therefore must haue all the preheminance in this case. And when he hath decreede y<sup>e</sup> thing in h<sup>is</sup> selfe, & openeth his holy mouth to declare his will vnto vs; then let vs accept of it, let vs take there our sure groundings, & let vs depend wholly thereupon; let vs not bring with vs our owne flickering fancies, but let vs onely walke as the Lorde hath directed vs by his hande, and as hee himselfe hath declared vnto vs. And when wee haue such humblenesse as to haue skill to confesse, y<sup>e</sup> vntil God drawe neare vnto vs, we are far off from the hope of saluation: then ought boldnes to follow, & to keepe his course & way; & we must come vnto that which is here declared by Moses: This day thou hast made the Lorde thy God to speake. Therefore when wee haue this warrant of the fatherly loue which god beareth vnto vs; the may we make him to speake. For do we any thing ellic in al our prayers, than charge God with his promises? In deece wee come not to pray as the heathenish sort of men do, & as al those do which are vnpatient, when they come vnto God: for if he grant them not their request at y<sup>e</sup> first chop they desy him. But wee come not to pray after y<sup>e</sup> maner: for we protest on the contrary, that his wil ought to be done. But yet notwithstanding we cannot pray vnto God, but we must say, Lord thou powest vs nothing, but that which thou hast promised vs. Neuer the later whereas thou didest nor owe vs any thing, thou hast bound thy selfe vnto vs of thine owne good will, wherein thou shewest thy felix most liberal: and therefore our coming as now is vpon trust of thy promises to pray thee to perform them. Seeing then that in all our prayers we alllege vnto God the covenant & contract which he hath made with vs, by that meane; we make him [as it were] to speake, & to say that hee is our God. And vnder this speach (as I haue already told you) all the good things which wee can hope for, or wish for, are contained. For seeing y<sup>e</sup> God giueth himselfe so vnto vs, what can we farther desire? Is not he the fountaine of al wisdome, righte oulines, vertue, life, ioy, & glorie? Is there any good thing to bee desired, which we may not find in our God? Al y<sup>e</sup> euer he hath is ours: he communicateth himselfe so vnto vs, y<sup>e</sup> he will haue vs partakers of al those good things which are in himselfe; not y<sup>e</sup> we haue y<sup>e</sup> ful possession of them at the first, but that wee possesse them by hope, vntil y<sup>e</sup> day that the fruit of them shal be layd open vnto vs. Now therfore let vs marke wel, y<sup>e</sup> when we are once taught in y<sup>e</sup> word of the gospel, the we may make our God to speake, then wee may come familiarly vnto him, & require him to shew himselfe such an one as he hath alway promised to be; and let vs assure our selues that we shal nor be disappointed, when he hath once giuen vs the warrant of his loue, which is more than if we had al the deedes of record in the world. And in this case we need not to seeke for notaries or signets or mennessales, we haue y<sup>e</sup> bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ, which is y<sup>e</sup> scale of this covenant that God hath made with vs, declaring y<sup>e</sup> he is our God. Also we haue the holy ghest, by whome the promise is better warranted vnto vs, yea, euen in our hearts.

And so wee see now, that it is not for nought, that Moses hath so magnified this great goodnes which God vseth towards vs, & this prouledge which he giueth vs in drawing vs vnto himselfe, & in choosing vs to be of his house, and of his church. But we must alwayes haue an eye vnto y<sup>e</sup> end for which our Lord graunteth vs this libertie, to wit, that he also may be at a point with vs & haue vs for his people. For if we be not answerable on our part with our obediences: there any reason that he should keep his promise, when we haue broken the league? In deece he must be faine alwayes to fight against our stubbornnes & to ouercome it: for we are euery day vnfaithful vnto him, and hee continueth faithful vnto vs; but howeouer the worlde goeth, yet when wee reiect his covenant, and let light by it thorough our wicked lite, wee may not looke that hee should bee any longer bounde vnto vs. For why? For hee is become our God vpon this condition, y<sup>e</sup> we also should be his people. And how shall wee be his people? It is not by saying simply with our mouth, Wee are the people of God: for the veriest hypocrites will boast as much as that; yea, and they bee so farre past shame, that they will needs occupy the chiefest places and hiest roomes in the church: but wee must shewe by our deedes, that we are the people of God, in that they obey him, hearkening to the voyce of that shepheard which he hath giuen vnto vs. When wee lue quietly vnder the guying of our Lorde Iesus Christ; then do wee make certaine prooffe that wee keepe the covenant of our God, without falsifying of the faith which wee promised vnto him. And in this sense hath Moses spoken it. So then forasmuch as the Gospel is preached vnto vs, let vs knowe that our Lorde draweth so nigh vnto vs, as hee desireth nothing but that wee should bee as it were gathered vnder his wings. And here withall let vs consider the contentes or substance of this doctrine which wee haue touched, namely, that our Lorde giueth vs, or giueth himselfe vnto vs, yea, and that in such wise, as that hee is after a sorte bounde as it were by soleinne covenant; by reason whereof wee may freely come vnto him, and require him to performe his promises. And after that rule ought al our prayers to be directed. But there withal let vs also vnderstande, on what condition it is that hee is so bounde vnto vs. For when we be once bounde after that fashion; if wee make little reckoning of so inestimable a benefite, or if wee reiect it and disdayne it; thinke wee that such contempt of ours shall remayne unpunished? Woe bee vnto them therefore which haue the knowledge of the Gospel, and vnto whome GOD hath so communicated him selfe, if they be not answerable thereunto in true obedience, and humblenesse, and subn it not themselues vnto him, and that in such sorte, as they may shewe by their deedes euen in their whole life, that they holde him for their God, and bee also of his flocke, that is to say, y<sup>e</sup> they bee willing to giue them selues fully and wholly vnto him.

Now let vs kneele downe before the maiesty of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, and that in such wise, as that beeing beaten down in our selues, we may receiue that remedie which he offereth vnto vs: that is, to be renewed by his holy spirit. And moreover to imprint in our hearts the certeinie of his promises which are contained in his worde, so as wee may not dout but that if we hang vpon him, hee will shew himselfe our sauour euen vnto y<sup>e</sup> ende, and that as hee hath once redeemed vs by the death and passion of his only son, so if we haue our trust settled on him, he wil neuer forsake vs, but haue a care of the gouerning of vs, in such sort that hee will not suffer the thinges to perish which he hath committed to the keeping of our Lord Iesus Christ, but preferue them all safe vntil the latter day. And so let vs say. Almightye to God heavenly father, &c.

The CXLIX. Sermon which is the first vpon the seuen and twentieth Chapter.

18 19 And the Lord hath set thee:

Then Moses with the Elders of Israel charged the people saying, Keepe all the commaundementes, which I commaund you this day.

2 And when ye be passed ouer Jordan into the land which the Lord thy God giueth thee, thou shalt set thee vp great stones, and plaister the with plaister.

3 And shalt write vpon them all the wordes of this lawe when thou art come ouer, that thou maist go into the land which the Lord thy God giueth thee: a land that floweth with milke and hony, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath promised thee.

4 Therefore when ye are passed ouer Jordan, ye shal set vp these stones which I command you this day in mount Ebal, & thou shalt plaister them with plaister.

5 And there shalt thou buyld an altar vnto the Lorde thy God, euen an altar of stones: vpon which stones thou shalt lift vp no yron toole.

6 Thou shalt make the altar of the Lord thy God, of whole stones, and offer burnt offrings thereon vnto the Lord thy God.

7 And thou shalt offer peace offrings, & eat there. & reioyce before the Lorde thy God.

8 And thou shalt write vpon the stones al the words of this law wel & plainly.

9 And Moses & the Priests y<sup>e</sup> Leuites spake vnto all Israel saying, take heede & heare O Israel; this day thou art become the people of the Lord thy God.

10 Thou shalt hearken therefore vnto the voyce of the Lord thy God, and do his commaundements & his ordinances which I command thee this day.

N yesterdayes Lecture Moses hauing exhorted y<sup>e</sup> people to serue God, 60 declared y<sup>e</sup> the couenant which hee hadde made with them was to their great profite. For the more that God bestoweth on vs, the more particularly are we, (if wee bee not voyde of all sense and reason) bound to giue our selues ouer wholly vnto him. But yet for all that, though wee see that God is so liberall towards vs, are wee mouued to offer our selues in obedience vnto him: [Noe verily]. For this cause Moses sayde vnto the Iewes: that they were chosen to bee in praise, in name, and in glorie, as people shoulde eue from the rest of the world vnto God. Whereas some expound this, that they were in praise & glorie, to the end y<sup>e</sup> God might be globe glorified: it is a harde & forced exposition. The thing they say is in deed true in it self, as it is said often times in y<sup>e</sup> holy scripture, that God had chosen this people for his own name, as the end wherunto he hath created al things. And y<sup>e</sup> church was builded specially to the intent that the name of God should be exalted, as it is sayd in the Prophet Esay: & as S. Paul also leadeth vs vnto the same consideratiō in the first Chapter to the Ephesians, where he treateth of y<sup>e</sup> thing more at large. Therefore it is true in it self y<sup>e</sup> God adopted the Iewes to the intent y<sup>e</sup> they might know his exceeding fauour & goodnes, & that y<sup>e</sup> glorie which was due vnto him therefore might be yielded vnto him. But in this place Moses had an eye vnto y<sup>e</sup> which we haue already touched, to wit, that y<sup>e</sup> people might be the more moued & enflamed to discharge their duties, because God hath called them for none other reaso, but to vtter forth the infinite treasures of his mercies. And therefore he saith: Thy God hath placed thee this day in honor & in renouue, & in glorie, according to this which hath bin said afore in the fourth Chapter, What nation is so noble and of such dignitie, which hath his God so neere vnto him, as thy God hath made himself familiar vnto thee, to gouerne thee? This then was a dignitie which God had vouchsafed vpon y<sup>e</sup> Iewes about the rest of all the world. And it ought to haue bin a cause to stirre them vp so much the more to bee obedient vnto the will & worde of God. And in deede if all be wel considered, wee shal finde that God can hope for nothing at our hands, nor receiue any thing of vs, but that wee hold al things of him. I pray you, when we haue eaken neuer so great paines to exalt the name of God; shall it bee any whit increased thereby? What is it that we do vnto him? Surely, wee of our owne nature cannot but blasfeme his name, and wee are the cause why it is blasfemed: and if hee will draw any good out of vs, hee himselfe must first put it in vs. But when God hath once graunted vs the grace to glorifie him, doe wee bring any thing vnto him; or doth hee receiue any profite of vs? Doubtles no. Yet in the meane time he poweth out his benefites, so as wee holde all of him, as I haue already tolde you. So then not without cause doeth Moses declare vnto the Iewes, that they were called to glorie, to renouue, and to praise, to the ende hee might vpbraid them with their vnthankfulnesse, if they enforced not themselves wth all their power to fetue God, who shewed him selfe so liberrall towards them. And this toucheth vs also nowe adayes. For seeing it pleaseth God to imprint his image in vs; is it not a preheminence which hee giueth vnto vs aboute all the creatures in the worlde, to be called vnto the company of the Angels, and to bee members of our Lord Iesus Christ? Forasmuch then as hee so preuenteth vs with his goodnes; what remaineth but that wee shoulde giue our selues wholly vnto him, and shewe, that seeing hee hath filled vs with his glorie, wee will not cause his name to bee set light by, nor the doctrine of saluation which hee hath giuen vs, to be reproched, that the vnfaithfull should make a scoorne of it? Let vs therefore giue all diligence hereunto: as we see we be warned in this place. And that is the verie thing also wherewith Moses aimest when he addeth: That when the people hauing passed Iordan shall come into the lande which was promised vnto them, and haue it in full possession, they shall thinke vs vp great stones, and write vpon them an abridgement of the lawe. And secondly that they shal erect also an altar; to giue thanks vnto god, and to testifie that hee had fulfilled the promise which hee had made in former time vnto their fathers. This (I say) is the intent & meaning of Moses, namely that y<sup>e</sup> people should not only for one time giue thanks vnto God, but that they should do it afresh when they come into y<sup>e</sup> land which was promised vnto them: and that they should ratifie that which they had before confessed, y<sup>e</sup> is, that they owed al homage vnto God for that land, because it was giuen vnto them of his free bestowed goodnes, & not gotten by their own power, nor befallen vnto them by any kind of chauce, or by the gift or helpe of men.

But we haue to note the maner & fashion of y<sup>e</sup> speech which Moses vseth; he saith, That he & the Elders of Israel commanded the people saying, Doe that which I command thee. I grant that this might be referred vnto Moses, because he was y<sup>e</sup> chiefe seruant of God in publishing of the law; but it is certaine y<sup>e</sup> both he & the Elders speak in y<sup>e</sup> name & as it were in the person of God. And yet it would seeme at the first blush that this sentence were not wel framed. Moses and the Elders say vnto the people, Do that which I command thee; but they are many, & yet here is mention made but of one alone. Yea, but (as I haue already told you) it was requisite that y<sup>e</sup> Iewes should be taught y<sup>e</sup> these things proceeded not: from men but from God, who spake by their mouth. Wee see then y<sup>e</sup> Moses and the Elders come not heere in their owne persons as attributing any thing to their owne worthinesse, neither step they forth vpon their owne heads, ne to charge the people with any lawes: but were the instrumentes of God to deale forth faithfully whatsoeuer was committed vnto them. Nowe if Moses which was the excellentest of all Phophets (as we shall see hereafter) did neuertheless restrayne himselfe with such modestie, that he vsurped not the authoritie to speake any thing in his owne name: what shall we say of them which gouern the Church now adayes? Wil they say that they exceede Moses? Let vs note then that Pastors are not appointed to set forth whatsoeuer doctrine shall seeme good vnto themselves, nor to bring mennes soules in subiection and bondage to them; nor to make lawes and articles of faith at their owne pleasure: but onely to bring to passe that God may beare rule, and that his worde may be hardened vnto. Let that bee noted for one poynt. Wee see then that all the traditions of men which are nowe adayes in the Popedome in steede of the pure worde of God, are but vaine things: and that they must bee all beaten downe, and that the true gouernement which God liketh of, must be established againe in his Church: that is, that men hearken vnto him, that they submit themselues vnto him, that both great and small receiue that which is declerued in his name, & that men passe no farther. Let this be wel noted. But withal wee must also note, that when they which are appointed ministers of the word of God, do their office faithfully; then they may speake with masterly authoritie, as they say. And in deede we heare how Moses with the rest of the Elders sayeth, I commaunde thee this day, keepe my statutes. It is not for a mortal creature to aduance himselfe so hy: no, but because Moses bringeth nothing of his own, but is a faithful minister of God, & doth nothing but expound the law euen as it is giuen & committed vnto him, therefore hee sticketh not to speake as from an high, as one hauing all power & authoritie. Therefore when we bring nothing but the pure doctrine of God without falsifying of it, or without adding any thing therunto of our owne: then may wee bring into captiuitie all the losinesse of men as S. Paul sayth, so as no man may exempt himselfe from the doctrine which is put forth vnto him, but that euen they which are the greatest must submit themselues vnto it. The seruants of god then must so behaue themselues as they may not be of a fearful mind to yeeld to the world whē it rebelleth, & wil not be willingly subdued: but that they must holde their own with inuincible constancie, challenging to their master the honor of soueraintie, & the ouerruling of al the world. This is the thing which wee haue to beare in minde concerning this place.

But let vs come now vnto ŷ which is said. The Iewes are commanded, To gather great stones, & so whilst time them ouer, & so to engrauē the law of god upon them, that the letters might be easly read, & secondly they are commanded To build an altar on the hill of Hebal, & there to sacrifice vnto God As touching y altar we haue already said, y it was a speciall witnes of y peoples doing homage vnto god for y land which they knewe they helde of him. For in deed y law was there ingraued, to y intēt y the remembrance thereof should be renewed, & that y doctrine ther of shold be laid open and made comon vnto al men; & y at their first entrance into y land they might haue a marke to put them in mind, to say: This is a land dedicated vnto God. And like as princes set vp their armes & their ensignes in y endes & borders of their seignories & kingdoms: euen so y armes of God were set vp in y place, that men might see not a puppet or some such other thing: but y law of God written, to the intent y men might say, Behold it is the liuing God that hath dedicated this people vnto himselfe, & chosen them for his seruice, y he might be honored & called vpo of the. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to beare in mind. But before we passe any farther, let vs consider why it is saide y they shall not make or build y altar of carued or pullished stones, and y they must not lift vp an hammer or any other roole vpon it, but y the stones must be taken as they come to haod, without any sitting of them, by reason wherof it shold be but as a rude heap.

This place hath without cause much troubled many men, neither could they in the ende finde out y meaning of it without some allegory, saying, y when God commanded to haue the altar made of rough & vnshewen stones, it was to shew y he taketh no pleasure in any inuentions of mē, & that he will haue no curious workmanship in his altar, to the intent we should be warned, y to serue him aright, we must make no mingling w our own deuises, as in deede we see it is not lawful for mē to forge at their own pleasure any seruice of God, for he liketh of obedience about al things: & so this sense of theirs is in it self true, but it is nothing to the meaning of the place. Moses hath an eye vnto another thing, to wit, that there shold be but one altar to sacrifice vnto God. And in verie deede wee see that when y two trybes & the halfe were returned home after y conquest of the land of Chanaan, & had erected an altar, they were in danger to haue bin vtterly destroyed & rooted out for it. For when newes therof came to the rest of y Tribes, they sayd: What meaneth this making of a double altar vnto God? And therupon they went al forth to battel to destroy y Tribes which dwelt beyōd Jordan, & to put them to horrible slaughter: and that was because God had comāded, that they should make but one only altar. And the reason hereof was to maintaine the vnitie of faith & agreement among y Iewes. We know y although y law containe the perfect doctrine of saluatiō: yet notwithstanding it faileth not to be darke, as we haue already seene. Therefore it behoued y Iewes to be as it were inured to y doctrine, that they might not wander. For wee see how fickle mē are, so as they be easly turned aside to make diuerse sects, & euery man hath his deuotion a part by himselfe. God therefore minding to prevent that mischief, wherunto he saw men ouermuch giuen by nature, would there shoulde be but one single altar. But now if they should haue made an altar of hewen & squared stones, it would haue lasted for euer. And what would mē haue said hereupon? This is the altar whercon they sacrificed vnto God. And thereupon they would haue thought it to haue bene a seruing of God to haue sacrificed there still: and they which succeeded a long time after, would haue thought that the sacrifices which had been offered there, would haue been of the more worthines, and that had bene an ouerthrowing of the order which God had established among that people: it had bin the next way to bring in a general confusion. We see what besel of the hill of Samaria, as the woman which spake to our Lord Iesus Christ declereth. What? (saith she) did not our fathers sacrifice on this mountaine? Because Abraham, Isaac, & Jacob had dwelt there, y Samaritans bare themselues in hand y their tēple was more excellent & more holy than y temple of Ierusalem. Yea: but it was built against y wil of God, it was an heathenish place, it was more full of filthines & vncleanes than any brotherhouse. Not but y the people had thought they did wel, but we must alway consider whether god liketh of that which we do: if he do not, we be vnto vs.

Iosua. 23.

2. Cor. 10. 4.

1. Tim. 1. 7.

Iohn 4. 30.

So then because men will needs without reason followe the examples which they heare, it was requisite that there should be no altars made of polished stones, for they would haue remained in their estate, & there would haue bin sacrifices offered. Nowe ye see what abominations proceeded therof in Israel, Ieroboam intending to maintain his estate, erected an altar in Bethel, & would haue God worshipped there, & sacrifices to be offered there vnto him. He sayth vnto the, wel, behold, we sacrifice vnto God, which brought vs out of the land of Egypt. He protesteth y he will serue no Idols, & yet notwithstanding he serueth the. Yea verily: for it was Gods will to haue his temple built in Ierusalé where it was, & we haue seen heretofore y he reserueth the authority vnto himself to say: Thou shalt call vpon me in that place which I haue chose to haue my name called vpon there. For it is not for men to say, let vs worship God in this place; but they must keepe the felues vnto y which he hath comanded in that behalfe. Ieroboam therfore in making a second temple brought the seruice of god wholly out of kind. He corrupted & falsified y true religion. In deed he made a faire protestatió (as I haue told you) y he would change nothing in the seruice of God: but we see what the meaning of God is; namely y when they were come into y lande of promise, they should sacrifice vnto him on the hill of Hebal, & there set vp an altar wth such stones as came next vnto their hands, wthout vsing any workmanship, to the intent it might be abolished & that no mention should remaine of it, so drawe y into an euerlasting rule which was done but for one time onely.

Now albeit that this Ceremonie serue not vs nowadaies: yet may we gather a very profitable doctrine of this place. And first of all let vs note that we must not ground ourselues vpon y which God hath comanded for a certaine time, as if it ought to be obserued for euer. For vnder the law it was Gods wil y men shold sacrifice bruite beasts vnto him; but nowadaies there is no such thing. He required y there should be perfumes made, and lights set vp, & fire alwayes burning vpó the altar. These things are now done away, & if any man renew the, they are but dung as we see how they are yet vsed in popery. When the Papistes com & perfume their idols noses, they beare the felues in hand, y it is an acceptable sacrifice vnto God. And when they haue consumed much waxe on their torches & tapers & candles. O here is a wonderous great deuotion thinke they. And yet it is but a meere mocking of God. For it was his will to be so serued vnder the law: But if we shold now go & inlighten the sun, y is to say, if now after the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ into the world, we should yet stil vse those lights as in the night & in the darke; it were a peruerting of the whole order of nature. The antient fathers walked vnder darke shadows & therefore they stood in neede of those aydes. And when they had a light, it was to shewe them, y they came not to worship God at all adventures, or at random but that they were guided & directed by the word of God, & by his holy spirit. And so they were held brideled, to the intent they should not presume vpon any thing on their own fancies. But as now we haue no need of al these things: for why? The vaile of y temple is rent in sunder, & god sheweth vs his face in y gospel, euen in y perso of his son, so as we may now walk as at noone day. So then let vs consider what is euerlasting & what is but for a time; y we make no fond & foolish confusió ne do as the papists do. For y is the fountain fro whence so many superstitions haue risen. When the Papistes baptise, they take spetle. And why? Forsooth because Iesus Christ did so. Yea but would he haue it drawn into consequence & that men should make a rule of it, & y his miracle should be mocked at in baptisme: Will they make a young infant to speake, by their spiring vpon his lips? Againe, they haue the annealing of the sicke, and y is a sacrament with them. And why? Forsooth the Apostles vsed oyle when they healed y sicke. Yea, but y gift serued but for y beginning of the gospel, & now after y we know y miracles are ceased, will we vse the signes still? Is not y a mocking of God? By like then, the truth & substance of things must depart & the signe must remaine, y were a goodly matter. Againe, they haue retained other like things, as is lent. This is the fast y is to be kept, say the Papistes. The reason forsooth is, because Iesus Christ fasted. Yea, but did he which is y fountaine of all perfection, and the mirror of all holines fast euery yere? No: he fasted but once in his life. The Papists say y we must fast euery yere, and y there is great deuotion & holnes therein. Yea, but therein they would exceed Iesus Christ. But in deed it is a diuillish superstition, to fast 40. daies after y maner, vpó opinio y by this means we may make ourselues like to Christ. For we know y our Lord Iesus ment to shew thereby, y he was then excepted fro al condition of man, as the samewas done in Elias by miracle, & likewise in Moses, when hee published the law. And did y Iewes follow Moses and Elias therein? Or: did any of so many holy prophets euer fast y fast? No: for they knewe wel it was not comanded the of God, and y he made no comon rule of it, nor would haue y thing drawn into example which he had once ordained for y authorising of his law. So then we see y it is very profitable to consider what God hath for one onely time comanded, to the intent we peruert not al, nor desire without any difference to do whatsoever is contained in y holy scripture, wthout knowing first whether it concerne vs & be spoken vnto vs or no. This is one point to be noted.

A second point to be obserued is y we ought, as much as we may possibly to maintaine vnic & agreemēt among vs, as shal by & by be declared. It was Gods will there should be no mo temples but one. And why? To y intent it shold be as a bond to hold the people together in y purenes and soundnesse of faith. We haue one only God which is called vpon among vs, wee must come into one certaine place to sacrifice vnto him, all of vs must there gather ourselues together. It is true in deed y we are not nowadaies tyed vnto any such bondage; but howfoeuer it be, yet y substance is remaining still vnto vs. Let vs therfore take heede vnto all those ayds which we haue to holde vs in this communion of faith, and in this vnity which God requireth, let vs keepe them well, and let no man turne aside from them. And as touching the outward order, we knowe that our Lorde Iesus christ would haue men to assemble them selues together. I graunt wee are not bound to be al in one place, & me also preach in diuers churches of one toune. And why? Because al the worlde can not heare one sermon; but yet for all that, because of our slownesse wee are so bounde that we must gather our selues together in the name of God. He that wil keepe him selfe in his howse, despising the cōmon order, and will say, I can reade at home & edifie my selfe sufficiently there: y man as much as in him lieth breaketh in sunder y vnity of faith & teareth in pieces the body of our Lord Iesus Christ. We know y baptisme was ordained to y intent it should be as a cōmon seale y we are the church of God, & are governed with his spirit. Now if euery man will haue his baptisme a part, what a wicked disorder were it? The holy supper of y Lord also is distributed as a cōmon food to y intent we should all cōmunicat of it. We are warned by it that we are one body. And as one loafe is made of many graines of corne, which are so mingled together y they make but one substance; euen so ought we to be knit together, if we will be accounted for the children of God. Therefore if euery man should haue his priuate supper, were it not a withdrawing of ourselues frō the agreement & brotherhoode which Iesus Christ would haue vs to keepe? In Popery euery mā must haue his altar & his chappell. Yea & they were of opinion, that God was much bound vnto the for so doing. There should haue bin one cōmō table (for I wil not say y they haue turned y cōmunion table into an altar to sacrifice vpon, which thing in it selfe is a diuclish abominatio) but in y meane time although they retain the word, yet will they not haue a cōmion table for all the church. For euery man thrusteth in himself to say, O I wil haue a chappell, & there I will haue my deuotion by my selfe. When men be come to y point, it is an horrible wastin of the Church of God; & the building of so manie seueral altars hath bin y cause of the bringing in of so many sectes & diuisions. Although y papists had placed no Idols in their churches, & although they had not such a nūber of superstitions & Idolatries as we see they haue; yet in doing of this one thing they haue broken y vnity which christ hath solemnly set betweene his mēbers, & in the whole Church. What must we do then? Let vs in deuor to keepe ourselues in brotherly agreement and vnder the signes & tokens which God hath giuen vs, and let vs continue therein, and make al those meanes which he hath giuen vs, to serue vnto that ende. That is the doctrine which we haue to gather vpon this place.

But let vs returne now vnto y which we sayde in the beginning; that is, y God hath here required of his people a solemne acknowledgement, how much they were bound vnto him. We are therefore exhorted to acknowledge y benefits of God, yea & to occupy ourselues therein, so as we

neuer forget the. The people in deed had already giuen thanks vnto God after they were come out of Egypt, in the wilderness, where they sacrificed continually vnto him, but yet after they are passed ouer Iordā, they must begin to giue thāks again. And why? Because me would alwaies discharge their dutie towards God by halues: and they haue soone forgotten it, & thinke no longer what they owe vnto God. And y is the cause why they must be occupied continually in y selfsame thing. So then let vs note well, y euen all y time of our life we must apply our whole in deuor to magnifie & set forth the name of God. For although we be not lodged in this land of Canaā: yet y fauor of God ought to be as much, or more esteemed of vs, than y earthly inheritance which was giuen to y children of Israel. For god hauing plucked vs out of the dungeons of death, & out of y bondage of Saran, declareth y we are blessed of him, and y we are a roial priesthood. And who is he y can discharge himselfe in magnifying so great & so inestimable a goodnes of God? So the because we are slow & slacke to giue y glory vnto God which is belonging vnto him; and because y when we haue once done it, we thinke it ynough & we are loth to do it again; let vs beare in mind this lesō which is taught vs here, that is, y according as God increaseth his giftes in vs, & as hee confirmeth & ratifieth them, so ought we on our part to be so much y more moued & stirred vp to yeelde him praise, declaring thereby, how much we are bound vnto him, and protesting y we are wholly his, and y we will dedicate our whole life vnto him. This (say I) is y thing which we haue to beare in minde as touching this place, where mention is made of sacrificing vnto God.

Now after that Moses hath named The whole burnt offering, he addeth, Thou shalt offer also the peace offerings vnto the Lord thy God. Nowe before he shewed y the peace offerings serued for thanks giuing, so as if God had deliuered his people, if he had giuen the any victorie against their enemies, if he had deliuered the frō famine or any other calamitie; then they sacrificed, in wites y this benefit deserued, not to be forgotten. We see then y Moses aimeth altogether at y which wee haue already declared: namely, y the people should make an acknowledgement of this benefit vnto God after y they were come into the land of Canaan. And where as Moses sayth y it was a Land flowing with milke & hony (as we haue already scene afore) it is to y intent y the people should be the more stirred vp to giue glory vnto God, when they see y the land was so fertill, and that God had shewed himselfe so liberall towards the. We know y at this day it is not so fruitfull a land, neither was it so fertill before their cōming thither, and y is a wonderful thing. And yet notwithstanding y wicked haue taken occasion here vpon, to blasphemie, as y wicked heritike which was punished here, mocked both Moses and the prophets saying, y when they praised the land of Chanaan, they did but fable. Yea but he sheweth himselfe (as all despisers of God & such enraged folke whom Satan possesseth vs to do) to skorne Gods benefits which men may see w their eyes.

Neither considered he, y (as it was shewed vnto him, notwithstanding y he continued in his wilfull stubbornnes) God did expressly threaten to fowle it vpon y land, that is to lay, to make it barren: & at this day also men see it desolate & wast. So as it is a dreadfull thing to beholde, what y state of y countrey is at this day, in cōparison of y it is knowne to haue bin heretofore. For our Lorde hath shewed by effect, y which is said in the 107 Psalme: namely, y when it pleaseth him to blesse a land with fruitfulness, it shall be fat & full of all manner of fruits; and contrarywise y when he listeth to make it barren, it shall be cleane withered. We see this to be true in the lande of Chanaan. So then let vs note y Moses meant to shewe heere more particularly the fauour which God shewed to his people, in nourishing the in y land for the which he made it as a man wold say to flow with milke & hony, shewing therby y that was done euen by miracle. Now for our part it is true y we shall not be fat fed as in respect of our bodies: but yet in feeling the spirituall benefites which God bestoweth largely vpon vs, we ought to be moued & stirred vp to this consideration, that when we haue protested as solemnly as is possible, y wee are his, and y we owe all vnto him; yet we are not discharged of the hundreded part of our dutie.

And as touching y which is added concerning the great stones, wheron God cōmanded his law to be written; according vnto y which wee haue already touched; let vs note, y God meant to hold his people vnder his obedience by al y means he might. For men by reason of their infirmities, had neede to be held in awe: and to be called backe vnto God, to the intent they swarne not aside frō him. I haue already brought a cōparison from y armes of Princes; in steed whereof God woulde haue his law to be writte. And why? For his lawes are his true armes: & his worde the liuely image wherein we ought to behold hi. And y is y cause why he sayth, ye shal come & present your selues before my face, when they presented the selues before the arke, wherein y law was enclosed. For God would not haue any other shape whereby to be represented vnto men, than only the cōtinuall instruction of his worde, according vnto that which we haue already seene in the fourth chap. where it is said, remember y you sawe not y shape of man, or of any creature whatsoever, but you heard the voice of your God. Take heed therefore how ye cōterfeit any thing in this behalf. Now forasmuch as we haue y vnderstanding heereof, let vs note y when our Lord vouchsafeth to haue his word preached in any place, and lodgeth vs quietly as it were with his owne hand; it is to the intent we should do him double homage. As many as liue in y worlde & are fed and sustained by God, ought therefore to confesse y he is worthe to haue all soueraintie ouer them. But seeing we haue such a speciall privilege of God, as to be separated frō the rest of the worlde, & to haue his word preached vnto vs, & to haue libertie to call vpon his name purely: ought wee not to enforce ourselues to do him double homage for it? Surely this ought now aduaies to be thoroughly cōsidered of. For how great fauour doth God shewe vs, in that we may vse his sacraments with all liberty, and haue our eares euery day filled with the doctrine of saluation; so as he ceaseth not to call vs vnto himselfe? Wee see on the other side many wretched people which are held in bondage vnder the tyranny of y Pope, & dare not once open their mouth or make y least countenance of worshipping God purely, they haue neither churches to resort vnto, nor any means to be taught: the worlde sees this. So then we ought in shoulde to haue the armes of God, wherby y lawe shoulde be presented. But we see the cleane contrary; for as sone as any man cometh neere vnto vs he shoulde perceiue a wonderfull chāge in vs by our withdrawing of ourselues frō the debilements of the vnblessing; but whereas men shoulde see y God reigneth & beareth rule among vs, & hath his seat & throne with vs; they may see vs as loose in liuing as the very ignorauntest in all the worlde, nay a man may see y God is defied of some of the, vnto whom the gospell is preached, & that there are worse diuels & more wicked among the, than in the deepest dungeon of poperie. And this deserueth double woe. For it is not only to the Iewes that Moyse hath spoken, but it is to shew vnto all ingenerally, as God vouchsafeth vs the fauour to be his, euen fo we ought to remoue all corruptions frō among vs, y men may know y we are in deede his people. Yet notwithstanding, this importeth not y they which liue in popery are to be excused. Although they be neuer so much threatened, & can not make a free confession of their faith wout danger of death: yet they are alwaies guiltie of offending God, in y they haue not honored him. Now if there be no excuse for them, how great shall our condemnation be? For there is nothing to hinder vs from seruing of God, saue only our owne wickednes & negligence. So then let vs be diligent to discharge our dutie, not as touching the outward ceremony of great stones which is cōmanded here: but as in respect of the thing which God had a speciall eye vnto; namely that euery of vs should not only yeeld ourselues vnto his obedience, & dedicate ourselues to follow his will; but also y with one cōmon accorde, we shoulde shewe y he is our soueraigne king and that we are vnder his gouernmēt; and y because he hath placē vs in such a place where his name is openly called vpon, & where there are Churches for vs to come together to make our cōmō prayers, & to confesse our faith in; we also do in deutor to walk in such sort, as men may in deede know, y those places are not defiled, but reserved vnto y glory of him who hath chose the to y vse.

Now for the end & conclusion let vs note that our Lord will not haue his armes blased in such sort as men like of, but y hee will haue his owne Image to be knownen in them: and y is the cause why he spekeeth purpolly of y law. The words saith he, of the same. The Papiſtes haue chappels, they haue crosses, they haue gay paintings, & they bere the selues in hand y God is represented by them: but he liketh none of all those things. What is to be done then? We must returne vnto y word, which is the meane whereby God openeth himselfe vnto vs, & thereby will he be knownen. Let men men therefore content theſelues ſimply therewith. Now as touching that which he ſaith, Let theſe wordes bee well engraued: hereby we are taught, y<sup>e</sup> God gaue not his law for a few people, but ment y<sup>e</sup> it ſhould be a cōmon doct̄in vnto al, both great & ſmal, euen to y<sup>e</sup> moſt Idiots: and y<sup>e</sup> all ſhould be inſtructed by it. And if it were ſo in y<sup>e</sup> time of the law, by greater reaſon ought it nowadaies to be in force among vs. For of the goſpell it is laid y<sup>e</sup> it ſhould be preached vnto al creatures. God therefore will not haue his doct̄in locked vp, and that none but the clergy ſhould thruſt their noſe into it: but he will haue vs all to be his ſcholers, & the law ſo written, y<sup>e</sup> euery mā may read it. And why? To the intent y<sup>e</sup> all men ſhould receiue inſtruçtiō by it. Let none therefore exempt himſelfe frō the reading of it, as we ſee many do, which ſay, O I am no clerke, I neuer went to ſchoole: it pertaineth not to my occupation. I grant in deed y<sup>e</sup> it is not euery mans occupation to be a teacher. But who may exempt himſelfe frō being a ſcholer in y<sup>e</sup> word of God? It is all one for a man to renounce christianity, & to ſay, o as for me, I know neither A nor B; what can I tel what y<sup>e</sup> law of God or any holy ſcripture meaneth? Neuertheleſſe, y<sup>e</sup> will of God which is declared to vs in his word, is written in letters big ynough, & albeit y<sup>e</sup> nowadaies there be not any heape of ſtones ſet vp for y<sup>e</sup> law of God to be written & engraued thereupon; yet notwithſtanding our Lord ment to ſhew vnder this figure, y<sup>e</sup> whē he hath deliuered his word, it is to y<sup>e</sup> intent y<sup>e</sup> we ſhould be taught, & ordered by it, & y<sup>e</sup> the doct̄ine there of ſhould be cōmon vnto al.

Mar. 16. 15.

And truly we haue no leſſe neede to nourish our ſoules with y<sup>e</sup> word of God, thā to ſuſtaine our bodies with bread & other daily food. Seeing then it is ſo, let euery of vs labor y<sup>e</sup> way, & let vs be attentive to harken vnto our God whē he ſpeaketh vnto vs by y<sup>e</sup> mouth of the miniſter; & whē we haue his holy ſcripture, let euery man endeouor to be taught by it: they then which haue no ſkill to reade theſelues, let them heare it read, y<sup>e</sup> we may ſhew, y<sup>e</sup> ſeeing our Lorde ſpeaketh vnto vs, we on our ſide are ready to receiue y<sup>e</sup> which he ſhal ſay, & deſire nothing elſe, but to profit vnder him; & y<sup>e</sup> in ſuch ſort, y<sup>e</sup> his word be not only engraued in ſtone & chalke but alſo imprinted in our hartes, ſo as in our whole life we ſeek to followeit, and giue our ſelues wholly vnto it.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of y<sup>e</sup> great nūber of fautes & offences which we ceaſe not to cōmit daily againſt his maieſtie, praying him to make vs feele thē better thā we haue done: y<sup>e</sup> we may endeouor to amend thē more & more, vntill we be cleane rid of them, and y<sup>e</sup> forasmuch as we obtaine pardon for thē by the meane of our lord Ieſus Chriſt, we may alſo increaſe & be cōfirmed in al righteouſnes & holines, y<sup>e</sup> ſo we may in deed confirme our calling: and y<sup>e</sup> forasmuch as he hath choſen vs for his people, y<sup>e</sup> it may pleaſe him alſo to withdraw vs frō al the defilements of y<sup>e</sup> world, ſo as we may be vnto him an holy people in the name of our lord Ieſus Chriſt. That it may pleaſe him to grant this grace not only to vs but alſo to all people and Nations of the earth, &c:

On Fryday the xxviij. of Februarie, 1556.

The CL. Sermon, which is the ſeconde vpon the ſeuē and twentieth Chapter.

11 In that day Moſes commaunded the people, ſaying:

12 Theſe ſhall ſtande vpon mount Garizim to bleſſe the people when ye paſſe ouer Iordan: Simeon, and Leuy, & Iudath, & Iſſachar, & Ioseph, & Benjamin, 13 And theſe ſhall ſtand vpon mount Heball to curſe Ruben, Gad, and Aſher, and Zebulan, Dan, and Naphtaly.

14 And the Leuits ſhall ſpeak & ſay vnto all y<sup>e</sup> men of Iſrael with a loud voice:

15 Curſed be the man that ſhall make any carued or molten Image, which is an abominatiō vnto the Lord, the worke of the hands of the craſtesman, & putteth it in a ſecret place: and al the people ſhal aunſwere and ſay: ſo be it.

E ſaw yeſtarday how God mēt that the fauour which he ſhewed vnto y<sup>e</sup> people of Iſrael ſhould be reknowledged firſt by ſolē sacrifice, & ſecondly by a monument ſet vp, to the ende y<sup>e</sup> it might be knowne, y<sup>e</sup> this land was not purchaſed by māns hand or by any power of man, but thāt it was giuen of God vnto y<sup>e</sup> people for an inheritance. But now we haue an other cōmandement whereby God ment to binde y<sup>e</sup> people vnto him after an other maner. In deede he had done it already; but becauſe men are ſo harde to be too-ted, and y<sup>e</sup> they can not be bound with too many bandes & cordes to hold thē vnder obedience; it is not without cauſe y<sup>e</sup> God would ad further thāt which is ſet downe here, to keepe thē the better vnder obedience. Wee haue already treated that when God gaue his lawe; it was a mutuall covenant; and like as hē bounde himſelfe vnto the children of Iſrael to be their God, ſo alſo the people of Iſrael bound theſelues to be his people. But here is yet another confirmatiō added, to ratifie that firſt bonde the better; which is, that God ordained y<sup>e</sup> when they were paſſed ouer Iordan, y<sup>e</sup> people ſhould part theſelues in twaine, and that ſixe tribes ſhould keepe theſelues vpon the mount of Garizim, and the other ſixe tribes ſhoulde ſtande vpon the hill of Heball right againſt them, ſo as the Arke of the covenant and the prieſts ſhould ſtand in the middeſt, and that they which were on the part of Garizim ſhould bleſſe

blesse & those which were on the side of Hebal should curse. Now this cursing & blessing is referred vnto  $\dot{y}$  which we shall see hereafter, which shall be anon touched in this chapter. For God to encourage his people the better, did not only declare vnto the his wil, & say, You shall walke thus; but also added by & by, you shall not serue me in vaine, your paines shall not be lost: for I wil cause you to prosper, it is for your owne welfare that I would haue you to be subiect vnto me, I seeke after no profit or auantage thereby, but it is for your owne benefit & commodity,  $\dot{y}$  you should cleave vnto me, in keeping of my cōmādements. Lo what blessings God gaue, to  $\dot{y}$  intēd the people should serue him w a willing mind & not through force or constraint. Again, because men are so stiffnecked,  $\dot{y}$  they stoop not but with much ado, and because on  $\dot{y}$  other side their lusts carry the so headlong away, that they quickly forget what it is to serue God, & play the wild horses which are broken loose; here are threatnings added: Take heed how you offend mee, for vengeance is ready for them  $\dot{y}$  despise my lawe. Thus see you what the cursings are which we shall see more fully in the 28. chap, but Moses toucheth the here as it were by way of example. Now it were howe if God had but pronounced & said, Who soeuer serueth me in keeping my law, he shall be blessed, & I will make his whole life prosperous vnto him. Seeing God hath once promised to receiue the which serue him, it ought wel to suffice vs. What neede men to speake in their owne behalfe? Likewise seeing God pronounceth sentence of cōdemnation vpon them  $\dot{y}$  transgresse his law, forasmuch as  $\dot{y}$  Iudge himselfe hath spoken; no man ought to reply. What neede is there then  $\dot{y}$  we should ratifie  $\dot{y}$  which God hath said, as if his word were not of sufficient strength & authoritie in it selfe? True it is  $\dot{y}$  god deserueth wel to be harkned vnto, &  $\dot{y}$  thing which he saith is as an vnchangeable decree: but yet he will haue men by outward witnessings to allow  $\dot{y}$  which he willett vs to followe, he will haue vs to acknowledge the fauor which is offered vnto vs, & to declare  $\dot{y}$  we are assured by faith,  $\dot{y}$  he will not deceiue vs in promising vs prosperitie when we in deuour to liue according to his word. God therefore will haue vs so agree with him,  $\dot{y}$  we also confesse in hūbles & feare,  $\dot{y}$  there is great reason why hee should punish all those  $\dot{y}$  despise & ouerthrow his righteousnes, & cōmādements. And when he threatneth them, we may not thinke  $\dot{y}$  it is in vaine, but  $\dot{y}$  in the end they shall feele the execution of  $\dot{y}$  sentence. God therefore in this respect will haue vs to say Amen, both to the promises which he maketh vnto the  $\dot{y}$  keepe his lawe, & vnto the threatnings which he denounceth against all the  $\dot{y}$  are rebels & despisers of him. So then we haue now made a good enterance vnto the vnderstanding of this place. As touching the blessings and cursings, we shall more fully treat of them in  $\dot{y}$  chapter following: and we shall do better to keepe the to be handled there, because the place is more fit for the. It suffiseth to knowe in a worde,  $\dot{y}$  when God offereth his fauour vnto those  $\dot{y}$  obey him, it is to the end they should serue him, not through constraint, but of a free good will: knowing  $\dot{y}$  it is for their owne cōmodity, & welfare, and againe  $\dot{y}$  on the other side such as are of their owne nature giuen ouer to their lustfull desires, & take to theselues a lawles libertie of liuing it, must be withheld by feare sith they see  $\dot{y}$  they shall not escape  $\dot{y}$  hand of God, but  $\dot{y}$  in the end they must come to their account. Thus ye see what we haue to beare in minde in a worde vntill wee come to handle the matter more at large.

Moreouer let vs note well  $\dot{y}$  which wee haue said, namely  $\dot{y}$  God thinks it not ynough to haue spoken himselfe; but he will haue vs also to agree as it were in one melodie with him. And  $\dot{y}$  is to shew the faith which we haue in his word, which consisteth in these two points: namely,  $\dot{y}$  we embrace his promises & hang wholly vpon the: and secondly  $\dot{y}$  we tremble, as oft as he giueth vs any ny sine of his wrath, so as we be not blockish, nor drouise, nor so hardened that he must be faine to strike vpon vs with maine blowes, before we can feele his anger: but  $\dot{y}$  we preuēt it by in deuouring to obey him, & eschew his vengeance as much as we can. Now then blessings in this place are conditional, to wit, blessed is hee which obserueth  $\dot{y}$  law of God, which maintaineth his seruice purely, which is not giuen to superstitions nor Idolatries, which abusethe not his holy name, which obserueth the day of rest, & al the other ceremonies, which honoreth his father & mother. This blessing (I say) is matched with condition, so  $\dot{y}$  if we serue God, he will shew himselfe liberall vnto vs, & we shall not loose our time: but yet doe all these blessings depend hereupon,  $\dot{y}$  God of his free goodnes had chosen this people: so  $\dot{y}$  they might not rest on this point, to say, Blessed is he which serueth God. And who is  $\dot{y}$ ? For none discharge himselfe of this duty (as we haue already declared) & shall see further in  $\dot{y}$  ende of this chap. Seeing then  $\dot{y}$  we are all sinners, ye euen the faithfull, in so much  $\dot{y}$  when they in deuour to walk vprightly they make many fallie steps; what shall become of vs then? It is certaine we should be all deprivied of the hope of saluation, if we had nothing else to leane vnto than our owne righteousnes. But (as I tolde you)  $\dot{y}$  promises which import a condition depend hereupon,  $\dot{y}$  God hath receiued vs for his people, & will haue vs to take him for our father. Now this thing is grounded on nothing else but vpon his mercie. So then we must be thoroughly perswaded,  $\dot{y}$  God will take pitie on vs, though wee be wretched sinners, & deserue not to be pitied: he will receiue us for righteous & accept of vs, although we deserue to be reiected of him. And although we can hope for nothing but vter cōfusion, yet notwithstanding we shall be assured of the inheritance of saluation because we are his children. We must be thoroughly perswaded as touching this point. And secondly it remaineth  $\dot{y}$  seeing God hath choosen vs our, & set vs apart for his seruice, we may not take libertie to all manner of wickednes, but in deuour to obey him. For this cause we must be quickened vp and pricked forward by his promises to serue him. Thus ye see howe the conditional promises shall not be in vaine in respect of vs: namely, namely, when they are referred vnto the free bestowed goodnesse of God, whereby he receiueth vs although wee be not worthy to be receiued; and secondly he imputeth not our vices vnto vs; but although there be many stains and corruptions in vs, yet he hideth them and will not call them to account. And so we see now in what sort God encouraged the people of Israell to bee of good comfort. For if hee had begun thus with them and said: Serue me & you shall be well recompens'd for your labour, if God should speak this simple worde vnto vs, alas what should wee do: For when we would thinke to serue him, we should be very farre frō the perfectnes which he comāndeth vs: they which should run best would be but in y<sup>e</sup> midway, when they ought to be come to their waies end. We should therefore al be discouraged rather than haue any good hart. But we must ioyne both these things together, to wit, y<sup>e</sup> he will not deceiue vs in any thing, & secondly y<sup>e</sup> he bindeth vs to serue him, & declareth y<sup>e</sup> he will beare with vs in our infirmities, & not deale feuerly with vs to pay vs as we haue deserued, but vse a fatherly goodnes. Now hereupon we may be of good cōfort to serue him, whē we may say, Surely it is true Lord, y<sup>e</sup> I discharge not my self of y<sup>e</sup> hundredth part of my dutie towards thee, but howsoeuer y<sup>e</sup> world goeth, yet thou wilt not faile to accept me because thou respectest not what I doe, but takest a pleasure in me as in thine owne childe. Ye see then how God pardoneth vs, and regardeth not our faults & imperfections which are in the seruice y<sup>e</sup> we yeelde vnto him. So we serue him not hypocritically, but of an vnfaigned good will, he liketh of all y<sup>e</sup> we do, and rewardeth vs for it. Sith we heare this, let vs bestowe our paines, let vs receive the bridle into our mouths (as they say) and let vs go on; & although we be hindered by y<sup>e</sup> vices of our flesh, yet let vs inforce ourselues to go on further. And why? For we shall not loose our labour. Thus ye see what the meaning of God is; whereby we perceiue his inestimable goodnes, in y<sup>e</sup> of his owne good wil he offereth his promises so vnto vs, whereas he is nothing bound vnto vs, as we haue scene heretofore: but his will is to win vs vnto himselfe by all the means that he may. Now he repeateth this point againe, and y<sup>e</sup> is done because of our sloth and negligence. For y<sup>e</sup> cause he addeth this aide, and all for our profit, for what is he aduantaged therby? Shall he gaine any thing by our seruice? Let vs desie him to the utmost, what shall y<sup>e</sup> hurt him? but he wil possesse vs for our owne welfare.

And herewithall hee sheweth vs also, what minde is requisite for the obseruing of his law in such sort as is required, to wit, if we come willingly and yeelde ourselues vnto him, and place our whole felicitie & ioye in the seruing of him, and put this sentence in vre, y<sup>e</sup> where our treasure is, there will our heart be also. Ye see what we haue to note as touching y<sup>e</sup> first point of the blessings. What is it thē in effect, y<sup>e</sup> we haue to do: Although nowadaies we haue not the Ceremony whereof mention is made in this place, yet must the substance thereof be in force among vs, which is y<sup>e</sup> in seeking to serue God, we must haue an eye always vnto his promises. Behold, our God calleth & allureth vs vnto him. And how? He might comāde vs in one word, and say: You owe al vnto me, see therefore y<sup>e</sup> ye discharge yourselues; but he beareth with vs, & vttereth a fatherly goodnes towards vs, in saying: My children, I will not haue your seruice vnrecōpens'd. In deede I owe you nothing, but yet neuertheless I will be so bountiful aboute y<sup>e</sup> I need, y<sup>e</sup> if you serue me, your life shall be happy, you shall prosper in all things. And besides that, there is a foueraign blessing for vs as touching the life euerlasting. For all y<sup>e</sup> wee can desire or looke for in this worlde, is nothing in comparison of that saluation which wee hope for through faith; and all the blessings which God promisseth vs, & offereth vnto vs as touching the life to come. Therefore all this ought to make vs the reader & better disposed to submit ourselues vnto God. For what? Seeing our lord seeketh nothing but our welfare in our obeying of him, & offereth vs a reward for our so doing; are we not too wretched it wee enforce not ourselues to serue our god? Ye see thē how we ought with our good content to ratifie all the promises which are contained in the holy scripture; that whereas others thinke it were but lost time to do well, we may alwayes haue this imprinted in our heart, that there is nothing better than to cleaue vnto God. The heathenish sorte doe thinke themselves very happie in following of their owne lustes. When lecherous and concetuous persons haue scraped together on all sides, they thinke all is well gained, and they triumphe in their dooings. If the fornicatours who are brutish in their fleshy lustes, can enioy their pleasures, they welter in them, they are drunken with them, they are wholly bewitched by them. If a vaine glorious man be in any dignitie, and be aduanced to any authoritie among men; he thinketh there is no other ioye nor happinesse, but to be in high estate. At the same point are all the despisers of God. And in the meane time the poore faithfull ones are mock'd: they are poore persons, they are set at naught, they hang their wings, they doe nothing but droppe and pine away in this worlde. These wretched soules (say some) are not well aduis'd to take so much paines they knowe not why; for what profite haue they for all their trauaile? It seemeth therefore that they which seeke to serue God are greatly beguiled, and that the wicked beare the whole sway. But we must on the contrarie side be throughly resolu'd heerein as it is sayde in the prophet Esay, Say ye; Yet there is fruit for the iust men, for they shall eat the fruits of their labours. The prophet Esay would haue vs to fight against this temptation. In somuch y<sup>e</sup> although the worlde laugh the Godly to skorne, & the wicked triumph ouer them: yet for all that the faithfull should not be astonied; but cōclude with thēselues, and say: No no: the righteous mā shall not loose his labor; he shall not be deceiued of his expectatiō when he depēdeth wholly vpon the promises of God. The thing then which we haue to gather vpon this place is, that as often as we reade the promises in the scripture where it is said: Blessed is the man which feareth  $\gamma$  Lord, they which shall walke in the obedience of his word shall be blessed: blessed is he which walketh vprightlie, and soundlie with his neighbours: but specially they which renounce the worlde because they haue a better inheritance in heauē: as often (I say) as we reade theſe things, we muſt be confirmed in our faith, and aunſwere with a good courage Amen, Lorde, it is ſo: we reple not againſt that which thou haſt ſaide, we embrace thy promiſes in this place, and truſt assuredly vnto them. Thus ye ſee howe euery man ought to enforce himſelfe to ſerue G O D, euen because hee beareth ſo gently with vs, & commaundeth vs not ſo preciſely as hee might, hauing all authoritie ouer vs, but applyeth him ſelfe: to our rauencelike to winne vs, and to enioye vs. And aboute all let vs be mindefull of this generall promiſe, when God calleth vs vnto himſelfe as his children, when hee ſpareth vs and beareth with vs, and entrencheth not into any extremitie of rigour with vs, but although there be many faultes in our workes, yet they hinder not him to accept of them, ſo as if wee offende we alwayes find pardon at his hande, and when we ſwarue aſide, he bringeth vs into  $\gamma$  way, and none of al theſe things is imputed vnto vs. Ye ſee then what we haue to beare in minde as touching the firſt point.

Esa. 3. 9.

Psal. 119. 1.
Matt. 19. 29.

Nowe as touching the ſeconde, let vs alſo note that the threatenings of God are verie neceſſarie for vs. For wee ſee howe great pride & rebellioſines is in al vs: in ſomuch that although wee be not rebellions of ſet purpoſe to ſet our God at nought, and to caſt off his yoke: yet wee are ſo bleare eyed, that we thinke not on him,  $\gamma$  intimentes of the worlde ſeducē vs in ſuch wiſe, that we paſſe not for the receiuing of any warning that God giueth vs. If hee call vs by gentleneſſe hee can get nothing at our handes: and therefore hee is ſayne to vie threatenings. Hereby we ſee howe he letteth paſſe nothing that is meete to hold vs in awe vnder his obedience. On the one ſide hee vſeth mylde and louing maner of ſpeech vnto vs, (as I haue told you) & ſaith, Come ye vnto me my childre: Indeed I owe you nothing, but yet I wil bind my ſelfe vnto you: I promiſe you that if you ſerue me, it ſhall be for your profite. Thus our Lorde ſpeaketh vnto vs, as a father that flattereth his childe to win him to be ruled by him & to employ himſelfe in his ſeruice with a freharted affectiō. Howbeit, God perceiuing that that is not enough to moue vs, vſeth threatenings, and ſaith: Take heede, if ye thinke to caſt away my worde, and yet to remaine vnpuniſhed, yee deceiue your ſelues, I muſt call you to account for it, I wil not ſuffer my children ſo to mock mee: I muſt be their Iudge: & looke not for any pardon, when you haue abuſed my patience: I muſt double your puniſhment, and my vengeance muſt fall more horribly vpon you. Therefore when God declarēth that our ſinnes are vnpardonable, and yet wee continue in them, and make none account of ſubmitting our ſelues vnto him, ſpecially when hee applyeth himſelfe euery way vn-

to vs, to the intent wee ſhoulde remaine in his obedience, and not periſh: Sith we ſee he hath ſuch a care of our ſaluation; muſt it not needes bee that wee are too too ſtubborne, or rather verie beaſtes if wee be not moued to ſare the better, by the fatherly care which hee ſheweth towards vs? Yes: And therefore being ſtirred vp by the goodneſſe and gentleneſſe of God, whereof I ſpeake euen now, let vs alſo quicken vp our ſelues with his threatenings. When we ſee that our fleſhe is ouer wanton, and that it draweth vs vnto euill, let vs ſay, Alas: And ſhall wee ſhake off his yoke like wilde beaſtes? What hath God pronounced? Let vs tremble therefore when wee heare the threatenings of our God. For if the anger of an earthly king bee the meſſenger of death (as Salomon ſaith,) what ought wee to thinke of the anger of God, when it is denounced againſt vs? So then, let vs learne to tame our ſelues with feare. When the tentations of Satan might preuaile agaynſt vs, and that our ſinnes might bee as baytes to deceiue vs: let it come into our minde to ſay, What? Shall I vnder the pretence of ſome pleaſure which will ſoone vaniſhe, goe and prouoke the anger of my G O D, and ſo periſhe for euer? After that manner (I ſay) ought wee to call Gods threatenings to our remembrance; and then to aunſwere thereunto Amen, and ſay, yea Lorde, it is euen ſo, it is no childrens game. When thou pronouneſt condemnation vpon the wicked; thou arte readie to execute it: and when thou haſt once pronouneſt the worde with thy mouth, it is all one as if wee ſawe the fire alreadie kindled to conſume vs. After that manner (I ſay) ought we to receiue all the threatenings which G O D denouneeth agaynſt vs. For that is  $\gamma$  beſt meanes to teach vs to obſerue the Lawe, I meane ſo farre as our weakenelſe will ſuffer. For (as I haue tolde you) it is not poſſible for vs to come to perfeſtneſſe indeede, as long as wee are incloſed in this fleſhe of ours: but yet neuertheleſſe wee may wel dedicate our ſelues vnto God, and bee helde in his feare, if on the one ſide his promiſes bee in force with vs, & againe it on  $\gamma$  other ſide we giue earē vnto his threatenings.

But nowe let vs come vnto the order which is obſerued in this place. Moses with the Prieſtes of the Trybe of Lewie, commaunded the people ſaying, Sixe Trybes ſhall ſtande on the Hill of Heball, and ſixe ſhall ſtande on the Hill of Garizim. And afterwarde hee ſaith, Keepe my Statutes and Commandementes which I commaunde you this daye, for ye are made a people vnto your GOD. This hath bene alreadie expounded: but it is good to beare that alwayes in minde which hath bene ſaide concerning it; to wit, that G O D ſpeaketh by the mouth of his Prieſtes as if hee were there viſibly in his own perſon. And that is to the intent his wordes ſhoulde bee receiued with the greater reuerence. For when wee ſee but moſtall men as wee bee: wee are of opinion that what ſouer proceedeth from them, may verie well bee reiectēd; and if there bee no account made themselves into the bottome of hel, and sought nothing else in this present life, but to prouoke the vengeance of God against them, & so to seek their owne woe. Behold what we haue to beare in minde. Now God beginneth with his owne seruice: and not without cause: for (as we haue declared afore,) the law is diuided into two tables: to shewe vs that men ought first of all so to behaue themselves as God may be honoured: & this is the first and principall dutie which wee ought to performe, because we are his creatures, & because he hath fashioned vs vnto his glorie: let vs tend vnto that end, and let our life bee reſerued thereunto, seeing the first table sheweth vs so briefly how wee ought to behaue our selues towards our God. That is the cause why God saith now in these curses: Cursed be he which maketh any Idol. But I haue tolde you that Moses reſerueſeth only certaine sorts; and that is to cõprehend the whole in one part, as we haue seene examples thereof. In effect therefore when it is said: Cursed be he which maketh any Idol, it is al one as if Moses had ingenerall pronounced a curse vpon them, which falsifie and corrupt the seruice and worship of God, as if he should say: You knowe howe and after what manner our God will bee worshipped of vs; whoseuer inuenteth anie maer of Idolatrie, whoseuer deuifeth any maer of superstition, he maketh Idols. And that is not to serue y living God, but rather to follow their owne fancies and imaginations; and therefore they are all accursed. Ye see then howe wee ought to expound this place. And Moses meant to set downe vnto vs in this place such a particular, as wherein we might most evidently see an intollerable corrupting of y worship of God.

 For when God is so misshapen in any painting, or in any puppet, or in any other peece of wood or stone, that men wil there represent his Image & say, It is a resemblance of him: it is too grosse and outrageous dealing. Indeede men thinke not so; as we see in poperie, how they say, Lo yonder is God, and a remembrance of him. And are they not sobritishe that they thinke there is no diuine maiestie in heauen, vnles it be represented there in the shape of an Idol? But they which haue any tast what GOD is, and haue hearde any syllable of his worde, where it is said y God is an immortal and infinite spirit, the fountaine of life: do know that hee hath too great iniurie done vnto him, to be represented by a dead thing and by a corruptible creature, and to haue his name giuen vnto a puppet as if hee were but a creature, & lesse than we. They therefore which haue but a small tast of this doctrine, do abhorre the setting vp of an idol, and the imagination of seruing God by going thereto, & that any should pray to a dead thing; or looke for health from y, which can doe nothing, neither good nor bad.
 Therefore if this were well marked, wee should finde that Moses meant in this place to make Idolatrie more detestable, according to that rule which we haue heretofore expounded. Yet notwithstanding we haue two things to note in this place: the one is, tht God can not suffer his infinite maiestie to bee represented vnder stone, woode, painting or in any other creature in the worlde. What must we doe then when the case concerneth the worshippe of GOD? Wee must liſte vpe our mindes aboute the worlde, and knowe that wee may not sticke fast here belowe, nor make anie Idol or puppet vnto him; for he can not abide it. That is one point to bee noted. Secondly we haue also to note, that God will not be serued nor worshipped after our own maner, but he will haue vs to walke according to his word, without putting any thing thereunto, or taking any thing from it, so as all the inuentions which men haue forged, are al one as if they had set vp as many Idols. Indeede they make themselves beleue that God wil like wel of that which they do: but it is but a bare geſte of them, while they haue not an eye vnto y which hee li-keth. Therefore they serue their own fancies, & not the liuing God, who hath giuen them such a rule as he will haue obserued. And therefore at a word all the worshippings of God (as they terme the) whetein men are so deuout after their owne fancies, and whereof they haue no warrant of the worde of God, to say, This he hath commaunded me: are nothing but Idols of their owne forging. Let this be well noted.

Now let vs consider howe God saith, Cursed is he which forgeth Idols. It is true that the Papiſtes when they take paynes to trudge from altar to altar, to mumble their prayers before their Images, to set them out with waxe candles, and to doe their other dotages: if a man tell them that God disliketh of all their dooings, it spitteth the to bee tolde so, and they fall to rayling against God himselfe. But yet for all that, whereas they thinke they win a score of heauens, e-uerie ſteppe which they set forth, is a casting of themselves into the gulfe of hell. And why?
 Make they neuer so faire replies; yet y Iudge giueth this sentence vpon them; Cursed are all they which make Idols. Let them goe seeke their wages at the diuils hande: our Lord hath already pronounced y sentence which is here contayned, to wit, cursed are al idolaters. If any say it is no such great harme for a man to do a thing of good intent, and to say I thinke it is good, I beleue it is well done: Yet not withstanding God detesteth euerie whit of it, because it is a forging of a newe God, when men turne themselves from the pure simplicitie of the worship of God, to deuife this or that. Although they thinke to doe well, yet notwithstanding they are accursed. And why?
 For God disliketh and condemneth that which they doe. And it is not for a mortall creature to promise this or that vnto himselfe, but God must promise, and we must answer Amen. And likewise when he threatneth, we must bee confounded, and euery mouth must be stopped before him: he must haue audience, and wee receiue his threats and confirme them, as I haue told you. And here is purposely mention made of a secrete place to the we that although a man be not conuicted before the worlde, yet hee ceaseth not to be guiltie before God, and that the heauenly Iudge will finde him out well enough. Therefore let vs not beguile our selues, Deut. 5. 22.

Iohn. 4. 24.

and thinke we shal escape and remaine vnpunished, when men reprove vs not, ne couict vs of the euil that we haue done. For we may wel seek startingholes, but yet will God finde vs out, seeing he saith: Cursed is hee which maketh an Idoll, and putteth it in a secreet place. And againe hee saith, It is an abomination vnto the Lord, to shew, that me must not beguile theselues, by standing vpon their own opinion, or vpon iudgement of the world: It is ynough that God saith, such a thing displeaseth me. Although the world like of vs, yet gaine we nothing therby, So then let vs take heed that we frame ourselues so vnto the will of God, as y<sup>e</sup> this world carie vs not away, and that wee serue not our owne nor other mens lustes, but submit ourselues always vnto our heavenly Iudge. Thus ye see what we haue to beare in mind. For when God is to be serued, we must not looke whether there be any witnesses of our doings here below; for although we may deceiue the whole worlde, yet God seeth vs, & wee cannot escape his sight. What lurking places then fouer we haue, let vs knowe that our condemnation is ready at hand. And thereupon let vs order our life so as GOD be serued and honoured, not only with our feet, our hands, and our eyes, but also with the seruice of our hearts, that is to say, with all our affections, and with al our thoughtes giuen ouer vnto him. And (to conclude) wee are taught that the seruice of God is not without cause called spiritual: whereby we may vnderstand, that it is not ynough for vs to do him reuerence before men, by kneeling downe, and by vsing of such other Ceremonies, or by abstaining from seruing of Idols in the sight of men; but also in secret when euery man is withdrawn into his secreet places: euen then must we auowe him for our God, and all our affections must be held vnder his obedience, and wee must haue the purencie which Saine Paul speaketh of, namely the obedience of faith, by the which euery of vs may dedicate and consecrate himselfe wholly vnto God. Rom. 1. 5.

Now let vs kneele downe before the Maie-stie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him that wee may be touched more and more with true repentaunce, to be displeased with ourselues, that in applying our whole studie in the minding both his promises and his threatenings, we may not bee so fro- ward as to cast off his yoke, but rather bee helde backe alwayes by such meanes as are fitte and conuenient for vs; and that we may yeelde vnto him a willing seruice, to the intent that as hee of his free goodnesse hath called vs vnto him, so he also wil guide and gouerne vs by his holy spirit, that we may giue ourselues ouer vnto him, and serue him in humblenes and feare, embracing his promises, and trembling at his threatenings: and that in the meane time he wil make vs feele that if we be so giuen to his seruice, he will make vs to prosper, and wee shal bee most happy, and that especially, because he hath set before vs the inheritance of the kingdome of heauen, which he hath purchased vnto vs in the person of his onely sonne. That it may please him to graunte this grace not onely to vs, but also to al people and Nations of the earth, &c.

The CLI. Sermon which is the third vpon the seven and twentisth Chapter.

16 Cursed be the man which curseth his father and his Mother: And al the people shall say, Amen.

17 Cursed be he which remoueth his neighbors boundes: And all the people shall say, Amen.

18 Cursed be he which maketh the blind goe out of the way: And all the people shall say, Amen.

19 Cursed be he which wresteth the right of the stranger, the fatherlesse, and the widow: And all the people shall say, Amen.

20 Cursed be he which lyeth with his fathers wife, for he discouereth the skirt of his fathers garment: And all the people shall say, Amen.

21 Cursed be hee which lyeth with anie beast, And all the people shall say, Amen.

22 Cursed bee he which lieth with his sister, the daughter of his father or mother: And all the people shall say, Amen.

23 Cursed be he which lieth with his mother in lawe: And all the people shall say, Amen.

W E haue seene already whereat God aimed in appointing such solemnitie, that the people shoulde meete together on Mount Eball which is ouer against Garizim; to pronounce the curses that are set downe here. For when God hath once vttered his wil vnto vs, it is good reason that curie of vs shoulde consent thereunto, and confesse that to sticke vnto his worde is the rule of all righteousness. For the cheefe honour which God requireth of vs as though it were a setting of our seales vnto it, is to declare that there is no gaynelaying or replying to that which he speaketh, but that it is altogether sure and ought to be sticked vnto. Furthermore we ought to marke also, that the condition of mens agreeing vnto Gods worde is such, that if they doe the contrarie in their liues, they condemne themselves with their own mouthes.

For it is not enough for vs to professe, that what soeuer God saith is rightfull and reasonable: but we must also shewe by our deedes, that his doctrine hath full force and authoritie among vs. So then, hee that yeeldeth such confession with his mouth, is his owne iudge without any other processe, if hee follow not that which is taught him, and which hee knoweth to be rightfull.

Nowe we haue seene howe God spake of idolatries and consequently of superstitions. And thereupon I haue told you, that it is enough for vs to haue here some examples touched, to shewe vs that God requireth the full obedience of his lawe at our handes, as shall be declared for a conclusion in the ende. Yee see then that God ratified his whole seruice. Nowe hee cometh to the second table, and beginneth with the honour and subiection that is due to the father and mother. Cursed shall that man be (saith he) which curseth his father or his mother. Now this curse importeth verie much. For it comprehendeth all that is repugnant to the honour, obedience, and helpe, which children owe to their fathers and mothers. Therefore whosoever yeeldeth not honour to his father and mother, is here cursed of God. We haue well seene heretofore the punishment that was appointed for them: Infomuch that if any man had disobedient children; being brought before the Iudges, they were (vpon his single witness) to be itoned to death, and so such infection was to be taken away. For it is an vnkindly and accursed thing, that the children should set themselves against those which brought them into the world, and haue brought them vp, and haue taken so much paine and care for them. For wee knowe that a father occupieth as it were the roome of GOD towards his owne children and offspring. It followeth then that hee that so listeth vppon himselfe against his father or his mother, doth manifestly dispise God; euen as if he were a contemner of all religion. Nowe here by y way, God telleth vs that although Iudges and Magistrates do not their dutie, or if he y hath done the wrong to his father and mother bee borne with; yet is he not therfore escaped. For many crimes lie buried in this world, which notwithstanding God referueth; and early or late they must come to account.

Let vs marke well then, that heere is no more speaking of the execution of Iustice which is to be done by meane of law; for that hath bene spoken of afore: but God declareth y although they which haue offended through disobedience, be not punished here in this world; or that their faultes be not knowen, or that no such examination bee made of them as they deserue; yet they gayned nothing thereby; because there is a heauenly Iudge, which forgetteth not any thing, but keepeth all things registered before him, and he in the ende will surely doe his office. Therefore let vs thinke well vpon this doctrine; and although men finde no fault with vs, nor any man vexe or trouble vs; let vs not thereupon fall asleepe, but rather euerie man summon himselfe, according to that which is tolde vs here, & consider that we must come before the iudgement seat of God. And therefore let vs learne to walke in such wise, as hee may accepte of vs when wee come there, and as wee may not stande in feare of the curse which is vttered here. Not that anie of vs canne performe the Lawe (as I haue declared more fullie heretofore;) but that it behooueth vs to tende therunto, and to put our indeuour to it. For although wee bee not altogether cleane before GOD, but contrariwise guiltie of manie of the faultes that are conteyned here; yet doeth not hee lay them to our charge, lobeth that wee mislike of them, and giue not our selues ouer to them, ne let the bridle slacke. Wherefore let vs learne to restrayne our selues, and to bee sorry, seeing wee be not so perfect as were requisite. But yet therewithal (as I haue declared already,) let vs streine our selues to please our Lord God and to obey him: and let vs haue such a recorde in our owne consciences, as wee may freely and with open mouth say; Cursed bee hee which hath not followed the doctrine of saluation in such fort as it is shewed vnto vs. To make anie long discourse of the honour which curie man oweth to his father and mother, it is not needefull as nowe, because the lawe hath bene expounded already heretofore. It sufficeth as nowe [to know] that in this text GOD declareth that all disobedience, as well against fathers and mothers as against all superiours whome he hath set in authoritie in this worlde, is intollerable in his sight. For hee will not haue vs to lue here disorderlie like beastes: but hee will haue order and government obserued among vs. And that canne not bee doone, except we stande in awe of such as beare anie office for the common government of men. Whosoever then breaketh Gods order, let him looke to be accursed, accordingly also as Saint Paul

John. 3. 3.

Deut. 21. 18.

Roma 13. 4.

tellecth vs, that in so dooing wee resist not creatures or men; but we make warre against God himselfe, when wee goe about to ouerthrowe the superioritie which hee hath ordeyned and commended vnto vs. Marke that for one point.

Now it is added afterward Cursed shall hee bee which plucketh up his neighbours buttelles, Meeres, or Landmarkes. Wee must alwayes beare in minde that which I haue tolde you already; namelye that here vnder one kinde, GOD comprehendeth all. And I expounded therewithal, that if the boundes of mens Landes bee not kept certayne, no man shall bee Maister of his owne possessions, but all shall goe to spoyle and hauoocke. And surely the hauing of iust weightes and measures, the maintayning of lawfull monie, and the keeping of boundes and buttelles vnchaunged; are thinges that haue bene euer priuiledged. For howe might men buy and sel, or vse anie trade among them; if the coyne bee not lawfull? Againe, if weightes and measures be falsified; in what taking are we? To what purpose shall iustice serue any more? To what end shall all the lawes in the worlde serue? As much is to bee said: for boundes, buttelles, meeres, & landmarkes. So then, vnder this saying God meane to shewe, that it behooueth vs to obserue equitie and vprightnes in dealing one with another. True it is that lawes are made for the punishing of such offences; inso much that it any man doe shift or remooue his neighbours buttell, he shall not be discharged by setting it in the right place againe, and by making amendes for the harme that he hath done; but he shall be openly punished also as for a hainous crime. As much is to bee done for the falsifying of weightes, and for the hauing of wrong measures. As touching the counterfeiting of Coyne, if a man haue vfed it, it is not enough that hee pay backe that which hee hath wrongfully taken; but hee must also die for it; and good reason. For otherwise (as I sayde) all lawes were to be abolished. And it were better for vs to be wilde beastes, than to liue without those meanes which God hath ordeyned and nature also hath taught vs. But put the case that some man do defraude his neighbour, bee it by falsie measure or by some other wicked practise, and that hee seeke to aduantage himselfe by an other mans losse, & the magistrate knoweth nothing thereof, by meanes whereof it scapeth vnpunished; yet is it shewed vs here, that in the ende it must needs come to account before the heavenly Iudge. If a poore man bee put from his right, or oppressed by authoritie, violence, or otherwise, and dare not say a word to it; he findeth anie aduocate to tender his case in this worlde: yet is Gods warrant, and those which thinke themselues greatly benefited by enriching themselues by hooke or by crooke, shall at length finde that it were much better for them to haue had but one bitte of breade to eat, than to haue had neuer so much to glut themselues withall, and in the meane time to abide the curse that is set downe here. For God hath no neede of mans helpe. Put the case that all men deale amisse here, and that all thinges were confused and out of order: yet shall not this saying fall to the grounde, That the man shall bee accursed which plucketh up his neighbours buttell, but that God must needs doe his office. True it is that hee will haue them to vse the sworde, into whose hande hee hath put it, and hee hath ordeyned that they shoulde do so; and if they bee slacke and slowe in doing it, hee will shew them that he appointed them not in vaine to punish the crimes and offences. But yet cannot mortall men preiudice him. When an earthly Iudge dischargeh not his duetie; it followeth not that Gods power is weakened thereby; or that he is bereft of his meanes to execute his office, or y<sup>e</sup> he is idle. For he is not like worldly Princes, which trust to their officers, & are wel contented to play y<sup>e</sup> blind persons, when things goe amisse. As for me [say they,] I vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> al things go wel, & for as much as I haue nine officers, my wil is that they shoulde behaue themselues faithfully as I haue commaunded them. A Prince thiuketh it enough for him to haue saide the worde: but God ouerlooketh them, and controlleth them. And although offenders & transgressors scape the handes of men: yet shall they bee punished at his hands in the end. So then, let not our care bee, least wee shoulde bee spied, or least men shoulde take vs tardie in working any deceyre; but let vs bee mindefull of this saying, Cursed shall hee bee which plucketh up his Neighbours Landmarke. Men perchance seee it not a whit; but yet God beholdeth it; and wee can no more eschewe his eyes, than his hande. Wherefore let vs beware of all fraude and falsie dealing; assuring our selues that our Lorde watcheth ouer vs, yea and that in such wise as hee will not suffer the poore to bee wounded in, nor the simple to bee outraged or eaten vp, and that those thinges shall abide vnpunished; but that hee will shewe in the ende howe it is not without cause that hee claimeth to himselfe the title to be the Iudge of the world.

Now it is said further, Cursed shall hee bee, which causeth the blind to stray out of his way or to fumble in his way. Here is yet a crueltie euē against nature. For y<sup>e</sup> more necessitie a man is in, y<sup>e</sup> more ought other men to pitie him & to succour him. There is a poore blind man, mē see him readie to take a fall, & they withhold him not from it. They y<sup>e</sup> take pleasure herein, must needs be altogether of a leawd and corrupt disposition, so as there is not one droppe of common kindeesse in them. To bee short, they must needs bee louers of al crueltie and mischeefe. For euen the Heathen did greaue abhorre that thing, in so much that in some places, such a deede was as greuously punished, as murder, Theft, or such other like thinges. Howebeit, commonly men made not a lawe for it. And the reason that was yeelded for it, was, y<sup>e</sup> it seemed y<sup>e</sup> euetic man ought to be sufficiently learned in y<sup>e</sup> behalfe of himselfe; so as it had bene a superfluous thing to haue saide, If a man see a blinde man, let him sette him in his way. Neuertheless (as I haue declared afore) wee haue to note that God extendeth his matter and doctrine yet further. And in effect his meaning is to say, Cursed shall he bee which suffereth his neighbour to goe astray, for want of good Counsell. For as a blinde man rusheth against things, stumbleth, and goeth astray if he be not led, and guided in his way: so also when we want Counsell and good aduice, surely we be in the same plight that blinde men are, vnlesse we be succoured. Yea and although a man haue eyes, yet if he be in a strange and vnknown Country, and go quite and cleane from his way, and runne wandering heere and there, and men let him alone: it is all one as if they had made a blind man to goe out of his way, and so did the heathen men themselues confer it. It is not for vs to seeke excuses and to say, Why for God speaketh but of blind men onely. Yea, but euen they which had neither the lawe nor the Gospell, could well skill to say so, and haue shewed vs our Iesson; namely that whosoever steecheth not the way to a tracler when he sees him cut of his way, is a very monster, and a detestable creature: and so is he also which is nigardly of light of his candle. I see a poore man whose candle is out, and he cometh to me to light it againe. The dooing therof costeth me nothing, and yet I say vnto him, ye shall haue none of me: and are such folk worthy to liue vpon the earth? So then let vs marke well Gods meaning: where hee curseth all such as set the blinde out of the way, or cause them to stumble. And let vs gather that together which I haue touched heerebefore; which is, that heere God doeth vs to vnderstand, that if any of our neighbours haue neede of our helpe, I must helpe him if I be of ability and haue opportunitie to do it, specially if it be no cost or charge to me. Nay, though it should be some cost vnto vs, yet are we bound to help such as are in neede and distresse: and what ought we then to do, when we shall but open our mouth to do it? In that case we be not to disburse any thing, we be nor in daunger to loofe either time or money, as they say; the thing is to be done of free cost. And shall we be so cruell, as to let a poore man sustaine harme through our naughty-ness? What a dealing were that? Do not such folke deserue to be confounded? But (as I said afore) this place treateth not of punishment to be executed by the earthly Iudges. God telleth vs that although such dealing be borne with, and that it bee but laughed at: yet it shall come to account before him. Nowe sith it is so, let euery man looke to himself. And first let vs beware, that when our neighbours are in any extremity, we also be pitiful moued with compassion to succour them. Therefore looke as any man shall haue neede of our helpe; let vs be prest and ready to reach out our hand and to lende it him. And specially if our Lorde graunt vs the grace to be able to serue our neighbours turnes, without streyning of our selues for the matter, or without cost: let vs vnderstand that hee doeth vs great honour. For whosoever receueth him that is in neede, is the minister of GOD. Thus GOD employeth vs in his seruice, and therewithall promiseth vs that our labour shall not be lost; and ought not wee then to bee the more prouoked thereunto? Marke this therefore for a special point, y<sup>e</sup> such as are succourlesse, are here commended vnto vs by God. And moreover let vs knowe, that if we be bound to guide the blinde, least they should stumble or stray out of the way: we ought to be much more forward and readie to aduise a man, when we see he hath neede of counsell, and is like to fall into some daunger for want of our aduise. But yet much more ought the way of saluation to be priuiledged: in so much that if wee see a man ouershoote himselfe, and is going into destruction; wee must not disdayne to warne him, saying; Wretched creature, whither goest thou? What wilt thou doe? Wilt thou needes thus wilfully perish? And specially when he doeth it of ignorance: If wee then spare our tongues in that behalfe, so as they be not vsed as instruments of saluation to y<sup>e</sup> poore ignorant soule, who would faine be taught: surely such rechelesse shall not abide vnpunished, nor be forgotten before God. Although neither Lawe nor Iustice proceede against it; yet shall this curse bee rarified vpon it. To be short, let vs marke, that our Lorde meant by this threat, to induce vs to pitie and compassion, in succouring all such as haue neede of vs: And specially in imploying our selues when wee see poore ignorant persons destitute of counsell, and that wee our selues are of ability to bring them backe agayne into the ryght way. Thus much concerning that point.

Nowe followeth immediatly concerning crueltie: Cursed bee hee that wresteth the right of the Straunger, the widowe, and the fatherlesse. True it is that to the vttermost of our power wee must mayntayne euery mans right. Neuertheless, our Lorde in this place as afore, speaketh of Wydowes, fatherlesse, and straungers; by cause they lie open to a great number of iniuries and outrages, and no man setteth himselfe in their defence; nay, fewe haue any care at all of them, by cause they be not able to make any recompence. Looke mee vpon a Straunger, see howe hee shall be fleeced, howe hee shall be vexed, howe hee shall be wronged, yea and that openly; and yet it shall be winked at. And why? For euery man will bee friendly to his owne neighbour, and as for that man, hee is not of the same country, he is not of the same Citie, hee belongeth not vnto vs. Thus yee see howe the poore man shall be left destitute. In lyke case are Wydowes and Fatherlesse Children. For as for the fatherlesse childe, men looke not that hee should acknowledge what is doone for him to day or to morrowe. Sometimes he lies in his Cradle, and knowes not who does him good and who does him euill, by cause he hath no discretion: hee cannot requite the pleasure that is done vnto him: and therefore euery man letteth him alone. In the same case do wydowes stand, specially when they be poore, & are of no great countenance to the worldward: for then euery man shynks from them; and so they be left vp as it were to the spoile. Nowe because these things come commonly to passe, God doth purposely take such folke into his protection, saying that if any man doe wrest or hinder the right of the stranger, the widow and the fatherlesse, he will be reuenged thereof in so much that although it be not accounted of before the world, but rather the doers of such outrages be well liked of; yet will he call them before him, and shew that he had a care of those whome he had taken into his safekeeping. And so vnder one kinde, God meant to shewe breifely, that if we tread vpon such as haue no credite, nor meane to defende themselves, nor any stud to leane vnto, as in respect of the world, hee reserueth to himselfe the punishing thereof. That is the thing which wee haue to gather vpon this text.

Now, to wrest or hinder the Right, is nothing elsse but vniustly & without cause to oppresse y<sup>e</sup> feeble and weake, and such as haue no body to support and maintain them. Truly that maner of speech is set downe in the holy scripture, which is al one with this which we be wont to say, to dash a good case, but yet in generall it is as much to say, as, to disappoint a man of his right. Nowe therefore, when I pill a man, when I rake to my selfe the things that belong to him, when I strip him out of his substance, when I thrust him out of al that euer he hath, when I ouermaster him, and I take more vpon mee than becommeth mee: then doe I hinder his right. And so we see (as I saide afore) that in this text God sheweth that he will be the Iudge of al the outrages which are done to such as haue no meanes to reuenge themselves, and are forsaken & forgotten on y<sup>e</sup> behalfe of men. But were we wel aduised, surely we would be more afraid to haue God our aduersarie partie, than all the whole worlde together. And in deede therein we shew, y<sup>e</sup> we giue small credit to Gods word: in so much that if a man be of great kindred & haue many friends, if a man be rich or highly fauoured of the world: we dare not meddle with him; & although he haue molested vs, yet wil we sweetely swallow it vp, & in any wise beware that we prouoke him not. Thus wil men beare wth al such as haue wherewith to maintaine themselves to y<sup>e</sup> worldward; when in the meane while they that are destitute shalbe pilld & eaten vp. Yet notwithstanding God is their defender, and saith, that in oppressing such folke, we make warre against him, and therefore that he also must be faine to lift vp his arme in the maintenance of those whome hee hath taken into his protection. But men care not for that: and doe we not thereby bewray our vnbeleefe? For had we a true and liuely feeling that God iesteth not heere, in telling vs that his curse shall light vpon those which shall so haue misintreated the feeble fort and such as haue no mainteyners: it is certaine that we would quake whensoever we were tempted to do euill to any poore creature y<sup>e</sup> hath no stay, credite or authoritie in the world. I see this man hath no kinsfolke nor friendes; I see no man regardeth him; I see he is vndefended: now if I aduance my selfe against him, or if I trouble him; God setteth himselfe against me, he setteth his mark vpon the poore man, and he telleth me that if I meddle with such a person, he will take the case to himselfe, and I shall haue impeached his owne maiestie. If we did thinke on this, certaine it is, that wee shoulde be much more restrained and held backe by his feare than we are by all the fauours and displeasures of this world whatsoeuer. Neuertheless, we see the cleane contrarie, we be very dulheads in this behalfe. And therefore let vs bethinke our selues to be more watchfull than we haue bene. And sith wee dare not attempt any thing against those which are armed with al defence, & haue wherewith to vpholde themselves in this world: let vs much lesse doe any outrage or iniurie to those whome God doeth as it were broode vnder his wings, and of whome he declareth himselfe to be the protector: and let vs also consider well, that though the world say not a word to vs, but rather allow of vs for it, Gods vengeance must light vpon vs double, specially when through such contempe we shall haue taken greater libertie to doe euill. For it is certayne that the cruelty which is committed against poore folke which haue no stay to leane vnto, is a manifest contempt of GOD, and an vtter skorning of him, as who would say hee were vnable to execute the vengeance which he hath threatned. Now when GOD is so lightly esteemed, thinke wee that hee will beare it? Yee see heere first how this kinde of outrage is euen against nature. For if wee were not forepossessed with our wicked affections; surely euery of vs woulde confesse, that it is much woofe to haue hurt or deuoured a poore weake creature; than to haue doone harme to a rich man which is well ayded and hath rescue and power to reuenge himselfe. All men will graunt that. Therefore is it one of the greatest and most outrageous faultes that can be among men. Agayne it is a skorning of GOD; which is a diuine wickednesse when we be not moued at this saying of GOD, I haue these folke in my hande, I will mayntayne them, and whosoever aduanceth himselfe against them, must needs haue mee to be his aduersarie partie. If wee make no account of this, as though GOD had neuer spoken it: is it not a token that we be too hearde harted? And therefore (as I haue sayde already) let vs learne to beethinke our selues better; and to haue a better regarde of him: and when wee be conuersant among such folke as are despised to the worldward, without alyauance, without frendes, without succours: let vs beware that wee deale after such a sorte with them, as it may alwaies runne in our mindes that they be Gods children, and that the heavenly Iudge will not forget the wrongs that are doone vnto them, specially seeing hee hath tolde vs heere, that those which haue bin so cruell to the feeble, shall not escape his curse.

Nowe Moses addeth further, Cursed bee hee which lyeth with his fathers wife, Cursed bee hee which lyeth with a beaſt, with his owne Sister, or with his Mothers in law. This place treateth of all the infamous sortes of lecherie, yea euen of the loathsomeſt sortes of them; whether it be incest or bug-

buggerie or such other infections. And it is not without cause that God chuseth out those kindes; for it is to the ende that wee shoulde bee touched with the more feare and terrour when we goe about any kinde of Lecherie. God could haue sayde simply in one worde, Cursed shall he bee which committeth any lecherie: and in very deepe, that is the marke whereat this text ameth. Neuertheless hee contenteth not himselfe so, but (as I sayde) hee chooseth the examples which are most outrageous. And why? To the intent wee should bee touched the more to the quicke. For we see how slowe we be in hearken- ing to the things which God telleth vs. We haue his word; but what for that? It passeth away. We will not sticke to say, that it behoueth vs to keepe our selues from breaking his Lawe. But if vices be spoken of but in a word or twaine, shall they be esteemed as they ought to be, that is to say, as crimes before God which deserue endless death? Wee see howe every man dispenteth with himselfe, so as the priue theefe maketh no conscience of filching, till of a petie theefe, he becometh a robber; and then (to his seeming) all is nothing that he hath done afore, except hee become a murtherer and a cutter of mens throates. Thus doe men proceede in degrees of Theuerie: and as much doe they also in Lecherie. For they make account of it but as of a thing of nothing, vntill they fall into y<sup>e</sup> greatest extremities. Forasmuch then as we be dulled, so as we be not touched with any such feare as were requisite, when God condemneth sinne and would plucke vs backe from it: therefore it is needfull that he should set before vs the examples that are most detestable, euen such as (spite of our teeth) must needs make y<sup>e</sup> haire to stand on end on our heads whē we heare them named; to the intent that no man should beguile himself with fond flatterie, but every man be well ware y<sup>e</sup> he holde himselfe vnder the obedience of God. Heere then we see two things: The one is, that GOD hath condemned all vnchastitie, and almaner of Lecherie: and secondly we see how hee hath purposely chosen the things that are most ougly, as Incestes, and vnchastitie against kinde, as the meddling euen with brute beastes. And why is that? To the ende that men should haue occasion to bethinke themselves the better, and not to doe as they bee commonly wont, which is to hearken and to lay down their care to it and to say, All this is verie true; and yet to make no account of it, but to fare as folke amased, as though a man had knocked them on the head with a beetle. Thus much concerning the first point.

And wee see howe God standeth much vpon Incestes, when he sayeth, Cursed shall hee bee which lyeth with his mother in law, the wife of his Father, or with the daughter of his father, or of his mother, or with his owne daughter in law, and such other degrees. And why? Herein we see how men haue in all ages ouershot themselves in this behalfe. For God could well skill to apply remedies according to mens diseases. Therefore it is not for nought that he standeth so much vpon those things. And why? For in as much as he saw that men had neede to bee held short; and that such kindes of wickednesse would haue raigned, if he had not set himselfe stoutly against the, & cast barres in their wayes, as if he should haue sayd, stay there, and play not the loose coles; if he had not so provided afore hand, that men might not rush forth into such vices: surely all had gone to confusion. And if this wickednesse were in those daies; certelie wee not exempted from it nowadaies. And therefore let vs vnderstand, that the more earnestnesse our Lorde hath vsed heere in this behalfe, the more doth he warne vs to occupy our selues in the minding of those things, so as we bethinke vs of them day and night, early and late, to the end we may walke in such chastitie and sobriety, as our life may not breake forth into such beastly sinnes; but as we may be giuen to God to serue him purely. That (say I) is the thing which we haue to gather vpon this place. And let vs not flatter our selues: for God knoweth well what is meete for vs; or else hee would not haue spoken heere of things that are so shameful, that we may be ashamed euen to name them. And what then? Had not God a regard thereunto? Yes that had hee: but he knew that the heart of man is a dreadful dungeon, and that we must be restrained as it were by force, or else he should neuer be able to compasse vs. Nowe then, let this prouoke vs the more to looke neerly to our selues, that we ouerthot not our selues one way nor other, but that wee bee vigilaut to dedicate our selues to the seruice of God with alpurnesse, as I saide afore.

And moreover let vs vnderstand, that lecherie in it selfe is so loathsome a thing before God, that although men make no great account of y<sup>e</sup> punishing thereof; yet shall wee not therefore make the better market, at leastwise when we come before the heavenly throne. For it is no small thing, y<sup>e</sup> god banisheth all whooremongers and lechours out of his kingdome, as is sayde thereof both in the first Epistle of Saint Paule to the Corinthians, (as we haue seene not long since,) and also in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. That is the thing in effect, which wee haue to beare in minde: namely that God will not haue men to excede in their fleshly lustes, by companying together like brute beastes; but that euerie man should liue chastly in marriage, and haue such regard of honestie in that behalfe, as nature be not forgotten by the companying of the sonne in lawe with his stepmother, or of the father with his owne daughter, or y<sup>e</sup> his daughter in lawe, or by the marrying of the brother with his owne sister, but that those degrees be obserued. For without such order, what would come of it? Wherein shoulde wee differ from Bulles and Asses? Thus yee see what wee haue to gather vpon the first point, in that our Lorde hath heere condemned all maner of vnchast dealings, and wil not haue men to behaue themselves as lawlesse in those cases, but to dedicate themselves vnto him, & consider that their bodies

Heb. 13. 4.

1. Cor. 6. 15.
19. bodies are the Temples of the holy Ghost, and members of our Lorde Iesus Christ; and therefore that they must repress their wicked affecti- ons . Marke that for one point.

Secondly (as I haue noted already) God hath set downe such examples heere before our eyes, as ought to make vs afraide, in that he speaketh of such as against nature doe so company with their owne mothers, their stepmothers, or their Sisters. Hee speaketh of them expressly, to the intent that from the one we should come to the other, as we see hee doeth in all his Lawe . And this hath bene declared more at length heere- before . When hee will condemne hatred, hee speaketh of murder . And why? If a man tell vs that no man ought to hate his brother; wee easily graunt it to be sinne; but yet wee make no conscience to doe it . But when God sayeth, that hee which hateth his brother is a mur- derer: then are wee the more abashed and restrained . Likewise in this text, for as much as y skorners doe but iest at whoredome; they doe also beare themselues in hand, that God ought not to call them to account for it . And this vice is nor of this daies or of yesterdayes breeding: we see it hath bene in all ages, as Moses reporteth heere . And therefore God nameth the detestablest kindes of lecherie, to the intent that there- upon wee should conclude thus, that if wee live not chastly, wee shall fall from one euill to another, vntill wee be fallen into such a bottomlesse gulfe, as shall be horrible to thinke on . That is the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this text . But wee ought to make our benefite of this warning, considering the blockishnesse that is in vs . Wee thinke our selues to be very sharpe witted and apt to conceiue; and yet wee vnderstande not any thing in the doctrine of God; wee be so dulheaded, that hee is fayne to chawe things aforehande to vs, or else wee woulde not be mouued with them . To be shorte, wee haue lesse witte and reason than young babes haue . Let men commend themselues as much as they list, and let them glory vpon opinion that they be very able; yet are they so dulheaded, that wee should play the very bruit bestes, if our Lorde did not chawe things rudely vnto vs . And what is the cause thereof? Forsooth that wee be forepos- sessed with our fleshly affecti- ons, and none is so deafe as hee that will not heare, as they say. Sith wee see this, let vs bethinke our selues the better, and when men chawke things grossely vnto vs, let vs not thinke they doe vs wrong, as some doe, who bee so nice, that if a man vse a rough style to them, Oh, say they, I vnder- stoode all this by a woord or twaine, by like I am a little babe . To be shorte, they be weary if a man bring them not matter of great sharpenesse: for they fondly presume in their owne imagination, that euen at the first dashe they knowe all that is necessaric . But beholde, God speaketh heere in another style and lan- guage. Why doth he so? He seeth there is need. So the let vs suffer our selues to be taught according to our capacity; & seeing we be slowe, if our Lorde waken vs, let vs receiue it meekely, and learne to doe our selues good by it . And so yee see what wee haue to gather vpon all these textes.

Now whereas heere is mention made of stri- king (or smysing) ones neyghbour secretly: it is spoken against all hatred and rancour, and serueth for a conclusion. A man myght demaunde heere howe it comes to passe, that GOD doeth here curse those whose offence is in things whereof no mention is made in his Lawe: for I haue tolde you heeretofore, that it is ynough for a man to haue obserued the things that are con- tained in the ten commaundementes; and also that the full perfection of our lyfe is set downe there . But no mention is made there concern- ing the blind. And how happeneth it then that God doeth heere denounce vengeance against the thing that is not forbidden in his Lawe? Verily heerein wee see (as it hath bene expound- ed already) that our Lorde in his Lawe requir- eth all things that concerne charitie; as, that wee should succour one another, and that there should bee such a common league among vs, as that euery man should spend himselfe in helping his neyghbour. Whatsoeuer is contrary to this, is forbidden and condemned by the law of God. And therefore it is sayde heere now; Cursed shall he be which smiteth his neyghbour secretly . Vnder this saying, our Lorde hath comprehended all the misages that wee can offer to our neyghbour: insomuch that if we giue him but a phillip, it is as a kinde of murthering before him . And we see howe that the man which doeth but grinde his teeth at his brother, is condemned to hel fire, & what shal then become of him which shal haue lifted vp his fist? Surely, euen to stirre a mans tongue against his neyghbour; is a sin worthy of greuous punishment . If wee doe but grunt in way of skorne or disdain; it is forbidden. Howe much more then shall wee be blamed, if wee goe aboute to outrage them any maner of way? Let vs marke therefore, that here vnder one particular, God doeth generally com- prehend all outrage, violence, and misde- meanors which wee can vse towards our neygh- bours . And hee sayeth expressly; in secrete, or priuile, to the intent wee shoulde bee still put in minde of that which I haue toulde you heeretofore; namely that in this behalfe, the case standeth not vpon the yeelding of ac- count vnto men . Put the case that wee haue offended in breaking all the commaunde- mentes, and yet notwithstanding that no man chalendgeth vs for it, but rather that autho- ritie it selfe allowe of our dooinges, and that when wee be accused for it, wee bee acquit of it, or that no man dare complayne of the misorders which wee haue committed: let vs put the case it bee so: yet doeth GOD speake otherwise, saying; that if wee haue doone our neyghbour any harme priuile, his blood shall crye out against vs for vengeance, euen when wee thinke our selues escaped.

Gen. 4.10.

And we see what is sayde of Abell, although no man gaue information against Cain, nor any proceffe went out against him; yet did the blood of him that was murdered, speake, God saith not, I haue hard say; but, the blood of thy brother crieth vnto me, against thee. Heere then wee see that God threateneth vs not with any punishment to bee suffered at mans hande: but rather telleth vs that wee must walke before him and in his presence. And although wee feare not any earthly Iustice; yet wee ought not to forbear to brydle our selues short, for as much as hee doeth his office, and the vengeance which hee hath spoken of heere, must needs bee executed vpon all such as haue escaped by fauour, or cloaked their crimes, yea or offended so cunningly as no man coulde come to the knowledge of it. Seeing it is so, let vs looke that wee enter into our owne consciences, and that wee haue Gods Lawe written there, so as wee haue not an eye to men, as who would say, I haue not bene blamed or reprocued: but rather consider that our GOD watcheth ouer vs, and vnderstande the office of his word to bee such as is written in the epistle to the Hebrewes: that is to wit, that when it is pre-ched vnto vs; then all thinges must come to tryall, and it must enter in, euen to the secretest thoughtes of our hearte. Nowe if Gods word haue such power: let vs assure our selues that much more it hath the office which is attributed vnto it. Wherefore let vs bee restrained by this meanes, and when wee haue serued God with our heartes, let our life bee so aunswerable therunto, that when we shall come before our Lord Iesus Christ, we may shew that wee were truly minded to serue him, and not to please mortall men.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsaie to giue vs true repentaunce of them; and moreouer to beare with vs vntill hee haue ridde vs quite and cleane of all our sinnes, and of all our spots, and to make vs so to profite by the things which wee heare, as we may learne more and more to renounce ourselues, and to repress our wicked lustes, vntill hee haue clothed vs agayne with the puritie of that righteoufnesse wherunto he calleth vs. And so let vs all say; Almighty GOD heavenly father, &c.

Egbr. 4.12.

On Munday the ix. of March, 1556.

The CLII. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the seuen and twentieth Chapter.

24 Cursed bee hee which smiteth his neighbour priuily: And all the people shall say, Amen.

25 Cursed be he which taketh gifts to smite the soule of guiltles blood: And all the people shall say, Amen.

26 Cursed bee hee which confirmeth not all the words of this law by dooing them: And all the people shall say, Amen.

Vnderstande by this text, that the thing which hath bene sayde afore is very true; namely that God meant to teache the people of olde tyme, that it was not ynough for them to discharge theselues before men, or to scape blame and punishment here: but y they must looke vp higher, and consider that there is a Iudgement seate in heauen, before the which wee must one day aunswere and make our account. That is the place whereon we must thinke, if we will discharge our selues of our dutie. For wee may wel beguile men in making a faire countenance; and againe we may so order our liues, as no man may finde any fault in vs, as touching our outward deedes: and yet in the meane while, if our heartes bee full of wicked lustes, if it greue vs to be helde in awe, if we grate our teeth against

GOD: what obedience is that? Therefore let vs note, that whereas in this text it is sayde: Cursed shall he be which smiteth his neighbour priuily: God condemne not only the faults that come to knowledge before men; but also the crimes that lye hidden. And therefore if a man haue liued in such wise, as he cannot be rebuked of the worlde, but rather is prayesed and commended: he must not thereupon fall asleepe, but he must examine his heart, and consider well whether there be any lurking hole or backe nooke there within. For if the thoughtes bee euill; although men perceiue them not; yet will God alwayes doe the office of a Iudge. And if our own hearts reprocue vs (as saith saint Iohn:) God seeth much more clearly.

So then this text serueth wel to humble vs. And in dede, we ought to remember this other sentence of Sainct Iohn whete it is sayde, that whotouer

1. Ioh. 3. 20.

1. John. 3. 15 whosoever hateth his neighbour priuile, although hee cloake his hatred so as it be not perceived, or rather make a shew of loue: that man sayleth not to be condemned before God. And so ye see in effect what we haue to beare in mind. Let vs not busie our heades about mens reports. Although a man bee well reported of heere in this world, yet let him not flatter himselfe therefore; but let him summon himselfe before God, and consider whether he bee faultie in his heart. Let not men bring hither their owne opinions and fancies; for all such things shall be refused, they will serue to no purpose. And therefore let vs walke with vnfayned heart before God. For we know hee regardeth not the outward appearance, according as it is saide in the first booke of Samuel; but he requireth the heart & truth, as is

1. Sam. 16. 7.
1er. 5. 3.

sayde in the fifth chapter of Ieremy. And looke what is said heere concerning murders and fightings, the same must wee extend to aliother crimes. For if God call the to account which haue done any outrage to their neighbours; although the same be vnknown to the world: thinke wee that robberies, and treasons, and fraudes, and raylings, and slaunderings, and such lyke things shall passe away vnspoken of. And therefore let vs learne that we cannot by any means eschew the hand of God, nor scape his vengeance, if we foster vices in our hearts, which be not apparant vnto men. And that we may the more benefite our selues by this doctrine, let euery of vs examine himselfe aright in his heart, when he cometh to heare the worde of God. For it behooueth vs to be reprobud inwardly, as Saint Paul speaketh thereof in the fourteenth Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. Euery man (I say) must search his own thoughts and affections to the very bottom. Alfo it is the peculiar office of Gods word to be a sharpe sworde, and to diuide asunder our thoughts from all our affections and lykings; and to enter euen into the marrow of the bones, and to leaue nothing vndiscovered. Seeing it is so; let vs prevent GODS iudgement, and not tary till he curse vs, and ban vs for the guiltles blood which crieth out against vs; but let euery of vs condemne himselfe as soone as hee hath offended, and let him be sorry in his heart, and beseeche GOD of his infinite goodnesse and mercie, to deliuer vs from the curse which is denounced against all such as haue so misbehaued themselves in secret, and not bene conuicted thereof before men.

1. Cor. 14. 25

Hebr. 4. 13.

It followeth; Cursed shall hee bee which shall haue taken gifts to doe any wrong to his neighbour, and specially to smite the soule of the innocent blood. For so doth Moses speake word for worde. Neuertheless, the word Soule meaneth life: therefore is it sayde the Soule of the Innocent blood. Surely although a man be faultie, yet were it not lawfull to buy & sel his life. But I haue told you already, that God hath set before vs the crimes that are most detestable, to the intent to waken vs the better, because wee bee not sufficiently moued when he speaketh of common faults. For those things slippe away, and wee beare our selues in hand, that it is no heard matter to get forgiveness of them. Now for as much as there is so great slacknesse in men: therefore in this place God hath chosen the offences which euen of nature we ought to abhorre. For if the life of an innocent person bee bought and solde: it is an horrible matter; euery man will say, that such wicked conspiracie is not to be suffered. Thus doe wee nowe see the meaning of God. But although this thing bee sufficiently condemned with full mouth: yet doe not nien cease to put it too much in vte. And for prooffe hereof, looke vpon the practises that are wrought continually to oppresse the poore and simple sort. True it is that they shall not alwayes bee in daunger to haue their throtes cut: but yet for hurting of them, what in their persons, and what in their goods, men are still guilty of murder before God. And as for the seeking of bywaies to disappoint the right of the innocent, and the practising of deuices against such as seeke to liue in peace and concord, it is too common a thing; and therefore this law is no more than needeth. True it is (as I haue sayde afore) that at the first pushe we can wellynough say, that there is no reason why we should continue in so great and so excessiue forwardnesse; euery man will say by and by, it is against nature: but yet the common vse and custome is cleane contrarie. And therefore let vs marke well the doctrine that is set downe heere; namely that God cannot abyde so great a crime vnpunished, as the disappointing of the right, whereby the partie that hath not offended should bee oppressed against all right and reason. And truly God speaketh here, as well of Iudges that haue bene corrupted to oppresse a poore man; as of those that haue solde themselves or haue set themselves to hyre to murder, beate, or strike men; as these squaring Russians doe, which seeke to bee set a worke in bearing men or in quarrelling with them: all these kindes of offenders hath God viterly condemned in this text. And vnder one particular he comprehendeth generally all, as I haue sayde afore. And so the thing in effect which wee haue to gather, is, that Couetousnesse must not leade vs to hurt any man at all. Wee see nowe that this doctrine extendeth it selfe verie farre. For what is the cause of the committing of so many couinages, oppressions, outrages, and iniuries; but only the seeking of selfe profite? I woulde faine pleasure a man that is in authoritie, by cause that to my seeming hee is able to requite mee againe: and hercupon I for his sake doe fall to oppressing one, and to tormenting another. And afterwarde that is not ynough; vnlesse I vse other manner of dealings, so as the matter groweth to bee endlessse & out of all measure. So much the more therefore doeth it stande vs in hande, to marke well this doctrine where it is sayd: Cursed shall hee be which taketh reward to doe men wrong.

And hercunto answereth that which is sayde in the fifteenth Psalme: namely, that if wee will be Gods household folk, and dwell in his Church, wee must beware of taking rewardes to hurt the guiltlesse. If God banish all such out of his king-

psal. 15. 5.

dom,

dome, and from the company of the faithfull, as haue gone about to misbehaue themselves, after that fashion, by setting themselves to sale and hire through their couetousnesse: what remaineth for them but vtter cursednesse? For when God once displayneth vs, & acknowledgeth vs no longer for any of his: needs must we be accursed. Wherein lyeth all our happinesse?

Psal. 33. 12.

It is sayde in the psalme, Right happie bee those folke whose God is the euerlasting. The way then for vs to bee happie, is to be taken of God into his flocke: And if hee cast vs out; needs must all mischeefe light vpon our heades. Sith it is so, let vs learne so much the more to restraine our selues, and let euery of vs bee contented with that which he hath, and let vs not seeke to aduance our selues by vnlawfull means; least the profite which wee haue gyped to our selues, become as Cudgels or rather as stabbes with a dagger to y<sup>e</sup> poore, whom wee shall haue wounded by raking so to our selues by hooke or by crooke. Therefore let vs learne to haue both our heartes and our handes cleane from all anyoyance and misdealing, if wee will bee blessed of God, and taken to bee of the number of the faithfull. Thus yee see in effect what this sentence importeth.

Nowe for a conclusion it is sayd; Cursed shall hee bee which confirmeth not the wordes of this lawe by performing them. Heere wee see yet better the thing which hath bene declared heerebefore: namely that GOD meant to authorise his whole Lawe ingencrall, without excepting any one point of it, notwithstanding that hee haue set downe but some particular examples thereof. The point then wherunto the solemnitie redoundeth which God caused to be made vpon Mount Eball, and likewise oueragin<sup>t</sup> it on Mount Garizim; is, that the people should know that this Lawe is the Rule of all perfection, and that God who is the authour thereof is not to be dallyed with; but rather that it is to bee receaued with all reuerence, yea and that euery man ought to protest with his mouth, that it is good reason that GOD should be obeyed; and that all the transgressours of his will shoulde condemne themselves, without making any reply in their owne excuse; and willingly acknowledge themselves woorthie of death and of all mischeefe, vnlesse they submitted themselves obediently to the seruing of God. For this cause therefore it is sayde; Cursed shall hee bee which confirmeth not the wordes of this Lawe. Hee speaketh not heere of some one commandement or twayne, or of some parte of them: but of the whole Law, and of euery parte and parcel thereof, without any exception. And indeede, wee ought to bethinke vs howe Saint Iames sayeth, that hee which hath forbidden to steale, hath also forbidden to commit adulterie: and that hee which hath forbidden Murder, hath also forbidden falsewitnessing. Wee must not then rent Gods Iustice in peeces. After what sorte soeuer we offende, surely wee violate GODS Lawe, and despyse his maiestic. But hee will bee acknowledged in his Lawe throughout in all poyntes, and not in part, as I haue tolde you afore. Seeing it is so, let vs marke that God hath knit his commandementes together, to shewe vs that it is not for man to put them asunder, as wee see many doe, who will needs indert w<sup>i</sup>th GOD to abstayne from some one sinne, and doe beare themselves in hande that they bee discharged when they can say, Well, yet haue I not offended in all poyntes; Indeede I am blameworthy for such a sinne; but as for in all the rest, I haue obeyed God. The theefe will boast that hee is no whoremonger; the murderer will say hee is no sweauer; the whorehunter will likewise haue his excuse, that hee ouerhooteh not himselfe in other things, as that hee is not cruell, or such like. But what? As I sayde afore, God will not haue his lawe to be canceled after that fashion into peeces and gobbets: it is a righteousnesse which consisteth of ten commandementes knitte together in one bonde. God therefore must be hearkened vnto, both in the first word and in the last, and as well in the fourth as in the second. Seeing it is so, let vs remember how it is sayd heere, that God will haue vs to confirme the wordes, that are conteyned in his Lawe: so as it is not ynough for a man to haue discharged himselfe of some peece; God will not content himselfe with that, neither will hee take such seruice for payment; but hee will haue men to giue themselves wholly vnto him. And with what condition? Lord, seeing that thy will is conteyned in thy Lawe: let our lyfe be conformable thereunto. For it belongeth not to vs to part them asunder, we haue no such libertie. Also (as I haue declared afore,) it is too grosse a folly to thinke that wee can beare God in hand that we haue a good will to honour him, and in the meane while despise him in one thing or other.

And it is sayde heere, To confirme the wordes by performing them. Heere Moses sheweth after what sort we accept the doctrine which is deliuered vs in the name of GOD. It is not in laying our eare to it, or in confessing with our mouth that it is true & rightfull: that is not ynough. For all is but hypocrisie if our lyfe bee repugnaunt thereunto: And it will fall out accordyng to this saying of Saint Paule, that whereas wee confesse with Titus. 1. 16. our mouthes, that wee beleuee in GOD; wee denye him in our lyfe. Wherefore let vs marke well, that the true tryall of our fayth and obedience, is to haue our lyfe aunswerable thereunto, and to shewe by our dooinges, that wee haue not beene taught in vaine. That is the thing which wee haue to marke vpon this speach where Moses sayth, That we must confirme the wordes of this Law by performing them; yea verily, by performing them, not by onely protesting y<sup>e</sup> they bee good and rightfull, (for that were but a smal matter;) but by straining our selues to serue God, by applying our whole indeour that way, & by fashioning all our woorkes according to his will. That is the good confirmation: that is the way for vs to protest that God is righteous, & that he hath giuen vs a good, sure, and infallible rule, such as wee ought to obserue. Nowe wee see in effect the contents of this sentence; whereby wee must vnderstand, that God hath not inioyned vs a peece obedience; but will haue vs to receive his law to the vttermost in all pointes without exception. Wee see likewise that it is not ynough for vs to say, that GOD hath not commaunded any thing which is not righteous; but that we also must shewe an accord and consent thereunto in our life, by framing it after all his commaundements.

Moreouer it behoueth vs now to see in what taking wee should bee, if this Curse should take place vpon vs. Certaine it is that all men are heere denounced accursed. And this curse importeth as much as if it were sayde, that all are damned, all are lost, all are forlorne. Take the righteouslest persons that euer were in the worlde; and by this sentence they deserue to be cast away. There is neither Abraham, nor any of the patriarkes; nor Dauid, nor all the Prophets, that can be exempted from this condemnation. God by his Prophet auoucheth Iob, Daniell, and Samuell for the righteouslest, and for such as were in maner vnblamable; & yet must euen they also be wrapped in this same curse.

Ezech. 14. 16

Ezech. 14. 16

And as for Dauid, he confesseth it with his owne mouth, saying, Lorde, enter not into account with thy Seruaunt, for no man liuing shall bee iustified in thy sight. There Dauid speaketh not of the common people onely; but hee putteth himselfe also in the number. True it is that in other places hee declareth sufficiently, that it was his whole seeking to serue God; and that his desire tended that way; yet notwithstanding he acknowledged that he came far short of discharging himselfe, or of hauing such perfection as were requisite. If he yeelded himselfe guiltie as well as other men: what shall we doe now? But heere is a dreadfull sentence, and such a one as ought to make the haire stand stiffe vpon our heads: Cursed shall he be which performeth not all the words of this law. And who is he that speaketh this? It is God. Then is it such a definitiue sentence, as admitteth no appeale from it. For he will haue al men to confesse it to be so; yea he will haue euerie man to cōfesse it with his own mouth. And what remaineth then for vs to do? Where is the hope of saluation? Hereby wee see, that if we had but the ten commaundements of the law: we should vtterly be vndone & perished; and y<sup>e</sup> it behoueth vs to haue recourse to his mercy, which our goeth his iustice, as saith S. Iames, Gods goodnes then must take place towards vs, to deliuer vs frō the confusion wherin al of vs should haue bin, if the said sentence should stand, and y<sup>e</sup> there should be no grace to outgo it. And truly S. Paule in the third of the Galathians proueth by this text, that we cannot become righteous by our workes, but that it behoueth vs to be made righteous by fayth onely; that is to say, by the meere grace of God, because we be cōdemned euerichone of vs, if God enter into account with vs. For why? Cursed shall hee be which performeth not all the words of the lawe. If a man reply, yea, but if a man doe performe them, why should he not become righteous thereby? And why should hee not be payde his hire at Gods hande, according to his desertes? Saint Paule presuppofeth that there was neuer yet any man found, nor any can possibly be found, which performeth all the words of the law, and all that euer God commaundeth. Indee it hath beene a common saying, That GODS Lawe is not vnpossible. And at this day when the Papistes reason against vs, they thinke it an vnuincible argument to prooue their freewill. Why should GOD haue commaunded vs to loue him with all our hearte, if we be not able to doe it? It were too repugnant, that GOD should exact more of men than they are able to doe: nay, [in so dooing] hee should be vnjust and cruell. After that maner doe the Papistes reason. But Saint Paule on the contrary part sayeth, Cursed shall hee which performeth not all the commaundements. And he presuppofeth (as I sayde afore) that no man performeth them, and that it is vnpossible for to finde any such man. Whereupon he inferreth his conclusion, Then is all mankinde vndone, if they enter into examination of workes so as men must be punished according to their deseruings: GOD must needs cast them off and vtterly damne them. And so wee haue an excellent lesson in this text. For it is as much as if GOD strake downe all the Children of Adam with one blowe of a beele, yea and hundred downe vpon them to fling them into such a dungeon of confusion, as they might perceiue that in themselves they are all damned and perished. But wee tary not there. For when God hath once humbled vs; he giueth vs the fitte meane of deliuerance from the condemnation, as shall bee shewed more plainly heereafter. But eare we proceed so farre, let vs consider howe the Papistes deceiue themselves. They see well ynough that no man performeth y<sup>e</sup> law of God; and although they forge the fantastical arguments which I spake of; saying that God commaundeth not any thing which is not in the power of men to doe: yet are they conuicted euen by their owne experience, that all men are sinners; that all men haue doone amisse, (as the holy scripture also telleth vs;) that there is not any man liuing vpon the earth (as Salomon sayeth) which sinneth not; and that all men haue neede of the grace of God. The Papistes then although they well see this; yet do they wrangle still, saying that that is before wee be regenerated againe by Gods spirite. Neuerthelesse, if they be pressed, they must needs confesse in the second place, that euen the holiest folke are still vnperfect, and y<sup>e</sup> there is some frailty in them. And though they would not confesse it, yet doth the holy scripture shew it, and euerie man fees it in himselfe. Now then, wherefore do the Papists so greatly mayntaine the righteousness of workes, & beare themselves in hand that we deserue well to be recompenced, and that we purchase or earne y<sup>e</sup> kingdome of heauen? How cōmeth it to passe that they be so brutish and so beastly? It is because they imagine that although we performe not the law: yet neuerthelesse we faile not to merite or deserue; & this they terme a righteousnesse in part. They say that all men doe amisse in deede; that is true: and that in that respect they be faultie before God, and through rigour doe well deserue to be condemned: Neuerthelesse, y when they haue the righteousnes in part, that is to say, when they doe partly obey the law: that doing of theirs is worthie to be accepted, and to be put into the account and reckoning. And that is the thing wherein they glorie so much. After that maner then there are deservings in men, though they performe not the whole law. That is for one point.

Againe they haue another diuclish imagination; which is, that when they haue doone amisse, they can make amendes vnto GOD by their owne satisfactions, and can raunome themselves, so as they shall goe scotfree, at leastwise in their owne seeming. They will well confesse in one woorde, we be in daungered: but yet doeth it not followe that wee haue no meane to thiste it off, and to make GOD to accept in exchange, whatsoever wee bring vnto him. Heereupon haue they founded all their good deuotions as they terme them, as Pilgrimages, Masses, and Yere-mindes, with all their freewill deuotions, as their fastinges and diuerse other things; in so much that euen their Shrift is put among their woorkes of satisfaction. Againe the prating of some Paternosters, the babling before a Puppet, the chaunting of some Masse, the setting vp of some Tapers, and such other things, are all of them such recompences as GOD can not finde any fault at all with them, howbeit, bycaule they see themselves ouercharged with those things: they forge a sort of petitionations, wherewith to play with GOD. And therefore they haue deuised veniall finnes; in so much that if a man be tempted to wicked desires, yet he shall not haue offended God, vntill he be willing and perfectly consenting to y performance thereof. If a mā be tempted in himself, if a man be moued to doe euill; all this is no deadly sinne, say the Papiſts; it is but veniall sin, and one sprinkle of holy water is ynough to wash it cleane away. But contrariwise, wee knowe howe it is sayde; O Israel, what is it that thy GOD requirerth of thee; but that thou shouldest loue him with all thy heart? Heere yee see howe the righteousnesse of the Lawe is, that a man loue GOD with all his heart. But hee that hath offended is accursed. And all of vs offend; and are not all of vs then in daunger of death? There is not that man vpon whome GOD pronounceth not this curse. Nowe when men haue thought euill, so as they haue beene prouoked to doe naughtily: it is no sinne (say the Papiſts,) they bee righteous till for all that. See howe the Papiſtes do fully mocke God, in that they thinke y by some fond ceremonie, or by a Mexculpa, they be discharged of their sins, & make account of the as of a thing of nothing. These are the startingholes which they haue to mocke God withal as a yong babe; and that is a dreadfull thing. But yet is it put in vre in all their schooles. Neuerthelesse, we must not goe to worke after that fashion; but we must rather beclinke vs howe the Apostle sayeth, That it is a dreadfull thing to fall into the hands of the liuing God. Therefore we must not in this case breake the bondes and yoke which hee hath layde vpon our neckes: we must not play the wilde beastes; we must not thinke to beguile him by some faire show in making countenance to serue him, hauing in the meane while no good will to serue him indeede. For in the ende hee will shewe that his vengeance shall light vpon al such as haue lued like hypocrites and dubble hearted dissemblers before him. What is to be doone then? We must frankly refuse this glose of righteousnesse in part, which the Papiſtes haue forged: for it is a deuice of Sathans, and euen they themselves will well confesse, that wee cannot merite by any inwarde worthinesse which is in our woorkes. They say that all the worthynesse of our woorkes commeth onely of this, that God is acquainted with vs; in so much that when men haue doone all that is possible, yet will there euer bee some fault to bee founde in their woorkes, when they come before GOD. Not that all Papiſtes are of that minde, there is not past one of a thousande that thinketh so: but there is yet a farre finer and subler doctrine of Poperie; which is, that woorkes are not worthy of themselves, but bycaule of the promise of the Lawe. But what maner a one is this promise? Let vs come to that point. Beholde, GOD offereth himselfe to all men, and sayeth that whosoever performeth the Lawe shall bee blessed; and contrariwise that they shall bee cursed which step away from it. Thus yee see that the perfect righteousnes is the performing of y law. But as I haue told you already, no man performeth it; and therefore God is quitte of his promise towards vs. Seeing that wee on our side sayle in our condition; hee for his parte oweth vs nothing. After the same maner also speaketh S. Paule thereof, saying; If righteousnesse depende vpon the woorkes of the lawe, then is the promise to no purpose. Saint Paule in that place toucheth the matter to the quicke. For why? Who performeth the Lawe of God, that he can say, I haue attained vnto perfect righteousnesse in my woorkes? There is no such man to bee founde. Then is there no more certaintie in the promises saith hee; & so consequently we be all damned, if wee will needes ground our selues vpon our woorkes. After that maner speaketh hee thereof, as well to the Romanes as to the Galathians. And so let vs marke, that God denouneeth vs to bee all condemned by this sentence, where he sayth, Cursed shall hee bee which performeth not all the things that are contayned in the booke of my Lawe. As for the pelting trash which the Papiſtes call satisfactions, they bee but mockeries. For GOD will bee reſeued with obedience. Moreover the reſeuing of our finnes is free beestowed, as the holye Scripture sheweth. And as for all the

Rom. 4. Gal. 3.

Satisfactions (as they terme them) which men haue forged; they serue to no purpose, neither doeth GOD accept any of them. When wee fall to breeding of our owne lykings in our owne braynes, hee refuseth euerywhit of it. Therefore let vs holde vs to the grace of our Lorde Iesus Christ, knowing that wee bee washed and clenfed by his bloude; and it is the onely remedie that GOD setteth fourth vnto vs.

Thus haue wee two things to marke: the one is, that if wee should bee iudged by the Law of God, there needed no more but this foresaide sentence to damne vs all, yea euen the holiest Saintes that euer were in the worlde. For no man hath satisfied GODS Lawe; and therefore are wee all condemned. For if the holy fathers which had an Angelicall holynesse in this worlde, were notwithstanding faultie before GOD: what shall become of vs? Let vs nowe make comparison betwene vs and them. Howe farre off are wee from the holynesse of Abraham, the purenesse of Dauid, the foundnesse of Iob, and the perfectnesse of Daniel? When these may bee condemned, what shall wee bee? And therefore let vs learne to shrinke in our hornes, and let euerie of vs keepe his mouth shutte, as sayeth Saint Paule when hee bringeth vs to the righteousnesse of fayth, and to the mercie of God. The thing then which we haue to beare in mind is that God hath bereft vs of all righteousnesse, to the intent to rid vs of al presumption & pride, and that we should no more pretend to come to account with him, to bind him vnto vs, but that we should willingly condemne our selues. Let that serue for one point. Nowe heereupon wee haue to consider the remedie which God hath Iest: which is that yet neuertheless we be righteous by meanes of our Lord Iesus Christ. For hee hath deliuered vs from the curse which was due vnto vs: and for that cause was hee hanged vpon tree, as sayth S. Paule. We haue seene heereof in the one and twentieth chapter, that as many as were hanged vpon tree were all accursed. Now when GOD made that Lawe, knewe hee not what hee had ordayned afore concerning his owne only sonne, who was to be hanged on tree? Surely it was an vnchaungeable decree, made euen before the creation of the worlde. Seeing it is so; wee bee redeemed from the curse by our Lorde Iesus Christ; and wee must nowe match this sentence with the other which wee haue seene in the one and twentyth Chapter. Whereas it is sayde heere, Cursed shall hee bee which performeth not all these sayings: yee see well that for want of performing them, wee bee confounded and of ryght as good as damned. But yet heere-withall, wee must also embrace our Lorde Iesus Christ, who was cursed for our sakes. And if that this Curse bee not in vaine, then must wee nowe bee needes sette free. What a thing werit, that the sonne of GOD should bee cursed without cause; and yet no fruite redounde thereof to vs? That hee which is the fountaine of all blessednesse, should bee accursed; and yet wee not knowe wherefore, but that it should bee vnprofitable? Nowe then seeing that the curse which Iesus Christ suffered in his owne person, is not vaine and to no purpose: let vs knowe that by the same meane wee bee deliuered before GOD. And so yee see howe wee ought to make those two textes to agree.

Furthermore wee knowe also that hee became subiect to the Lawe, to the intent to performe all maner of obedience to the full, as it were in our person. And the righteousnesse which hee hath gotten in himselfe, is at this day allowed vnto vs, as if euery of vs had discharged our selues towards God. The way then for vs to bee deliuered from our cursednesse, is this: After wee haue beene ashamed and as it were plunged in despaire; wee may take heart againe to vs to bee assured of our saluation, and offer our selues before the Maiestie of our God, with assured trust that hee will accept vs for his children, and also like well of vs: and moreover that seeing our Lorde Iesus Christ hath fulfilled the Lawe, and not fayled in any one point or iote thereof: now we be clothed againe with his righteousnesse, and the same is allowed vnto vs as our owne. And therefore let vs go boldly before God, and call vpon him as our father: yea verily, so wee put not our purenesse in our owne woorkes, nor imagine that GOD oweth vs any thing, nor pretende to bring any desert or merite of our owne: but that being vtterly empty, wee call vpon GOD to vouchsafe, not onely to fill vp that which wanteth in our selues in parte, by the meanes of our Lorde Iesus Christ: but to giue vs the righteousnesse wherof we be vtterly destitute and vnpurueyed. And let vs marke further, that when we be once so received in fauour; then shall our woorkes also bee accepted. The way then for vs to serue God to his lykings, is that being iustified by faith, that is to say, that hauing obtayned forgiveness of our finnes, yea and hauing obtained it because that dayly yea and all the tyme of our life wee haue neede thereof: and also hauing recourse to GODS atonement with vs of his owne free goodnesse by meanes of the death, passion, and sacrifice of our Lorde Iesus Christ offered vp vnto him: wee hauing so doone, be then also desirous to serue God; for then shall wee doe well, and then will hee accept the seruice which we yeelde vnto him; whereas without that, wee can haue no fayth in Iesus Christ. But when we indeuour to serue GOD; although there bee somewhat amisse, and our affections turne vs nowe one way nowe another: yet doeth not our God cease to allowe our life. And why? Bycause our finnes are not impured vnto vs. True it is that in very rigour, this saying, (Cursed shall hee bee which performeth not all these words,) will stand in force: but behold, Iesus Christ is our borow, and payth for vs our of hand, deliuiering vs from our cursednesse, and making satisfaction to God his father. For we know y his death & passion are accepted for the price and ransome of our saluation, that by that meanes we should be reconciled vnto God. Yee see then how that on the one side it beliooueth vs to feele our own cursednes, that we may be afraide of Gods iudgements: and that on the other side we must take courage, not doubting but that seeing our Lord Iesus Christ answereth for vs, we shalbe receiued for his sake, and God will accept vs together with our works, notwithstanding that they be not so exquisite as they should be, but haue some blottes and blemishes in them, so as they deserue to bee condemned & vterly reiected. To be short, the faithfull being iustified by the grace of God, haue therewithall this benefit and priuledge, that God accepteth their woorkes, and chargeth them not with this curse which they haue deserued. After that manner then ought we to put this text in practise.

But I haue tolde you that on the one side we must mourne and bee afraide at the sight of our cursednesse before God: and that on the other side we must trust in  $\gamma$  grace which Iesus Christ offereth vs. For if we should sooth our selues because God forgiueth vs our sinnes; what a dea-king were that? Wee shoulde still enter into the sayde parting of stakes which men weene to make, when they thinke to discharge themselves towards God in part. Now then, it behooueth vs to be forie for all our sinnes: and if wee perceiue any vice in vs, wee must not suffer it to raigne. True it is that wee come short, I say not in some one part onely, but in all. There is not any one poynt of the law, wherein we fayle not. As for him that thinkes himselfe cleare from couetousnesse, and to bee a despiser of worldly goods: surely he hath yet some other affection in his heart, which holdeth him backe in the world. He that is chaste and honest of his body, hath yet some vanities that will cary him away. He that toftreth not any hatred or rancor in his heart, is not so vterly cleere from all wicked affection, that he liueth so perfectly as he ought to do. To be short, we shalbe found guilty, not in one or two points onely, [but in all:] so as there is not any part or peece of the law, wherein God might not condemne vs. And therefore (as I said) seeing we perceiue such vnperfectnesse in vs, we must not stand in our own conceits, but mourne before God: and hauing mourned, we must induor to giue our selues ouer vnto him, praying him to increase in vs the power and grace of his holy Spirit, that we may so manfully fight against our sinnes, as we may subdue them, ouercome them, and get the vpper hand of them, to triumph ouer them once when we be quite and cleane rid of them. Thus ye see how we ought to proceede in that behalfe.

And this ought to make the faithfull to reioyce, that although they perceiue their owne imperfections, yet must they not therefore cease to imbrace Gods promises with gladnesse, assuring themselves that they shal not be disappointted of them. And why? Because they haue the ioying of all good thinges in our Lorde Iesus Christ, by whom and by whose meanes the curse that was due to them is done away. Ye see then howe that on the one side it behooueth the faithfull to be vterly cast downe: and againe that on the other side they bee lifted vp againe in our Lord Iesus Christ, to as much as they know that looke what they haue not in themselves, they shall finde it, if they seeke it there, whether God sendeth them. And therefore let vs not beguile our selues any more with the fantasies of Sarhan which raigne in the Popedome, of being desirous to offer our owne merites vnto God, and to indent with him as though we had performed his lawe: assuring our selues that on our part, all the covenants which are made in the lawe, are vterly vaie; and that al the promises which import any condition of well doing & of holy conuersation, shoulde bee vnauitable towards vs, and neuer come to effect; vnlesse wee referred to this free promise, Whosoener beleueth that Iesus Christ dyed for our sinnes, and that God by his power hath raised him againe to make vs righteous, beleuing the same in his heart and confessing it with his mouth; shal be saued. And therunto also doth S. Paul bring vs backe in the tenth Chapter to the Romanes, which is the verie exposition that will giue vs the vnderstanding of this place. The righteousnesse of the law sheweth vs that we be all accursed, & that there is not any maner of way to saue vs, so long as we stay there. What are wee to doe then, that wee may haue access vnto God? Let vs with our hartes beleue vnto righteousnesse, and with our mouthes confesse vnto saluation, that wee put our whole trust in him which hath acquired vs towards God his father; and let vs imbrace the righteous obedience which he hath yeilded vnto God, and likewise his sustaining of the curse which was due vnto vs, to the intent to set vs free from it.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good G O D with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, that we may be more & more touched with the true repentance which mortifieth all our fleshy affections: and to draw vs from the deliights of this world, and to lift vs vp into a true desire of giuing our selues wholly to his lawe, so as wee may dayly profite therein, knowing that the true perfection of all faithfull folke, is to know how farre they be off from perfection; to the end that all mouthes may be stopped, and none acknowledged for righteous but onely God; and that when Christes righteousnesse once shineth vpon vs, we shall not bee bereft thereof, assuring our selues that therein lieth all our perfection. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewfday the x. of March, 1556.

The CLij. Sermon, which is the first upon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

IF thou obey the voyce of the Lorde thy God, in keeping and doeing all his commaundementes which I commaunde thee this day, then will the Lord thy God make thee head ouer al the nations of the earth.

2 And al these blessings shall come vpon thee, and inclose thee round about, if thou obey the voyce of the Lord thy God.

W<sup>e</sup> haue seen heretofore, howe God hath counnanted with his people, of purpose to bynde them: that euery one should know his ductie, and bee the better disposed to doe the same. Now he speaketh as a Iudge hauing all authoritie. It skilles not whether folke doe pleade guiltie or no, when they haue doone amisse: for God giueth here his determinate sentence, though they consent not thereunto. Neyther doeth the case concerne altogether the condemning of those that offend the lawe; but he beginneth with another matter, to wit, with right amiable promises: thereby to allure and to win mens heartes vnto him.

Thus therefore doeth he say: If ye hearken vnto my voyce to obey my commaundementes, and bee carefull to keepe them; you shall be blessed all maner of wayes, and yee shall be enuironed through my fauour, with all maner of welfare and prosperitie. I haue already tolde you, that GOD sheweth great goodnesse towardes men, when hee goeth about by such meanes to wiane them: for it were sufficient for him to say, This is your duty: and al creatures should tremble at his speaking. Therefore when hee addeth any promises, hee forbeareth part of his right, and therein humbleth himselfe, that wee should bee the more inclined and better disposed to serue him. If wee had doone all that wee can, yea and more than wee are able: is GOD bound to recompence vs? Surely no. Wee must alwaies resort to that which our Lorde Iesus alleageth in Saint Luke, namely: That if a man

Luke. 17. 7.

haue a bond seruant, and he send him to labour in the fickele all the day long, when the seruant commeth home at night; wil he say: Wel, nowe must I doe my turne; thou shalt sit downe at the Table, and I will prepare thy supper, and giue thee thy meate and drinke, bycause thou hast laboured for mee, and my course is now come to serue thee? Will the Maister say so? No truly. But when the seruant is come home, the Maister will say vnto him, Couer the table, dresse my supper, and giue me drinke. Euen so sayth Iesus Christ, When you haue doone all that is possible for you to do: thinke not in your selues, that God my father oweth you aught at all, or that hee is beholden vnto you: but proceede on still, and acknowledge, that all that euer yee can doe is but ductie towardes him. And indeede seeing that God hath made vs, what is hee that can do too much for the seruice of him? We see then y God might say playnly: Thus it it pleaseth me, & this is my will, follow you y way. And therefore whereas he telleth vs y we shall be blessed & not loofe our labour, but haue rewarde for our seruing of him: It is not to be doubted, but y in so doeing, hee forbeareth some part of his right. In the meane whyle, wee may see that he playeth the good and kinde hearted Father to win his Children. For although a father woth well that his children are bounde to obey him to the vttermost; and that hee for his part, is not any way bounde to them: yet will hee not refuse to saye: Lo, I loue you, and I desire but your owne welfare: doe but so as I may haue lyking of you, and I will not forsake you. A father will be liberrall of promyse, saying: Goe to, yee knowe that all that euer I haue is for you: for whome else doe I trauaile? And to what other ende? And if I see you take good wayes, I will vse you accordingly. Thus doeth the father that humbleth himselfe in his authoritie. And therefore? Bycause hee woulde that his children should serue him of free good will, rather than bee compelled thereunto by rigorous extremite. Let vs marke therefore, that all the promises testymonies in holy Scripture, be as it were so many testimonies of the fatherly loue of our GOD; shewing himselfe to haue a care of our health and welfare, in that hee vouchsafeth thus to apply and fashion himselfe vnto vs. By meanes whereof the Lawe of GOD becommeth the more amiable vnto vs; for as much as wee see that in keeping of the same wee bee not disappointed of a good rewarde, yea farre greater than we can wish. For vnder this woorde Blessing, is comprehended all maner of prosperitie.

Moreouer whē God doeth make vs to prosper in this world : it is for none other purpose, but to giue vs a tast of his louetowards vs. Howbeit, this is not the cheefe point whereupon hee would haue vs to stay : but he leadeth vs euer further: Infomuch that when we feele his goodnesse in this present life, and that hee hath care of vs, & that hee teacheth foorth his hande to prouide for vs al things that are necessarie: wee ought thereupon to conclud much more strongly, that when hee hath taken vs out of this present worlde, hee will then powre vpon vs the Riches of his goodnesse, in other manner of sorte than we be nowe able to comprehend. Indee we haue in this life some small shewe thereof, but the abundant accomplishment of the same shall bee in the kingdome of heauen. Thus ye see what wee haue to consider, in that our G O D deliuereth foorth his promises to traie vs the better to serue him of free good will.

Neuerthelatter, howsoeuer the worlde goe, let vs marke, that all the promises which God maketh vs vpon condition, stand vs in no steed (as it was told you yesterday) if wee stay there. For why? Truly, God is faithfull: and his speaking is not to deceyue vs: but yet let vs looke to our selues. What is hee that so dischargeh him of his ductie, that hee may hope to be blessed of God? It is not saide: You shal be blessed in keeping part of my law: but it is said in the text: If you heare my voice, and be diligēt in keeping all my commandementes, and vsfull them all: then I will blesse you. Nowe that men endeour themselves in all that is possible to keepe the lawe of God, I speake not of their owne power or naturall motion. For so farre off are they which bee not regenerate by the holy Ghost, from atteyning to serue God, that they canne no skil so much as to conceyue a good thought, What is the inclination of man, but a struing against God, and all his righteousnesse? So long as men followe the leading of their owne spirit, they doe nothing else but fight against God, as vter rebelles to his whole wil. To bee short, we bee not apt (as Saint Paul sayeth) so much as to thinke to doe well. To thinke is a verie small thing: and yet Saint Paul cutteth vs off from that power, and sheweth that wee bee so corrupted and frowardly bent, that in all things wee drawe contrarie to that which God commaundeth vs. Infomuch that euen when God hath reformed vs by his holy spirit, and changed our malice and rebellion, whereunto wee bee whole inclined: yet can it not bee saide that wee proceede to the obeying of him in all perfection: for there is alwayes some infirmitie to let vs: so that in steede of running wee doe but halt, and trayle our legges after vs: in steede of going right forward, wee reele from one side to another: and it happeneth often to vs, to tripe and to stumble, as euerie man may well finde in himselfe. How then can we hope to bee blessed of our GOD, being so farre wide from keeping of his lawe? That is the cause why I sayde, that all the promises which bee vpon condition are vterlie vnauyable, and shall neuer come to their effect, if God shoulde rest vpon that point. In deede this matter was expounded yesterday, and this place was expressly alleaged by Saint Paul, where it is sayde, that if saluation come by workes, and the inheritance proceede of the lawe: then shall there bee no performance of the promises. For wee doe faile on our part, and therefore the couenant is void, that God hath made with vs: yet may it not hereby be concluded that God mocketh vs, in setting downe these promises: as the Papistes doe at the first dash, starting out of their boundes, and playing the madde men. For when it is saide, that all the promises conteyned in holy scriptures, bee not effectuell, otherwise than by meane of the forguennesse of our finnes through the free goodnesse of God, and that wee are iustified by faith onely: What (say they?) Seeing it is saide, I will blesse you, so you serue mee and honour mee: it seemeth that God vseth but hypocricie, and maketh a daliaunce with men. To what purpose (say hee?) Thus doth the Papistes accuse G O D of falschoode, and blaspheme him, if they be not able to deserue the promises which hee hath made them. For otherwise [they thinke] it is but a mockerie, to make men beleue that he would blesse them. But let vs beware of such maddenesse, and let vs rather vnderstande to what ende God hath giuen his promises vnto men: and wee shall see that it is not in vaine. I saide heretofore, that God hath shewed his great goodnesse, in humbling himselfe so louingly vnto vs. We perreyne wholly to him, we are altogether his, and yet would hee not simple command; but commaunde with promises, and gentlenesse to win vs. If a man doe hereupon replie and say, What doeth it profite vs? Truly it profiteth vs nothing at all, if wee stay there: but wee must goe further. When wee heare the promises that God hath offered vnto vs, & see that all his seeking is to winne vs through loue, and that hee meanceth not to enforce vs through necessitie, it condemneth vs of vnthankfulnesse, if we bend not ourselues wholly towards him. But wee cannot doe it. Wherefore? Are wee then excused? No. For it is our owne naughtinesse that doth let vs. Euerie man that condemneth himselfe, saith Saint Iames, because there is nothing that pronoketh vs to euill, but the concupiscence of our owne fleshe. Seeing then that the fault is in vs, we must make no more allegations, and here ye see wee bee confounded before God. Thus then haue wee cause to bee twice the more lowely. First of all, for that wee bee so leawde, that Gods goodnesse moueth vs not to come neere him, and to put our selues vnder his leading: And secondlie for that we search not out the bottome of the sinne that is in vs, after this manner: Alas, seeing I haue euerie day so innumerable thoughtes, so many desires and motions, such store of affections, which serue altogether to turne mee away from that good whereunto God doeth call me: by reason whereof I ease not to offend God in all things, so as nothing can be drawn from mee, but vtter euill, all offence, and all iniquitie: alas in what taking am I? Men, when they see this, must needs feele themselues double confounded. And when they haue well examined themselues, [ they must needs be driuen to thinke thus, ] Well, God hath layde before mee all the meanes that I can wish, for to attayne saluation, if I were not altogether corrupt and peruerse. And now cannot I pleade ignorance, seeing that the lawe is giuen vnto mee, and the way shewed mee, howe I ought to gouerne mee and howe to leade my life. And to the ende that I should be the more willing thereunto; my God trayneth mee to it by gentleness, promising that I shalbee rewarded for seruing him. Is it so? What is then to be done? I must not in this case make any further protestation, nor stande pleading any more against GOD: for I am too much to blame already. Now when men finde themselues thus condemned, then are they forced to seeke their saluation out of themselues, and to resort to this second remedie; Alas Lord, if the case were so that I shoulde obteyne saluation by seruing of thee, thou hast giuen mee thy lawe, and also ioyned therunto thy promises; howbeit these thinges auale mee nothing: I must therefore forsake my selfe, acknowledging that I am quite shutte out of all hope of life, vnlesse I finde some other better helpe. See heere I say, how wee be ledde to our Lorde Iesus Christ, and made to embrace the grace which is offered vnto vs in him: that by obtaining forgiveness of our sinnes, wee may be sure to be blessed of God. When wee haue once gotten that fauour, that God is at one with vs by means of our Lorde Iesus Christ; then doeth hee accept our vnperfect workes, as though we had accomplished all the lawe. Although the good which the faithfull doe, bee not worthy to be receiued of God: yet doeth hee accept it in good worth. And wherefore? For he of his owne goodnesse wipeth away all the faultes that are in them. So then, when wee labour to doe well, notwithstanding that it lyeth not in our power to attayne to perfection, because of the ouermuch frailtie of our nature: yet wil God receiue our seruice as acceptable, as though hee had nothing to say against it: and so are wee made partakers of the blessings that are heere mentioned. As howe? We haue not fulfilled all: It is true: but yet God passeth it in his accounts, as if all were performed, for so much, as wee bee made cleane by the blood of Iesus Christ. And like as wee bee cleansed, so be our workes also, and when they come before God, bee accepteth them, as though they were thoroughly good, righteous and perfect. Here therefore wee perceiue that the promises bee not giuen in vaine, but that they haue their effect in the faithfull: not at the first dash, but when we come thereunto by degrees, and circumstances, for then wee shall feele the effect and force of them. As concerning the misbeleuers, the promises stande them in no steade; but to make them the more vnexcusable before God in the last day. For what shall they be able to pleade, seeing that God hath so familiarly offered himselfe vnto them, requiring nothing but to haue the fruition of their whole life: that they might obey him; and yet they continue hardhearted? See yee not howe they bee double confounded? And therefore the promises and threatenings of the lawe, bee alwayes good and righteous, neither shall they bee vnprofitable, if a man can skill to take them as it were meeete they shoulde. But this shalbee better perceiued by the discourse which I shall make thereof particularly. Now let vs proceede to expound the wordes that Moses doeth vs. If thou wilt heare the voyce of the Lorde thy God, and bee careful to fulfill all the commaundements which I commaund thee this day: all these blessings shall come vpon thee and compass thee round about. As touching the first point, Moses sheweth that which wee sawe before, namely, that the beginning to liue well, is to hearken vnto God. For men must not haue the rule ouer themselues, saying, I will gouerne my selfe after mine owne liking: wee must not take such libertie: For hee that taketh too much vpon himselfe, shall at the last bee reiectid of GOD, for not yeelding him this obedience, which is the foundation whereon wee ought to builde. Let vs marke therefore, that all they which followe their owne foolish deuotions (as they cal them,) are misliked of God. For this text of the Prophet Esay must take place. Who hath required these things at your hands? Let vs acknowledge therefore, that it is an inestimable benefite when God sheweth vs his will, and that the state of the Papists is accursed. For when they intend to doe well, they knowe not which way to turne them, but euery one followeth his owne fancie with, I hope it wilbee well, for my meaning is good: and againe common custome alloweth it, and our holy mother the Church doth commaunde it: but in the meane while the lawe of God remaineth forgotten. Whereby we may learne that there is nothing but confusion in the life of man, in which is nought else but a mingling without order, vntill they bee taught of God, as wee shall see hereafter. This is the way, walke in it. It is said that we must be careful. This word was set downe once afore by Moses, and not without cause is it here againe repeated, For we be warned by it, that vnlesse men bee very heedfull in obeying God, and inforce themselues thereunto, and set their whole studie thereon in good earnest, they shall neuer attaine to keepe the lawe. And we ourselues see what weaknesse theris in vs, yea euen albeit that God doe gouerne vs, and although we be reformed by his holy Spirit. For as for the vnfaithfull, they bee so carried away and so furious in their willfull stubborneesse, that a man woulde thinke they should runne vnto against God. Yea and although that wee be gouerned by the holy Ghost; yet are we to frayle as is pitie to see. God requireth a great perfection, when he willet vs

to loue him with all our heart, to eschue all the vanities of this world, and all our fleshly lustes; and (to be shorte, ) to forsake our selues, and to be altogether changed. This is a matter ouer high and difficult. Now let vs consider what Satan doth deuise and practise (to turne vs away from the seruice of God: how many sorts of temptations be there? They be infinite. Againe, how sore are the assaults that Satan prepareth against vs? When we haue considered of all this; wee may well conclude, that it is not without cause, that God sayth, that we must be carefull, that euery one of vs must strengthen himselfe, and gather all our forces together; and not thinke to set forth negligently to the seruice of our God. For when we suppose to march one step forward, we shall goe an hundred backward, if we be not very stout and couragious, holding our selues in awe and restreyning our selues, & gathering our wits to vs in such sort, as we bend our mindes wholly thereunto, and euen as yee would say ) labour for breath in traouelling about it.

And moreouer seeing we be forlaide with ambushes on euery side, and should be soone surpris'd, so as we should fall into the snares of Satan ere we were aware: let vs take heede and be watchfull. That is the thing wherof we be warned. And would God we could well cary away this lesson. For then, whereas we now apply all our power, and all our endeouers to things not onely frivoulous, but altogether hurtfull, tending to none other ende but to deceiue vs to our destruction: euery of vs would be vigilant to walke in the obedience of GOD, and to giue himselfe wholly thereunto. And seeing that wee be warned thereof, there is no excuse. Will we then obey our God, and shewe that our affection is so bent without dissenting? Let euery one of vs incline to that which is giuen him in commaundement: namely to be carefull, vigilant and attentiu.

Nowe he addeth: To keepe all the commaundements which I set before thee this day, or which I ordeyne for thee. Although Moses be the speaker hereof: yet taketh hee the auctoritie and power to commaund, and to subdue men not to anything of his owne forging, as who should say, it ought therefore to be receiued without gainesaying; but to God, because GOD speaketh by his mouth, and for that hee himselfe doeth faithfully deliuer the doctrine that was to him committed. Therefore speaketh hee in such a high stile, in somuch as he saith, that they should keepe his ordinaunces. It lieth not in the power of a mortall man to binde folks consciences. And yet is that y thing which wholly corrupted the Church; in that men haue vsurped the office of God in making lawes and statutes, for spirituall gouernement of mens soules. And that is a point of high treason to Godward. For the creature vsurpeth to himselfe the thing which appertaineth to GOD onely, whom the Prophet Esay termeth the lawgiuer, and in likewise Saint Iames, to the ende that wee should learne to hearken vnto him, and wholly to depend vpon his worde. Let vs marke wel then, that it is not lawfull for men to inioine lawes vnto mens soules. But whereas Moses saith, I ordeine vnto thee, he presupposeth that he preferred not any thing of his owne, ne forged any law of his owne brayne, or added any thing to that which God had committed vnto him: but forasmuch as hee did his office faithfully, he might well say, I ordeyne for thee. As when wee set forth the pure word of God, the same very worde is a fouerente commaundement. Now it is not meant heereby, that we should vsurp any dominion or fouerente ouer mens soules. But that in dooing seruice to GOD, wee may commaund in his name and in his person. Thus wee see heere what the meaning of Moses was. And in deede, doth it lie in vs to promise men life euerlasting, or to denounce vnto them the vengeance of God? And yet wee doe it neuertheless. Yea verily, howbeit no further forth than the worde of God is put into our mouth, and that wee haue the testimonie of him, being his witness beaers and his heraldes: his witnessnesse (I meane) to assure the faithfull of the grace and saluation which is promised vnto the; and his heralds to pronounce and to publish his sentence against all the vnbeleeting sort and rebels. Therefore to be short, God meant to shew forth the maiestic of his word, when he appointed Moses to speake in that manner. And it was to the end that we should receiue the worde of God with so much the more lowlinesse and reuerence, when it is preached vnto vs: not respecting the person, as who would say, hee is but a man that speaketh, he is like vnto vs, and as wee are, so is hee: but as though we thought thus with our selues, It is God that speaketh by the mouth of this man: therefore let vs tremble at his presence, let vs stoope, and receiue that which hee saith: and seeing he calleth vs before him, let it serue to bring vs to such obedience, that wee may doe him homage; thereby to shewe that we embrace that which procedeth from his maiestic. This is the summe of that which wee haue to keepe in memorie touching this text.

Now here might a question be moued, why it is said: When you haue kept al my commaundements: For it is impossible for vs to fulfil the law, so long as we stand cloathed with this mortall flesh. As I said afore, we shal euer be ful of vices and imperfections. It seemeth then, that it is to no purpose for God to require such a fulfilling of the lawes, seeing it is impossible. But here we must remember what hath bin spoken of afore: To wit, that God in his law respecteth not our might, power, or abilitie, but our dutie, & after what maner our life ought to be gouerned. And y same ought to suffice vs, inasmuch as we say y a man shal neuer attaine to y perfect obedience of God, but y we be euer farrre from the end of our way: the cause whereof, is our corrupt nature, being so infected through original sinne, y when we thinke on God, we be troubled with many euil fantasies: & wher we haue any good motiō, we are by & by pluckt back from it, & we neede not any other thing to draw vs to the cleane contrarie. But nowe by the way,

doth the impossibilitie of doing it, discharge vs of our seruice which wee be bound to doe vnto God? No. For the euil commeth of ourselues. It is no maruel then, that God in his lawe shoulde haue no regard to mā's abilitie or vnabletie, but rather to the dutie which we owe him, or that he shoulde require the right that belongeth vnto him: for who is he y can denie it him? Hee must not change his nature. If wee be froward, what hath he to do to meddle with our steines & fyl-<sup>10</sup> thines? But he setteth forth such a righteousnes, as we are not able to replie against. And in his law he setteth not down such a righteousnes as is in himselfe, he hath not respect to his own righteousnesse, but vnto the righteousnesse that ought to bee in his creatures, namely, such as is in his Angels. If wee had continued in our integrity, and not bene peruerted and corrupted through sinne, then should we haue bene able to haue discharged all that God requireth of vs<sup>20</sup> in his law. That is certaine. Now then we see how it is not without cause that God will haue vs to keepe his whole law. And yet we be not able to performe it. It is true: but the default proceedeth of the sinne which dwelleth in vs, as I haue shewed heretofore.

Now herewithal we haue to mark, that seeing God promisseth nothing, but vnto thē that haue obeyed al y law, it were too dolufh follie to suppose that we can merit or deserue by doing this<sup>30</sup> thing or that thing: we must first of all haue kept al the law, which is impossible. And whereas the Papiſts prate of their merits, enabling theſelues to purchase the kingdome of heauen; they think that whē they haue done anie good to their own ſeeming, God is bound to them. Oh (ſay they) I haue bene deuoutly at Maſſe. It is certaine that they prouoke the wrath of God by dooing: for we know that it is a diueliſh abomination. Againe, I haue ſerued ſuch a Saint my Patron (ſay<sup>40</sup> they.) I haue builded ſuch a Chappell: and they beare themſelues in hand that in ſo dooing they earne heauen. Truly al theſe things are but a ſpiting of God: they bee diueliſh ſuperſtitions, whereby the ſeruice of God is quite defaced. But put the caſe that the Papiſts did wel in their da-<sup>50</sup> lying ſo with ſuch pelting ſtuffe: were God euer the more bound vnto them for it? It would be-<sup>60</sup> houe them to conſider firſt before what notable euidence did paſſe. For it is not for vs to bridle him, or to tie him to y ſtake, or to ſubdue him to our fantaſies. It muſt proceed of his own good wil. Now then, what ſaith hee? When you ſhal haue kept al my cōmandements, thē ſhal theſe bleſſings come vpon you. Let euery of vs looke how he hath kept y cōmandements of God. Let y Papiſts brag as much as they liſt, can they ſay y they haue accompliſhed y hundreth part of the? If they haue kept one of Gods cōmandements, they haue offended him in a hundred ſins for it: & if there be but one fault comitted, though it be neuer ſo litle a one, they be faultie in al, according as S. James ſaith: he y faileth in any one on-<sup>10</sup> ly point, is a breaker of y whole law. Seeing then y they bee offenders, they are deprived & baniſhed from al the bleſſings y God hath ſet forth, yea euen y concerne but this preſent tranſitory life: much leſſe therefore are they able to win y kingdome of heauen (as they imagin) being not able to deſerue one morſel of breade to put into their mouth. Thus are they ſhut out of al. And why? For God hath not promiſed any thing but vnto them that keepe al his whole law. How ſhal we do then? We muſt heare God ſpeake after another faſhion: to wit: we muſt harken vnto him ſpeaking of the free promiſes which hee offereth vnto vs in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. God in y holy ſcripture vſeth a double ſpeech: And whē I ſpeake of double ſpeech, I meane not y he doubleth on his part, or y he is contrarie to himſelfe, or y one ſaying of his is repugnant to another: for God keepeth alwaies at one ſtay, and (as I haue ſaid afore) hee changeth not al y ſpeeches y proceed from him: do very wel agree together, without any contradiction. Neuertheles, as touching his law, there he hath ſpoken as a Iudge & not as a father. In his law he ſpeaketh as a Iudge, ſaying: He y lueth as he ought, ſhal not bee deceiued, he ſhal not leſſe his labor: for when you haue done me ſeruice, I wil cauſe you to proſper. After ſuch maner doth God ſpeake in the perſon of a Iudge. And when wee haue receiued this word, behold we are confounded, howſo euer the caſe ſtandeth. And wherefore? For that in ſtead of abilitie to obtaine the grace y is offered vnto vs, wee ceaſe not to kindle Gods wrath againſt vs, and therefore we be al damned. What is to be done then? God comieth ſpeaking as a father, and ſaith: Well then, I am contented to forbear this rigour of mine, which I might execute vpon you by my law; howbeit y the ſame is not ouer great: for I haue applied my ſelfe ſo far vnto you, as to promiſe that which is not your due: I haue bin willing as it were to entice you by amiable meanes: but I haue wonne nothing thereby, becauſe of your ſrowardnes. What remedy then? I come now to tel you, y if you wil beleeue in my Son, I wil releaſe you of al your debts. If you will receiue him for your Shepheard, y he may guide you quietly, you ſhall perceiue y I deſire not to win you otherwiſe thā by gentle & friendly dealing, as if I ſhould ſay, Come vnto mee, & I will forgive you al your ſins, & accept you into fauor. And albeit y you are miſerable creatures, deſeruing vter damnation: yet wil I quite forget & bury al your offences: when I haue ſo doone, I promiſe to beget you anew, by my holy ſpirit: and this grace ſhal bee giuen vnto you by meanes of mine onely ſon, if you labour to come vnto him. And therupō although you be driuen to ſtriae againſt many temptations, and y at y firſt encourage you haue not ſul victorie ouer them; but that ye be encompassed with many ſpottes and vices ſtill: yet wil I not lay any of al theſe things to your charge; I forgive you your ſinnes: and the good y you doe, ſhal bee acceptable to mee thoro-<sup>10</sup> ugh my fauor, although it deſeruethe it not. Loe heere the ſecond order of ſpeech that God vſeth vnto vs in the holy ſcripture.

Let vs marke therefore, that when we heare the voyce of our GOD, and knowe what wee owe vnto him, and haue hearde the promiſes that that he hath made vs in his law: we must needs rest there confounded and condemned, forsomuch as none of al those things can auale vs by reason of our vnthankfulness: wherupon we must haue our refuge to the free mercie which is offered vnto vs in our Lord Iesus Christ: & hearken vnto God when he speaketh vnto vs, which thing he doth both in the Law, in the Prophets, and in y<sup>e</sup> Gospell, saying, I of mine owne mere goodnes am become your Saviour: & you must seek your saluatiō frō somewhere else, than in yourselves.

 For the redeemer which God promised, was e-uer had in mind, y<sup>e</sup> men might rest thē vpō him.
 And for y<sup>e</sup> cause were the sacrifices ordained in y<sup>e</sup> time of the law. For although Christ was not yet vttered openly to the worlde: yet did the Iewes vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> all the hope of their saluation depended vpon their reconcilement to God by meane of the sacrifice y<sup>e</sup> was to be offered. They brought brute beasts to the Temple: was that to cleaue y<sup>e</sup> vncleannes of their soules? No: for what can corrupt bloud doe, what shal stinking grace doe, can those things purge y<sup>e</sup> soule of her iniquitie? No truly. But vnder those figures the Iewes saw how they should be deliuered from the curse of God, & admitted into his fauor, and y<sup>e</sup> al their life should be acceptable vnto him. And nowe haue wee a more sure testimonie thereof in the Gospell, for there wee see the thing it self fully accomplished vnto vs: namely y<sup>e</sup> although we haue not kept y<sup>e</sup> commandementes of God, yet Iesus Christ hath kept thē. And wherefore was it? Because hee was subiect to it? No. But hee became subiect to the law: yea, but y<sup>e</sup> was for our sakes. So then let vs haue our recourse vnto our Lord Ie-sus Christ, and let vs heare God speaking in such a phrase, whereby he doth not only say, these be the things y<sup>e</sup> I commaund you, and if ye do them thē you shal prosper & be blessed; but also where hee saith, Beholde I am your father, come vnto me, but come in the name of my only Son, who I haue appointed to be your mediator: & acknowledge y<sup>e</sup> there is nought else in you but corruptiō: and trust not in your own power, nor in your own freewill: but casting away all foolish fantasies of vaine presumption, come with lowlines to seek y<sup>e</sup> grace of my spirit: and then ye shal be sure y<sup>e</sup> I wil alwaies vphold you by my goodnes, & from day to day confirme you in my feare, and make you to walke in my waies, so as I wil not lay to your charge y<sup>e</sup> faults of your works, they shal not hinder my blessing toward you: not y<sup>e</sup> you should not confesse your transgressions, & alwaies acknowledge before me y<sup>e</sup> you are faultie; but that your sins shal not bee laide to your charge, although there bee occasion why that they should bee called to reckoning, and to be reproved by me. Loe there the second voice of God, to the which we must hearken, if wee desire to become partakers of the blessings y<sup>e</sup> be here contained. But by the way we haue to note for a conclusion, y<sup>e</sup> although the faithful be exempted from the curse of God, and that he wil not deale rigorously with them, but rather vphold them and make them to ioy the blessings which he hath promised in his law, as though they had fully accomplished y<sup>e</sup> same:

yet cease they not to suffer many stripes of his rods, & our Lorde chastiseth them continually, exercising some after one maner, and some after an other, so y<sup>e</sup> al are smitten. And al the chastise-ments which God fendeth vs, bee curses euerychone of thē, I meane as to outward apparence.
 If we be sick, if we be hungrie or thirstie, if we be tormented in this present world, if we be troubled and persecuted: these are y<sup>e</sup> curses of God.
 Our enemies scoffe at vs, we bee in reproche, in pouertie, in vexation, & in many anguishes: one is troubled in his house by his wife, an other by his children, and an other by his neighbor: finally, the faithful be many waies deprived of y<sup>e</sup> ble-sings of God. It is sure so. Howbeit this letteth not but y<sup>e</sup> we be euermore blessed of him, by reason y<sup>e</sup> we haue a continual tast of his goodnes, to allure vs vnto him. Let vs therefore note well, y<sup>e</sup> when he cutteth off his blessings, and giueth thē not as we do wish, the same is for our profite: because he seeth we haue need of some quickening vnto make vs to come vnto him. And forasmuch as euery of vs do fall asleepe in our sinnes: God is faine to waken vs, and to make vs feeble, that so soone as we withdraw vs from his seruice, he wil in likewise absent himselfe from vs, and that his grace shal be taken away from vs, and wee stand dispossessed of the same; howbeit neuer so vtterly, but y<sup>e</sup> the blessing of God shal alwaies surmoit, so as we may ioy therein, acknowledging him to be merciful, & wayting vpon his fatherly goodnes, more amply to be shewed when hee shal take vs hence againe to himselfe. Thus ye see howe we may possesse and enjoy the blessings of God, which are set forth for vs in his law, insumuch that although our Lord doth enterlace the same with many afflictions, and many correctiōs, as though he had cursed vs: his so doing is but to prouoke vs day by day to repentance, & to keepe vs from falling asleepe in this present worlde: as we wel know y<sup>e</sup> our delights make vs drunken & vnmindful of God, except hee constraime vs by pricking and spurring vs to reward. Thus ye see how the things which at the first sight seemed contraries, agree very wel. And in y<sup>e</sup> respect doth Moses say y<sup>e</sup> these blessings shal light vpon vs, & encompasse vs round about, as if hee had saide y<sup>e</sup> we shal alwaies be sure of Gods fauor, yea euen so sure of it that it shal neuer faile vs, if wee serue him. For the word Encompasse, or to light vpon vs, doth import that y<sup>e</sup> grace of God is not fleeing, as though it fel at aduenture, & as though we could not catch it soone ynough. No (saith hee) You shalbe encompassed therewith. And therefore let vs assure ourselues of the goodnes of our God, and y<sup>e</sup> it shal neuer faile vs, so that we for our part do come vnto him. But let vs note well, that wee can neuer come there, vnlesse he drawe vs vnto him. And that forso much as we bee subiect to so many infirmitie and vices, he by his bearing with vs, sheweth vs y<sup>e</sup> we must haue our recourse to his free goodnesse, for the forgueneesse of our sinnes by the reconciliatiō that hee hath made in our Lorde Iesus Christ: and that we in stryning ourselues to doe well, shall perceiue that the goodnesse of God ceaseth not to bee free vnto vs, without owing vs any thing at all.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our finnes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue doone, that beeing beaten downe, yea and as it were drowned in despaire, wee may bee drawn to the faith in our Lord Iesus Christ; and knowing that wee bee altogether emptie and naked of al goodnesse, let vs beseech him to renue vs by his holy spirit, euen till wee be fully chaunged, and that wee may bee more and more encreased in his graces, so that wee may haue testimonie that G O D regardeth vs, and is neere vnto vs, yea and dwelleth in vs; & that wee may bee so confirmed in his adoption, that wee may alwaies waite for the heavenly inheritance, and not be weary in this worlde to walke in his obedience: That it may please him to bestowe this grace not only vpon vs, but also vpon al people and nations of the earth, &c.

The CLIII. Sermon which is the second vpon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

2 And they shall come vpon thee, &c.

3 Thou shalt be blessed in the Towne, and blessed in the fielde.

4 The fruite of thy wombe shalbe blessed, and the fruite of thy grounde, and the fruite of thy Cattell, and the encrease of thy kine, and of the flockes of thy Sheepe.

5 Thy basket shall bee blessed, and thy store.

6 Thou shalt bee blessed at thy comming in, and blessed at thy going forth.

7 The Lorde will make thine enemies to fall before thee, which doe rise vp against thee: if they come forth against thee one way, they shall flee before thee feuen wayes.

8 The Lorde will commaund his blessing to bee with thee in thy Cellers, and in all that thou puttest thy hande vnto: and he will blesse thee in the Land which the Lorde thy God giueth thee.

Tis to bee meruelled, that men cannot bee persuaded that they shall prosper by well dooing. But it proceedeth of vnbeleefe, because they doe not acknowledge their life to be in the power and direction of G O D, and that it is his peculiar office to gouerne vs. For if wee were well assured that all creatures bee in the hand of God, and also that hee hath care of vs: it is certaine that euery of vs would rest vpon him, wayting to receiue all goodnesse from him, which is the thing that shoulde encourage vs to serue him, and to direct ourselues after his will. But although euery man seeke and desire his owne ease, yet wee vnderstand not that G O D is hee from whom wee must looke for it. Wee can say it well ynough: 60 but the thing it selfe sheweth that wee can not iudge nor conceiue it to bee so. Euery man would bee riche by leawde practises: euery man setteth his felicitie in offending God. Wee must needs therefore bee without sense and reason, seeing that this article, wherein wee should bee resolued, cannot bee imprinted in our mindes, to witte, that all welfare proceedeth from the hande of G O D, and that there is no meane to prosper, but by giuing ouer our selues vnto him, and vnto his seruice. Yet notwithstanding, G O D hath alwayes left this engrauen in the heartes of men, that the wretchednesse and miseries whereunto wee bee subiect, doe proceede of the corruption of mankind, insomuch y the very Paynims haue had the same opinion common amongst them. It is certaine that they were not taught concerning the fall of Adam; they vnderstood not howe all mankind was accursed; for the diuel through his willnesse, had put that out of knowledge. Yet notwithstanding, it was vnderstoode among them, and writen, and these things were common vnto them, namely that all the sickeneses and wretchednesse that men endure, all the famines, and plagues, and such like things, proceeded of this, that men will needes robbe G O D of more wisdome than is belonging vnto them. They knew not y this came from the tree of the knowledge of good & euill: they wist nothing of thar.

Neuertheleffe God hath not permitted that knowledge so wholly to be buried, but that it remained amongst the Heathen, and Infidels, so as they vnderstoode, that because man would haue vsurped vnto himselfe more knowledge than was lawfull for him, that now all things are confounded in this worlde, and the life of man is become miserable, and so subdued to so many aduerfities as is horrible. Now, this is sufficient to make vs altogether vnexcusable: but yet will God haue vs, (vs I meane whome God hath chosen to be of his houfholde) to be more familiarly taught. This doth god speak as it were mouth to mouth: and looke what the Infidels had but by imagination, the same doeth he tell and testifie vnto vs: I say, he telleth it vs, that we might know it familiarly: & he testifieth it vnto vs, that we should be thereof assured. That is the cause why hee saith that he would make all maner of felicitie to reigne vpon vs, so we would hearken to his voyce. Whereby he sheweth, that if it were not long of our felices, he were readie and forward to entreate vs as a father doth his children: and that hee delighteth not to vex vs with multitudes of euils, but that hee meaneth rather to make vs feele his goodnesse in all respectes. Let vs therefore be aduised to walke in the obedience of our God, if wee meane that he should powre vpon vs the treasures of his grace, in such wise as all our life may be blessed. Neuertheleffe, it is certaine that God oftentimes afflicteth his people for other causes, than their finnes: as we see it happened to Iob, which is a notable myrrour for vs. Wee see the like in the holy Patriarks, who although they did endeouour and traualle to serue God, yet were they in as great troubles and griefes as could be. The same is yet more manifest in the newe Testament. For seeing that God hath reuiled more fully, what is the perfect happinesse of men: It behooueth the faithfull to be exercised vnder many aduerfities in this transitorie life. But let vs marke first of all, that if God doe not punish the finnes of the faithfull, hee doeth it to preferue them, as the Physicion that waiteth not alwayes till the sicknesse do appeare, but if hee perceiue any likelyhood that a man is in daunger, he will preuent it. God then, in not punishing the finnes that be presently committed by his children, doth vse chaftisements towards them, as preferuatiue medicines. It may euery day fall out, that a man hath not offended against God in some particular sins. But what? If he were alwayes in prosperitie, he would forget himselfe: God therefore doeth cure such diseases by withdrawing his blessings: hee will not suffer the face to blinde mens eyes, or to hinder our comming vnto him, least it should stay vs too long in this worlde: he will not suffer vs to be so intangled in our delights, as to fall altogether on sleepe in the same.

There is yet a seconde point, to wit: that when God forbeareth to punish vs for our sins, it is not for that hee hath nor alwayes iust cause so to doe if he listed. Let the perfectest folke in the worlde bee chosen out, and yet if GOD would deale with them by rygour, he should lay many harde knockes vpon their pates. But truly wee thinke it not so: for wee bee not so sharpe sighted, as to knowe the faultes which God doth marke. But yet must wee assure our selues, that GOD vrereth his patience and goodnesse in that he spareth men, and punisheth them not, I meane, the most righteous that can bee founde. As for example, when Dauid was cruelly persecuted of Saul and of all his eninies; when Abraham was stinged and vexed so many wayes; likewise when Isaac and Iacob, and all the Prophets were afflicted by the wicked and by the despisers of God, euen to the verie death: and finally when the Apostles and all the faithfull were cruelly delt with, it was not for their finnes. No verily. But had it pleased God to haue called them to account, hee might haue punished them an hundred times more, and they should haue had no cause to haue accused him of cruelty. Hee spared them, and in so doing hee did them the honour to suffer for his name: or rather hee tried their obedience, killed their carnall affections, and drew them neere vnto himself. As for example, whereas it pleased God to make Iob a myrrour of patience, yet neuertheleffe he made him acquainted with his owne frailtie: but howsoeuer it were, yet was it his intent to make him to serue for an example to vs all. Wee perceiue then that God hath other meanings in afflicting his people, than onely to punish their finnes; neuertheleffe he ceaseth not to vpholde them, euen by his own meere grace. And yet must wee on our side resort backe to this point, that the original of all the miseries that we suffer in this present world, doth proceede of sinne. And why so? For were not this corruption in our nature, which God condemneth, and of the which also wee be conuicted: wee should enioy heere a blessed life: all this whole worlde should be vnto vs an earthly Paradise. For we must not thinke that Adam was cooped vp in a little corner for himselfe alone, but that all the whole earth was blessed of God, and that we should haue felt the same to the end of the worlde. But where is the earthly paradise nowe? It is no where at all: For in verie deede, the earth is accursed. It was the sentence that God pronounced vpon Adam & vpon all his offspring. And therefore we must vnderstand, that all the miseries whereunto wee be subiect in this present worlde, doe growe from this roote, that we continue not in the perfection, wherein A dā was created. And that God reformeth vs, when wee haue done amisse, or rather beholde the vices wherof he intendeth to purge vs by his medicines, & tarieth not til we haue offended him and prouoked his vengeance, but preuenteth vs and ministrith the remedie in such season as he knoweth best. And in verie deede, when hee afflicteth vs for some other consideration, than for our finnes; the same is a great honour, and a speciall preeminence vnto vs: and wee haue cause to praise him in that hee vouchsafeth to marke vs, and to make his adoption apparant in vs by making vs to suffer for the Testimonie of his truth, and to receiue wrongfull persecution at mens handes, vnder any colour or occasion, wharsoener it be.

Moreouer let vs marke, that it is not in vaine that God promisseth that they which serue him shall leade a happie life euen in this worlde. Nor that they shall bee exempted from all aduersitie, for that is impossible, yea and also against our saluation. But hee will so dispose our life as wee shall perceiue that hee meant not to feede vs with a vaine hope, when hee saide that he will cause all them to prosper that harken vnto his voice. But by the way we must remember, that the blessings which bee heere contained, serue not to shewe what the foueraigne felicitie of men is: but to giue vs a tast of the heauenly life, to the ende wee shoulde seeke for the celestiall inheritance which is promised vs, there to set our rest. This must bee laide foorth more particularly, or else it will be darke. It is true, that there is difference betwixte vs and the fathers that liued vnder the Lawe: For God did there entreat them as little children: and it was meet for to bee. For they had not yet our Lorde Iesus, who hath nowe set open the gates of heauen to bring vs into the life and glorie of heauen. Indeede they had as good part therein as we, but they were faine to walke in shadowes and figures to vnderstande it; therefore they had neede of some aide, whereof we at this time haue no neede at all; neither may we thinke our state to bee therefore the worse; as many doe complaine at this day, because that God doeth not dandle them, and that they bee not (as seemeth to themselves) so much at their ease as the olde fathers were: surely they deceiue themselves in this comparion. For if any one of vs shoulde reckon vp what he suffered all the dayes of his life, and therewithall looke vpon the state either of Abraham or of Dauid; doubtles he shall finde himselfe to be in better case than were the holy fathers: For they (as saith the Apostle) did but see the thinges as farre of, which wee beholde before our eyes. God promised to be their Saujour, he had chosen them, to be, as it were, of his household; But where was hee in the meane while that was promised to be the redeemer? Where was the doctrine that is made so manifest vnto vs in the Gospell concerning the resurrection? They knewe the same a farre off: but nowe it is declared vnto vs in the Gospell, in such maner, as we may indeede say, as our Lord Iesus Christ gaue vs also to vnderstande, That blessed be the eares which heere the things that are tolde vs concerning him, and the eyes that see the things which we see: for the holy kinges and Prophetes haue longed for the same, and coule not obtaine it. Wee therefore haue a much more excellent state, than they had which liued vnder the Lawe. This is the difference whereof I speake, which had neede to bee supplied by God, for the imperfection that was in the doctrine concerning the recouling of the heauenly life, which the fathers knewe but by outwarde tokens, albeit that they were deare vnto God. Nowe that Iesus Christ is come downe luther, and hath shewed vs howe wee ought to followe him, by suffering many afflictions, as it is tolde vs, and that we must be fashioned after his image in bearing pouterie and reproch, and all such like thinges; and to bee short, that our life must bee as a kinde of death: forasmuch as we knowe all this, and the infinite power of God is vttered in his raising vp Iesus Christ from death, and in his exalting of him to the glorie of heauen; shoulde not wee thereupon take good courage? And ought it not to be a sweetening to all the afflictions that we can suffer? Haue not we cause to reioyce in the midst of our sorowes? Let vs note then that if the olde fathers were more blessed of God than wee bee, as touching this present life, wee ought not to wonder at it at all. For the reason thereof is apparant. But howsoeuer the worlde goe, yet is this saying of Saint Paul alwayes verished, That the feare of GOD hath the promises not onely of the life to come, but of this present life also. Let vs walke therefore in the obedience of God, and then shall we bee assured that hee will shewe himselfe a father vnto vs, yea euen in the maintenance of our bodies, at leastwise so farre forth as concerneth the keeping and preseruing of vs in peace, the deliuering of vs from all euils, and the succoring of vs in all our necessities. God (I say) will make vs to feele his blessing in all these things, so that we walke in his feare.

Yet notwithstanding wee must returne to this point, that God, in making vs to taste of his fauour heere, meaneth not that wee shoulde be so glutted therewith, that wee shoulde forge the cuerlasting rest wherunto hee inuited vs. And so all the benefites of GOD which belong vnto this transitorie life, must serue vs for ladders to mount vpwarde, and not for Cushions to fall a sleepe vpon in this worlde. When God giueth a man wherewith to liue, indewing him with health, and suffering him not to bee vexed of his enemies; whar else shoulde such a man doe but bee drawn by the grace of God, to endeuour to serue him so much the more, and not misbehaue himselfe in this worlde; but go on forward, vsing that which is giuen him, as though he used it not at all, so as nothing stoppe him from keeping on his way still vnto God? But wee doe all things cleane contrarie, and therefore wee ought to bee wakefuller. When we heare the promises that be heere contained, let vs not thinke, that the meaning of God was to pamper the olde people in their transitorie pleasures: but rather that the same shoulde bee a meane, to drawe them vp on high as hee meaneth nowadays towardes vs: For all the good that wee receiue of him, hath this end and intent, that our mindes shoulde alwayes bee raised vp to the heauenly life. Doth God giue vs breade to eate? Therein hee sheweth himselfe to bee our father. Yea, but yet for all that wee beeing his children, cease not to bee as wanderers in this worlde, hauing alwayes one foote lifted vp, and we haue here no rest. Therefore let vs haue an eye to the inheritance of the kingdome of heauen, and let the breade which we eate to nourish vs, be a meane to direct vs thither. After the same manner is it with all other things. Nowe let vs come to that which is heere contained in the text of Moses, and then in the ende we shall the better vnderstande what hath bene saide. Moses saith heere, That God will blesse his people both in the towne and in the fildes, he will blesse them in the seede of their bodie: he will blesse them in their cattle, hee will blesse them in the fruite of their lande, hee will blesse them in their baskets and in their stores and in their Graineries, he will blesse them in giuing them victorie against their enemies. We knowe that the happinelle of this present life, that is to say, such happines as may be in this worlde, is for men to haue wherewith to maintaine themselves quietly, and to be preferred from their enemies. Here God setteth downe both the one, and the other: For touching the one he saith, Thou shalt bee blessed as well in the towne as also in the field: and shalt bee blessed in the fruite of thy wonbe, and in the fruite of thy lande, and in the fruite of thy cattle. It is certaine that the chiefe blessing which we can desire of G O D, is in our owne persons: that hee prouide vs of such things as are requisite for this transitorie life. And that is the cause why hee beginneth at our persons, and then cometh to our children, and from thence descendeth to our cattle, to the fruit of the earth, and to all prouisions. It seemeth here at the first that God meant to pamper his people, as though he would set them vp in a sty, and there cram their bellies, as it were to lay them a sleepe at their ease, and to be short, that they should be here as in a Paradise. But I haue told you heretofore, that it behoued God to bestowe his benefices more largely vpon the fathers that liued vnder the Lawe, because they coule not otherwise be drawn vnto him, seeing that the promises of the Eternall life, were yet obscure vnto them. Howbeit wee haue to note herewithall, that when God speaketh after this manner, hee meaneth not onely to giue men hope that they shall be blessed in all respects; but also to admonish vs, that nothing letteth vs from enjoying a soueraigne and perfect felicitie in this world, whilst we waite for the life of heauen, but only that wee be wrapped in vices and corruptions. And so did God thereby meane to traine the faithful, that they should thinke thus with themselves: Let vs serue God, and wee shall want no manner of thing: And if wee be vexed, and haue not all our desires, if the earth doe not yeelde such fruitfulness as may content vs, or if our cattle prosper not as wee would; let vs vnderstande that this cometh to passe, because we be wretched creatures, and cannot abde the blessing of God so perfect as it might be amongst vs, by means whereof he is faine to withdrawe his hande, and to giue vs but a portion of his blessings, because that if wee should haue so much, as he coule finde in his heart to bestowe vpon vs, it should glutte vs, and in the ende wee should be choaked therewith. This is the cause then why God doth heere so greatly magnifie his blessings; it is doone, not for that men haue euer bene blessed in all manner of respects, without feeling of any euill to vex them: this (I say) neuer happened. And wherefore then doth God promise it? As wee haue saide afore, it is to make vs vnderstande, that whensoever our life is not so blessed as we couer, wee should consider that God knoweth vs to be vnable to receiue the fulnesse of his benefits, and therefore is faine to distribute them vnto vs by pece meales; after the manner of sicke folkes or little children, which for want of discretion, are faine to be governed by others. But we be lesse aduised than the infants, or sicke folkes: for we would deuour the blessings that God doeth sende, if hee helde vs not in order, for our lustes are miserable corrupted. God bestoweth his blessings vpon vs sufficiently: but we like sicke folkes doe refuse good meate, and fall to soule feeding, which cannot but hurt vs: thus are wee caried away by our wicked affections, and are neuer able to direct the vse of Gods benefices, nor to gouerne them as be-houeth; for wee would infect and defile all, if hee prouided not for it aforehande. Let vs make therefore that God doeth heere warne vs to call our sinnes to remembrance, and to bewaile them as often as wee enioy not such fullnesse of his blessings, as is heere mentioned: Neuertheless hee would haue vs to hope, that by seruing of him wee shall prosper, and haue ynough for our contentment.

And indeede, wee see howe all the faithful haue in that behalfe behaved themselves. It is sure (as wee haue saide) that Dauid was diuers wayes in perplexitie, and afflicted: no man more: but did hee in all that while murmur against God? No. True it is that hee vttered his griefes and passions: but that was with all meekenesse: and yet in the meane while hee omitted not to say, that the anger of GOD lasted but a little while, and that when hee afflicteth his people, he hath done in turning of a hand: but his goodness lasteth long, and continueth vnto life. As howe? If wee looke into the whole life of Dauid, what shall wee finde the rein? Beholde, in his infancie hee was brought vp as a Shepheardes sonne of the cuntry, and God saith that hee tooke him from the flockes, as hee was among his cattle. When hee came to the court of Saul, it is certaine that, beyond all hope and opinion of the worlde, hee was aduanced to be the kinges sonne in lawe: but it had bene better for him to haue continued still a shepheard in the field, than to haue bene in such trauaile and miserie, so long time as we perceiue he was: they sought his death by all means, and his life did not onely hang as it were by a thred, but he was also had in reproch. In so much that they counted him the most wicked caitife in the worlde, a Traitor to his Prince, a disloyall man to his King. Yee see then that Dauid was as it were, abhominable to euerie bodie. And when God had set him at peace [that way] then was hee vexed with forsaime warre, insomuch as hee had no sooner done with one people, but hee was faine to turne him about to another; and to make vp the measure, his owne naturall sonne chafed him out of his kingdome, meaning no lesse than to cut his throate: and we see what other conspiracies hee suffered, as the conspiracie of Semei. Yet did Dauid alwayse confesse without faining, that all the chastisements, miseries and afflictions that God sent him, were nothing vnto him, and that they lasted but the turning of a hand, or for a minute of an houre, whereas his blessings endured for euer. For why? Dauid had not in him such vnthankfulness as we haue. Wee imbrace Gods gracious dealings and make no account of them: of euerly little harme we make a great mountaine; when God chastiseth vs, we shrinke away our shoulders, making great complaints and outcries. But let vs learn to esteeme better of Gods goodnes towards vs, in such wise as we bee not founde vnthankfull for his grace. This is the cause (say I) why wee conceiue not the value of the blessings that are contained here: For why? If God sende vs any vexation, we shut our hartes against it, inso much that there is none of vs which fretteth not against him. And though wee murmure not in speech, yet faile wee not to haue some bitterness lurking in our hartes: there needs but one affliction in all our life, to put the grace of God quite out of tast with vs. And when he hath done vs all the good that can be deuised, yet doth it euer runne in our remembrance, we saying: yea but I haue sustainede such a harme: and our minde is neuer off, of it.

Thus are Gods benefites vsauerie to vs, so as we passe them ouer or let them slip. Contrariwise therefore, when our Lorde afflicteth vs, let vs receiue the comforts that he giueth vs to moderate our heauinesse: and then shall we continue to walke on our way. And albeit we be faine to endure many things, and that by reason of our frailtie and feeblenesse, we be not able to ouercome the temptations at the first blow: yet notwithstanding through the grace of God wee may get the vpper hande. And when wee bee so oppressed with our miseries, then wil wee esteeme of Gods grace in such sort that euen in the middes of darkenesse wee shall perceiue what light God giueth vs, so as wee shall alwayse feele him to bee our father. Now when wee finde this, to wit, that God is our father; it is out of doubt, that hee will sufficiently blesse vs, so farre forth as is fit for our saluation. Thus yee see what wee haue to doe and to practise, if wee will rightly vnderstande, that GOD hath not faide in vaine, that hee will blesse his people, So they hearken to his voice.

Moreouer wee bee warned heereby, not to seeke any thing that wee desire, but at the hande of GOD. And this also is another verie profitable admonition. For wee see howe men doe erre, when they desire to bee at their ease. It is the naturall inclination of all men, to couet to be this and that, but in that while, what course holde wee? No doubt, but wee turne our backes on God, and kicke against him. Hee that meaneth to bee rich, vseth rauen and crueltie, deceites and wicked practises: hee that desireth to attaine to credite and authoritie, practiseth treason, indirect wyles, and other sleights. To bee short, Ambition ruleth him altogether; and finally hee that woulde compass any other lustes of his, cannot but prouoke the anger of God. See at what point wee bee. And thus doeth our faithlesnesse discover it selfe euerly way, as I haue spoken heere before. Therefore haue wee neede to bee mindfull of this lesson, to wit, that if wee will prosper, yea euen in this present life, there is none other meane for it, but to put our selues vnder Gods guiding, who hath all goods in his power to bestowe on whome it pleaseth him: hoping also that hee will not be nigarly in distributing his gracious gifts vnto vs, at leastwise, so wee hearken vnto his voice. For (as I saide euen nowe,) seeing that wee be his children, can we thinke that he taketh pleasure to vex vs? Moreouer hee diminisheth not; bee hee neuer so liberrall towards vs, yet hee feareth not that hee shall haue aught the lesse, or that hee shall feele any want. For hee is a fountaine that can neuer bee drawn drie.

Let vs therefore bee persuaded, that our life shall alwayse bee accursed, vnlesse wee returne to this point where to Moses leadeth vs, namely, to hearken to the voyce of our God, to be thereby moued, and continually confirmed, that hee hath care of our saluation, yea not onely of the eternal saluation of our soules, but also to maintaine vs in the state of this earthly life, to make vs to tast presently of his loue and goodnesse, in such sorte as may content and suffice vs, waiting till wee may haue our fill thereof, and beholde the thing face to face which wee be faine as now to looke vpon as it were through a glasse and in the darke. That is one thing more which wee haue to remember vpon this texte, where it is saide that wee shall bee blessed, if wee hearken to the voyce of the Lorde our God.

And this is to bee applied to all the partes of our life: as for example when a man woulde prosper in his owne person, so as hee is desirous to employ himselfe in the seruice of God, and to obtaine some grace, to the ende hee may not bee vnprofitable heere, but that GOD may bee honoured by him: let him bethinke himselfe thus, Lorde I am thine, dispose thou of mee, beholde here I am ready to obey thee: for that is the point whereat wee must beginne, if wee desire that GOD shoulde take vs to his guiding, and dispose of vs to serue him, in such wise as his blessing may appeare and lighten vpon vs, and vpon our persons. So is it concerning euery mans household.

When a man is desirous to liue in peace and concord with his wife, or to haue children in whom whom to reioyce; let him vnderstande that all this is in the hand of God, and that it lyeth not in our owne power nor skill to order our household after our heartes desire. For they that thinke to compasse it by their owne power, deceiue themselves very much, and commit sacrilege in robbing God of the honour that hee hath referred to himselfe. It is saide that the fruite of the wombe is a speciall gift of God, and so is euery thing els that pertaineth to household: According whereunto it is saide, to be but vanitie for a man to build vniuersall God builde also with him. They therefore that will possesse a quiet state for themselves and their children, let them turne vnto God, and commit themselves wholly vnto him and to his guiding: knowing that there is none other meane, to attaine to the same, but by his blessing: so is it also, as concerning cattle, foodde, and all other things. For wee see heere was nothing forgotten. And God meane to make vs to perceiue his infinite goodnesse, in that hee declareth that hee will deale with our smallest businesse, which one of our own equals would be loath to meddle withall. If wee haue a friende, wee would be verie loath, yea, and ashamed to vse his helpe, vnlesse it were in a matter of some importance. But see heere, God goeth into our sheepefoldes and into the stalles of our Kylene and Oxen, and hee goeth into our fieldes: yea hee hath care of all things else. For as much then as wee see him abase himselfe so farre, ought not we to bee raiused to honour him and to magnifie his bountie?

Moreouer let vs conclude, that whereas God saith, that he will blesse vs in the fruite of the earth, that he will blesse vs in the fruite of our cattell: it is a most iure argument that hee will not forget the principal. These things be contemptible and of small reputation, and many times mortal men doe dispise them; and yet wee see that God notwithstanding taketh care of them. Seeing that it is so, will hee forget our ioules, the which hee hath created after his owne ymage, the which also hee hath so dearly redeemed with the sacred bloude of his sonne? Surely no. First of all therefore let vs acknowledge Gods fauour towards vs, in abasing himselfe so farre as to direct and to gouerne every thing that belongeth to our life and sustentance; and from thence let vs mount vp higher, and vnderstande that hee will not faile vs in the things that surpasseth this present life: but rather that in the chiefe things that belong to our life, yea euen in this worlde, God will stretch forth his hande to furnish vs alwayes with all things that are needefull.

There is the seconde point: which is; that we shalbe vpholden against our enemies. Wee haue said, y<sup>e</sup> the first point is, that God prouideth for vs, so as we want not any thing that is requisite for the passing of our life in this worlde. But if our Graines were neuer so full, our Cellers neuer so thorowly furnished, and our purse neuer so well stuffed, so as we want no manner of thing: yet if in the meane while our enemies be able to scratch out our eyes, and we be as people set out to the spoyle, so as wee bee dayly assaulted, and haue no defence; what booteth vs our great abundance? Therefore it was Gods will, shortly to shewe heere, that his blessings shoulde extend themselves so farre and wide in all cases and all respectes; that nothing should be missing to such as doe him honour and seruice. But let vs marke, that God hath not exempted vs quite from our enemies, neither did hee exempt the people of olde time. For why? It is impossible for vs to liue in this worlde without some vexation at other mens hands. True it is that as much as in vs lyeth wee ought to procure peace, for our part. But forasmuch as the diuell is Prince of this worlde, hee will not leaue Gods children in rest. And hee hath supporters ynowe to serue his turne: for al the dispisers of God, al the wicked, and all the hypocrites that be in this worlde; the number of whom is in manner infinite, are satans darts, swordes, and arrowes.

Seeing then that wee must dwell amongst the contentners of God, and amongst the wicked; let vs make our reckoning that wee shall be troubled, and haue enemies, let vs endeavour to appease them so much as we can, and let vs giue them none occasion of hatred: but yet in the meane while let vs not be vnprouided, howsoeuer the matter standeth. Thus much concerning that one point. For God hath not saide, I will vtterly roote out your enemies, so as you shall haue the worlde by your selues, wherein to leade a happie and quiet life, and to haue all the felicitie that can bee wished; hee saith not so: but hee saith, Albeit that you be compassed rounde about with your enemies, yet will I not suffer them to haue the vpper hand ouer you.

Nowe hee saith further, that if our enemies come forth by one way, they shall flee seuen wayes. Whereby hee giueth vs to vnderstande, that our enemies may well conspire by great numbers, so as it may bee like that wee shoulde be swallowed vp of them; but yet they shall bee filled with feare, as shalbe shewed more at large in another text. Heere wee haue to marke, that the susteining and maintaining of our life is in the hande of God, and that our rest and quietnesse depende also of him. And although that men doe continually deuise to hurt and annoy vs, yet is God euer strong enough to disappoint them when hee hath once receiued vs into his protection, and to hinder them, so as they shalbe able to attempt nothing against vs, but the same shalbe overthrowen. That is a thing which wee haue to beare in remembrance. Nowe when God permitte vs to haue enemies, thereby hee cilleth vs vnto himselfe, & we ought to be the more prouoked to call vpon him when wee see our selues driuen thereto by necessitie. For if the worlde shoulde laugh on vs, and reioyce at vs on all partes: it woulde seeme vnto vs, that wee had no more neede of Gods protection. But when we be beset with perils and daungers, and see that men lye in waite for vs, seeking nothing else but to come in to vex vs; it standeth vs in hande to resort to God, and to commit vs to his tuition, praying him to be our shield and fortress, and (finally) to be our defendour. Let vs marke therefore that God, in permitting vs to haue enemies, doeth thereby drawe vs vnto him, that wee should pray him alwayes to succour and defend vs.

But to conclude, we must remember that God is mightie enough to maintaine vs. As howe? If our enemies came vpon vs with great fiercenesse, it were enough to daunt vs and to put vs out of courage: but howsoever we fare, although hee suffer them to rise against vs, and to bee as furious as wilde beastes; yet shall they not know what to doe, but bee as folke amased. And although they haue neuer so greate aduantage at the beginning, and bee neuer so full of craft and wiliness; yet will God stoppe their eyes, so as they shall cast themselues wilfully into the snare, and there bee taken. Againe, euen when they bee armed with malice and boldnesse to set vpon vs, God will in the end confounde them, no man can tell howe: hee will destroy all their deuises and attemptes, yea and when they bande themselues against vs, & haue neuer so great multitudes on their sides, yet wil God scatter them. Like as when we see a cloude threatening raine, and it seemeth that all shoulde bee drowned; God scattereth it, and the tempest is gone; euen so will hee deal with our enemies. Thus yee see in effect what we haue to remember concerning this text, where it is saide that wee shall bee defended against all such as set themselues against vs, and that our God will make them flee before our faces, if we doe him the honour to acknowledge him to bee the Lorde of hostes, and that his power is infinite, and that therefore the whole worlde can nothing preuaile against him. Finally, what haue wee nowe to doe but to submit our selues vnder the obedience of our God? Also let vs vnderstande, that all the misbeleeuing, and all the despisers of Gods maiestie (albeit that for a time their life may seeme happie) are appointed to perdition, and that all the goods which they possesse, shal become a curse vnto the, so as they must needs be in a forlorn state: according to this saying, <sup>y</sup> their very Table shal be turned into snares and gynnnes wherewith to take them, and all the benefits of God shall become deadly poyson vnto them. Lo what wee haue to carie in minde.

Moreouer so often as wee bee afflicted, let vs humble our selues, and acknowledge our sins, & bewaile them before God: and in the meane space let vs not omitte to qualifie our griefes, knowing that amidst the afflictions which hee fendeth vs, there alwayes appeareth a certaine testimonie of his goodnesse, and that it is necessarie that he should so holde vs in awe. Yet notwithstanding, we must not be cast downe nor be discouraged, when we bee vexed and troubled though we be enuironed with neuer so many miseries. And why? Because God faileth not for all that, to shew himselfe a father towards vs. That is the thing whereon we must altogether rest, so as al the afflictions of this world may quicken vs vp to aspire to the heavenly heritage: and when we haue bewailed our sins, let vs not doubt, but God of his mercy will blesse vs, euen in Iesus Christ the fountaine of al goodnesse and blessednesse, by whom all curses are quite taken away. To proue that it is so: what may bee the chiefe curse that is false vpon mankinde, but death? And yet wee see that the same is become an entrance into life. And wherefore? For that in the person of Iesus Christ it is nowe made blessed. Wherefore let vs learne to reioyce, sith wee see that God hath so prouided for our saluation, that although he make vs to feele our sins, and would haue vs touched with some sorrowe, thereby to bring vs to repentance, yet hee ceaseth not amidst all these to shewe himselfe a father cuer more, & by al means to aduance our saluation.

Now let vs humble our selues before the maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of finnes, praying him to touch vs to the quicke more and more, that we may nishlike them: and that acknowledging the cuill which is in vs, wee may seeke his mercie: not onely to forgiue vs the sins that we haue alredie committed, but also to mortifie vs, and by the power of his spirite to giue vs grace so to forsake our selues, as wee may seeke his righteousnesse, and more and more profite therein, vntill it be perfect in vs, as such time as hee shall haue taken vs out of this world: And so let vs al say, Almighty God, heavenly father, &c.

The CLV. Sermon which is the third vpon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

9 The Lorde thy God will make thee a holy people to himselfe, as hee hath sworne vnto thee, if thou keepe the commaundements of the Lord thy God and walke in his wayes.

10 And all the nations of the earth shall see that the name of the Lorde is called vpon ouer thee, and they shall bee afraide of thee.

11 And the Lord thy G O D will make thee to abound in substance, in the fruite of thy wombe, in the fruite of thy cattel, and in the fruit of thy ground, in the land which the Lord thy G O D hath sworne to thy fathers to giue thee.

12 The Lord thy G O D will open vnto thee his good treasure, euen the heauens, to send downe raine vpon thy land in due season: and to blesse all the worke of thy handes, and thou shalt lende vnto many people and borrowe of none.

13 The Lorde God will make thee the head, and not the taylor: And thou shalt be onely aboue, and not beneath, if thou obey the commaundements of the Lord thy God, which I commaund thee this day to keepe and to doe them.

14 And that you swarue not, neither to the right hand nor to the left, from any of all the wordes which I commaund you this day, in walking after other gods to serue them.

Moses continuing the matter which was handled yesterday, sheweth vpon what condition G O D choseth vs, when hee taketh vs to bee of his Church: that is, that wee should bee separated, and set far off from the common curse of mankind. True it is that Gods goodnesse extendeth ouer all the men of the worlde, wee see how all are fedde and maintayned by his libetalitie: but in the meane while wee see to how many miseries men be subiect. For this cause it behoueth vs to bee sundered, and that God watch ouer vs, and beare vs a speciall loue, as to his owne children: for without that, all our lyfe is confused, as it is seene how the wretched infidelles, albeit that G O D bestowe neuer so many blessinges vpon them, yet can they not profite by them, but they stand alwayes in doubt; and not without cause. For where vpon may they repose their hope, seeing they bee not certified of the loue of G O D? How can they holde him for their father? Therefore it is a worde well worth the marking, where Moses sayth that G O D hath separated vs from all other nations of the worlde. It is certaine that this worde holynesse doth importe, that the image of G O D shoulde shine forth in vs, and that wee should serue him purely in virtuous conuersation: but yet from thence hee proceedeth farther, as hee doth in this text; namely that God will giue vnto his people a certaine marke, to shewe that they be priuiledged aboue all other folke. Therefore in beholding what the state of man is in this present lyfe, let vs learne to resort alwayes to this promise, that God hath not onely created vs after the common course of the brood of all Adams children: but that hee hath also chosen vs to himselfe for his heritage. And let vs not doubt at all, but that he watcheth ouer vs, and wil make vs to perceiue that wee be of his housholde, and that he is nigh vnto vs to succour vs: let vs bee well resolu'd in this.

Moreouer Moses addeth, Other people shall see that the name of the Lorde thy G O D is called vpon ouer thee, and they shall be afraide. It is certaine that the Idolaters can vaunt themselves enough of the name of God: and we see howe they pretend it, euen in their fighting against him, when they cast off all doctrine: Inso much that being as fierce as wilde beastes, yet they looke to bee counted of the Church. But Moses dooth here take the worde call vpon, for naming, or calling vpon: yea and that in trueth; meaning that the people were truly and in deed called after God his name; or named his People. If wee walke in the feare of our God, and frame our life after his calling, then shall it be seene how it is not in vaine that hee calleth himselfe our God, & auoweth vs to be his people. Now it is certain that this word dooth presuppose that wee haue our recourse to God, as being vnder his protection. For it is sayd that a man is called vpon or named after the name of a prince, when hee is become his subiect, and is vnder his tuition. Euen so it is sayd, that the faithfull haue G O D his name called vpon ouer them in protesting that they bee his, and that, there they bee all safe vnder his winges. And this cannot bee vnlesse we call vpon G O D, and haue our refuge vnto him in all our necessities. But whence commeth such boldnesse, that wee glory in this: that wee belong vnto God, more than any other? For wee know that the state of men is a lyke by nature. Wherefore then be we preferred before them that are descended of the self same race? It commeth through Gods election: It may not begin of vs. For what is he y that can aduance himselfe to come nigher vnto God, than others come? What deserueth can any man bring w him: [None at all.] The must God make choice of vs through his own meere goodness: & whē he clared himselfe to be our God, then, may wee also of our parte bee bolde, in all assurance and without doubt to call vpon his name. Nowe wee see what is the effect of this sentence. And Moses meaneth to declare, what preheminence G O D giueth vnto those whome hee hath adopted for his children: to wit, that albeit they be mingled amongest men, and encompassed with many miseries; yet be they preferred, as being vnder his hand and protection, euen because hee doth holde and auowe them to be of his household: not for any other cause than onely his own good pleasure. Let vs therefore courageously desie Sachan, when wee see that hee practiseth all that hee possibly can against vs, and let vs count our selues assured against all the dangers of this world, seeing that God hath done vs such fauor, as not to leaue vs to fortune, as the vnbeleeuers doe imagine. And why? For wee bee vnto him a holy people. 20 And from whence shall wee fetch this preeminence? Wee haue it because hee hath testified vnto vs that hee is our G O D. If wee had not gotten this worde of him, we should bee alwayes in perplexitie, wee shoulde still doubt, through questioning of this and that, and our lyfe should hang as it were by a threed; as wee shall see in this Chapter. But seeing that God hath vttered his fatherly loue vnto vs, and it hath pleased him to open his mouth, to make vs to vnderstand that hee hath giuen vs familiar accessse vnto him: seeing (I say) that wee haue such assurance: let vs call vpon him (that is to say) let vs not doubt to glorie in this: that hee is our Sauour: and that seeing we are his, wee cannot perish. Howebeit let vs beware that wee call not vpon the name of God falsly, as all they doe which abuse it, and yet in the meane while doe make a mocke of him, and are despisers of his maiestie. If wee clayne the name of God, let it bee, because 40 we be grounded vpon his promises, and haue receiued them through faith: and then let vs call vpon him, let him bee our refuge, and let vs not giue our selues to fond bragging as they doe which thinke it enough for them to beare the bare name of Christians. Nay, let vs followe the call of our G O D: as Moses sheweth here; saying: If thou wilt keepe the commaundementes of thy G O D, as I doe see them afore thee this day. For it is good reason that seeing God hath so bound himselfe vnto vs, wee in lykwise for our parte should yeelde our selues to his direction. And that wee should not onely profess with our mouthes that wee bee his people, but also shewe it by framing our whole lyfe agreeable to the same, and by keeping his commaundementes, make it apparant that we haue receiued the grace which hee offered vs: For that is the true prooffe thereof.

Now hee sayth moreouer, That other people shall see how the name of God is called vpon ouer vs, and that they shall feare vs. It is not enough for vs that G O D doe promise vs to make vs to feele that wee bee in his keeping: but hee saith, that euen the Paynims our mortall enemies, and the despisers of his maiestie shall bee made to know the same. Now it is certaine that the Infidels knowe not the arme of G O D, in such wise, as it ought to bee knowne vnto vs: they come far short of it. For in seeing, they see not a whit: and how then should it be possible that they should perceiue that G O D hath blessed vs, that we liue of his fauor, and that we be nourished at his cost? For they bee blockish, and thinke not that any thing cometh vnto them from the hand of God. Wee see well how the Infidels be fedde and cloathed, they enjoy the light of the Sunne, yea, and they haue abundance of goods. But as for the worshipping and seeking of God, there is no tidings at all among them thereof. And if besides their despising of the benefites of their God, they haue no vnderstanding whence they come vnto them: how should they then knowe that the name of God is called vpon ouer vs? Their knowing of it is not through any perswasion of minde, or through any such true vnderstanding of it, as we ought to haue: but Moses sayth that they shall haue it proued to their faces: as for example, wee see the wicked grinde their teeth, when they behold the faithfull to prosper, and see that God vpholdeth and keepeth them. And whence cometh that? Truly they shall be astonished at it: and they shal not be able to thinke otherwise, but that God fauoreth the contrarie parte: not that they doe fettle vpon it, or bee rightly resolu'd thereof in their heertes: but for that they be confounded in their owne selues.

Hee sayth, that they shall perceiue that Gods name is claymed [or called vpon] ouer vs: and that is [shall put them in feare]. For albeit that they feare not God: yet doth hee bridle them secretly, insomuch that when they would practise any thing against his people, they cannot, for they feele their courage broken. This is to be wondered at, that God sometimes doth giue the wicked the bridle so far as to cast out the some of their rage against vs: they deuise what they can, and worke their spite. But haue they once done that: then shall it appeare that they are vnderlings to him, and cannot withstand him. And what is the cause thereof? If God should suffer the faythlesse to haue their owne will, it is certaine that the worlde should not last three dayes, but that they would beare downe all things before them. Therefore it is necessarie that hee should restraine them with some secret bridle, and not suffer their headynesse to haue full scope. And wee see it before our eyes. Whereof comes it that we haue: not bin swallowed vp a hundred thousand times within these twentie or thirtie yeeres last past? Onely of Gods defence, which consisteth not in signes that may be seene, but in his secret holding of the wicked as it were in prison, mauger all the mischieuousnesse that is in them. By reason whereof, when they haue deuised any thing, they wash away lyke water, & all their thoughtes doe vanish, and they ly as with their armes broken, and though they vndertake great thinges, yet can they not attaine to their purpose. And so yee see what Moses meant in saying, that the wicked wicked, (sofomuch as they bee our enemies) shall perceiue that the name of God is called vpon ouer vs, and thereby bee stricken in feare. Whereby wee see, that there is no such fortresse nor defence as to haue our recourse to God. So long as hee taketh the care vpon him to saue vs, let vs boldly trust that wee stand in safetie, yea albeit that the wicked conspire against vs, and lye in waite and watch for vs; yet shall we be as in an inuincible fortresse, so we can call vpon the name of our G O D, and be thoroughly assured in ourselues that he auoweth vs to be his people, whereof wee haue good warrant, so wee breake nor our faith which on our part we haue plighte vnto him. But wee must feele the protection of G O D otherwise than the wicked doe; that is to say, in hearing his woorde, wee must embrace the grace which is presented vnto vs, and rest wholly vpon it. After that manner must wee ascerteyned that the name of God is called vpon ouer vs.

Now Moses doth repeat againe that which he had sayd concerning the fruite of the womb, of Cattell, and of the Earth. Truly it had bin sufficient, to haue promised at once, y<sup>a</sup>l bodily blessings proceede from God. But on the one side we see the mistrust that is in men, how that when God speaketh vnto them, they cease nor to argue and to reply; Yea, but shall be sure of it? And therefore to resolute vs the better, God confirmeth the matter which he had spoken of. Againe we see our vnthankfulnesse to be such, that we attribute the thinges to Fortune, and to our owne skill and trauele, which God hath done for vs. Therefore he calleth vs vnto him, and sheweth that it is he which doth it: and on the other side he would haue vs to vnderstand, that if we intend to prosper in all pointes, wee must hearken to him and obey him. For all men, yea euen the wickeddest in the world are desirous to haue issue of their owne bodies, increase of cattell, and great reuenues. But what? In the meane while wee despise God the author of all goodnesse, and seeme as though wee laboured of purpose to thrust his hand far fro vs: which is as much as if I should aske a man an almes, and giue him a whyrret on the eare: or as if hee should come to succour mee, and I should spit in his face: euen so deale wee with our God. God therefore perceiuing such a malice in vs, and that wee cannot be taught at the first, but doe stop our eares against that which he saith; repe- teth the same thinges againe which he had spoken to vs before. Whereby hee warneth vs, that if wee want any thing, wee must lay the blame thereof vpon our owne sinne, and not vpon him. Why so? Because hee is ready for his parte, to blesse vs as well in issue of our bodies, as in re- uenue of land, and in cattell, and is liberall and rich enough for vs, neither will hee bee stin- ced towards vs of the blessings that be in his possession. Let vs therefore acknowledge, that the fault is in vs, when hee withdraweth his benefites, and giueth them not vnto vs so largely as wee would.

Moreouer it is a notable manner of speech, when he saith, That God wil open his good treasure, namely the heauen, to giue vs rayne; that the earth may bring forth fooode. Here Moses setteth forth the order of nature which wee see with our eyes, that wee might the better vnderstand how God is our father and our nourisher: and that although the sustenance whercon wee feed is gathered from the earth: yet is it onely God that sendeth all thinges. How so? The earth in deede hath nature giuen vnto it, to bring forth fruite; but if it should continue dry, what would come of it? Wee see that vnlesse there fall both rayne and dewe, the earth dooth open, as though it would cry out that it were a thirst, and it dryeth vp for want of moysture. And therefore David intending to vtter his earnest desire of Gods grace, vsith this similitude, say- ing: Lord I am vnto thee as a dry grounde. Psal. 143. 6

Wee see before our eyes how the earth becom- meth barreine and parcheth for want of moy- sture, and finally hath neither strength nor sub- stance. Had it so pleased God, coule nor hee haue giuen propertie to the earth, to haue of it selfe substance enough? For as wee reade in Genesis, there was not such raine in the be- ginning as wee haue in these dayes: but G O D caused a certaine vapor to rise vp to moysten the earth: and cannot hee doe the same now, or else that the earth shoulde haue some certaine moysture proceeding from vnderneath? Gen. 2. 6

And in deede, wherence cometh the rayne? If yee aske the Philosophers, they will say that the rayne cometh of the vapors that ascend out of y<sup>e</sup> earth, which being drawn vp into the ayre, bee sent downe againe vpon the earth. Thus then, after y<sup>e</sup> opinion of the Philosophers, the vapors doe ascend: But now wherfore cometh it, that G O D cannot make the heauens to yeelde rayne except it come first out of the earth: or the earth to keepe still that moysture which it hath, so that it may alwayes haue strength and substance of it selfe? What is the cause of this rising vp of the vapors, that when the earth hath yeelded them forth, they be held vp in the ayre as in Bottles: as is mentioned in the Psalme? What is the cause of all this? It is for that he seeth vs to be so blockish and grosse, that although hee shewe as with his finger, that it is at his hand that wee receive all goodnesse; yet is it his meaning to make vs to perceiue it in a more visiole maner. And that is the cause also why hee saith, That he will heare the heauens, and the heauens shall heare the earth, and the earth shall heare the corne, and all the seedes y<sup>e</sup> be committed vnto it. When the husbandman soweth his graine well, he layeth it vp as it were in prison: & it seemeth to be as at the mercie of the earth. The earth then must cocieue y<sup>e</sup> corne, nourish it, & make it to spring, & in likewise giue it substance. But doth y<sup>e</sup> earth heare the Corne? It is deafe: that is to say, it hath no power to make it to prosper, except it be heard of others. And how is that? The earth as I haue sayd, loo- keth vp to heauen, and after a sort openeth her mouth, it cleaueth when it feeleth extreme heate, and is not watered as it would. The heauen then must bee faine to aunswere to the

to the earth. The heauen? What can that doe? Can the heauen giue water? It hath none except G O D drawe it vnto it by his secreete power. In very deede wee shall see hereafter how God threatneth to giue a brafen heauen: It is needefull then that God do heare the heauen, and that we repaire thither. So then, as often as it reineth, wee must vnderstand that God openeth his Treasures, which are else shut vp. God (as I haue sayd) could euen without rayne or deawe) cause the earth to bring forth fruite: but hee vseth such meane, as be knoweth to be conuenient for our dulnesse: and hee doth so, to the intent that we should haue the lesse excuse: that if wee be vnthankfull vnto him, and close our eyes against so apparant a matter: wee should be so much the more blameworthy at the last day, and bee sure to yelde account for our wilfulnesse in refusing to knowe the thing which ought to bee thoroughly knowne vnto vs. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in minde.

A. S. 14. 16.

Whereupon Saint Paul speaking of the ignorance which was in the olde world, before the Gospel was preached: sayth that all people went astray lyke brute beastes: And what was the reason? Because the doctrine was not yet taught, which is the true light to shewe vs the way of sauing health: as we shall see in the thirtieth Chapter. Notwithstanding he addeth, that witnesse. And his vsing of this manner of speech Hee leste not himselfe without witness, is as much as if hee sayd: Wherefore? For hee hath sent rayne vpon the earth in due time and season: hee hath sent faire weather also. These be Gods witnesse, which declare, that as hee hath created the world, euen so hee doth vpholde and preferue it: these bee the witnesses that speake with a lowde and cleare voyce, saying that wee must looke vnto G O D for all the nourishment that hee giueth vs. And that is the cause, why I sayd, that we should marke well this saying: that God wil open his Treasures. For although wee see what great riches God hath set in this world, what sundry sortes of beastes, what herbes, what trees, and what a number of all other things: yet should all these things go to decay, vnlesse God sent vs dayly from heauen the things that are requisite for the preferuation of this lyfe. Could wee abide three dayes without the light of the Sauour? If God gaue not the naturall vertue to euery seede, what were it? Wee should quickly perishe. And if there were none other matter, but that whereof I spake euen now concerning the earth, it woulde soone dry vp, vnlesse God remedied it. These therefore be the good Treasures, which God bestoweth on vs. And when it is his will to shewe himselfe a father towardes vs: he layeth the heauens before vs, that wee might see it there. And it is as much as if God should lift vs vp by the chin, and say; Poore creatures, when ye seeke to bee fedde; you looke whether you haue laide corne enough into the ground or no. Indeed that is a thing which you must looke vnto: but yet you must first of all goe higher, and lift vp your eyes to mee, and euen nature it selfe doeth compell you so to doe. For ye knowe that without rayne the earth cannot prosper. And therefore forget not the things which I shewe you day by day, and whereof you bee consuited by experience. This is the good Treasure whereof Moses speakeeth: & he expressly addeth, The heauen. For what cause? For if hee had sayde, G O D will vtter his bountifullnesse, both from aboue and from beneath; truly it ought well to haue contented vs: but yet by cause of our infirmite, wee see howe God is fayne to expresse the matter more plainly: as hee also sheweth that wee must come vnto him, and looke vp to the heauens by cause hee calleth vs thither, and hath fer such order that he will haue vs to thinke our selues to be as barraine and hungerstaruen folke, vnill hee hath powred his goodnesse vpon vs from aboue.

Nowe hauing spoken of this good Treasure, hee sayeth: Hee will giue rayne in due time, and will blesse the worke [or labor] of thy handes. By speaking of due season, hee sheweth vnto vs that this Gods giuing of rayne vnto vs in due time, proceedeth of a speciall care. For sometimes rayne is verie hurtfull, as wee see before our eyes. Whereupon wee must conclide, that if G O D hau not the power and skill to stay the rayne, the frutes of the earth and also the bodies of men should rotte. What doeth the raine of it selfe? It engendereth but rottennesse. On the other side wee see that the raine refresheth in season, & giueth strength vnto the ground; whereby wee see that it is the Treasure of God for to giue vs sustenance. And why is that? By cause God knoweth it is good for vs, that hee cause it to raine. Let vs therefore when wee see it rayne out of season, let vs marke how G O D sheweth vs that it is verie requisite for vs that hee doe watch ouer vs, and that no drop of rayne fall without his commaundement; according to this which we haue heard before, namely: That hee holdeth the waters aboue, as it were in bottles. The cloudes be dreadfull bottles. But the Prophet woulde haue vs to consider, that it must needs be a wonderful power whereby the rayne is shut vp there, or else wee should be drowned out of hand: at leastwise it would serue but to rotte vs, as I haue sayde already.

And here by the way wee be admonished, as shall be sayde hereafter, to consider our finnes and trespasses: and to thinke that when God giueth vs extraordinary raines, they be as punishmentes for our offences. Morcouer when the raine cometh in season, let vs acknowledge that there falleth not one drop but by Gods appointment, assuring our selues that it is necessarie for vs. That is the cause why Moses did expressly adde that saying.

Afterward hee saith that God will blesse the labor of our handes: to doe vs to vnderstande (as hee hath shewed in another Text) that it is not our owne labour and trauell that feedeth vs, as wee haue seene in the eyght Chapter, where hee saith thus: When thou art come into the land which G O D giueth thee, remember that by the space of fortie yeeres thou wast fed with Manna that fell from heauen, to the end thou shouldst not say: It is mine owne labor that findeth me. Let vs therefore learne by these texts that when wee haue traueiled, and bestowed our labour to till the earth, and consideration is had of all that wee see requisite yet neuertheless wee must liſt vpe our eyes, and not stand in our owne conceit to say, I haue doone this, it is mine owne labor and policie: but acknowledge that it is Gods office to giue increase, and that without that, all our labor is in vaine: as we might wel enough breake our armes and our legges, and yet in ſteade of going forward wee should still goe backwarde. The ſumme of the matter which God meant to ſhew vs, is that we should labor in all lowelneſſe, and that when euery of vs hath traueiled for his living, wee should vnderſtand, that it is not in vs to giue the ſucceſſe, but that GOD muſt wholly guide it, and giue it good iſſue: not onely to ſome barage of the earth, but to all things els in generall. So then, when a man applyeth him to any kinde of labor, let him not go about it preſumptuouſly; but let him call vpon GOD to helpe him, ſaying, Lorde it is thy pleaſure that I ſhoulde take paine; well, I goe about it; but I knowe that I ſhall not preuaile, vnleſſe thou guide me, & vnleſſe thou giue me good ſucceſſe: Through thy meete grace and goodnes, let my labor proſper. That is the thing whereof wee bee admoniſhed in this text. Let vs not then thinke, that mans care & ſkill, or his trauell and endeour can make the ground fertile: but that the bleſſing of GOD ruleth all. Yet notwithstanding it putteth vs in mind of our dutie, to wit, that GOD will ſo helpe vs, as wee may not be idle: for wee bee not made as logges of wood: men muſt (I ſay) imploye themſelues when GOD promiſeth them his bleſſing. For theſe two poyntes goe together, namely that the Lorde will bleſſe thee, and yet neuertheleſſe that he will haue thee alſo to labor. It is certaine that GOD canne feede vs, though our armes were broken, he coulde make vs to liue without any care, and without hauing regard to maintaine our houſhold: GOD (I ſay) coulde giue vs fooode of free coſt: but it is his pleaſure to exerciſe vs, with care and traueil, and that euery man according to his vocation, ſhould apply himſelf to that which he ſeeth meete for him. I ſay that Gods matching of his bleſſings with our traueil, is to ſhewe that hee will not haue vs to bee ſluggers, ſo as euery man ſhoulde ſitte on his taile, and neither deale with uiling of the ground nor with any other trade of occupying, & take the bridle in our teeth: but that we ſhould doe this honour vnto GOD, to ſay, Lorde, albeit we haue doone what we can, yet is it nothing, vnleſſe thy gracious goodneſſe rule it. But this is ill put in vre. For we ſee how men are giuen to darken the grace of God vnder colour that they doe ſome thing of themſelues: for ſo they beare themſelues in hande.

And this deuilish arrogancie is not onely in matters concerning the noutriſhment of our bodies, but alſo touching the ſaluatio of our ſoules. Whereupon is it, that freewill is grounded: Euen vpon this, that God requireth men to ſtudie and labour to doe good, to withſtand temptations, to haue ſuch a feruent zeale as to giue theſelues wholly vnto him, & to forſake themſelues. For ſo much as God requireth all theſe things, it ſeemeth that we can doe them. Yea but we conſider not, that God for all his commaunding, ſayth alſo that hee worketh by his holy ſpirit, ſo as he is ſaine to write his lawes in our hearts, & to engraue them in our mindes, and to make vs walke according as he commaundeth. O it is true, but yet therewithall, we alſo muſt doe our endeour. And whence cometh that endeour? Theſe wretches doe not vnderſtand, that it is God that driueth vs forward and ſtirreth vs vp, and that all the endeouering wherewith men indeour, is that they be inſtrumentes of the holy Ghoſt. Now then, for ſo much as vnder this colour of working wee ſecke nothing elſe but to darken the grace of God, ſo much the more diligently ought we to note this doctrine, whereby GOD doth ſtirre vs vp, and would haue vs to worke, and yet ſheweth vs therewithall that we cannot proſit, vnleſſe he giue vs good ſucceſſe. Truly there is great difference betwixt ſome handy worke, and that which the faithful do in indeouering to liue well. For (as I haue ſayd) men are created to labour by nature: but wee be ſo wicked & froward, that in ſtead of obeying god, we be borne to nothing but to offend God, vntill he hath reformed vs, and made vs new creatures. So then God doth not onely bleſſe our labor, when we endeour to ſerue him, through the grace of his holy ſpirit: but we labor alſo through his only vertue, according as he doth guide and gouerne vs. This is the ſumme of that which we haue to beare in minde concerning this text.

Now it is alſo ſayd, That God will make thee the head and not the taile, namely them that indeuour to ſerue him: hee will ſet them aboue, and not beneath. This is as it were the toppe of all proſperite. Now ſurely it was more behououfull (as it was treated of yesterday) that the olde fathers vnder the lawe, ſhould haue moe promiſes concerning the tranſitory liſe, than we haue. For they had not ſuch opening of the heavenly liſe as is giuen vs in the Goſpel. Therefore it is Gods will to drawe them after that faſhion lyke little children. For in ſo much as an infant is not of capacitie to vnderſtand the goodneſſe of his father: therefore to encourage him, he will ſay vnto him; I will giue thee a trim cappe, and I will buy thee a gay newe cote: this is agreeable to the capacitie of the childe, and becauſe his heart is tender, ſuch talke is vſed vnto him: howbeit the father meaneth to lead him on farther. Euen ſo did God deale with the olde fathers; He did ſet forth his benefites which they ſhould enioy in this worlde: meaning to drawe them from thence to a higher hope, namely, to the hope of the heavenly heritage. And ſo the Tewes were made as a head when the kingdom flouriſhed amongſt them, when they ouercame their

their enemies, and when God shewed himselfe to fight for them. As nowadayes wee must not loke to haue either kingdomes or principalities as they had; neither haue wee in lyke manner the temporall kingdome of Dauid: it is sufficient for vs that Iesus Christ is giuen vs, and that we reigne wth him, and y<sup>e</sup> he being our king, causeth vs to flourish vnder his conduction: I say it ought to suffice vs, that we bee a kingly Priesthood vnder our head; which is the sonne of God Neuerthelesse, our Lorde hath made promise to all the faithfull, that if they walke in his obedience, they shall not be oppressed by the tyrannie of men, but be maintained in libertie, which is also a blessing as much to be desired as any can be in this world. Knowing therefore that this is a speciall gift of God, as it is here shewed, let vs learne to serue him and to giue him the whole authoritie ouer vs: that by his gouerning of vs, we may bee set free from bondage of men. Wee shall see hereafter in this present Chapter, how hee threatneth them that will not feare him nor shrinke at his terriblenesse, accordingly as is sayd in the psalme; God must needs lay the feare of men vpon all them that will not feare him, and be his willing subiectes. Let vs marke therefore, that if in case we yeeld to the reigning of God ouer vs, wee shall be maintained by him, in such sorte, as men shall not bee able to oppress vs. And if at any time the wicked haue their scope, and seeme to set their feete as it were vpon our throates; let vs vnderstand that God doth bring vs lowe, because wee haue offended him, and because wee haue not rendred him the praise that belongeth vnto him; and that hee chastiseth vs according to our desertes. But yet must wee euer come backe to this point, that if we cast not off GOD, wee shall bee receiued of him, in such wise as hee will be vnto vs as an armie, and make vs able to walke with our heades vpright: as it is sayd in the third psalme. So then, this blessing serued not onely for the fathers that liued vnder the lawe, but it continueth also vnto the end of the world, and wee shall vnderstand that it is not vaine, so wee followe in lykewise that which is added here: Keep the commandementes which I sette before thee this day, (sayth Moses) that thou swaue not neither to the right hand nor to the left, to goe to seeke strange Gods and to worship them. Wee see how GOD doth euer put vs in minde of obedience to his worde: and that is to the end wee should serue him, not in hypocrisie, whereunto wee bee too much inclined. Let vs remember therefore this lesson, which is, that to worship our GOD sincerely, we must euermore begin at the hearkening to his voyce, and of giuing care to that which he commaundeth vs; for if euery man goe after his owne way, wee shall wander, wee may well runne, but wee shall bee neuer a whit the neerer to the right way, but rather the further off from it. And God will not onely bee heard, but also obeyed of all men without exception, yea euen without adding any thing to his worde, or without taking any thing from it. And this is exprefly sayd: For that men dare be so bold as to bring in their newe manner of seruing GOD, and to doe that which they suppose to bee good. Contrariwise let vs vnderstand that when GOD hath once shewed what he will haue vs to doe, wee must simply holde vs there, without presuming to adde thereunto or to diminish it by any meanes at all. But about all things hee would haue vs to acknowledge him to bee our GOD. For the very cause that maketh men to stray, and altogether to vanish in so many superstitions and idolatries, is that they knowe not what GOD they ought to worship. Wee haue therefore profited greatly in the Gospell, in the Lawe and in the Prophets, when we haue the skill to say, This is the GOD that shewed himselfe to Abraham, the GOD that shewed himselfe by Moses, the GOD that lastly shewed himselfe fully in the person of his onely sonne, and the same is hee that is our God. As it is also sayde in the Prophet Esay, where hee speaketh of the manifestation of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Loe, this is hee; Loe, this is our GOD. Then let vs haue a settled faith, that wee be not rouers; let vs not bee like vnto little children, nor lyke wauering Reedes that are caryed euery way; but let our faith be well stayd, by taking roote in our Lorde Iesus Christ.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, beseeching him so to teach vs with true repentance, that we may bewaile them, and be heartily sorry for our corruption, to the end to withdraw vs more and more, and therein to reforme vs. And forasmuch as we bee not onely fragile but also altogether froward: it may please him to bring vs home againe vnto him, and to vnderprope our weakenesse with his mightynesse, so as we may ouercome all the hinderances that serue to turne vs from him; and that we may with perfect constancie go on to the marke whereunto he calleth vs, vntill we attaine to the perfection of all righteoufnesse. And that in the meane while, it may please him to vpholde vs in such sorte, as that albeit we should faile, yet he cease not to take vs still for his children, and make vs to vnderstand more and more, that he dooth confirme vs in the trust of our saluation. That it may please him, to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The CLVI. Sermon which is the fourth vpon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

15 But if thou wilt not obey the voyce of the Lorde thy God, in keeping and doing all his commaundementes and ordinances, which I commaund thee this day, then shall all these curses come vpon thee and take holde of thee.

16 Thou shalt bee cursed in the cite and likewise cursed in the feelde.

17 Thy basket shalbee cursed and thy store.

18 Cursed shalbee the fruite of thy wombe, and the fruite of thy lande, the increase of thy kyne, and of the flocks of thy sheepe.

19 Thou shalt bee cursed in thy comming in, and cursed in thy going out.

20 The Lorde will sende vpon thee cursednesse, trouble, and destruction in all that euer thou puttest thine hande vnto, and in all that thou doest, vntill hee hath destroyed thee, and thou quickly perish, because of thy euil inuentions, through the which thou hast forsaken mee.

21 The Lorde will make the pestilence to cleaue vnto thee, till it hath consumed thee from the lande, which thou goest to possesse it.

22 The Lorde will strike thee with swellings and with the feuers, and with whote diseases, and with burning sickeneses, and with drought, and with sworde, and with blasting windes, and with the yellowe Jaundis, and hee will pursue thee vntill hee haue vterly destroyed thee.

23 And the heauen which is ouer thy head, shalbee brasse, and the earth vnderneath thee shalbee yron.

24 In steede of rayning vpon the earth, the Lorde will giue thee dust and ashes: and hee will come downe from heauen vpon thee, vntill thou bee destroyed.

W e haue seen these other dayes past, howe God entreated his people by promises: nowe on the contrarie part hee addeth threatenings. And that is not without cause, for we see what slownesse is in vs, when the case concerneth the submitting of our selues to the obeying of God. Our feete are swifte ynough to runne to euill, as the Prophet Esay sayeth, and as it is spoken in the Prouerbes, but God cannot make vs to set forth one steppe, to behaue our selues as becommeth vs: and therefore we must bee compelled to it, as of force. Neuerthelesse, it is certaine that God beginneth with gentlenes and goodnesse. And that is the cause why hee keepeth this order of setting forth his blessings vnto them that serue him. Hee mought very well haue begunne with threatenings, but hee did it not. And why? Hee tryeth to see whether wee bee apt to be taught, by shewing himselfe fatherly towards vs, and by making it to bee seene, that hee seeketh nothing but our benefite and welfare, prosperitie, and quietnesse.

Thus wee see howe God doeth first make a tryall of vs: and if that preuaile not; then hee vseth threatenings; and it behooueth those two to goe ioynedly together. For to what purpose is it, if wee serue not God with a free will? Albeit that men cannot fynde any fault with vs: yet, if wee goe to it vnwillingly, all our life is detestable. For the cheefe poynt is that wee haue a pure and free good wil, to giue our selues ouer vnto God. For wee must not haue our eye to the reward: and therefore doth it much more followe in reason, that if we goe to it by constraynt, all our life is cursed. Yet notwithstanding, this desire of seruing God because it is not lost labour, is not all that wee haue to do. For when wee bee come to that poynt, wee are but at the halfe way. Although a man receiue the promises which bee here containd, and offer himselfe to God to serue him; yet his dooing is vnperfect, and deserueth to bee cast off. Wherefore? Because (as I haue sayde) wee may not bee hyrelings: but our yeelding of our selues vnto our God, must bee because wee bee his, and because hee is worthie to haue our lyfe employed in his obedience, and specially for that hee is our father. Hee beginneth at the promises because of our infirmitie, to set vs the more forward. And when hee hath brought vs on so farre, then he manifesteth vnto vs a greater perfection.

M m m m the

But to be short, we haue to marke, that there are three sorts of people which keepe the law of God in outward shewe. One sort dooth it by compulsion, with gnashing their teeth at it, and they doe discharge it after a fashion. And wherefore? Because they knowe well that they cannot escape the hande of God, they feare his anger and his vengeance; and therefore doe they serue him; but that is by compulsion. But as I haue sayde, all this is reproduced. Another sort takes the middle way: for they knowe that God is faithfull, and that such as serue him shall not lose their labour: these harken to the promises which bee expressed in holy Scripture. And so a great many doe yelde themselves to serue God, because hee allureth them thereunto by promising themeward, as we haue seene before. But, as I sayde, wee may not stay there; but wee must rather consider, that forasmuch as God hath made and fashioned vs, redeemed vs, and is our father, the same ought to suffice vs although we had no respect vnto that which hee promiseth vs: and forasmuch as hee hath preuented vs with his mercie: and sheweth him selfe so bountifull towards vs: his fo doing ought to inflame vs with an ardent affection to serue him. This is one of the principall poyntes of our life. But (as I sayde afore) our Lorde in his lawe hath respect to our rawnesse: and therefore hee promiseth to rewarde vs, to the intent wee shoulde haue the better courage. And in deede though wee serue God with affection neuer so pure and freely employed, yet must wee alwayes wayt for that which is promised vs, and staye thereupon. Wee must (I say) hope for his blessing, when we haue serued him with a good courage: but wee may not doe it to that end: wee must not bee drawne by this respect onely. For (as I haue sayde) wee must bee his children, and honour him as our father. And as it is hee that dooth vpholde vs: so must wee assure our selues that it is not for vs to imagine any merite in our selues, but that hee accepteth vs of his owne onely infinite goodness; and therefore that wee for our parte, must seeke nothing but to vowe and dedicate our selues wholly vnto him. Howfoeuer the case stand, let vs learne, that when God hath set his promises before vs, hee must also bee fayne to spurre vs forward. Wherefore? Because our nature is full of rebellion against him: wee bee not onely slowe: but also there is in vs an inclination to drawe quite backwarde from that which GOD commaundeth vs. If there were no more but slouthfulness, yet were that such a vice as were worthie to bee corrected, and therefore wee should haue neede of the threatenings that are mentioned here. But seeing wee be so frowarde to bee ruled, that wee bee alwayes kicking, so as God cannot reclaime vs nor inure vs to his yoke: it appeareth that the manaces bee double necessarie. And herein there is very iust cause to condemne vs, seeing that God cannot winne vs to loue, but is fayne to shewe himselfe dreadfull, to make vs afraid, without the which wee would lye still asleepe. Seeing then that God doeth so litle preuayle with vs, when hee traineth vs gently, seeking nothing but to make vs to followe him with a willing heart; let vs acknowledge our frowardnesse and condemne our selues: and therewithal let vs also confesse the fatherly care that God hath of our saluation, seeing he vseth all y meanes which hee knoweth to be meete for vs. For it is all one, as if hee should (as yee would say) transfigure himselfe. His onely respect is to reclaime vs. One whyle hee smyleth on vs; and another whyle hee frowneth at vs. But yet all tendeth to this poynt, namely, that we may bee drawn vnto him, to giue ouer our selues to his seruice.

Now will some man say, Seeing that it is so y same when we serue him by compulsion: if the threatenings leaue vs there, what do they auail? It were better that God should forbear them. But let vs marke that he traineth vs by degrees according as he knoweth it necessary for vs. It is certaine, y if nothing but feare doe bring vs to serue god, it is noughtworth: howbeit it is a good preparatiue, y leadeth vs farther on, after hauing begun at it. As for example: before y God hath meekened vs, we be full of pryde, & our flesh is altogether rebellious: to be short, wee be as coltes that were neuer sadled nor bitted. God must be fayne to prepare vs & to bring vs in order, which thing to do, he vseth threatenings. But this (as I haue said) were nothing at all, vnlesse he inured vs to a voluntarie obedience & subiectio afterward. And when we tend thitherward, we haue greatly profited in y this pryde of ours is beaten down, & we be no more so wyldheaded, but y we know y there is a Iudge before whome we must make account; & that the same consideration restraineth vs from vsing such loosenes any more, & from being so heady in doing euill, as we haue bin. This is a beginning, & in deede it is but a beginning; in so much y if we should stay there, wee were not yet plucked out of the mire. But when we haue thus begun, then doth y lord match his threatenings with a taill of his goodnes in such sort as we be drawn vnto him. And in so doing he sheweth himself to be our father. Now when we vnderstand y God in deede is ready to rewarde vs when wee haue serued him, albeit that wee bee not able to deserue any thing, but rather doe prouoke his wrath: therupon wee must haue our refuge to his mere mercie, to obtayne remission of our finnes, as it is offered vnto vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ; and as hee hath purchased it for vs by his death & passion. When we be thus reformed, and rid of all trust in our owne workes, then ought wee to offer vp our selues willingly in sacrifice vnto GOD, as Saint Paul also doth exhort vs in the twelfth Chapter to the Romanes. Hee setteth vs forth no rewarde, but saith: I beseeche you brethren, by the mercie and compassion that God hath shewed towards you, that euery one of you renounce this worlde, and also himselfe, that you become liuely sacrifices vnto GOD: for that is your reasonable seruice.

But yet some man will reply againe and saye: If threatenings make vs readie for the promises of God, it seemeth that they should be placed in the first ranke, and that the promises should followe them. But the answer to this doubt is: that God will holde vs more conuicted before him, when hee beginneth with vs by his promises. For we cannot say but that there is a shamefull shanklesnes in vs, seeing that whereas our Lorde seeketh onely to winne vs by loue, wee notwithstanding deale forwardly with him, and draw backwarde, when hee commeth so louingly towards vs. Yee see then howe the promises are set before vs in the first place, that wee might be the better reproofed of our forwardnesse. But hath God shewed vs that his goodnesse would not auayle vs, except he threatened vs? then doeth he vse rigour, and y<sup>e</sup> same rigour doeth profite vs, forso much as wee be touched therewith, and our hearts are daunted. I meane not all; for there be many that take the brydle in their teeth to stryue against God: but I meane the faithfull. Those are they that be prepared for y<sup>e</sup> promises of God, through threatenings. Afterwarde God turneth yet agayne, and allureth them newe agayne with his goodnesse, as is sayde afore: in so much that when he hath stoung them with his threatenings, to tame the stubbornnesse of their flesh; (as surely it is requisite that God shoulde shewe some signe of his wrath:) thereupon hee setteth before vs his mercie, which is the accomplishment of all, to the ende (as I haue sayde) that wee shoulde learne to yeeld our selues wholly vnto him with a free disposed affection.

Nowe let vs come to the wordes that bee set downe heere. If thou wilt not obey the voyce of the Lord thy God, hee will keep his commandments & statutes which I set before thee this day: all these curses shall come vpon thee, and take holde of thee. Heere Moses speaketh expressly to such as haue been rayes in the worde of God. True it is that they which offend without the lawe, shall perish neuerthelesse, as Saint Paul sayeth in the second Chapter to the Romanes. And in verie deede wee see that the ignorant and blynde scape not vnpunished at Gods hande. Albeit that they might pleade that they were not taught: yet are they faultie vnto him. But let vs note, that heere our Lorde doeth double his curse vpon those vnto whome hee hath shewed such fauour, as to manifest his wil vnto them, and to shew them the waye of sauing health, had they obeyed him; and yeelded themselues vnto his doctine. This then is not generall to all men. But God doeth first of all thewe, that when hee hath giuen his lawe, and published it abroade. The fault is in the people that they vnderstande it not. This is the cause why Moses doeth expressly say: the commandementes and statutes, which I set before you this day. When hee sayeth, Commandementes and statutes, it serueth to shewe that they conteyne a sufficient instruction, accordingly as wee haue tolde you heere before; that God hath not spoken by halues: but that hee hath so taught his people, as they cannot reply and say, Wee wote not what these things meane. Loe heere the Statutes & commandements which I set before you, sayeth Moses. If you applye your indouert to them, you cannot doe amisse. And therefore let vs beare well in mynde, that according as God hath deliuered vs his worde, our vngodlinesse is doubled before him, and our punishment must be so much the more grieuous, if wee be not willing to doe good, yea, and also profite therein, and from day to day be established in his obedience. That is the thing which wee haue to consider vpon that saying.

Moreouer when hee sayeth: If thou wilt obey the voyce of the Lord thy God: it serueth to touch vs thoroughly to the quicke. For seeing that God vouchsafeth to speake vnto vs: is it not meete that wee shoulde at the least giue eare vnto him? And if wee play the deafe folkes, is it not a matter contrary to nature? For if wee would not heare our equall, hee would take it in disdainne, and much more woulde our superiour. And whereas God hath all foueraigne dominion ouer vs, and hath done vs the fauour to deliuer vs his worde, and acquainteth himselfe familiarly with vs, if hee synde vs stubborne against him, disdainning to heare him; is it not meete that hee shoulde auenge him of such a contempt? Specially when hee seeth such a villaynous statelynesse in vs, which bee but wormes of the earth. The thing then which wee haue to remember vpon this text, is that heere Moses intended to condemne the vngodlinesse of men that doe still continue hardhearted, notwithstanding that God giue them the meane to returne, by setting his worde before them.

Nowe, when hee sayeth that these curses shall take holde of vs; it behooueth vs to remember that which was spoken of here before. For in speaking of the blessings of GOD, hee sayde; Thou shalt be compassed round about; and nowe hee doeth in like wise ioyn the curses in the same manner, so that wee may not thinke to escape the hande of God. Howe slye so euer wee be, wee shall be alwayes entraped, it wil not boote vs to seeke start holes, according to this saying of his by his Prophet, If thou goe into thy house, and shut thy doore and double barre it, yet shall the serpent come in and sting thee there. If thou goe into the field, & seek means to escape, thou shalt meet wth a Lyon vpon y<sup>e</sup> way: if thou slip aside from y<sup>e</sup> Lyon, a Beare shall meete thee, and to bee short, what-focuer men doe, when God is against them, & is become, as it were, their enimie, they must needes fynde that they be surprised, caught, and entrapped, and enuironed rounde about with these curses, without any hope to get out.

 Therefore, let vs not deceiue our selues in seeking worldly meanes to saue vs: for if the hand of God bee lifted vp against vs, (as wee shall see in the song heere at hande) Hee hath his storehouse full of roddes, and not of three or foure sortes onely, but of infinite: and if wee suppose that wee are escaped, when wee haue ouertome some one cull, then wee deceiue our selues: for God hath by and by an hundred moe. Let vs then looke for all manner of woe, if wee obey not Gods lawe. But it were a miserable appeale if wee shoulde come vnto God by compulsion, onely for feare of his punishments. What must wee then doe? Wee must submit our selues willingly vnto him, praying him to keepe vs from procuring his wrath, and from warring against him, and from inforcing him to come to defie vs. That were as if some petie lorde woulde attempt warre against a great Prince; hauing neither strongtowne, nor munition, nor ought elsand yet woulde needes presume to defye one that is able to swallowe him vp, if hee did but lift vp his finger against him; and were not that a madnesse? Likewise, when wee prouoke our God, by setting our selues against him witting-ly, hee must needes besette vs, and holde vs as in prison. Wherefore, let vs pray him not to suffer vs to bee so farre ouerseene, as to fall to defying of him: but that wee simply obey him, so as wee may bee crowned and encompassed with his blessings; according as it is sayde in the two and thirtieth Psalme. Hee that put-teth his trust in God, shall bee crowned with his benefites: that is to say, God will make him to possesse his blessings rounde about him, and hee shall bee so thoroughly fenced on all sides with his saugarde, that hee shall not neede to feare.
 Albeit that wee bee layde open to neuer so many dangers, yet shall wee be preferred through his goodnes. Now as touching that which he addeth, we haue expounded here before.

Concerning the curses, he sayth: Thou shalt bee cursed in the soone, thou shalt bee cursed in the feilde, thy coming in shall bee cursed, thy going forth shall bee cursed, the fruite of thy wombe shall bee cursed, and the fruite of thy casle and of all thy flockes. Hereby are wee againe done to vnderstande, that all the euill which wee see in this worlde, proceedeth from the hande of God. By the worde euils I vnderstande all the punishments, and all the wretchednesse wherunto wee be subiect, according also as he speaketh thereof by his Prophet Esay, saying: I am the Lorde which made both light and darkenesse, which haue in my power both life and death, and which doeth both the good and the euill. Hee vseth this kinde of speeche purposely: not that the euill, wherof wee be faulrie, doeth proceede from God, nor that it ought to be imputed vnto him: it is not so. But hee meaneth that all the miseries and calamities which wee suffer in this worlde, be as it were so many chastisements: wee may not attribute them to haphazarde, as shall bee more plainly touched hereafter; where God sayeth, Leu. 26. 33 if you will needes come against mee at all aduenture, I will in like wise come against you at all aduenture. Hee vseth the same verie wordes.

 And wherefore? Because that men doe beare their owne eyes, and saye; Loe, what misfortune is befallen mee? When they be any wayes afflicted, they cast out spyteful speeches against God and ouershoote themselves, not considering that God is a Iudge, and gouerneth the worlde by his prouidence; they are not able to perceiue that, so dull and senselesse bee they.
 And that is the cause why Moses vseth this kind of declaration, and so large in this text. And it serueth to bring vs to that which I alleged euen nowe out of the Prophet Esay; where GOD sheweth that hee made both light and darkenenesse, and did both the good and the euill. Wee may not heere conceiue vayne thoughtes, saying, Whence cometh this vnto mee? It is a misfortune. Woulde God it were not so. But wee must acknowledge the hand that smyteth vs; for that is great wisdome. And for the same cause doeth God complayne thus by his other Prophete: This people haue not regarded the hande that smote them. Yee see then howe wee must vnderstande that all the afflictions and miseries which wee endure in this worlde, bee verie strokes of Gods owne hande.
 And euen in that respect is it sayde by the Prophet Amos: Is there any euill in the city which God hath not done? That is to saye, can there happen either warre, or pestilence, or famine, or diseases, or pouertie, or any other calamitie whatsoeuer it bee, that cometh not to you from God? Wretched people, bee you so foolish and beastly, as to imagine, that God which created the worlde, doeth leaue it at randon, and hath no care to watche ouer his creatures, or to bestowe on them, that which hee think-keth meete for them, sometimes to shewe his goodnesse, and sometimes to make them feele that hee is a Iudge, and to punish mens finnes, and to make them to knowe what his office is?
 Thinke you that hee dwelleth ydle in heauen, and that he vttereth not his vertue, or that the worlde is not guyded and gouerned by his pro-uidence? So then, like as heretofore God hath shewed that wee cannot prosper, but through his grace and loue that hee beareth vs, in that hee hath chofen vs for his children, and will also accept our seruice; so nowe hee sheweth in like wise, that if there bee any affliction, pouertie, or other miserie, they come not by happehaz-zarde: but are very punishments of Gods sending: and therefore when things fall not out after our liking, wee must fall to considering & examining of our finnes. If wee bee grieved with any manner of thing, so as one is troubled with his householde, another with the losse of his goods, another with some disease, another with some vexation of mynde, and another with the forgoing of some thing that hee loued:

let vs acknowledge, saying; Loe, it is our God that hath lifted vp his hand, & holdeth it vp still. And wherefore? Because that wee haue offended him. The first point then is, that men may not flatter them selues when God visiteth them: but they must know, that by this means they are made to vnderstande their offences, to the end to humble themselves, and to bewaile them. Thus much for one point.

The seconde poynt is, that wee must not thinke to escape the scourges of God, bee wee neuer so subtil; but that wee shall euer bee caught by the backe, if God bee against vs. And well may wee make vs sheeldes, and rampyres: but when wee haue practised what wee can: yet will not our Lorde misse to finde vs, he needs but to blowe vpon all our defences whereby wee thinke to garde our selues against him. It is not like as if wee should haue to doe with creatures. Against them wee might fortifie our selues both behynde and before; but God will knocke vs on the pates from heauen. Wee can haue neither shielde nor rampaie against him, in hope thereby to stoppe his hande from touching vs, when it pleaseth him to punish vs.

Againe, to what ende shall all the fortifications serue that wee are able to buyde against him, but to ouerthrowe our selues? Let vs therefore vnderstande, that all that euer men can do against God, shall turne to their owne confusion, and vtter ouerthrowe. That is the thing which Moses meant, when hee sayde, That wee shalbee cursed in the towne and in the feelde, that wee shalbee cursed in our going forth, and in our coming in, if wee obey not the voyce of our God. And as hee sayde afore, that God will open his good treasure from heauen, to giue vs rayne in due time; so now he sayth, That God will make our heauen as Braſe, and our earth as Iron, and that in steede of rayne hee will sende vs drought, he will sende vs dust and asbes, and there shalbee nothing but barrenesse amongst vs. Here wee must call againe to mynde the lesson that hath bene layde out breefely before: that is, that according as euer one of vs is visited by the hande of God, wee shoulde benefite our selues thereby and euer man applye that to his owne vse which is heere mentioned. For God vseth many wayes to chastise vs. One is punished in his owne person with diseases, reproche, and I wote not what else: another hath some secreete heartbyring, so that although hee bee whole in bodye, yet hee ceaseth not to bee tormented in minde: another is plagued with his wife or with his children: and another is troubled with his substance. According therfore as euer one synned him selfe afflicted, so let him resort to this that is tolde vs heere, saying: Alas, I see how my God calleth mee vnto him, I may not now prouoke him: for what shall I winne by vsing many wyndlasses as the worldlings doe, who desire to fall a sleepe in their miseries: and the onely comfort which they seeke, is to haue no regard to God. Nowe if wee doe so; then must that which is spoken in the two & thirtieth

Psalme bee practised vpon vs, to wit, that God will deale with surdye and hardhearted folkes as with restiue horses, and made moyses. As hereafter wee shall see more at length. So then yett must wee come to the sayde poynt of feeling of Gods hande, according as euer one is afflicted, first in his owne behalfe, and then in common. When wee see a drought, let vs not accuse the heauen nor yett the ayre, saying it was the disposition of them. Let vs not doe, as the fantasticall folke doe, which looke no higher than the starres; but let vs thinke it vpon the hande of God: that as many afflictions as fall vpon vs, may bee vnto vs as visible signes and markes that God executeth the office of a Iudge towards vs; and that although hee condemneth vs, as often as hee punisheth vs, yett the same is not a condemnation to the death: but a summoning of vs to appeare before him, there to frame newe proceſſe against vs. This is a poynt which wee ought to marke well. Therefore when wee feele any euill or greefe; let vs vnderstande that we haue offended God: but let vs thinke therewithall, that God neuertheless meaneth not to execute a finall sentence vpon vs, when hee calleth vs againe vnto him. To what ende then is it? Is it to condemne vs without mercie? No: but hee doeth vs this fauour, that wee might bee our owne Iudges. When hee doeth summon vs, it is to the ende that euer one shoulde plead guiltie of his owne good will, and thereupon aske him forgiveness, and flee for refuge to his mercie. Loe heere an inestimable priuilege. And so let vs benefite our selues both priuately and publickly by the things that are tolde vs heere: That when wee see the heauens burning hote, and wee aske rayne, and yett goe without it, so as the fruites doe sayle vpon the grounde, and the heate dryeth vp all things: let vs vnderstande that it is the hande of GOD which visiteth vs, and let vs confesse our sinnes with one common accorde. And if any man feele anye household vexation, let him confesse; Well, GOD doeth waken mee by this visitation, because I haue offended him. Thus the cheefe studie, wherein God woulde haue the faithfull to exercise themselves, is the examining of their sinnes, after this manner: whereby it will come to passe, that (as Salomon sayeth) Blessed is the man which doeth trouble and quicken vp himselfe, not that wee must so trouble our selues, as to fall into vnumesurable despair: but wee must quicken vp our selues with feare, because the diuell seeketh nothing else, but to make vs dull and blockish, to the ende wee shoulde offend God, and blear out our tongues against him like as wee see these despisers doe, which set themselves against him, dashing at him with their hornes, and vomiting out their blasphemies. To the intent therefore that wee come not to that passe, wee must quicken vp our selues with feare and trembling: which cannot bee done, vnlesse wee profite vnder the correction of our God, and consider, that when hee visiteth vs, it is to call vs vnto him.

It is to the ende that wee should make our owne inditement, and not tarry the last laying of his hande vpon vs, but prevent him, that (as sayeth Saint Paul) they which condemne themselves, may not bee condemned of him.

Nowe finally it is here declared vnto vs, that the course of nature, as we call it, is nothing but the disposition of the will of God, and that hee beareth such rule ouer both heauen and earth, and ouer raine and faire weather: that hee changeth them at his owne pleasure, and yet sendeth them not without cause. If there were a permanent order in nature, it would seeme vnto vs that God medled not with it; wee would graunt that hee hath made the worlde, but yet would wee say that hee doeth not gouerne vs: wee would thinke thus: What? when the spring time commeth, wee see that the rest of the yere goeth on in one egall course, as did the yere last before past. It is alway one. But we see one winter longer, and another winter later, and another rather, and last longer: wee see one winter raynye, and another drye: we see abundance of snowe in one yere, and another yere none at all: one yere whote, and another cold. Nowe, doeth not such inequalitye make it manifest that God must needs worke? For the Sunne doeth his office in one yere aswell as in another, and euer keepeth his iust compassse, better than the best ruled clocke in the worlde. And how then commeth such a varietie? It is Gods dooing to call vs vnto him. Truly the Philosophers doe seeke out the causes (as they terme them) there is such a meeting of starres (say they,) and this proceedeth of such coniunctions. But whence commeth all this? Euen from the hand of God. Wee must euer resort to the first cause. And in deede, they bee more than beastes, if they will not yeelde to that. Yet is it not sufficient to knowe that God guydeth all his creatures, and that hee holdeth them brydeled to make them to howe, as a horse man maketh his horse to turne on this hande and on that hand, to stoppe, & to runne. All resteth not in knowing that God looseth & holdeth, and sendeth such changes as him listeth: but we must vnderstande further that God doth nothing without cause. For if wee say that God governeth the worlde, and know not wherefore hee doeth plague vs, wee shalbee quickly enclyned to murmure against him: and in the meane whyle wee shall not profite vnder his chasticementes and corrections, but continue still dulle in our finnes. So then let vs marke, that in shutting vp the heauen so as it yeeldeth no rayne, and in drying vp the earth, as it were Iron: thereby hee doeth shewe vs our finnes, & that hee is our Iudge. This is it that wee haue to beare in mynde as concerning the course of nature, according as it is heere declared vnto vs.

Neither is God contented to saye that the heauen shalbee as brass, but hee sayeth also, That hee will sende vs ashes and grauell or sande in Steele of raine. Like as wee see the Caterpillers that eate, marre, and destroy all that is on the earth: there needeth but one blasting or mildewe to eate the corne and to consume it within. And it is more than if God should sowe salt. And these blastings or mildewes come not but of the dewe or else of the rayne, at leastwise they bee none other substance. But God needeth not but to make a little change, and to sende a little sharpe colde, and the same colde will make cleane riddance of all. When wee see such things, let vs euermore take warning by this doctrine, and let vs bee no more intangled in our follies, to saye: Ah euill fortune, euill fortune: but let vs vnderstande that our Lorde doeth call vs backe vnto him, and hath his hande stretched out: and let vs knowe that it is hee that smyeth; as if hee should saye: I haue gone about to drawe you vnto me by faire meanes, but you haue not humbled you before mee. Seeing then that you will not be brought to it willingly, I will now compely you, as though I drewe you by the hayre of the head. Let vs (I say) bee admonished by this teaching, that is here mentioned, to prevent the wrath and vengeance of God, so often as hee giueth vs aduertisement of the same.

Againe, when God maketh the earth fruitful, let vs acknowledge it to bee his worke, and that there springeth not a blade of grass, but hee hath put thereunto his hande. Let vs then take our dayly foode of him: that is to saye, let vs not cramme our selues like brute beastes, which fill their bellies, not knowing whether there bee a Creator that causeth the earth to bring them forth foode: but let vs vnderstande that God blesseth the earth, and causeth it to yeelde fruite for our nourishment and sustenance; let vs beare it so in mynde, that aswell in affliction as in prosperitie wee may turne our eyes euermore vnto God. And it is expressly sayde further, That God will make the pestilence to cleaue vnto vs, and that hee will sende other diseases, and that they shall continue vpon vs, vntill wee be consumed by them. This should yet a little better waken vs, seeing that God striketh not (as it were) a blowe, and away; but that his curses shal followe vs, and cleaue vnto vs, vnlesse wee forsake our finnes and wickednesse. Finally let vs learne, that they which indent with God, and fletee away againe from day to morrowe, doe deceiue themselves. As for example, wee see many which when God doeth sende them any affliction, will haue some regarde of it: but they haue doone with it by and by. They doe but shake their eares, and thinke they haue ouercome it. And like as a dogge that hath a yerke with a whippe, they turne their backe and runne away, bearing themselves in hande that they may pacifie God by some shift. Thus dealeth the worlde. But let vs beware of such blockishnesse. For wee fee what is sayde expressly in this place. After that God hath spoken of his curses, and added that they shal be hemmed in with the; hee concludeth they shal cleaue vnto vs. And wherefore? If we cleaue to our iniquities, so as they raigne in our bones and in our marrow, and be fixed in our beartes and mindes; then mult the curses of God followe vs also . When a man will not doe away his euill affections , but is delighted in them and continueth saping in them, God for his part must needs shut him vp in it, and when we doe so; he must needs sende vs his curses to sticke fast vnto vs like a leprosie that it may consume vs vtterly; so that it shal be to no purpose to lay playsters thereunto, for the healing of that which is to deeply rooted within and is become in manner vncurable . Therefore lette vs bee afraide at the hearing of these things . And so we see nowe to what purpose Moses addeth that the curses of God shal cleaue vnto vs: namely to warne vs, that if the mischiefe haue taken roote, we must straine ourselues the more in praying to God , to shewe to vs the fauour that his holy Spirit may cleaue vs , as to whom it belongeth to search the bottome of our secreete affections; that it may please him to reprove vs, in such wise, as this feare may serue vs for a maruellous purgation, to expulse our sinnes from vs, and that we may no more be so wedded vnto them as we haue beene .

And therewithall let vs knowe, that when diseases beginne to reigne, or any other afflictions, it is not for vs to hope for any ende thereof, vnlesse we cease to offend our God . It is sayde in a common prouerbe, that diseases come on horsebacke, that is to say very quickly, and that they returne againe on foote; that is to say verie slowly . But we consider not the cause though it be neuer so apparant . And that is ( as I haue sayde afore ) because we looke not to the hande that smyteth vs; neither can God winne vs vnto him with the first stroke, when he punisheth vs. Surely wee will make him fayre protestations. When a man is sicke, hee will protest that his whole desire is to serue God, and that if he may recouer his health, the worlde shall see him a newe man . But all is quickly forgotten. Therefore it is no wonder though in steede of mitigating our punishmentes, God doe diuers times increase them, and suffer vs to languishe in our aduersities . It is because he seeth that our diseases be deepe rooted; that he must come again oftener than once or twise to purge vs of them. And therefore let vs learne to pray vnto him, to vouchsafe to cure our faultes in such wise, as they may not proceede to the extremitie here expressed: but that so soone as wee feele a litle stroke of the rod of his hande, the same may be sufficient to bring vs againe vnto him: yea euen with such repentance, as may shewe that we deale not faindly; but that it be done in simple trueth, and we also continue therein to the ende.

Now let vs fall down in the sight of our good God, accusing our whole life of the malice and rebellion that is therein: beseeching him to vouchsafe to chastise vs in suchwise with gentlenesse, and to spare vs in such sorte, as wee be not cast downe into dispaire; but that we may rather be brought home againe vnto him . And therewithall, forasmuch as wee cease not to offend him; and it is also necessarie that he should daily call vpon vs, and waken vs, that we may fare the better by his corrections; let vs continue; to lament and mourne, vntill the time that he haue ridde vs from all the corruptions of our flesh, & haue brought vs to the perfect righteousness, wherein lyeth our true rest: to wit, the heavenly blessednesse which we hope and looke for . And forasmuch as we can not obtaine any such matter, but by the meanes of our Lord Iesus Christ: it may please him to reconcile vs to God his father, by his death and passion, and in the meane space so to mortifie our old Adam, that his owne Image may be restored in vs, and his glory shine forth in vs same. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely vnto vs, but also to all people and Nations vpon earth, &c.

On Wednesday the xviij. of March, 1556.

The (Lviij. Sermon which is the fifth vpon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

25 And the Lorde will cause thee to bee beaten downe before thine enemies: Thou shalt goe fourth one way against them, and flee before them seuen wayes, and thou shalt be carried away into al the kingdomes of the earth.

26 And thy carkeffe shalbe meate vnto all the foules of the ayre, and to the bestes of the earth, and no man shall skarre them away.

27 And: the Lorde shall smite thee with the Botch of Egypt, with the Emerodes, and with scabbes, and with itch, whereof thou cannest not be healed.

28 The Lorde also will strike thee with madnesse, and with blindenesse, and with astonishment of heart.

29 And thou shalt goe groping at nooneday, as a blinde body gropeth in the darke, & he will not make thy life prosperous: and thou shalt but suffer wrong and pollinges all day long, and no man shall deliuer thee.

If we were threatened by a mortal man, as God threateth vs in his lawe: surely we would be moued, albeit that hee had no great power ouer vs: wherein our vngodlinesse is to be seene, infomuch that although we endeavour to cloke it, yet it bewrayeth it selfe, in that we attribute more power to mortall creatures, than we doe to the liuing God. But heereby God intended to try the honour and obedience that we beare him: to wit, namely in this, y hee assureth vs of his loue, we should rest all wholly thereupon, and hold ourselues contented therewith. And in likewise on the contrary side, that when he giueth vs any certaine token of his anger, we should quake thereat. Let vs take good heede therefore of the thing that is heere mentioned: namely that we be not so blockish as to make a skorne of gods wrath. But let vs returne to that which hath bene sayde already, to wit, that his hande must needes be againt vs, if we liue not according to his lawe. It is certaine that men will naturally giue libertie to their lustes, to doe whatsoeuer God hath forbidden the, and that they will not sticke to make warre againt him. In deede they will not say so, yet doeth the thing shewe it selfe to be so. For when wee on our part haue defied him and assaulted him; is it not reason that he should arme himselfe againt vs? True it is, that so long as we liue in this present worlde, the infirmitie of our flesh is such, as we are not able in all respectes to satisfie the lawe of God. Neuerthelesse when men passe their bounds so farre that good and euill is to them all one; and that they striue not at all againt their lustes: they shew themselues open enemies vnto God. And to that end also is it that Moses speaketh. Albeit that wee doe our endeavour to resist the euill, and that the feare of God doth brydle vs, yet cease we not to deserue to be chastized of him: as wee see the faithfull be not exempted from many afflictions: and that God reclaimeth them much rather than he doth the despisers of his maiestie. For as they be his children, so hath hee the greater care ouer them: and therefore doth he chastise them the more earnestly. Howbeit Moses in this place speaketh but of such as harden themselues in stubbornnesse, flinging out of course in such wise, as they make no conscience at all to doe euill. They neuer thinke that there is a Iudge in heauen, vntill he make them to feele his hande. And therefore he saith not; God will chastise you as a father doeth his children: but God will strike you mainly; you shall feele his hande, so roughly and liuely, y you shall not be able to abide it: and that not for one day but continually til ye be consumed and perished. Seeing then that we heare such threatenings; let vs vnderstande that they be prepared for such as are hardened in euill, and be not restrained with any feare, to figh when they feele any euil temptation in themselues: but goe on, taking the bridle in their teeth, and make a mocke of God. And what shall followe of that? Ouer and besides the things which we haue seene heere before; Moses addeth, that God will smite such despisers with diuerse plagues. First that he will sende them enemies; and giue them power, to destroy and to consume them, inso much that they shall persecute them euen in their dead carcasses, so as when they be discomfited, hee will not do them the honour to iustre them to be buryed, but leaue them for meate for the crows, and for the beastes of the earth: and moreover that he hath diuers other meates to plague them in their bodies; by sending them diuerse diseases, as cankers, and other hottes and scabbes, whereby they shall be brought to such an afterdeele, that they shall not haue as it were any more vnderstanding, but be vriterly out of their right wit, so as they shall grope at nooneday, as the blind doe in the darke. And surely the foremost point of Gods vengeance, is when men be so ouerthrown that they haue no more the heart to returne vnto him, ne be able to recouer themselues to acknowledge their faultes, and to perceiue that when the hande of God doeth visite them, there is no helpe, except they make their refuge to his mercie: but abide astonished as men besides theselues. By which meanes God sheweth himselfe to be mortall enemie vnto them.

Now as touching that which Moses speaketh here of enemies: we see againe howe God holdeth the hartes of men in his hande: so that if we be in peace and anon warre is made againt vs, and we wote not wherfore: (as I haue already shewed) it is because God is angry with vs: and that forasmuch as wee haue spited him, hee must also warre againt vs. He hath souldiers ynowe. As soone as he maketh any signe (as saith the Prophete) all the earth is moued; yea euen though a litle while before, no man thought to haue stirred. Let vs therefore vnderstand, that when warres are towarde in the worlde, God sheweth tokens of his wrath. It is certaine, (as we haue already sayde) that albeit we serue God faithfully, and stande in his protection: yet wee shall not cease to haue enemies. For it is his will to exercise vs by that meanes: and it is the state of the Church, as it hath also alwayes bin. But this good commeth thereof, that God will maintaine vs againt our enemies. When they haue deuised wonders againt vs, yet shall they not bring their purpose about. They shall be disappointed. And though they be as fierce as lyons, and full of desperate rage: yet will GOD tame them at the last: and though they continue in purpose to deuour vs, yet they shall not haue the power to doe it: But (as hath bene sayde afore) if they come againt vs one way, they shall flee seuen wayes. But nowe it is sayde contrariwise that although we be of power about our enemies, and doe set vpon them in neuer so good order: so as the victory may seeme to be already gotten on our side, (as we see howe the wicked be inflamed with pride and presumption) yet when wee thinke our selues to haue gotten the goale, God will touch vs with such a feare as wee shall not knowe which way to runne fast ynough, but euery of vs shall be at his wittes ende. Let vs vnderstande hereby, that when God stirreth vp warres

to chastice vs, though wee be neuer so well furnished, and haue all the meanes that may be to resist; yet must we needs perish if God be against vs. For victorie is not obtained by the force and valure of men, but by the power of GOD, who for that cause is called the Lord of hostes. And there is none other helpe for vs, but to bee at peace with God, that he may broode vs vnder his winges: accordingly as he vseth the same similitude, that he wil play the part of a henne towards her chickinges. For then shall we be safe though all the world conspired our destruction. And albeit that our enemies be neuer so mightie and strong, and fully minded in their malice to destroy vs vterly: yet is it sufficient y God doth warrant vs: and y albeit we haue no succour of maie, yet are we sufficiently fortified by his only power. But if we proceede to offend him: and he seeth that when he hath spared vs to recouer vs vnto him; we haue leauer to be aduersaries vnto him and to continue in our rebellion: then after hee hath borne with vs long ynough, he must needs bring vs to this point of being consumed by the hande of our enemies. And although others seeme as wicked as we, & that God doe not prosper them more than vs: let not that deceiue vs. For God will sometime giue victory to the wicked, which be no better than we, but peradventure worse; yet will hee not faile to destroy vs by their handes, and yet they shall haue their turne as well as we. But in the meane while, we must not thinke that this threatning is deliuered in vaine. Therefore let vs not compare our selues with others, saying, O, are not they offenders as well as we? And hath not GOD good cause to punish them? Yes, hee hath: for but he knoweth the due time and season, and he can vse them as seemeth good to himselfe; but let vs prepare ourselues to abide his blowes, if we stoppe our eares against his threatnings, and sleepe when he would waken vs. For if we giue no credit to his threatnings, wee must feele by effect, that hee which pronounceth them, hath power to put them in execution, and that he speaketh not, as they say, to feare litle children. It is certaine that GOD will threaten often, before he execute iudgement. But therein let vs consider his long patience in tarrying for vs. And if we abuse the same, it will be nought else but a heaping vpe and a doubling of Gods wrath towards vs: insomuch that it had bene better for vs that hee had rooted vs out the first day, than so long to haue forborne vs. Let scoffers say, that respite is worth golde. But there is no respite so long which we would not redeeme with a hundred deaths, if it were possible, when wee haue bene so stubborn against our GOD, and so disobedient to his worde, that we haue made but a laughing matter of his giuing of some token of his anger. Let vs therefore consider, that whilest that GOD doeth spare vs, hee giueth vs pleasure to returne vnto him: and that if our enemies haue forborne vs, it is of his fauour shewed vnto vs, that we might prevent his wrath. But if wee will not heare him when he speaketh, nor receiue his warnings: it behoueth vs to giue care to these his threatnings heere denounced, and he must be faine to sende vs to another schoole. It is the wonderful goodnesse of our God, that when we haue thus prouoked him, as we see; yet hee forbearth vs, and all to recouer vs vnto him, not by forcing vs with mayne strokes, but by alluring vs after a louing manner, being ready to receiue vs to mercie, as though hee were not a fudge to vexe vs and to condemne vs. But what? When wee haue contemned all this, it must fall out in the ende (as I haue sayde afore) that our Lord must stirre vs vpe other maisters, so as the wicked may rise vp against vs, and seeke to make a slaughter of vs by butcherly murdering of vs, being in verie deepe the executors of Goddes vengeance, whereof wee were warned long aforehande, and made but a laughing game of it, continuing still in our finnes and wickednesse. That is the cause why I sayde, that so long as GOD speaketh vnto vs, and wee condemne ourselues, and acknowledge our finnes, and seeke attonement with our GOD that wee may liue in peace in this worlde: although it be Gods will, that wee shoulde haue enemies and be kept occupied with warres, yet notwithstanding he holdeth vs still in his keeping, and wee be maintained and defended by his power and goodnesse.

Nowe as touching that which Moses addeth, Thas the dead carcafes should be eaten of crows and of wilde bestes, and that there shall be no man to drine them away: it seemeth to be a vaine threatning: for it is no matter whether it bee so or no. If a man be buried when hee is dead, what is he either the better or the worse for it? It seemeth then at the first blush, that this shoulde not be greatly regarded. But GOD ment to shewe that he will make his wrath felt euen in the bodies of them that be dead. And in verie deepe buriall is a priuledge that GOD hath giuen to mankind for a warrant of the resurrection. Lette vs not thinke that the vse of burying the dead is proceeded of a foolish superstition, or that men deuised it. It is true that the heathen haue vsed it, and that was a witnesse against them: And at the last day they shall be conuicted by their vsing of that Ceremonie, which shoulde haue taught them to looke for the last resurrection; and their not considering of it is vnexcusable. For our buriall ought to be vnto vs as a liuely glasse or portraiture, to shewe vnto vs, that wee bee not created to goe after such a sorte in corruption, as though there were not an other life, and that wee shoulde not be restored vnto a newe state. And it serueth alwayes for a larger declaration, that mankind perisheth but for a time, and that their bodies shall be renewed. Nowe forasmuch as buriall is as a memoriall of the Resurrection as I sayde afore; therefore is it giuen to men as a prerogatiue, to be buried: in respect whereof there is vsed an honest comelinetie, as who shoulde say that wee which remaine are taught as it were by eyesight to looke continually for a seconde life. For the dead also doeth beare a certaine marke in his body, that he is as it were layde vpp in safe keeping, vntill the day come that GOD will rayse the dead againe. Nowe on the contrarie side: whereas it is sayde that men shall not be buried, but that they shall be eaten of beastes and fowles: it is as much as if GOD ment to depriue them of the common benefite, that he hadde graunted to all mankind: and as if he had shewed openly that both in life and in death they were accursed of him. And that is the cause why it is layde: Thou shalt be buried with the buriall of an Asse: which thing was spoken by the Prophet to a King, euen the King of Iudah. But yet, because he would not be corrected, and that whereas GOD hadde giuen him the honour to beare in his life time the figure of Iesus Christ: yet notwithstanding forasmuch as he had abused the same and giuen ouer himselfe to all vngodlinesse: thou shalt be buried with the buriall of an asse (sayeth the Prophete.) Wee be heereby warned to haue verie great regarde of all the corrections that GOD sendeth vs: yea euen of the verie least: that wee may be alwayes stirred to feare. For what is the cause, that wee passe ouer so many chastisements of GOD, without profiting by them? Because we shutte our eyes wilfully, and vnlesse we be compelled by viter force and necessitie, we are contented to beare ourselues in hande, that it is not GOD that chastiseth vs: and (as we shall see hereafter) we fall to such blockishnesse, as to attribute all to fortune. Lette vs therefore be admonished to marke all the corrections which GOD sendeth vs, both vppon ourselues, and vppon our neighbours, that we may receiue warning by them. It seemeth to be but a small matter, not to be buried: yea but yet will God haue it noted, and to be vnderstood that it is his hande, and that he sheweth himselfe a Iudge against such as haue offended him. Seeing that GOD will haue his Iudgements known in so small things: lette vs be aduised to haue more witte and discretion. As often as GOD giueth vs (as yee would say) but a silluppe, let vs be moued to thinke on him and not carrie vntill hee drawe his sworde, or bende his bowe to hit vs with a mortall wounde: but let vs by all manner of meanes humble ourselues vnder his hande. Moreover wee haue heere, a Testimonie of the life euermlasting. True it is that this point was not so plainlie declared in the lawe, as it is to vs in the Gospell, neither that we should rise againe to the heavenly glory, nor that we should liue with God after our death. But yet for all that, the olde fathers did not leade the life of beastes, neither did God leaue them in such ignorance, as to haue their faith closed vpp in this present worlde and in this transitorie life. For heere we haue a recorde, that when we haue finished the course of this life, there is yet a greater Iudgement prepared for all men. And if GOD doe fore-beare vs here, and notwithstanding that wee escape all the curses mentioned in the lawe, euen to the ende: yet must we come to a greater reckening. For it were a needelesse matter, for GOD to speake of depriuing menne of their buriall, if (as I sayde euen nowe) he had not a farther meaning in it. Therefore lette vs so vse this doctrine, as we may be prouoked to haue an eye to the life that is yet hydden from vs, and which wee looke for by faith; and let vs not thinke it shall greatly auail vs, when GOD punisheth vs not in this worlde. For it is farre better for vs to linger heere beneath, and to be alwayes in miseries: than to enioye our ease and delights, and that in the meane while GOD should but tartie for vs, to thunder vppon vs when he hath taken vs out of this worlde. Thus yee see whereto this Texte of Moses doeth serue vs, where he sayeth, That the birdes and beastes shall ease our carcestes, and that no man shall drine them away.

Nowe if God giue such tokens of his wrath on the bodies that haue no feeling: what shall become of the fowles, wherein is the verie seat of euill, and the kingdome of Sathan? For our handes, our secte, our eyes, and our eares, offende not of their owne proper mouing; but by the direction and prouocation of our wicked thoughtes and affections. And wherely all those things, or whence procede they but from our soules? Seeing then that the bodies which were but instruments, doe feele the wrath of GOD, and doe aunswere to the same as we see: lette vs not suppose that the soules goe quit. Lette vs therefore looke euermore higher than to this transitorie life for to waken vs, and to make vs to walk in such obedience, that after we haue fought against sinne, and against Sathan, and haue bene exercised in patience, and in diuerse afflictions in this worlde, hauing doone our endeuour to serue GOD with all diligence, our soules may be taken vp to rest, and that our Lorde in likewise may shew the selfe same fauour vppon our dead bodies. Notwithstanding, this fauour and blessednesse of hauing their bodies buried, doth not alwaies happen to the faithfull, whereas it falleth out that many of the wicked are verie honourably buried; howbeit that the same is nothing to them, neither is their state any whit bettered thereby. We see what is sayde in the Psalme concerning them that haue faithfully serued GOD: namely, that their bodies were layde out for a praye to the fowles, and the beastes: and yet were they the children of GOD. And albeit that this bee a testimonie of Gods wrath vpon the wicked: yet may it oftentimes come to passe, that our Lorde will vse the same manner of chastisements vppon his owne people: and yet it shall bee nothing to their hurt.

True it is, that wee must cuermote humble ourselues, when such a thing happeneth, and we must vnderstande that such thinges bee as it were markes of Adames sinne, and of the corruption that is in vs, and also of the offences which we haue committed: and yet for all that our

our Lorde in the meane space turneth this euill to good, when he permitte the faithfull to be deprived of buriall. We see what is sayd of the wicked riche man and of Lazarus. It is Luke 26.22. sayde, that the riche man dyed and was buryed: beholde howe the worldely pompe is bestowed on the reprobate. It seemeth that his soule should haue bene receiued into paradise when his body was sumptuously caryed and vsed with great ceremonies. And what of Lazarus? He dyed too. But what mention is there of his buriall? None at all. Whereby our Lorde Iesus doeth vs to vnderstande, (for it is he that speaketh it) that we must not stay altogether vpon these visible things. But yet this threatening (howe so euer the case standeth) is not in vaine. What is to be doone then? Lette vs gather generally (as we haue sayde) that buriall serueth to leade vs to the hope of the heauenly life, and of the resurrection which we must hope for. Thus much concerneth that point.

When we burie them that be dead before vs, lette it serue alwayes to prouoke and to stirre vs to vnderstande that wee bee not created to liue onely in this worlde: but that there is an other better life prepared for vs. And againe, when when wee see that our Lorde deprieth any of their buriall, let vs vnderstande that he therein sheweth his wrath. Neuert helesse it is better sometimes for a man to be deuoured of beastes and birdes, and to be chastised of G O D after that sorte in his bodie for the sparing of his soule, and to haue a temporall condemnation, than to perishe for euer more: It is better sometimes for a wicked man to be hanged, than to dye in his bedde. For howe manie doe we see to gnaw their teeth against G O D, when he hath patiently taryed for them, and giuen them so many playne and apparant tokens of his wrath for their conuersion; and yet neuerthelesse they make a mocke of him, and still continue obstinate in their rebellion? When a wretched ill doer is condemned by men, hee is ashamed of it and cast downe in himselfe, and acknowledgeth and bewyleth his finnes. This condonation then, which he beareth in his body, albeit that it is an execution of that which is heere spoken by Moses: doeth serue to his saluation; and therefore let vs beare away these things. . . Morcouer when the faithfull, euen the very martyrs bee burned, and their bodies consumed to ashes, so as they haue not y<sup>e</sup> which should bee common to all mankind: let vs vnderstande that G O D conuerteth the same to their welfare, and that their glorie is thereby doubled. As howe? It is certaine that this is a threatening of God, as be also all diseases. But when our Lorde sayeth so, hee meaneth that they be the ordinarie meanes, which hee vseth to correct our finnes: but yet neuerthelesse hee sayeth not to chastise thole so with his owne hande, which haue not offended him: or at leastwise whome hee meaneth not to pursue with rigour. This is in summe that which we haue to beare in minde concerning this Text.

Nowe let vs come to that which Moses sayth farther. He sayeth that G O D will strike the despisers of his lawe with many diseases. He hath spoken heretofore of feuers, and of the whotte disease, and of the yelowe jaundis, and of such others: nowe hee speaketh of the Itch and canker and of other wormes and scabbes. Where also mention is made of the Emorodes, as some doe expoune them; all these foresayde things be the weapons of G O D, to punish the offenders of the Lawe. To be short, they be his men of warre to incounter with vs, when hee seeth that we take heart of grasse against him. And truly when we fauour our owne lustes to violate his righteousnesse, and to breake the order which he hath established among vs: and when hee seeth our lustes to bee so inordinate which are theeuces and robbers: he armeth his people and substitutes which bee the diseases that are heere spoken of, and other sortes. Lette vs therefore learne, that whatsoever diseases we suffer in our bodies, the same be all messages of G O D to make vs to feele his wrath, because wee haue offended him: but specially the extraordinary diseases, as when G O D sendeth vpon vs the sickeneses that are not vsuall amongst men, for the curing whereof they can hardly finde any meane, or else it is altogether impossible to doe it, by reason of the straungenesse of the things: then meaneth G O D to make vs to feele his anger towards vs double, and to shewe vs that wee haue prouoked him too too much. But we thinke verie slenderly of this. For contrariwise concerning the common diseases, the ordinarie hauing of them maketh vs to thinke that they proceede not from God. They saye: there is a man that hath a feuer: and there is an other that hath the murre & the poxe, or some such other disease. Wel, these be things wherein we be hardened. As howe? By custome. And must God in the mean while leese the possession of his righte? If he doe still shewe himselfe a Iudge towards vs, in chastising vs: is that a reason why wee should forget him, and haue no regarde of his hande? But howsoeuer the case standeth, such is our blockishnesse. I woulde God that the examples therof were not so notorious as they be. But let euery one looke to himselfe, and see if the customablenesse of sickeneses cause vs not to turne our backe vpon God, & to haue the lesse regarde of his iudgements and of our owne sins, so as none of vs findeth any fault with himselfe. Thus much touching the comon and vsuall sickneses. And as for the extraordinary diseases, we see howe men are hardened by them also. I pray you haue we not seene that God within these fiftie yeares hath brought vp new diseases, against whoredome? Whence cometh the pockes and all these other filthy diseases, which are not to be reckened vp at this time? Whence come all these things but from G O D, who vttereth such vengeance as earst was neuer knowen? The worlde wondered at it, and for a time, men were greatly asfayde of it: but yet of all this whyle they haue hadde no consideration of the hande of God. And at this day it is become so ordinarie ordinarie a matter, that the despisers of GOD, I meane the lecherous sort and the whore hunters, which giue ouer themselves to all leaude- nesse, doe but wring their groines at it. Though GOD smyte them with that kinde of lepro- sic ( for it is a kinde of leprosic in very deede ) so as they be eaten with the fretting thereof and with other filthynesse; yet they cease not to fol- lowe their trade still and to mocke at it: and truly it seemeth a verie straunge case, that such a punishment of GOD should be so turned to a scoffe. What a iesting make they now- adayes of their baudry when they bee thus pun- ished at the hande of God? How commeth it to passe, that they themselues doe make a iest- ing and scoffing at it, as it were in spite of God, and that whereas hee calleth them to humble themselues in sackcloth and ashes, they doe but blurt out their tongues at him, and are so farre from being ashamed of their dooings, that euen as it were in spite, they make a sporte of their owne filthynesse and miseries. Wee see then howe frowarde men be, seeing that they can profite no better in Gods schoole. I meane not in the schoole of his doctrine, where hee speaketh vnto them, but when hee smyret with heauy strokes, and also raiseth vpp warres and troubles, which ought to make menne besides themselues for feare: but yet in the meane whyle this is not written in vaine. Let vs there- fore be better aduised: and when GOD sendeth vs any straunge diseases; lette vs vnder- stande that our sinnes be multiplyed, and that GOD must therefore be more moued than e- uer he was. Wherefore let the same bring vs to repentance, and let vs not double our in- iquities: for in the ende, we shall finde the thing by experience, which we fawe euen now; namely, that when the euill shall sticke vnto vs, yea euen in our marrowe and in our bones, vn- til we be vtterly consumed. Besides this God hath other manner of meanes to punish vs, and when he perceiueth that the vidual meanes pre- uaiile not, then hath he other rodde layde vp in his storehouses; as it is sayd in the Canticle. Yea and we shall see what it is to walke at all aduen- tures against him: namely that in the ende hee will ouertake those folke ouerthwartely with a crooked measure, which playe the ignoraunt fooles after that fashion, and doe nothing but scoffe and shake their eares, when he hath punished them one way or other. Lette vs not tarry therefore till GOD vse such extremitie towardes vs: but being warned afore hande by that which is mentioned heere, let vs looke to it, and consider that looke howe many sortes of diseases he sendeth vs, so many witnesses he sendeth to prooue that we haue sinned against him: that we might thinke thereon and tittne to him againe with all lowlinesse.

I sayde erewhiles, that the verie vttermost of all, is this which Moses addeth in the ende: to witte, That GOD will smite vs with astonish- ment, and that we shall be blinde groping at full middle daye as the blinde in the darke, and that our heare shall be amazed. Hitherto wee haue seene that God sheweth a singular fauour towardes men, in af- flicting them in their bodyes, when they haue their mindes still in quiet, that they may be pa- tient. For they feele their sinnes and bewaile them, and they cease not to call vpon him that chastiseth them. And in verie deede it is some- times seene, that the grace of GOD is much more manifested towardes such people, than if they hadde no such great afflictions. As for example: If GOD spare a man, and he serue God: wee see that God blesteth him. When we see a sounde and holy life in one, we will say, heere is a man that serueth GOD, and God also sheweth him selfe gracious towardes him. Againe we see an other that is visited with great diseases, euerie man hath pitie and compassion on him; he pineth continually, and hath vehe- ment paines, he is vexed with diuerse maladies, and the verie remedies that are giuen him be so greuous that nothing can be more: yet not- withstanding this man ceaseth not to hold him- selfe in quiet, confessing his sinnes and crauing pardon of GOD: wee see such a patience as nioueth vs to glorifie God; and the partie con- tinueth still in prayers and supplications. When a man is thus mortified, and GOD holdeth his heart still in awe, so as the partie continueth in obedience vnder his hande; then perceiue we a great grace of GOD in the middest of those chastisements. But when we be without reason in our sicknesse, and play the madde bed- lems, and stande chawing vppon the brydle and wote not which way to turne vs; and of all the while neuer make any countenance of flee- ing vnto God for reliefe, it is euen the full mea- sure of all miserie.

Therefore it is not without cause, that Mo- ses hauing spoken of the sicknesse and griefes that GOD sendeth vppon mennes bodies, and in likewise of extraordinarie chastisements, which constrain men in spite of their beardes, to feele their sinnes, addeth heere; God will strike thee with blindnesse, yea and hee will so strike thee, that thy wisses shall be amazed: thou shalt grope as noondayes as in the darke: thou shalt haue no more sense or feeling in thy heare: but thou shalt be altogether blockishe. And heere wee be warned againe, that the chastisements which happen to vs in our mindes should be more dreadfull vn- to vs, than all that we can suffer in our bodyes. It is true that our nature draweth vs cleane con- trary; for wee be so tender and nice in our bod- ies, that as soone as wee feele any grieffe, by and by we cry out, and leese our patience; and therein we see a part of our brutishnesse. For if we hadde any droppe of stayed vnderstand- ing, we would a hundred times be more a- frayde of the chastisements that God threat- neth to our soules, than of all that euer we can endure in our bodies. In what case is a man, when he is forsaken of GOD, so as he seeketh him not any more, but induced by al meanes to hyde him from his presence? Surely when we come to that point, if we coulde plucke God out of his seate, we would gladly doe it. Hee that seeketh such hydingholes to conuey him- selfe, selfe from comming vnto God; doeth what hee can to robbe him of his maicentie, and hee is loath to come to present himselfe before such a Iudge.

And truely, although a man haue no further harme than this blockishnesse, so as hee feelth not his owne miserie; is it not a token that God hath alreadie giuen him ouer to a reprobate mind? Yea: for there is not a more euident signe of reprobation, than to bee without remorse or scruple of conscience. Moreover, when a man is frighted and out of his right wittes, in such wise as hee woteth not which way to turne him, and hath no more taste or feeling of God, nor can any skill to lament for his finnes, or to aske forgiuenesse of them, and to repent him of them: but gnatheth his teeth, and byteth the byrdle like a Mule: is not that a dreadful thing? When wee beholde such glassees, our hayres stande vp right, and euen nature forceth vs to it. And yet for all that, if wee thinke not vpon it, that wee may stande in awe, and walke in feare and humilitie, is it not a tempting of God? Let vs learne therefore not to harden our selues in such wise as God shoulde bee forced to fall to this rigour, wherewith hee doeth here threaten his people: namely, that hee will make them grope as the blinde in the darke, and that they shall haue neither vnderstanding in them nor discretion: that hee will make them to fall in such a feare, as they shall not knowe whether they be liuing creatures or no: nor perceiue whether there bee a God that will receiue them to mercie, and whether they shall preuaile in calling vpon his name, or not. Let vs not tarrise till such cuil doe come vpon vs. For it is a deepe pitte, out of the which verie fewe can get forth. In deede God will some times bring his people to that poynt that they shall not knowe where they be, and they shalbee so greatly afraid, and so troubled therewith, that they shall become dull & blockish: this is well seene. But hee lieth them vp againe after that hee hath brought them lowe. Howbeit for as much as this example is very rare, let vs not tempt our God; but when hee afflicteth vs in our bodies, let vs vnderstande that hee spareth vs greatly, and that hee mitigateth the rigour of his wrath, and let vs bee no more so impatient as wee haue bin wonted to bee. Albeit that the grieffe bee hard and bitter to vs, yet let vs confesse: alas: but yet God hath not touched mee in my soule. Let this come alwayes in our remembrance, to the ende that wee acknowledging the goodnes of our God in that hee doeth forbear vs: may returne vnto him; and not dout, but that hee is readie to take pittie vpon vs, when wee seeke vnto him vnfaynedly. Let that serue for one poynt which wee haue to remember in this lesson, where mention is made of the sayde blockishnesse.

Nowe Moses sayeth expressly, that the transgressors of Gods lawes, shall grope as noone day. As if hee shoulde say: notwithstanding that God giue them many occasions to reioyce, yet shall they be frighted in such sort, as they shall not take hold of any grace, but be as blinde wretches. Seeing it is so, let vs mark farther that although God doe mitigate our griefes, and comforterth vs; yet doeth that serue vs to no purpose, if hee giue vs not the wisdom to vnderstande his goodnesse. And wee must vnderstand, that wee are not able to enioye the good that God offereth vnto vs, when wee be destitute of his holy Spirit. And this is one execution of that threatening that is here mentioned. True it is that wee shoulde alwayes returne to this poynt, that our Lorde desireth not the viter confusion of sinners: but y<sup>e</sup> forsomuch as such miseries doe happen oftentimes, wee shoulde not tarrise till they light vpon our heads; but rather seeke the remedie, to the ende that God haue not occasion to withdrawe himselfe from vs. Howsoever the case standerth, let vs first of all marke, that God directeth this doctrine to such as haue bin trained in his worde, as wee haue already sayd. It is certaine that he is Iudge of the world: yet notwithstanding wee well deserue to bee chastised, after a more boystrous fashion, when wee haue bene taught at his mouth, and haue reiected his will, and bee so farre forth corrupted that wee make but a iest of his worde: and that wheras hee sought to retayne vs as his people; wee haue despised him. It is verie meete therefore that wee shoulde bee grieuouly punished, and therefore let vs thinke, that seeing God doeth vs the fauour to let vs haue the pure doctrine of the holy scripture, the same seaueth to bereaue vs of all excuses, and also to quicken vs vp to walke so much the more in feare.

But herewithall let vs marke farther, that God doth not onely vse threatnings towards vs, but also dayly exhort and allure vs vnto him, to reconcile vs to him: shewing that for his parte, hee is readie to come to attonement, so wee condemne our finnes, and returne to his mercie. What else is the Gospell, that wee heare eueury daye, but a message of reconciliation, as Saint Paul calleth it in the seconde to the Corinthians? Seeing then that God sendeth vs a herald to declare peace vnto vs, and to shewe that he is ready to doe away all our offences, let vs take heede, that wee vse this time of our Saluation, to receiue y<sup>e</sup> grace that is offered vnto vs in due season, as the Prophet Esay telleth vs, and as Saint Paul sayth, v<sup>sing</sup> the same testimonie. Againe when wee haue bin ouermuch hardened, and that God hath patiently wayted for vs, and wee still continue in our finnes: let vs not thinke that hee in the end hath either giuen ouer or forgotten his office. Wee must needs yeeld an account of such vnthankfulnesse. When wee forsake the Saluation whereunto hee called vs, and despise him out of measure: such wilful stubburnesse must of necessitie come to reckening. Then let vs stande in feare: and as often as wee heare speaking of the grace of God which is offered vnto vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ, let our heartes be enclined to receiue it: and let vs giue way vnto God to come in. And when wee goe vnto him, let it bee doone with bewayling our finnes, and with yeelding ourselues guiltie, not onely in worde of mouth, but also with such griefe of heart, as may prouee that the euil displeaseth vs. And when wee thus mislike of our selues, let vs not abyde till our Lorde put in execution the threatenings that hee setteth foorth heere, but let vs turne them to our commoditie. And when wee heare the promises of the Gospell, let vs remember the threatenings also: that wee may bee so much the more prouoked, and euery man make haste to receiue the good which is offered vnto vs to enioy and to possesse, vnlesse the fault bee in our selues.

Nowe let vs cast downe our selues before the maictie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our finnes: beseeching him to make vs to feele them yet better, vntill wee bee vtterly beaten downe in our selues, and seeke for the remedie wherunto hee calleth vs: namely, that being guyded by his holy spirite, wee may increase and profite more and more in all holinesse and righteousnesse, and that wee may endeavour so to glorifie him in all our whole life; as in the ende wee may attayne to that same euerlasting glory, vnto the which hee calleth vs: And so let vs all say: Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

The CLVIII. Sermon, which is the sixt vpon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

29 And thou shalt alwayes suffer iniurie and oppression, and no man shall deliuer thee.

30 Thou shalt mary a wyfe, and another man shall lye with her: thou shalt buylde a house, but thou shalt not dwell in it: thou shalt plant a vyne, but thou shalt not gather the fruite thereof.

31 Thyne ox shalbe killed before thine eyes, but thou shalt not eate of it: thyne Ass shalbee taken away before thy face, and it shall not be restored vnto thee: thy sheepe shalbe deliuered to thyne enemies, and there shalbe no bodie to saue them.

32 Thy sonnes and thy daughters shalbe giuen to another people, thyne eyes shall see it, and dasle at it all the day long, and thy hande shall haue no strength.

33 And a people which thou hast not knowen, shall eat the fruite of thy land, and all thy labour: and thou shalt doe nothing but suffer reuylinges and oppressions alwayes.

34 And thou shalt be amafed at the sight of those things which thyne eyes shall beholde.

35 The Lord wil smite thee with a sore swelling in the knees, and in the legs, of the which thou shalt not bee healed from the sole of thy foote to the crowne of thy head.

Wought well to remember the meaning of Moses, whereof wee haue spoken heerebefore; namely, wherefore hee continueth in vttering so many curses. For wee are slow to bee moued: when our Lorde doeth threaten vs, wee make a game of it: and albeit wee confesse that wee shoulde thinke thereon, yet doeth it escape vs. And furthermore, wee suppose that wee shall alwayes synde starting holes, and that if God doe followe vs one way, wee by flying another way shalbee able to void his blowes. Thus doe men deceiue themselves; and thereupon waxe hardhearted. Nowe Moses (or rather the spirite of GOD speaking by his mouth) perceiuing that men be so carelesse, and that they shrinke not at the first, when the iudgement of God is set before them, continueth his matter still and addeth threatenings vpon threatenings. Againe, on the other side, perceiving also that men seeke starringholes, and thereby deceiue themselues, bearing themselues in hande, that they can saue themselues by flinging ouer the Fenne (as they say :) hee sheweth that God hath infinite meanes to punish vs withall, both aboue and beneath, before and behynde, on the right hande and the lefte, and that wee shall bee so hemmed in on all sides, that it shall not be possible for vs to escape his hand.

Nowe after the threatenings, which we haue seene heere before, hee presently addeth that they which soresist God shall bee afflicted and tormented, so as men shall spoyle them, and they shall layde open to all violence for euer, and no man shall deliuer them. Wee see heere that God serueth his owne turne by the wicked, and that although their intent bee nothing so, yet doeth hee apply them to a good vse, when hee listeth to punish vs. Whereas there bee theues and robbers, albeit that they bee giuen ouer to Satan, yet sayle they not to serue Gods purpose; yea truly, for wee see in this text that our Lorde leaueh them not at random, to robbe and to spoyle, whether hee will or no: but hee threateneth his people, saying, They that disobey mee, shall bee vexed and robbed. And whence proceedeth that? It must needs, come from him.

Nowe albeit that God suffereth oppreffions, robberies, and violence to bee done, hee can very well condemne them, according as hee is righteous, and must needs hate Injustice: yet notwithstanding, by his wonderfull wisdom which to vs is incomprehensible, hee turneth these things to his owne seruice: so that when wee haue offended him, hee must needs punish vs by the hand of the most wicked: which is the more to our reproche. For if hee himselfe should haue punished vs, and we sawe before our eyes, y hee reuengeth him of our iniquities, we would wee say, seeing that wee haue offended him, it is good reason that wee should come to account for it. But when hee sturreth vppe leawd folke, and despisers of his maiestie, and such as are giuen to all naughtnesse, and maiketh them our Iudges: it is to make vs so much the more ashamed. Let vs therefore consider, that whene focuer the euill cometh, wee haue euermore to deale with GOD: and wee must thinke that there is nothing done in this worlde but by his direction. And thereupon let vs enter into the examination of our faultes. For it is not ynough to know that God ruleth all things: but euery one of vs must also make his owne inditement, and consider that all afflictions and aduersities, are tokens of Gods wrath. Nowe when wee speake of his wrath, wee must in like wise remember his iustice; and thereupon conclude that wee verie well deserue to bee punished. But yet he threateneth vs before hee strike, to the end that wee should not stand gaping til the things were come to passe; but rather prevent them aforehande, as Saynt Paul also doeth aduonith vs. Whilest God spareth vs, let vs bee aduised, not to walke in his feare, that wee prouoke him not to flure vp theues to torment and vex vs: but that rather (if men attempt such iniuries against vs) wee may stande in his protection, according as hee promisseth to vpholde all them that walke in his obedience.

Then let vs see that wee doe so; and let vs remember that which is spoken by the Prophet Esaye, to wit, that they which haue robbed, must bee serued with the same sawe. And that is the cause why violences and extortions doe so continue in the worlde.

Men wonder to see that the mischief growes woorse and woorse: but they should note the cause thereof. For they that beare chiefe sway and preheminece, doe let themselues loose, seeking nothing but to enriche themselues, and to swallowe vp other mennes substance. Let haue they robbed? God must sende a reuolution, so as other robbers shall come and bereaue these of their booties: and afterwarde, a thirde sorte must step vp to spoile them againe. And so there is neuer any ende. And why? Because the worlde neuer ceaseth to prouoke the wrath of God. And for so much as wee bee headstrong, it is reason, that our Lorde should continue to shewe himselfe our Iudge. But (as I sayde euen now) let vs bee well wate to walke in such wise, as innocent bloud cye not out for vengeance against vs. Let vs not doe iniurie or outrage to any person, that our Lorde may blesse vs for so dooing, and not pay vs with like measure, according as wee see howe our Lorde Iesus Christ sayeth, that it shall come so to passe. Let euery of vs therefore brydle him: selfe in such wise, as this curse come not vpon vs, to bee robbed for vsing of robbrie and extortion against the innocentes. But for as much as men imagine that their aduersitie shall bee short, and that they shall bee soone ridde of it: Moses addeth, That it shall bee for euer, and that when the hande of God is against vs, no man shall bee able to saue vs.

It is certayne, that like as God is slowe to anger, so is hee soone pacified; but that is but towards the faithfull. As for the wicked, hee must holde on with them, and they must feele their burden euery day heauyer than other. And wherefore? According as they harden their hartes against God, they must in like wise feele him the harder against them. And albeit that this is not alwayes, yet doe wee see it often come to passe, God will at some times withdrawe his hande after hee hath menaced the wicked; or else when hee hath giuen them some strypes with his rodde, hee will let them goe againe: and that is, as it were a respitte, that they may haue leasure to turne to repentance. Notwithstanding, because hee knoweth them to bee vnreformable: that dealing of his must of necessitie bee turned to their forer condemnation. If GOD then do spare the despisers of his lawe, and them that bee obstinate in malice, it doeth not therefore followe, that they shall bee saued: but it is to the ende that the plague shall come double vpon their heades, for their abusing of his patience after that manner. For when hee hath waited for them, and they proceede still from euill to woorse: hee must needs put to his hande at the last. Howsoeuer the case standeth, it is not in vayne that Moses telleth vs heere, that when GOD is our enemy, our life shall not bee miserable onely for a day, or yet for a little while; wee must not limit our selues any terme in that case: but we must looke for one mischicfe to drawe another, and that there shall bee none ende, vntill hee hath layde vs quyte vnder foote, vnlesse wee turne to him to obtayne mercie. Wherefore let vs weye well this worde which Moses addeth, where hee sayeth, that if GOD doe beginne to smyte vs for despying of his iustice: it shall not continue for a little while, but wee must bee miserable for euer. And why? For in as much as the maiestie of God is cuerlasting, he must needs take endeleffe vengeance of them that despise his iustice. Therefore so soone as wee see the blowes come neere vs, let vs bee afrayde, and let euery of vs make haste to returne vnto him, whome wee haue offended, to wit, our GOD, to obtayne forgiueneffe of our trespasses. That is the onely remedie, without which there will bee neyther ende nor measure of our afflictions, except wee take order to reconcile our selues to our God.

Nowe where hee allegeth, that none shall saue them: That is to cut off all the vayne hopes which men doe forge to them selues in their owne braynes, when hee punisheth them. They looke hither and thither, and if they finde any comfort in this worlde, it seemeth vnto them, that they shall make a scapeage against God, and that they shall bee able to winne the goale in the ende. In deede they will not say so; for it is a blaspheemie which all of vs doe holde accursed; but yet wee bee so dolous, that wee hope to turne away the hande of GOD when wee finde any helpe heere: in so much that if men beare vs any fauour, and wee be supported in any thing, wee arme our selues therewith against God. But Moses telleth vs heere, that it is in vayne for men to seeke dyuers succours after that fashion, when GOD warreth vpon them. For why? All creatures are in his hande, and without him they can doe nothing. More ouer, that which is for our benefite, shall become our bane, and all things shall redounde to our confusion. Let vs not therefore looke to bee saued by any means that may bee, when our Lorde taketh parte against vs: but let vs returne vnto him, seeing that there is none other remedie but that, and let vs ridde our selues of all such thinges as may hinder vs to come to repentance.

Let vs then bee quickened vp by these two sayings of Moses, that wee sleepe no more in our vayne fantasies, as wee haue bene earst too much accustomed. But what? There are very fewe which thinke vpon that. For euery man martyreth himselfe, if his griefe continue, and hee synde no helpe in men. In all our afflictions, wee can complayne wellynough: but wee consider not that GOD withholdeth mennes helpe from vs, when hee intendeth to punish vs, in such wise that wee shall (after a sorte) bee vterly ouerwhelmed. And againe, if our sorrowe continue; it is, because wee haue persisted too much in our stubbornnesse. Wee thinke nota whit of all this. But yet are not these things written in vayne. And therefore let vs learne to profite better thereby, than wee haue done in times past.

Finally, Moses setteth foorth by this threatening, howe wee shall be vexed and robbed, if wee offende against the lawe of God. Hee sayeth: Thou shalt marry a wife and not be wishler: Thou shalt buyde a house, and not dwell therein: Thou shalt plant a vineyard, and not gather the fruite thereof. Yea, they shall take thy Bees and thy Mutions, and kill them, and thou shalt continue still a hungred: and not onely all thy cattell shall be made a praye and a bootie: but thy verie children also shall be deliuered into the handes of thine enemies, and thou shalt yerne after them, and thine eyes shall dash for verie greefe and sorrowe, & in the meane while, thy hande shall be without strength or power to recover them. It had bene ynough to haue sayde in one worde, Thou shalt suffer robberies, extorsions, and wronges: but because men are slowe, it behooueth them to bee so much the better touched, and to beholde the thing as it were before their eyes. That is the cause why Moses speaketh heere of houles and vineyardes, of wiuies and children, and of cattell. As if hee shoulde say: Some shall bewaile the taking away of their houles which they had builded, the putting of them from their vineyardes and their other possessions, the spoyling of their goods, and the driuing away of their cattell: And othersome shall bewaile the wrong that is done vnto them in their children, and in their very wiuies. But wee bee to consider that all these thinges bee the scourges of God, wherewith hee punisheth vs for our sinnes.

It is certayne (as I haue sayde alreadie heretofore) that GOD at sometymes, for the exercising of the faithfull in patience, doeth sende them the verye chastisements heere mentioned, and yet punisheth them not for their offences. For Iob was not punished for his sinnes: Not that GOD had not iust cause so to doe, but for that hee had no respect to that: howe so euer the case stand, surely it is an ordinarie matter.

In deede wee may alleage many examples of men that are tormented and vexed by the wicked, so as they bee driuen from possit to piller, and robbed of their goods : such examples doe happen euery day : but this prouoeth not, that this doctrine taketh not place, and that it is not true in it selfe, as an ordinarie rule, to wit, that God punisheth mens sins by such means. Nowe when wee haue walked in the feare of God, and endeouored to serue him : and yet notwithstanding, our substance is taken away, and the robbers possesse it : let vs consider, that if this bee not doone for our finnes, our Lorde giueth vs a great preeminence. For first of all, of whome was it long that wee offended him not : We were preferred by his holy spirite.

And moreover, notwithstanding any good affection and zeale that wee haue had to lue vprightly and vncorruptly ; yet wee cease not to be guiltie before God. But what for that ? Hee spareth vs, and yet hee meaneth to trye our patience, for to humble vs. When it is his will that wee shall beare the miseries, which bee punishments for them that despise his lawe, and that wee must feele them : well, wee must stoope. And thereby hee tryeth vs, howe pleasurable wee bee vnder his hande to yeeld vnto his gouernement, as shall stande with his good pleasure. Moreover, this alwayes taketh place, (as wee haue sayde afore) that our Lord punisheth the offences and transgressions of his lawe, by the things that are specified here. So then, when a man buildeth, let him take heede that hee buylde not with extortion, pilling, polling, and robbetrie, vnlesse it bee his meaning to haue his house taken from him, according as it is spoken by the Prophet Abacuc. For the Prophet bringeth in the walles singing and answering one another. For in as much as mens Palaces and houses, bee oftentimes buylded with blood, robbetrie, extortion, and wicked practises : and the verie wickett them selues doe crye out that they were buylded with pilling and polling : it must needs waken vp Gods wrath and vengeance against such buylders. Desire wee then to bee harboured in peace ? Let vs looke that wee buylde without doying wrong to any body, whatsoeuer hee bee.

And moreouer let euery of vs in his dwelling, dedicate himselfe in such wise to God, as hee may dwell with vs. For they that are driuen out of their dwellings, haue commonly driuen God out before : that is to say, they haue followed some lewde trade, so as G O D hath not reigned there. Is it then any wonder, if they bee driuen thence in the ende ? No : For why ? Shall G O D bee thrust from his right ; and wee in the meane while possesse euery man his dwelling in rest ? Were that reason ? Therefore, when wee see such changes to happen, as they bee to bee seene in the worlde : let vs vnderstande that G O D driueth them out, which earst woulde giue him no lodging : and let such examples admonish vs to stande in feare of the threatenings heere specified. And let vs not tarrie till our Lorde banish vs from the place where wee bee harboured : but let vs rather endeour to serue him, so as hee may continue alwayes with vs to maintayne vs. And if it come to passe, that wee bee driuen out, let vs vnderstande that the same is for our finnes : for it is better late than nither. Moreover, if wee bee driuen out for any other cause, as at this day wee see the poore righteous people, in state like a byrde on the bough, as though the earth coulde not beare them : as Saint Paul speaketh of his time, and as it is known at this present time that the children of God bee as vagabondes, hauing not a hole to hyde themselves in : when wee beholde these things, let vs vnderstande, that forasmuch as our Lorde leadeth vs this walke, hee doeth vs great fauour that the same is not because of our finnes, but for his names sake, and for our better establishment in the hope of the heavenly inheritance, seeing that there is nothing sure nor stable in this present worlde, but that wee must alwayes aspire to the eternal life, and to the rest that is prepared for vs on high. Let vs then acknowledge the good that hee doeth vnto vs in this poynt. But in any wise, let vs take good heede : that wee prouoke not his wrath against vs in such sort as I haue saide afore.

Nowe, whereas hee sayth : Thou shalt marrie a wife, and another shall lie with her : let euery man take heede to walke in such chastite, as hee drawe not vpon him this curse of God, in such wise as to bee deprived of the wife that hee thinkes to haue : and the wifes in like case of their husbandes. Wee see howe men bee giuen ouer to all vnchastite, and God must needs yeelde them their rewards accordingly. Dauid himselfe was not spared in this case. Wee heare howe it was sayde vnto him : Thou hast done this in secreete, but that shall bee done openly. Hee was sayne to abyde reproche before all the worlde, in heauing his wifes raiufhed openly. Sith it is so then ; let vs take good heede, that wee walke in such chastite, that when men take wifes, they may so lue together as they may feele the blessing of God, and that their marryages bee not broken through the committing of any offence. For, as I haue sayde : it is no wonder that there bee so confused changes in the worlde at this day, because men doe more and more kinde the wrath and vengeance of God. It is euen in like case with adulteries. For what is the cause that they reygne so ryfe, and are come ( as yee woulde say) to their full pryde ? It is because wedlocke is so little regarded, and that there is no feare of God : there is neither faith nor truth : and therefore must men needes plunge themselves in all misfortune, so that in the ende there will bee nothing but disorder. So much the more therefore ought wee to take warning to walke so in all cleanness of life, as euery one may keepe him to his owne wife, and the Lorde blesse their marryages and mayntayne them in quietnes.

Moreouer, seeing that God is matched with vs in the person of his onely sonne, and woulde haue vs to keepe fast the faith of wedlocke towards him, according to the simplicitie of his Gospell: let vs sticketh throughly to that which hee hath commaunded vs: and to bee short, let vs be halowed vnto him, and followe his holy calling. For if wee doe so, our Lorde will graunt vnto husbandes the grace to liue quietly with their wiues and householdes, and vnto the wiues that they shall learne to liue in good agreement with their husbandes. For wee must marke, that if man and wife doe not ioyne in one mynde, there must needs bee discorde in the whole house, and one shall byte and snatch at another like dogges and cattes, and the one woulde with the other a hundred foote vnder the ground, so as they shall liue in continuall miserie and disquietnes. And why? Because that neither the one nor the other hath any regarde to God, to yeelde themselves to his direction. Therefore let vs learne, not to prouoke any more the vengeance of God in this case.

As concerning the landes and possessions he sayeth: That the transgressors of the law of God shall plant vines, but they shall neuer gather the fruite of them. Nowe wee see that they which haue thus offended God, bee the stoutest and boldest sort, bearing themselves in hand that no harme can come neere them. And that is the cause why wee see that the greatest getters, & the doers of greatest enterprises, are those which wilfully giue them selues to pilling and polling by hooke and by crooke, hauing no care what polling and extortion they commit, and offending both God and man without ende or measure. Such persons as these therefore must afterwarde yeelde an account. [They beare themselves in hand] that when they haue plated vyneyards, they shall inioy them without controuersie: and that when they haue buylled houises, they shall dwell in them without putting out agame. Thus do men hardē themselves against God. But Moses cōtrariwise declareth: That when they haue planted vine, other men shall gather the fruite of them. And in deede, whereas wee see at this day so much theeritic in the worlde; let vs vnderstand, that it is because there bee so fewe that haue cleane handes, and are able to protest that they haue not encroched vpon the goods of other men by vniust meanes. Soothely there is so vnumerable disorder nowadayes, that the children of God bee fleeced though they abstayne from all manner of iniuries. But we must euermore haue recourse to the ordinarie course whereof I haue spoken, to wit, that our Lorde will not fayle to punish the finnes that breake out after that fashion like a waterfloud. As for them that haue landes and possessions, they will not goe to steale otherfolkes goods, nor to picke a fewe grapes: they will not goe fishingly to cut downe a patche of meadowe: it is for beggers to doe for and wee see in these dayes, that the most parte of poore folkes are pilferers, fishng and stealing all that euer they can finger. But yet they that haue landes and possessions, bee the greatest theeues: for the things which they possesse, they get by vnlawfull meanes. It is no wonder then, if God do require them with the like; and that they bee so vexed in their goods and possessions. God therefore sheweth vs by experience, that his vttering of such speeches is not in vayne; but wee thinke not thereon. Men can well ynough complayne, as I haue sayde afore: but they haue no regarde to the principall poynt, which is; that G O D putteth the thinges in execution which hee spake by the mouth of Moses. Let vs therefore bee thinke our selues; and whereas wee see so much stealing, both of vynes, of corne, and of such other things; let vs vnderstand that our Lorde punisheth the rauenousnesse and extortion that is committed both in marchandize, and in all other trades of occupying: and let vs not tarye till G O D doe punish vs in verie deede; but let vs walke vprightly, if wee will haue him to defende vs. For although that all places bee neuer so full of theeues; yet will our Lorde keepe our goods in safetie, if wee walke in his feare, and abstayne from all manner of euill doing. That is the thing whereunto we must haue our recourse; and wee must not thinke to escape euill, by euill doing: but wee must vse the remedie which our Lorde setteth forth in this text. As much is to bee sayde of our cattell, and also of our children. Yea, and Moses proceedeth still with enlarging, to the ende that men shoulde so much the better perceiue, what the effect is of this speche which hee vttereth: namely, that this shall bee for euer. As if hee shoulde saye, that the hande of God shall euer waxe heauier and heauier. In so much that if a man which is driuen from his dwelling, doe thinke to remooue to his possessions, and to his landes; G O D will persecute him euen there: and if hee thinke to cheere himselfe with his wife, shee shall be taken from him by force: and if hee thinke to fynde some comfort in his children, they shall be deliuered into the hands of his enmies; and if hee thinke to haue any recourse to his cattell, they shall be all stolne or taken away by force. Moses therefore beset- teth vs heere on all sides, to the ende wee shoulde learne to resort vnto our God; forasmuch as it is in vayne, for vs to labour to escape by any other way. This is the matter in effect which wee haue to beare in minde of this text.

Nowe hee addeth moreouer; to the increase of the mischeefe, That the fruis of the earth and the labour of our handes, shall be eaten by a people which wee haue not knowne: and that wee our selues shall be disgraunted by reason of the miseries which shall so light vpon vs. That is to say, wee shall be as out of our wittes, beholding the mischiefe before our eyes; and being amazed thereat, whereby wee shall be enforced to perceiue that the hande of God is against vs. That is in effect the matter which hee meant to say in this text.

Nowe I haue tolde you that the miserie is fo much the more greivous to beare, when a people vnknown commeth to ransacke all. Truly if we be robbed by our owne neighbours, and by them that should bee at amitie with vs: the same is verie harde to beare . But if there come a straunge people, there is lesse mercie . For when men bee so separated one from the other, and haue no intercomong at all: there is the lesse likelihoode of any meanes of safetie. And wee see howe this repetition heere is often founde in the Prophetes: insomuch as it is saide sometimes, that the people which shall persecute vs, shall be a barbarous people without language whereby to haue any talke with vs: by reason whercof, when we shall aske them mercie, and cry alas, it shall seeme vnto them that wee curse them; and that shall be an increase of their crueltie . So then lette vs marke, that his speaking thus of a straunge people, is to make vs to vnderstande, that GOD will sende vs such chastisers as will haue no pitie nor compassion of vs, vntill they haue quite and cleane rooted vs out.

And nowe by the way we be warned, that although the plague be not yet come nere vs, we must not therefore fall asleepe . For wee doe alwayes measure Gods threatenings, by our owne conceiuing of them, and by the things that offer themselues to our sight. When men speake of warre, and doe threaten vs with the Turke, But how can he come at vs say we: He is too farre off. Againe, can such a Prince inuade vs? Tush, he shall be letted by such a meane: the plague can not come that way, by reason of such a caule. He may be deak withal by such a meane: it can not be . When wee haue such kinde of worldly shifts to defende our selues withall, thereupon wee despise GOD, not in worde, but in deede, for wee continue vnreformable and frowarde, and feare not that the plague can come at vs . Therefore sayeth God, that he will stirre vpe straunge people against vs, euen people of farre Countries. When men doubt it least, then shall they wonder to see howe GOD will come in vpon them on that side which they neuer thought of, and bring them enemies to spoyle them. Lette vs then marke by this texte, that Gods scourges lye sometimes hidden, and breake out vpon a sudden, so as men are taken tardie by them, according to this saying, that they be like to a woman that is childe bearing. For a woman that is with childe, is vtterly abashed when her houre is come; euen so farreth it with them that are puffed vp with their iniquities, and delight in them: they forecast not that the hande of God is nere them. It commeth vpon them like a tempest; when they say, Peace and all is safe, then commeth their ruine and vtter destruction. Therefore whereas we be tolde of strange people, lette vs learne to looke farre before vs when GOD doeth threaten vs; for like as saith must aduance it selfe aboue the worlde to take holde of Gods promises, that it may rest altogether vpon them: so likewise when GOD threatneth vs, our sayth must looke further off than we can see with our eyes, and we mistrust the thing which wee see not at all: like as wee may perceiue that Noe tarried not till the floude brake out, and that GOD did vnlocke the Raine of heauen, and opened the waterspringes of the earth: but as soone as hee hearde the woorde, hee did nothing but thinke vpon the vengeance of GOD: and by vertue of that worde, he behelde the floude as if it hadde bene present: and hee liued in such feare and carefulnesse, as if he had seene the rayne both euening and morning to destroy all things before his eyes. Euen so should we doe and we be warned thereof by this saying, where God speaketh of farre countries.

Morcouer wee be therewithall warned to lue in peace and concord. For seeing that GOD hath associated vs and wee be intermingled together: we must learne to lue in such vnicite, as our Lorde neede not to bring strange enemies to chastise our churlishnesse in resembling cats and dogs. For when men which ought to agree together, doe vex one another; it causeth GOD to stirre vp strangers to bee their enemies; because that the nearer that our Lord commeth vnto vs, the more would he haue vs giuen to doe good one to another. And if wee doe the contrarie, then must GOD stirre vpe a people to come to spoyle vs, because we haue not liued in peace like brethren, ne knite ourselves together like fingers of one hande. This is the thing which wee haue to beare in minde touching this text.

Nowe where he sayeth, And you shall be amazed at the sights which you shall see: it is according to that which was sayde before; namely: that men shold be distraughted, and grope at noone day, as doeth the blinde in the darke. For if wee be borne withall so farre as to gather and plucke vpe our spirittes to call vpon GOD, and to bee patient in our afflictions; it is a great grace, and such a one as can not bee sufficiently esteemed. But if our Lorde incourage vs not to repentance, ne giue vs wherewith to asswage and diminish our sorrowes, but all hope is taken away, and we be as folke already forlorne, so as we bee besides our wittes to see the naked sword continually before vs, hauing no meane of remedie or succour at all: that is a dreadfull threatning. Neuerthelesse it is not sent without cause, considering the hardnesse of hearte which is to bee seene in all men. For vntill GOD haue brought vs to this distraughtednesse, we be altogether blockish, and we haue the contrarie vice, which is, that we can verie well complaine when any thing doeth trouble vs: yea, and sometimes we lye as beaten downe, but yet doeth not that make vs to come againe to God: for we see howe euery man taketh the bridle in his teeth, so as they shake off all feare, and neuer thinke vpon that which is set downe heere. And so wee see howe men become blockish. Now our Lorde would faine drawe them to repen-raunce, at leastwise if they were teacheable, that is to say, if they were not wilfull stubborne. For he cryeth all manner of wayes to drawe vs vnto him. This is the cause why hee doeth correct vs gently, and as it were within compasse, as with his litle finger. But when hee seeth that that will nothing preuaile; then must he bring vs to this kinde of woodnesse. For vntill he hath left vs as men distraughted, we will neuer haue our minds peaceable and obedient, we will neuer be wunne.

Therefore let vs marke well that this threatening is directed to such a stoope not at the first blowe when GOD hath warned them; but goe on from euill to worse: for then must they of necessitie come to this woodnesse. Nowe he speaketh expressly concerning the sightes of the eyes. For men doe blinde themselves (as I haue sayde heeretofore) perswading with themselves that they can escape by some mean: in so much that although wee see the euill at hande, yet ye woulde wonder to see howe wee holde on our course, and care not for it, according as the prophet Esaie speaketh of the wicked: saying that when the scourge passeth ouer the whole earth, and the storme ouer taketh them all, they bee not any whit moued thereat. After that manner doe the despisers of GOD speake, and the number of them is infinite. So then, when men doe thus blinde their eyes, and haue no respect at all to the plagues whereunto they be subiect: but notwithstanding that they fall into infinite troubles out of the which they can not get our againe, yet they holde on stil: so farasmuch as they be so forward, Moses sayeth expressly in this texte: You shall haue a sight before your eyes: that is to say, after that you haue bene a long while hardened in your vaine fantasies, and haue flattered yourselves in your finnes, imagining that GOD should spare you and that you be (as it were his mates, and haue made a league with death and with the graue, according as the Prophet speaketh of it: when as you haue bene thus a long while vntouched with any awe, and haue deceiued yourselves in bearing yourselves in hande that your plague shall not last: There shall come a sight that shall make your eyes to darke in beholding the infinite mischiefes which you must bee faine to endure: and which way so euer you turne your eyes, whether it bee vwarde or downward, forward or backward, you shall see Gods hande continually pursewing you; by reason whereof you shall be driuen into a madness. Let vs learne therefore to conuert this text to our benefite: and whyle GOD doeth forbear vs, or at the least so moderate his plagues that wee be not thereby altogether ouerthrowen; let vs feare him, and let vs berhinke ourselves howe sundrie wayes wee haue offended GOD: in so much that if he lifted to deale rigorously with vs, we shoulde then perish euerie minute of an houre. And therewithall let vs not tarric till hee thunder downe vpon vs, and poure out his curses vpon vs in such sorte as they may sinke into our verie bones: but let vs returne to him and to his goodnesse. And aboute all things when hee giueth vs the grace to foresee his plagues afarre off, so as wee may say that others be punished for our instruction: let vs take warning by their example, and in such wise by faith receiue Gods corrections wherewith he threatneth vs, as it may preserue vs from that sight whereof Moses speaketh heere: to the intent that our Lorde strike vs not with such feare, as we can not in any wise thinke to receive any recorde of his goodnesse by reason of our finnes. Nay rather, that by putting this lesson of obeying him and of submitting our selues vnto him in vte, wee may eschewe this toresayde amazednesse, and not bee so oppressed as wee shoulde become like folke that were out of their wittes. Let vs not come to such an extremitie, neither let vs compell GOD to execute such Threatenings againt vs.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our finnes; beseeching him to vouchsaue to make vs so to vnderstande them, as euery one of vs may be his owne iudge, and turne to him, before we be thereunto contrayned: and that hauing willingly condemed ourselves & bewailed our sins, we may seeke to returne to his obedience in such wise, as the same may be to dedicate vs wholly vnto him. And that in the meane while it may please him y<sup>e</sup> like as he hath sent vs the message of reconciliation by his gospeil, he will also giue vs y<sup>e</sup> grace to obtaine mercie of him, & forgiveness of all our finnes in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ: and that resting thereupon, we sayle not to walke alwaies in feare: and that his bearing with vs through his fatherly goodnes may not cause vs to sleepe in our finnes, and to flatter ourselves in them: but y<sup>e</sup> euery of vs may quicken v<sup>r</sup> himselfe, vntill we be quite and cleane rid of them. And that in so much as wee are to passe through so much filthines in this world, we may be taught to amende our misdoinges continually vntill that we be thoroughly ridde of them, for the full vnting of vs to himselfe, and to make vs perpetrators of his heauenly glorie. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewfday the xxiiij. of March, 1556.

The CLIX. Sermon, which is the seventh vpon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

36 The Lord wil carry thee and thy king which thou shalt haue fet ouer thee, to a people which thou hast not knowen, neither thou nor thy fathers: and there shalt thou serue other gods, of wood and of stone.

37 And there shalt thou be a gazing stocke, a skoffing stocke, and a byworde to all people, to whom the Lorde shall bring thee.

38 Thou shalt lay much seede in the gronde, and shalt gather litle: for the grasshoppers shall deuour it.

39 Thou shalt plant a vineyard and dresse it: but thou shalt not drinke the wine of it, nor gather any fruite of it: for the wormes shall eat it.

40 Thou shalt haue Oliue trees in all thy coastes, but thou shalt not annoint thyselfe with the oyle of it: for all thine Oliues shal be shaken off.

41 Thou shalt beget sonnes and daughters, but not to thy selfe: for they shall goe into Captiuitie.

42 The worme shall destroy all thy trees, and the fruite of thy lande.

43 The straunger which dwelleth with thee, shall rise about thee very high: and thou shalt stoope vnder him verie lowe.

44 He shall lende vnto thee, and not thou vnto him: he shalbe the head, and thou shalt be the taile.

45 And all these curses shall come vpon thee and followe thee and take holde of thee, vntill thou be vtterly rooted out, because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the Lorde thy God, by keeping his commaundementes and ordinaunces which he hath commaunded thee.

We know when the people of Israel chose the a king, with what affection they were led; euen of pride, for that they would not be inferiours to their neighbours. Morcouer they thought to be very sure, by hauing a head ouer the, that should haue the whole authoritie. And so ye see that the children of Abraham could not content themselves with their libertie, but desired to haue a king. Because they sawe the Egyptians, the Syrians, the Moabites, yea and the Tyrians, and other like people to haue kinges: they bare themselves in hand, that if they also might haue a head, all would goe well with them. Now like as pride and ambition was the cause that they chose a king in Israel: euen so became they hardhearted thereupon, supposing themselves to be out of all perils, by hauing such a defence: by meane where of we see that they despised the prophetes, vnder pretence that they thought themselves well fenced. The spirit of GOD foreseeing this (albeit that it was not yet come to passe) sayde in this Text, Thar the king which they shall appointe shoulde be lead captiue into a strange country: As if God should haue sayde that they might well seeke startinghooles to saue themselves: but they should stande them in no steede at all against his hande. This is the thing that we touched yesterday; namely, that when God is our aduersarie, we may not thinke to mayntaine ourselves against him by the meane of creatures, knowing that he will surely apply the to our destruction. Therefore let none of vs deceiue himselfe, neither let vs make our defence of that which is nothing but smoke and leasing. It is true that the king which was first chosen by the people of Israel, namely king Saule, was not brought to captiuitie: howbeit that he dyed in battayle: but the successours of Dauid were handled cruelly & with great reproch, notwithstanding that God had ordained them, yea and that they were a figure and Image of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And it is a horrible thing, that the kingdom which GOD had dedicated vnto himselfe, (as witnessed the annoynting) should be layde forth to such a reproch. Yee see howe the successours of Dauid which hadde receiued the promise that their seare shoulde be cuerlasting, and in the meane while were as the figures of our Lorde Iesus Christ: were handeled on such a sort that they were led prisoners in chains, were arraigned as offenders, had their eyes put out, hadde their childrens throtes cutte in their owne presence, were cast into a deepe dungeon, there to rotte or to be eaten to death with vermine: and that, as you see is a verie strange matter. But the vengeance of God was to extende to farre euen of necessitie, because of the frowardnesse of the people, whereof was none other remedie. And the more that God had suffered them and patiently waited for them, the more were they to be brought to the extremitie of all confusion, for despising so great goodnesse, and for being so frowarde and hardhearted against it. Nowe we may heereby gather a good warning, to witte, that (as was declared yesterday) albeit that according to the worlde, we seeme to stande in no perill: yet doeth it behouue vs to seeke to haue Gods fauour: for if he be not on our side, and we vnder his sauegarde, cursed are all the helps which we suppose to haue of creatures; for they serue rather to ouerthrowe vs. And therefore lette vs take heede that wee put not our confidence in the greatnesse of Princes, or in any other defences; for wee see howe they beebur meanes to blinde such as might else turne to GOD, and obtaine foregiuenesse of him: and that in the ende it shall ouerthrowe them vterly. Let vs then bee better aduised, and though we see me to be neuer so wel garded to y<sup>e</sup> worlde: yet let not that be a lette vnto vs to walke alwayes in the feare of God, knowing that all the fauor which we are able to purchase in the world is nothing at all; and that if God doe but blowe vpon it all vanisheth away in the minute of an houre. That is the thing which we haue to mark vpon this text.

Nowe it is sayde expressly, That as well as king as the subiectes shall serue strange Gods, yea euen of stone and of woodde, that is to say, puppettes and Idolles. No doubt but that God by these wordes ment to vter how dreadfull punishment was to come vpon the Iewes. For albeit that the nourishment that God giueth vs, and in like wise, all the Testimonies of his fatherly loue and goodnesse appertayning to this transitorie life, bee to bee highly esteemed: yet the most singular benefite that we receiue as long as wee liue in the worlde, is that we haue Religion well ordered, that his seruice be pure amongst vs, that we call vpon him, and that it bee lawfull for vs to claime him as our GOD, and that wee be not berayde and defiled with superstition and Idolatrie. That (say I) is the principall good thing wherunto the faithfull should aspire: and we be verie blockes and beastes, if wee preferre not the same before all manner of riches and pleasures, and before all our ease and commodities. Nowe then on the contrarie parte, the plague which ought to be most dreadfull to vs, and the horriblest calamitie that can fall vpon vs, is to be deprued of Gods seruice, and to haue our mouth shutte, so as wee can not call vpon him: and not onely that, but also through Tyrannie to be compelled to honour Idolles, and to defile ourselues with their abominations, and to peruert that which GOD hath ordained for the magnifying of his name amongst vs. When thinges be thus confounded, let vs vnderstande that GOD is departed from vs, and declareth himselfe to bee our mortall enemy, and hath quite forsaken and refused vs, and is loath that wee should theenceforth haue anie token or inking at all, either of his presence or of his fauour. And so, whereas Moses sayeth in this Text, That the Iewes shall serue strange Gods, he meaneth to threaten them more dreadfully than before. As if he should say; Right grieuous will it be vnto you when you shall be famished and want bread to eat, and water to drink, when your enemies shall robbe you of all your substance, and make hauocke of all your possessions, when ye shall pine away in griefe and sorrowe, without any meane to helpe you: surely these wil be verie hard thinges for you, specially when you can obtaine no fauour of your enemies, who shall be as wilde beastes against you: but yet is all this nothing in comparison of the other curse, that whereas in steede of honoring the liuing GOD, and of confessing that he hath chosen you to be his people, (which is an immeasurable blessing) in steede of such thinges I say, you should serue Idolles, and bee conuerfant amongst the superstitions of the Paynimes, and haue no more prayers neither Psalmes nor Sacrifices, but be disperfed and forlorne.

Nowe seeing that wee perceiue the naturall sense of Moses, let vs vnderstande that amongst all the blessings of GOD which we enioy in this present life, this ought to be preferred aboue all the rest: namely, to haue libertie to serue our GOD, and to make confession of our faith, and to declare that wee bee his people, of his Church and of his flocke. Truly it is slenderly knowen: howbeit, it is not in vaine that we be admonished thereof. Seeing then, that it hath bene the will of God to plant his Church amongst vs, and that we should haue his worde and his sacramentes, by the which he declareth that he dwelleth amongst vs: lette vs accept such a blessing according as it is worthy: It will serue vs to a double vse. First of all, when wee fare the better by the doctrine that is preached vnto vs euery day, such a treasure perisheth not but through our owne vnthankfulnessse: as wee see that manie folke thinke it ynough to bee at sermons, and it seemeth vnto them, that God had his ductie, so they haue vsed some ceremonie. But in the meane while the seede of life doeth perish without yeelding any fruite. To the ende therefore that we may apply the blessing that GOD bestoweth on vs, to this vse: when as wee haue libertie to heare his doctrine, and to bee trayned therein, and haue the Sacramentes for an establishment of our faith, and may declare that it is the liuing God whome wee worshippe and that hee goerneth

net vs: I say, let the same profite vs; and fo will it, if we acknowledge that our Lord can nor bestowe on vs any greater blessing than that is. And in the meane while we will take it patiently if other things doe faile vs: as where many want their commodities, let them not be grieued at the children of this worlde, which haue their delights, and do triumph, weltring themselves in their earthly pleasures; if the children of God haue not the same, let them knowe that they enjoy a thing which recompenseth double, yea an hundredth iolde: that is, that they can serue God. For to what purpose is it, that these wretched people which dwell in papistrie may lye slumbering in their nestes, and in the meane while be banished from the kingdome of GOD, and that Christ Iesus himselfe and his worde be banished from the country wherein they dwell? What auayleth it, that they bee serued in their houses, and in the meane while bee not suffered to serue GOD? What auayleth it, that they haue whercof to eate and drinke till they burst, and in the meane while be starued for want of ghostly foode? What auayleth it, that they be in honour and credite, and in the meane while be constrained to defile themselves with these treacherous dealings whereby GOD is despised, and his honour spoyled, and conueyed ouer to Idolles, and they be guiltie thereof? Alas: is not this a cursed state? Let vs therefore take it patiently, albeit that we be had in contempt to the worlde warde, and counted as vnderlings and castawayes, not hauing our ease, nor that which our fleshe desireth: seeing that GOD giueth vs this special libertie, that we may purely worshipp him and serue him, and be deliuered from this cursed seruitude of Idolles; let vs be contented, and esteeme this sayde benefite, according as it is worthie, so as wee be not grieued towards them that enjoy the goods of this worlde, and in he meane while are destitute of the grace of God, which remaineth amongst vs.

Besides this, here is a warning that seeing God hath put vs in possession and fruition of this libertie, we must take good heede that wee bee not deprivied thereof through our owne leaudencie: for this threatning which was made to the Iewes, is in likewise directed vnto vs. Let vs vnderstande therefore, that seeing we haue the Gospell preached vnto vs, if it preuaile not with vs, God must deliuer vs into the hands of other teachers when wee shall haue refused to obey him. And in verie deede, wee may not thinke that the horrible confusion which is in the Popedome, befalleth for any other cause, than that whereas they haue bene taught the pure doctrine of the Gospell, yet they haue bene rebelles to God, and haue not bound their neckes to beare his yoke; and therefore GOD could not otherwise doe, than deliuer them ouer to such Tyrannie as wee see. And truly the same was tolde them aforehand by Saint Paule: It is good reason (sayeth hee) that the worlde, seeing that it will not beleue the truth, should obey lies: and that they which would not be subiect to the liuing God, should be obedient to the creature, euen to the Idolles, which be nothing. Beholding therefore the examples before our eyes, and hearing the threatning as it lyeth heere: let vs learne, whilst GOD doeth keepe vs in his schoole, so to walke in his feare, and awe, as we may not be bereft of the welfare which we now enjoy; but that God may rather augment it, and cause it to preuaile. Moreouer let vs marke that they which doe serue Idolles, shall not bee excused therefore, although the same be a punishment of God. We knowe that one sinne is punished by another, according as it is spoken in diuers Textes of scripture: and as we see it specially auowed in the first Chapter to the Romanes, That they which serued not GOD in giuing themselves wholly to cleanness of life, shall be shaken off and giuen ouer to all maner of shameful lustes, and haue no more vnderstanding to discern betwix euill and good, than brute beastes, but shall runne into all manner of infamie. Hereby Saint Paule doth very well shew that when GOD giueth vs heade to bee plunged in the depth of our iniquities, it is for that we should be the more guiltie before him. They therefore which worshipp Idolles, notwithstanding that they be compelled thereto, and doe sigh and would faine be at libertie: yet cease they not to offend God: and thereby they should vnderstande the better, howe haynous their finnes bee, seeing that they must receiue such correction for them. As howe? Whereas I should glorifie my God, I must offend him, he is faine to cast me off, because I am not worthie to serue him, and he must deprivie mee of the liberty and mean to dedicate my selfe wholly to his obedience. Let all them therefore that be in the captiuitie of poperie and mingled amongst the superstitious, vnderstande that the vengeance of GOD lieth vpon them, and that they shalbe more and more guiltie for their seruing of Idolles. It is a poore reply for them to say, we doe it not willingly, wee wish that it might please God that the right and pure Religion were ouer all: but for all this, our Lorde doeth not exempt them from condemnation. And he is the competent Iudge. Let vs therefore rest vpon his worde: and seeke no more starungholes, but let them that indure such a state, vnderstande that it is nowe time or neuer, to turne to God, forasmuch as they bee as good as drowned therein, and haue a token of his wrath, aganist them, in that he is gone farre away from them. Therefore let them thinke thereuppon, and bee moued therewith to the quicke: according as the meaning of GOD is in this Text, and as we haue touched it heretofore.

Nowe Moses sayeth: That this people shall be a caring stocke, and an example, and a byworde, and a stopping stocke vnto the nations, amongst whom they shall be dispersed. Heere our Lorde sheweth that as his goodnesse should be knownen in the people people of Israell, and euery man should reioyce in the seede of Abraham, so shoulde the verie same people be abhorred and detested. The promise was thus: Al Nations shall be blessed in thy seede. The truth is that we must resort to our Lorde Iesus Christ, which is the verie bonde of the seede of Abraham; or else this blessing hath no place, nor grounde to stande vpon. Yet notwithstanding, they which were descended of the race of Abraham, shoulde haue bene blessed of GOD, so as they might haue been an example, that euery one desiring grace might haue sayde, O God take pitie vpon me, as vpon the children of Abraham, whome hee hath chosen and adopted. Such was the promise. See heere the threatening that was layde against it, that seeing GOD did smite so rigorously vpon the people whome hee hadde chosen, men might bee astonished at it and thinke thus with themselves: Is it possible that they whome GOD hath chosen, should now be cast off, and be persecuted and thrown vnder foote with all manner of reproch? And here vpon men may say: O God keepe mee that I fall nor to such case as this people is in, or else when they intende to curse, they might say, G O D doe vnto thee as hee hath doone to these vile Iewes. This much is to be vnderstoode of this place.

Nowe let vs marke that whereas the holy ghost spake thus by the mouth of Moses, it was not his meaning that this doctrine shoulde serue onely for two thousand yeares or thereabouts, which time the law lasted vntill the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ; but y<sup>e</sup> we at this day must apply the same to our owne vse: that inasmuch as God is come nigh vs, wee must walke in his feare in despite of Sathan, so as his goodnesse may shine in vs, and be perceyued to remaine vpon vs: and contrariwise that when wee be vnthankfull, and our God is as it were mocked of vs, it behoueth vs then to thinke thus: Wel may wee shrinke backe, but wee shall gaine nothing by all our shufftes: for in the ende wee shall not faile to come to shame. Verily wee see how it is sayde that the name of God shalbe blasphemed amongst y<sup>e</sup> misbeleeuers, because that they which were counted faithfull before, bee so cast downe, as G O D may seeme to haue falsified his promise and to haue deluded them, so farre forth must the vengeance of G O D extend. Nowe seeing it is so, let vs learne to submit ourselves to our Lorde while hee allureth vs vnto him with gentlenesse, and so to holde vs vnder his obedience, as we may not become a byword and a iesting stocke to all the wicked, which seeke nothing but to blaspheme G O D and to make a mocke of vs. Let vs (I say) looke well to that.

Moreouer, where Moses sayeth, That G O D will thus disperse his people: it serueth still to confirme his matter, to the ende that the Iewes, should not thinke that they were carried away by a storme, as it were by happy hazarde; but that they should vnderstande that it is the hand of GOD that is vpon them: and that forasmuch as this threatening preyayed not with them, therefore the thing that is happened vnto them should stande vs in some steede. For looke what vengeance we heare G O D speake of in this place, the same we see executed before our eyes. Is it not a horrible thing that the Iewes be abhorred at this day throughout the whole worlde? Yet were they the people whom G O D hadde sanctified for himselfe, they were his heritage, they were the royal priesthoode, according as they bee termed in Exodus, and they were the blessed Generation, and yet for all this, they be reiected of all men, inasmuch that men doe as it were shudder to behold them as though they ought to be cutte off from mankind. If it be sayde, O this may verie well happen to the faithfull, and the like besell euen to the holy Patriarkes; it did so in deede, howbeit after an other sorte. For the faithfull may well be put in feare, according as it is sayde in the prophet Esay, that folke shall point at them with the finger, and shunne them as farre off: and that is because G O D is not knowne, and his grace is despised. But whereas we speake of the Iewes at this day, it is very well seene that God is against them: for they be as rotten members, and their bodie is torne in peeces, and there remaineth nor any token of this blessing which God hadde bestowed on them. Therefore when we beholde such a looking glasse, let vs learne to make our commoditie thereof, and lette the example of them serue to seale this doctrine and to ratifie it, that wee tempt not G O D, and that wee continue not hardehearted so long till hee bee faine to wrappe vs vp in reproch with all the rest of the nations of the worlde. After this, Moses returneth to that which hee hadde touched afore: which is, That the people hauing sylled their groundes and their possessions, shall not drinke of the wine of their grapes, nor ease of the corne of their harvest, nor enjoy the fruites of their trees. This hath bene spoken afore; but there is heere a certaine difference to be noted. For therefore God had shewed, that when the Iewes had laboured for corne and wine, the enemies should come and take all away, and that all the same should be made a pray: but nowe he sayth, that without any force of man, and without any troubles of warre, they should neuertheless not faile to bee famished, and to bee destitute of all things that might doe them good. Why so? Because that wormes, bestes, Caterpillers, locustes, and all other things shall eate vpp the fruite of the earth. Loee what armies God stirreth vp against the wretched. Again, on the other side, there shal come blasting and sindging, so that all must needs perish: albeit that men touch not the Iewes, but let them alone in rest, yet shall they vnderstande that G O D hath other meanes to punish them, and that hee is alwayes armed infinite wayes. That is the thing which G O D meant to declare. And therefore lette vs take warning by this Text, that when wee haue escaped one plague, G O D will finde finde out an other for vs: and if we step aside to the left hand, & he neuertheless is armed against vs, and before wee haue gone three pases, hee stoppeth vs of our way. Loehow men preuaile, when they seeke lurkingholes; according as we see how the Prophete Elyas mocketh them that thinke by their subtiltie to escape the hande of God. Dreame on, dreame on your fill (saith he) yet shall the curse alwayes ouertake you. And in like case, although we haue no enemies to trouble vs, & to rise vp against vs to spoile our substance: yet let vs vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> God hath other meanes, which we know not, for to bereaue vs of y<sup>e</sup> which he hath put into our hands, and that we shall be abashed, to thinke how wee haue wherewith to satisfie vs, and yet that the bread shall be plucked out of our mouths: and that when we thinke to drinke, we shall be drie. And wherof commeth that? Euen of this, that it is our Lorde which giueth increase to the corne when it is sowne in the ground: it is he that sendeth the Grapes; It is hee also that causeth all thinges to prosper for our nourishment. We be taught by this text, first of all, that when we till the fieldes, sowe them & reape them, we must make prayers alwayes vnto God to blesse the earth, that wee may be fed through his grace; and wee must holde it for a certayntie, that it is his peculiar office to feede vs like as a father doeth his litle children. Thus much concerning that poynt. Wherof because I haue treated more at large heretofore, it sufficeth as nowe to touch it in one word.

Now furthermore let vs marke, that whereas God speaketh here of Locusts, wormes, Caterpillers, & other beasts, & whereas he speaketh of blasting & of burning which cometh thereof, hee sheweth y<sup>e</sup> he hath men of warre of a strange sort, when hee vouchsafeth not to doe men good: & this also serueth to pull downe the pride of men. For if we be spoyled by the enemies; verie well (will men say) this was doone by violence and plaine force. As for example when warre is, the whole countrie is spoyled, the richest foolke become beggers; and all this is wred vpon the warre, man is not blamed for it. But when it commeth to passe by other accidentes, so as men wote not by what meane their substance is wasted, though they see it melt away before their eyes, one yeare by haile, in other yeare by frost, and one while one way & another while an other, so as all thinges consume betwixt their handes; God by this ineane maketh it more manifest vnto men, that hee meaneth to confounde them vtterly. And indeede it we marke the course that he kept with the Egyptians, wee shall perceiue it much better. For we discern Gods iudgements better in other men than in our selues. If God had stured vp a great armie against the Egyptians, in steede of the yee and vermine: they would still haue continued in their pride and presumption: and albeit that they had bene a hundred times discomfited, yet woulde they not haue sayled to haue bene suffencked still. When they were persecuted with lice, and that there were such Swarmes in Egypt, they shoulde haue bene ashamed. Therefore let vs well note, that God by sending men such chastisements as be set downe here doth warne them to thinke on their frailtie. If Herod had bene slaine with a thunder bolt from heauen; it had not bene so fit a punishment for the blasphemie which he committed in suffering himselfe to be called a God, and not a man, as when God caused him to bee eaten and consumed with vermine, till hee was as rotten as coulde bee, inso much as hee was compelled by that disease to say (as hee that liued at that time and was his familiar beareth witness) Oh see here a goodly God, which is so rotten that he is enforced to feele that the hand of God doeth persecute him for his pride. Let vs therefore marke well, that God, after he had threatened the Jewes to sende them enemies, which by violence and force of armes shoulde spoyle the countrie of all manner of foodenow hee addeth moreover that although they were not vexed nor troubled at al by mans hand, nor anie thing were attempted by man against their possessions and lands, yet notwithstanding they shoulde not boote themselves by their labours, nor by the well tilling of their groundes. And why? Because the vermine shall wast all. And hee saith againe expressly, Thou shalt sow much and gather nothing, whereby hee sheweth that when men make neuer so good prouision aforehande, thinking vndoubtedly that all shall goe as they woulde wishe, yet shall they bee neuer the better for it. And it serueth to this end that we shoulde not fall asleepe when wee see sayre likelihoodes, according as wee bee commonly wont to despise God: as who shoulde say, that if there bee a good seedetime, wee are past danger, and God had no more to deale with the thinges that bee vpon the earth, or if we haue reapt and laide vp the Corne in our barnes, it shoulde make vs to be the more proude, because we see no likelihood of any more daunger. But in steade of this, wee shoulde euermore haue an eye to Godward, saying, Lorde, beholde, the earth waiteth for raine as though it were a thirste, and when thou giuest it, it is to make it to bring forth sustenance for our nourishment. Againe, such stormes might fall from heauen as woulde washe away all from vs, and one warre woulde be enough to bereaue vs of all that wee haue. Thus is all in thy hande O Lorde, and wee must depend vpon thy mercie, and bee all our life long in thy custodie; or else we must perishe, and all the prouisions that we haue shall profite vs nothing. Thus then must we call vpon God with diligence, and walke in his feare, seeing he is so gracious as to bee our fosterfather, and vouchsafeth to stoop so low vnto vs. Therefore had Moses verie well declared in this text, y<sup>e</sup> wee must not be beguiled by the goodly likelihoods & faire prouisions which we are able to haue. As for example, when we see y<sup>e</sup> corne to bee saine vpon the ground, we must not bee too lustie as though all were won, no not euen when the corne is gathered in. For God will be then called vpon, according as we are bound to make our dayly sute vnto him, saying, Giue vs our daily breade O Lorde, that day by day hee may feede vs. For albeit we haue neuer so much to day, yet to morrowe we may starue. For when it pleaseth God, he is able not only to destroy y<sup>e</sup> corne and wine in the feldest; but also he can make the to bee worth nothing, euen when we haue them in our garners and Cellers. Nay, we heare the threatnings that he maketh, saying, You shall carie corne to the mill by measure, and y<sup>e</sup> bread to the ouen by weight, and yet for all that, you shall be stil emptie and hungrie, when you haue eaten neuer so much, there shall be no vertue at all in the meat, neither shal you be sufficed therewith. Seeing our Lord telleth vs that he hath so manie wayes to famish vs, let vs not bee harde hearted: but let it rather waken vs, that we may altogether depende vpon him, and walke in his feare, and be his children, if we intend that hee shall still continue to do the office of a father toward vs. That is the effect of the things which we haue to remember. Here againe Moses repeateth these threatnings, whereof he had spoken afore, saying: That the Iewes and their linage shall be caried away into captiuitie. Now certainly there can nothing more bitter happen vnto men, than to see their children taken away by force, eaten, and deuoured by the enemies, and cruelly dealt withal: they had rather to haue buried them a hundred times. Now then let vs marke in fewe words that God meant to declare in this text, that although he haue bene neuer so bountifull towardes vs, and filled vs with his blessings, so as we be fenced in on all sides: yet he can write well bereaue vs of them all againe, and that plague shal be much more greuous vnto vs, than if we had neuer knowen, what his good nesse meaneth. Wherefore the largelier y<sup>e</sup> God bestoweth his blessings vpon vs, yea euen those blessings that concerne this transitorie life, let vs looke that wee bee alwayes so much the more prouoked to honour him and to serue him. For he for his part, will not cease to do vs good, so we turne not taylor, & giue him our. But seeing he allureth vs so gentlie, if we be willing to come vnto him; let vs assure our selues that his hande shall euermore be stretched forth to augment the giftes and blessings that we haue receiued of him.

Exod 7. 2. 10.

Matt. 6. 11.

In the end he returneth to the matter which we saw heretofore. All these curses shal come vpon thee, they shal seafe vpon thee, & thou shalt be caught and besieged by them on all sides, vntill that God hath quite consumed thee: euen because thou hast not hearkned to his voice, to obey his statutes and commandmentes, which he hath giuen thee. I haue tolde you herbefore howe that Moses hath oftentimes shewed to the Iewes, that no euill or aduersitie came vpon them but by the hande of God. But it behooueth vs also to know the cause. True it is that sometime God doth visite vs, and we cannot perceiue the cause thereof: for hee doeth it not for our sins, not for that he might not doe it, but for that he spareth vs. Yet is this alwayes to be looked vnto, that when we susteyne any afflictions, we must thinke on our sins, & enter into examination of them to condemne our selues before God: yea & we must not tary so long: but

We must benefite our selues by al manner of calamities which we see throughout y<sup>e</sup> worlde, knowing y<sup>e</sup> God punisheth mens sins by such meanes; and thereupon bridling our selues from the like. The matter then wherunto Moses doth nowe returne, is, that hauing shewed vs howe it is the Lord that withdraweth all maner of blessings from vs, it is he that curseth our possessions, and the fruites of the earth; it is he that sendeth vermine, stormes and tempests, to destroy all: it is he y<sup>e</sup> giueth power to our enemies: hee sheweth wherfore all this is done: to wit, because we haue rebelled against him, because we haue despised his law. That is y<sup>e</sup> verie cause why these plagues of vengeance do so pursue vs. Now then, let vs beare in minde the doctrine which hath bene sufficiently set forth hereaboue: which is, that when God doeth afflict vs, we must shutte our mouthes from replying or entring into plea: for we shal win nothing by standing in contentiō with him. Nay rather we must condemne our selues, confessing that hee dealeth iustlie. Although it be his will to proue our patience, and to trie vs to the vttermost; yet notwithstanding we must yeeld ourselues as guilte before him, & vnderstand that our sinnes deserue to bee thus roughly handled at his hands. Here is wherwith to cause all y<sup>e</sup> blasphemies, murmurings and complaints to cease which are daily heard in y<sup>e</sup> world. Whē there happeneth any aduersitie or anie other affliction, it is to the end we shold thinke on y<sup>e</sup> sinnes that we haue committed. Marke that for one point. And whereas mention is made of the commandments and statutes which God hath ordeined, the same exprefly and purposely concerneth vs. For albeit that the Papistes haue the law, yet is it buried in them: the Iewes (as saith Saint Paul) haue a vail before their eyes, so as they vnderstand nothing. The Turkes walke in their owne ignorance, so doe all the rest of the heathen. Now our Lord doth inlighten vs, and shew vs the way. There is therefore a more villanous rebellion in vs, when we do not according as we be taught, and also wee deserue that God shoulde vse greater rigor toward vs, and powre vpon vs the plagues of vengeance which bee here conteyned. Therefore let vs benefite our selues by the things that are saide here, concerning the commandments & statutes that God hath ordeined. And seeing it is so, y<sup>e</sup> hee speaketh daily vnto vs, declaring vnto vs his wil so familiarly: let euerie of vs submit himselfe obediently therunto. And whereas Moses saith further, That these curses shal catch holde vpon vs, and that wee shal be hemmed in round about by them, vntill they haue consumed vs: it is a warning to vs y<sup>e</sup> we shold not be selfe willed against God: for wcl may we seeke starting holes: but it shal nothing boote vs, (as hath bene saide heretofore) for the end shal be euer vnhappy for vs. And therefore let vs remember the complaint that God maketh by his Prophet Esay. He saith in that text (as we heard yesterday) that from the crowne of the heade to the sole of the foot, God must needs smite hard vpon all them that haue rebelled. And hauing spoken so by his Prophet Esay, he saith: What may I doe more? I haue not ceased to chastise my children: in somuch that from the crowne of the head to the sole of the foote, I haue so beaten them, that there is no whole nor sounde place, and yet they continue hardhearted still. Alas, what shall I doe? I must crushe them and breake them all too peeces. Then let vs be afraid to stande so wilful froward against our God, and let vs preuent the condemnatio here pronounced. And so soone as God beginneth to correct vs, let vs bestirre vs to returne vnto him, yea and let vs not tarie so long neither, but being admonished by his worde, let vs fall to bewaile our sinnes, and to be forie for them, and moreouer let vs aske forgiveness of them in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Now let vs fall downe before the maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our sinns: beseeching him not to suffer vs to bee so blinded in this mortall life, as not to know that alý miteries & wretchednes which we suffer, be warnings giuen vnto vs, to make vs to thinke vpon ourselues & vpon our liues: & also to moue vs to repentance. And therefore that if we be afflicted at his hand, it may not make vs to blasphemie his holy name, nor moue vs to impatientie: but rather tame vs, so as we may fare the better by al his corrections, and turne againe vnto him. And that for asmuch as we see the wretched world at this day to be so full of wretchednes and miseries, as is horrible, and also do behold the wrath of God for the sinnes that raigne therein: it may be a meane to hold vs in awe, praying God not to vse any such rigour toward vs: but rather that we fleeing for refuge to his mercie in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ, may be touched with true repentance: & increase and prosper more and more therein, vntill that, being deliuered from all our imperfections and sinns, our God do cloath vs with his righteousnes vnto the which wee bee daylie called. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The C<sup>Lx</sup>. Sermon which is the eight vpon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

46. And these things shall be for tokens and woonders to thee and to thy seede for euer, 47 Because thou hast not serued the Lorde thy God with ioye, and with a good heart, for the aboundance of all maner of things.

48 And thou shalt serue thine Enemy, whom the Lorde thy God will send against thee: I say thou shalt serue him in hunger and thirst, in nakednesse and in all maner of want. And he will lay a yoke of yron vpon thy necke, vntill he haue rooted thee out.

49 The Lord will bring a people vpon thee from a farre, and from the end of the earth, which shall fly as the Eagle: a people whose language thou shalt not vnderstand, 50 A people of a shameles countenance, which wil not reuerence the person of the aged, nor take pitie vpon the young.

BEcause that things bee so greatly confused in this worlde, that it is hard to discern who they bee whome God meaneth to punishe for their sinns; or to whome hee meaneth to shewe his loue:

Moses sayth expressly, that God will send such apparant tokens vpon them that bee stubborn against him, as shall bee wonderfull to them: In somuch as they shall be compelled to vnderstande, that the same cometh to passe: neither by fortune, nor by common meane; but that they bee extraordinary things, and that God doth shewe forth his power therein. It is true (as wee haue saide heretofore) that at the first sight it cannot bee well discerned, who they be whome God bueth, and who they bee whome hee mislikerh: because that (as Salomon saith) both the good and the euil is common vnto all. Hee that serueth God doeth some times prosper; and oftentimes hee is afflicted: And so is a despiser of God also. This is the cause saith he ý men become hardhearted, for it seemeth vnto them ý they win nothing by seruing of god: or rather that it is but lost labor. Moreouer it is oité

scene that the children of God bee sometimes more hardly handled than the most wicked in y<sup>e</sup> worlde, and therefore it is to bee gathered after carnall capacitie, that it is much better to despise God. Dauid confessed, that hee staggered as vpon the Ice, when he behelde the course of things to be such as that the good, and they that endeoured to walke in all maner of integritie; must be constrained to drinke the water of troubles, to eate the bread of heauinesse, and to moisten themselves with teares: and in the meane while the wicked, which cease not to doe euill, to lue at their ease, and in pleasure: whereby it should seeme that God loueth them. And what a dealing were that? But our Lorde declareth in this place, that in the ende he will make it apparant to the world that hee corrected at his hand, that their sinnes are the cause why they suffer smarte, howbeit that it be not so quickly persecuted. We haue scene heretofore among other 20 curses which Moses denounced, y<sup>e</sup> they which cast off the worde of God be constrained to borrow, and to be euer in neede: and that the others which shoulde borowe of them, haue wherewith to help themselves. But we see how all the children of God fall into necessitie, and find not any y<sup>e</sup> wil comfort therin: they make many turns before they meete with a man that wil vse gentlenesse toward them: and this seemeth cleane contrarie to the other. But yet doeth God exercise his people after y<sup>e</sup> manner: and in that respect it is that I said, that when we bee afflicted, whether it bee with pouertie, or with sickenesse, or anie other way, we must not fail to enter into accout with God, that is, to examine our life, and to see whether we haue not committed manie fautes or no: & then shal euerie one of vs finde himselfe faultie.

Againe on the other side, if wee perceiue not the cause why that God is moued to vse rigour towardes vs: let vs content our selues, that hee knoweth the same to be profitable for vs: and y<sup>e</sup> if we had not already offended him, yet were we in way to do it: and he hath prevented it: and that all these corrections bee to bring vs lowe, to the end that we shoulde walke vnder him in feare, and that our fleshe shoulde not be ouerlustie, as it is thereunto enclined: for God doeth some times forsee the pride of a man, and then he taketh away the occasions and the obiectes. Besides this he knoweth that a man will be too iolie in his pompes and delights; and therefore hee cutteth off the occasion aforehande, whereby the partie is letted, so as hee cannot doe as hee woulde. Seeing that our Lord prouideth aforehand for our welfare after such manner, let vs thinke on the faulces which we haue earst committed. Moreouer if there were no further meaning in it, than to exhort vs to repentance; euen that were much: but we haue alwayes to consider, howe God cannot too much prouoke vs to come vnto him: for euerie strawe is enough to stay vs in this world, and in the meane while wee haue no minde of the heauenly life; or if we thinke thereon, it is so coldly, that our traueilling towardes it is not with so earnest affection as it ought to be; and therefore God is faine to deale with vs by manie afflictions. After this manner ought euerie of vs to behaue himselfe toward him. As touching others, we may not at the first dash condemne them whome God doth punish: but we must remember that which is saide in the Psalme; Blessed is the man that deemeth wisely of y<sup>e</sup> afflicted in the day of his trouble. But wee be wonderfull hastie in that point. As soone as wee see a poore man in miserie and wretchednesse, O say wee, God plagueth him, and he hath deserued it: we be in that case verie rash Iudges. If God smite vs; after that he hath bestowed many stripes vpon vs, we will hardly remember that wee haue sinned: but as concerning others, our tongues be verie quick to condemne them. But we shoulde much rather encline to gentlenesse: as for example, when we see the faithfull to suffer, we shoulde thinke thus: Behold howe God dealeth with his children, instructing vs thereby, that there is no rest in this world, and that our happinesse is in heauen, and it is thither that wee ought to lift v<sup>p</sup> our hearts. And againe, if this happen to the greene trees, what shall become of the drie wood? If God spare not them which haue induedoured to followe his worde, as appeareth vnto vs, what shall become of the skorners thereof, as sayth the Prophet: If iudgement beginne at the house of God: miserable then shall they be which haue hardened themselves against him. Saint Peter also doeth admonishe vs to put the same in vre. And so see hee howe wee ought to deale in this matter. Moreouer, if wee haue patience, and meekenesse and bee apt to bee taught, it is certaine that we shall euermore feele a tast of the goodnesse of God in the midst of the afflictions which hee sendeth vs. True it is that oftentimes wee shall bee put in feare by them. There will be a kinde of vnquietnesse in vs which will so vex vs that we shall thinke our selues vtterly forlorne vnlesse GOD withdrawe his hande very quicklie. If he prolong our afflictions; then we be altogether blanke, our courage faileth vs: so that if we be not held in with y<sup>e</sup> feare of God, and with patience, to be altogether quiet vnder his hande: we be euermore wandering. But if we holde vs still there, then shall wee vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> he chastiseth vs in his mercie and goodnesse: according as it is saide in the Prophet Abacuc, That the faithfull after they haue bene in heauinesse, doe in deede vnderstande: that God doeth neuertheless vphold them, and forgetteth them not: but doeth alwayes temper & mitigate their afflictions, so as they feele his fatherly goodnesse towardes them, and therewithall doe comfort themselves, and can well say with Dauid, Lord if thou wilt bee angrie, it is but for a little while: but thy goodnesse endureth all our life long. Beholde (I say) here wee may alwayes haue matter wherewith to cheere our selues, and to reioyce in the midst of our afflictions: so as we may perceiue indeede that our Lorde will not faile to be mercifull vnto vs, notwithstanding that hee vseth some rigour towardes vs, to trye our patience, and to quicken vs v<sup>p</sup>pe to come vnto him, and to labour to the eccleſſiall life. But we muſt euermore haue an eye to the ende, according as Dauid ſaith.

And therefore in the pſalme 37. hee exhorteth vs not to be greeued at y prosperitie of the wicked:
for he knoweth that our eyes be as it were daſſed.
When we ſee a wicked body to be at eaſe and to haue all wiſhes, we ſtreight waies conclude that God hath no regard to deale with me according as they be worthy: by means wherof we ſtagger and are in ſuch perplexitie as we wote not what ſhal becom of vs. Now Dauid ſaith; that in thinking ſo, he played the beaſt, and was out of his wittes, and hee confeſſeth that hee was in that point, bereft of reaſon and iudgement, affirming that he did wrong to al the generation of Gods children, vntill he had looked into the Sanctuarie. It is true, that in the thirty & ſeuenth Pſalme which I alleadged here before, he ſaith, I paſſed by and ſawe the wicked flouriſh and growe high like a Cedar tree of Lebanon: and after that I had turned me about, he was cut downe as a tree that had no more leit but y drie ſtocke vpon the earth: ſo as there remained no ſigne of him at al.
Such changes doe we ſee in this world; but put y caſe we ſawe none: yet muſt we enter into the Sanctuarie of God, as it is ſaid in the threeſcore and thirteenth Pſalme. And there we muſt waite patiently till God make it apparant vnto vs that al afflictions be profitable for his children: and that hee ſendeth them as medicines for their health: and contrariwiſe, y the proſperitie which he permiteth to the contempters of his law and iuſtice, ſhall be conuerted to their great confu-ſion. We muſt therefore learne to hold our wits and ſenſes in awe, that we wander not in the afflictions which God doth ſend vs.

But to returne to the purpoſe of Moſes: let vs note well howe hee ſaith that the puniſhmentes which God ſendeth vpon them that haue rebelled againſt him to the vttermoſt, and woulde not be corrected: ſhall be as tokens and wonders to them and to their poſteritie: that is to ſay, he will puniſh them after a ſtraunge ſaſhion, and as hath not bene wonted amongſt men: ſo as they ſhal be compelled in ſpite of their teeth to ſay: This is the verie hande of God. And indeede can there be a more beaſtly contempt of God found, than that which was in Pharao? Hee was a man not onely drunken with pride, but altogether ſenſe-leſſe: he was a man that deſpised the maieſtie of God, and a man ſo rebellious, as was not in any wiſe to be dealt withall. When he heard Moſes and Aaron ſpeake, he laughed them to ſcorn: his feeling of the firſt ſtrokes coulde not make him to yeelde. And in the ende hee needed not a Prophet to admoniſh him: for he himſelfe coulde ſay, Surely this is the finger of God. Wee ſee therefore howe God doeth oftentimes expreſſe his power in ſuch wiſe, that euen the moſt fierce are conſtrained to perceiue and to thinke that there is ſome maieſtie in heauen, which afore that time they had not accompred of, and there-vpon to enter into conſideration of their finnes and to confeſſe them, and to be the more huely touched therewith. That is it which Moſes meaneth here concerning ſignes and woon-ders.

This matter is worthe to be marked, For (as I haue ſaide) if God beginne to puniſh men, it is euermore ſaide to be fortunate, this is agreeable to our ſtate, (ſay they): we know that mans life is ſubiect to much wretchednes, and in y meane while the hand of God is not regarded. And though he double it, yet do men continue dull, & ſeeme as though they coulde euermore hide them, & ſcape away, becauſe they enter not into their confeſſences to ſearche out the finnes that be there, but are loath to knowe them, as if a man ſhould goe hide himſelfe in a darke corner of ſet purpoſe to ſhun the brightneſſe of the ſun at noone days. Euen ſo doe we in al the chaſtiſementes which God doth ſend vs to warne vs of our ſins and to drawe vs to repentance. But in the end God doth augment his puniſhmentes in ſuch ſort, as they become miracles: that is to ſay, they exceede the common meaſure, order and courſe of nature, ſo as we might be rauſhed with aſtoniſhment, and thereby perceiue that God doth then ſhewe himſelfe, as though his hand appeared vnto vs froſ heauen. And that is the thing which he declareth more fully in the xxvi. Chapter of Leui. For after he hath pronou-ced the ſentence vpon them that receiue the doctrine of ſaluacion, he ſaith, I will ſend vpon you ſeuentimes as much, if I perceiue that nothing do preuaile with you: If my puniſhing of you amend you not, I will ad there to ſeuentimes as much. And hee repeateth this ſentence againe in the end; & ſaith, If you will walke at al aduenture againſt me, I will walke alſo at all aduenture againſt you. Now this word, Aduenture, hath relation to the blockiſhnes that is in vs, which we haue touched here before. For we ſee very well the aduerſities that doe befall vs in this worlde, & wading yet further we confeſſe that it is God that puniſheth vs: but to thinke thereon in good earnest; and to iudge euerie man himſelfe by calling our finnes to remembrance ſo often as God giueth any incling of them: it is the furtheſt part of our thought. Let euerie man looke to him-ſelfe: How many afflictions haue we in the yere which ſhould be teſtimonies vnto vs of y wrath of God, & as it were ſummons of apparance before him, warning vs to ſue to him for pardon, and to haue purg vpon vs? Scarſely doth any one day paſſe, but that a man is warned five or ſixe times as if God ſhould ſay vnto him; Wretched creature, why haſt thou no minde of thy ſoule? Why haſt thou no care to beſeech me to receiue thee to mercie? But caſe once in a month will a mā enter into examination of his life to condemne himſelfe; and if we doe it, it is but coldly. But we ought to be ſo aſhamed and vexed at the feeling of Gods wrath as though we ſaw hell lie open before our eyes. But wee ſee that very few doe thinke thereon: for euerie of vs forgetteth hi himſelfe. That is the thing which God mea-neth by this worde of walking at all aduentures againſt vs. Yet doe wee follow on our courſe ſtill, as though no harme had touched vs, we ſwallowe vp our afflictions. They that is indeede trouble vs, when they pinch vs, at do we nothing but shake our eares (as they say) and followe still our owne way. Then goe wee at all adventures, yea euen with exceſſiue ouerweening, when we acknowledge not the hande of God, ne perceiue that hee is a iudge, to the end that we might miſſelike of our ſinnes, and euerie man labour and indeuour to withdrawe himſelfe therefrom. Our Lorde therefore ſaith, I will come againſt you at all adventures, as if he ſhould ſay, I will croſſe you and ouertwhart you, & thinke not to gaine a nic thing either by your hardening of your heartes, and by your kicking againſt me, or by your dulneſſe in that yee perceiue not howe it is my hande that muſt bring you againe: No no, (ſith hee) I will bee as ſtout and headſtrong as you, yea and more ſtout and headſtrong to. For I will come at all adventures, I will let my plagues tunne out at randon, ſo as I will breake your neckes, and beate you both backe and bellie, and that without pittie. Nowe we ſee howe much this word ought to wey with vs, where Moſes ſaith: That the plagues ſhall bee for ſolems and wonders, to all ſcorners: inſomuch that when they haue bleared out their tongues at the threatenings of God, and haue nodded their heade againſt the firſt corrections which he ſendeth them, & haue bitten on the bridle: he proceedeth on ſtil & ceafeſt not to wring them, but driueth them in the end to come to a reckning do the worſt they can, & to ſay openly, It is the hand of God that preſſeth vs; theſe are the miracles, they be no ordinarie things not according to the courſe of nature.

Now therefore, let vs learn, not to prouoke Gods wrath ſo far againſt vs; but let vs ſuffer ourſelues to be tamed by him; and let vs yeelde our ſelues conformable & gentle ſo ſoone as he hath ſummoned vs, let vs yeeld ourſelues guiltie without vſing any ſtaring holes: for we ſhall win nothing thereby. There is nothing better than to enter into pure and free confeſſion, ſaying, Lord what wilt thou do to theſe frail & wretched creatures? It is true y we haue a hundred folde deterued to be ſuncken: but yet for all that, wee flee vnto thy mercy: wherefore haue pittie vpon vs. When we haue thus condemned our ſelues, it is a meane to pacifie the anger of God, which thing will not be done by hardening of our hearts. For then he will euer more proceede farther, vntill hee haue brought vs to theſe ſignes and wonders, that be here mentioned. Again God muſt needs do the like alſo in reſpect of mens ſlouthfulnes & negligence, or rather vtter ſenſeleſnes. If wee could be ſubdued at y firſt blow: God would take no pleaſure in laying plague vpon plague. But when he ſeeth that there is ſuch a kinde of ſtournes, and ſuch a preſumption in vs, that we wil not itoope nor bow our necks: he muſt needs hold on vntill he make vs to feel in very deed & after a ſtrange manner, that it is he before whom we muſt yeeld account. Let vs therefore marke well how the ſtinted malice of the worlde is the cauſe why we ſendeth ſo ſtrange corrections to put vs in we And if we conſidered well the ſtate of the uel. at this day, it would make y haire of our on as it ſtand vpright. Certainly they doe all ſigh at the feeling of the ſtripes, and they complain, howbeit not to any amendmet, but rather they bite on y bridle: inſomuch that when thoſe which be not altogether blockiſh do make comparifon of the preſent ſtate, with that which we haue ſeene before the wrath of God was on this wiſe prouoked; they ſee it as it were a ſea gulſe: & that ought to make vs afraid. And ſo let vs come backe againe to that which Moſes declareth, to wit, that God muſt needs haue found the world very rebellious & hardhearted when he augmented his puniſhments in ſuch ſort: for it ſhoulde neuer come to that paſſe, were it not that men were otherwiſe vnreformable. Let vs not accuſe God of cruelty, when we ſee his rigor to exceed in puniſhing vs; but let vs acknowledge that our ſtubbornneſſe is ſo great, that our Lorde muſt needs handle vs after that faſhion: for otherwiſe he ſhoulde neuer ouermaſter vs.

That is the thing which we haue to beare in mind. Howbeit that is not al: for we muſt alwaies feare that which is to come. And ſith we ſaw that God hath thus increaſed his puniſhmentes not vpon one man only, but vpon the whole world: let vs bethinke vs to call our ſelues home againe before he fall to ſtriking of vs with maine blowes to our confuſion and vtter vndoing, without giuing vs any more reſpit to come to the acknowledgement of our ſins. For it is the foreſt point of Gods wrath, when ſinners be taken after ſuch a ſort out of this world, y they cannot haue remembrance of their ſins, nor take breath to reſort vnto God, or to aſke him forgiuenes. Let vs beware leaſt Gods vengeance proceede ſo farre. And for ſomuch as we ſee y the aduerſities of theſe daies be verie great, let vs acknowledge that we haue prouoked God verie much, & that it is not for vs to abuſe his patience any longer. Thus ye ſee in effect what we haue to beare away: ſpecially whe we ſee y ſin doth ouerflow, ſo as all the world is infected with corruption. Although a man doe good, yet neuer theleſſe for inſmuch as it is euer more mixed w ſin, he ſhalbe chaſtified, howbeit, not at the firſt daſh: for as I haue ſaid afore, God doeth ſpare the wicked and carrie for them, and in the meane while puniſh the good that ſeek to walke a right: but yet in the end he alwaies plagues the diſpayers of his law & maiſtie. And as touching the good, he will make the to feele his grace to their ioy, ſo that although hee exerciſe the with manie chaſtitements & aduerſities: yec notwithstanding, they ſhal not faile to know him to be their God & father ſtil, & to reſt vpon him. As for the wicked they be not diſpoſed to taſt or to feele the loue & goodnes of God: but are rather wood againſt him. But when iniquitie is become as a maine ſea, & al men are corrupted: the vengeance of God muſt alſo ouerflow, ſo as none may be free from it. We haue ſeen already y threatning y was made here before, namely y Deut. 18. y people ſhould be led into captiuitie with their king. When this came to paſſe, were none carried away into captiuitie but the wicked, and ſuch as ſtroue againſt the Prophetes, and ſuch as deſpised the good doctrine, and ſuch alſo as were headſtrong againſt God like wilde beaſtes?

Yes, there was Ieremie himselfe who had called vpon the people fittie yeeres together and neuer ceased to crie: What do ye, ye wretched people? Yet notwithstanding wee see that while others sported them, he wept and wailed: and not contented with that, saide; Who can turne my heade into teares, so as my braine may bee as a fountaine gushing out continually, that I may bewaile the finnes and calamities of my people? See how the holy Prophet, (after that he had laboured in the seruice of God, and sought against all the wicked, and made warre against all manner of iniquitie and stubbornnesse): is faine to be led away captiue aswell as the rest, and to be put to reproch, not of being caried to Babilon, for that had bene the best that could haue bin wished at that time: but God gaue him not the fauour to be brought thither, but he was faine to be harried into Egypt: yet had hee sayde, Cursed bee they that goe into Egypt: goe ye into Babilon and serue the king of Babilon; be quiet and obedient there, and beare patiently this punishment of God, and in the ende he will take pitie on you. The holy Prophet had not the same libertie. So then wee see, that when calamities come for the generall corruption of all men, the good are wrapped vp amongst the euill. And why is that? By cause it is not almost possible to walke amongst such infectious, and not to bee somewhat spotted therewith. Albeit that Ieremie resisted the euill as much as he coule: yet fauored hee of the publike corruptions of the people, and therefore it behoued him to be punished with the rest; howbeit God did not execute such vengeance vpon him, as he did vpon the despisers of his lawe, nor by a great deale. For Ieremie had alwayes a good testimonie, that God did guide him; and when he was in Egypt, he was by a speciall priuiledge free from y<sup>e</sup> curse that hee had pronounced vpon all them that would goe into Egypt: for they drewe him thither by force. Yee see therefore howe God wrapeth vp his people amongst the rebels, but yet he saucth them after a marauilous manner, which giueth them continuall cause of comfort in him. As much is to be sayd of Daniel. Daniel is set forth vnto vs as a myrror of integritie. Ezechiel speaking of him, putteth him for the third of the most holy that could be chosen; yet was he caried to Babilon; and was it for the finnes of others? He was an hypocrite and had lied vnto God, if it had not bin for his owne finnes. For he saith expressly in the ninth chapter, I haue made confession as well of mine owne finnes as of the finnes of my people. He saith cuen at the first, Lord we haue offended thee, & bin disobedient, we haue rebelled against thee, both wee and our fathers, our Kings and Rulers: which wordes of his are spoken generally: It may be sayde, that he put himselfe in the number with the others. But, to the end that nothing should be replied thereunto, he goeth further and saith, I haue confessed my finnes and the finnes of my people. Whereby wee see that Daniell, whatsoeuer integritie and perfection was in him, was neuertheless stained with the common vices, and therefore deserued to feele his part and portion of the punishments that God sent vpon all the people. Heereby wee are also the better warned, to stand in feare and to walke in the more warinesse when wee see the world so corrupted; assuring our selues, that in the ende wee must feele by experience, that God hath spoken in good earnest, where hee sayeth, that hee will come stubbornly against vs, if we continue in going stubbornly against him; This is in effect all that wee haue to remember in this Text, where Moses speaketh of Signes and myraeles. Wherefore let vs open our eyes in this case, and let vs not linger vntill GOD compell vs to come to him by force, and stretch out his mightie arme against vs: but let vs receiue his worde, and let it serue vs for Spectacles to beholde his iudgements afarre off, and let vs not tarie the executing of his extreme rigor.

Nowe he addeth therewith, By cause thou hast not serued thy God with a good will, and cheerfully when thou haddest abundance of all manner of thinge. Heere doeth hee reprocue the Iewes, for that they coule not abyde that God should intreate them gently. And it is not all onely to them that hee speaketh, but also vnto vs. We haue therefore a generall doctrine to be gathered of this speeche; namely, that God of his owne nature, is inclined to allure vs vnto him by gentle and louing meanes, like as a father goeth about to winne his children, by being merrie with them, and by giuing them all that they desire. If a father coule alwayes laugh with his children, and fulfill their desires, all his deliight should surely be in them: such a one doeth God shew himselfe to be toward vs. In deede he is not passionate as men are: we may not thinke y<sup>e</sup> God is like vnto vs; but in so much as we comprehend not his maiestie, because it is too high, he is faine to humble himselfe, and to vse a kinde of speech fitt for our rudenesse and for the weakenes of our wittes. Neuertheless it is certaine that the proprietie of God is to winne vs gently, as a father endeouoreth to win his children. What is it that God requireth? That wee shoulde serue him with a franke and free heart, yea and euen with gladnesse. In what manner? Verily that because he dealeth gently with vs, and giueth vs all things that we neede, we therefore ought to be quiet and well contented, if we be not vnthankfull. And so let vs conclude, that all the calamities, troubles, wretchednes and miseries, which happen in this world, be the fruits of our finnes, and that wee driue God to handle vs with such rigor. He is faine (as ye would say) to transforme himselfe, and to forsake his nature to ouermaster vs, because hee seeth that sinne is exceeding great in vs, and that we can no skill to turne the good to our benefite, which he is ready to doe vs. Howbeit (as I haue said afore) God doth not alwayes tarie till we haue offended him: we must needes graunt that he preuenteth our finnes: he seeth that we be in danger to fall, and he doeth remedie it in due time. Yet notwithstanding, all the corrections which we endure in this world, proceede of our finnes: and the filchines that is in vs, is the cause why God sendeth vs not abundance of good things according to our desire. And if there were nothing else, but this, y<sup>e</sup> men fall asleepe, & say: themselves in these earthly pleasures, so as they be not able to looke to the place which David doth call them to; namely, to satisfie our selues with the sight of God, & to reioyce in his presence. Seeing y<sup>e</sup> men cannot attain thereunto, but are euer wedded to these base things; doe not we deserue that God should withdraw y<sup>e</sup> plenty y<sup>e</sup> he was ready to giue vs, for y<sup>e</sup> he perceiue that it would burst vs; and in stead of suiteining vs it would foerload vs y<sup>e</sup> it would beare vs down to the ground. This is y<sup>e</sup> cause why our Lord vseth not such liberality toward vs as we desire. For he for his part is not dreined dry, neither doeth hee feare to bee impouerished, by sending vs plenty of all manner of good things. We know he is a fountaine y<sup>e</sup> can neuer bee drawn dry: but when he seeth that we wast & deuour his benefites, and be worse than drunken, & that besides the riotousnes which wee vse, we be also vnthankful as not onely to fall into forgetfulness, but also to spurne against his maicesty, & to turne our backs vpon him: inso much that if we haue wherwith to maintaine our selues well, we fall to Gluttonie, pomposnesse, whoredom, and other loosenesse, and to be short, the abuses which we commit in the vsing of Gods blessings, are as an vnmeasurable seagulle: therefore when he seeth such things, he withdraweth his hand & sheweth not himselfe so liberall toward vs. This is the Summe of that we haue to beare in mind. And therefore, seeing that God for his part is alwayes readie to multiply vs, & to giue vs plentie of all good things, were it not that we be not able to brooke it: we must vnderstand that wee are as sicke folke, which must haue a small pittance allowed vnto them, and be constrained to a diet. And why? Because they be not able to brooke their foode. Whereupon we ought well to vnderstande that which Moses speaketh to our reproche. For what a shame is it, that we cannot abide that God should vse vs gently and after a fatherly sort: Behold, God offereth himselfe, not onely in wordes, but also in deedes: and he offereth to giue vs all that wee desire. But what? Hee seeth vs not disposed to receiue him, wee despise him, and thrust away his grace; must there not bee then a horrible frowardnes in men? Let euery one of vs excuse himselfe as much as he will: yet must this saying needes bee verified, and when we haue kicked and spurred neuer so much, yet shall wee at the last be conuicted of this maliciousnesse, that we could not finde in our heartes to suffer G O D to deale gently with vs, we haue serued him joyfully and with a merrie heart. Therefore let vs not woonder though hee doe handle vs as wee deserue, when wee be so rebellious against him. For when hee seeth that wee kicke against him, hee must needes breake vs, and deale with vs after such a fashion as wee may vnderstande that hee is our maister: not that they which bee punished, doe serue G O D: but for that they vnderstande that hee hath the maisterie ouer them, when the punishmentes come so farre that they are become signes and wonders. When G O D appeareth vnto them as it were in a visible manner from heauen; then doe they perceiue, Alas I cannot flee nor scape the hande of G O D. Then doe they vnderstande that hee hath the Lordship ouer them, not that they willingly yeeld themselves thereunto, but that they lye languishing and astonied therein, as men locked vp in prison. The thing then which wee haue to remember, is that sith wee coulde not bee contented, that God should handle vs gently by bowing vnder his hand, that he might guide vs, turne vs and returne vs which way he listeth: wee must bee forced by trouble and sorrow, to vnderstand that he hath full souerainty ouer vs, and that his vtter breaking and overthrowing of vs, is by cause wee could not abide to bee governed by his hande, when hee was ready to guide vs. This is the matter that we haue to note: in the second place.

Wee see the very same in all mankinde, not onely touching the afflictions of this present life; but also wee haue this reproch layde vpon vs, that we bee still as it were, famished for want of spirituall blessings. For our father Adam was created in such state, that the worlde was an earthly Paradise: The whole earth yeelded him all good things to his wishe: hee endured neither heate nor colde, nor any greuous want. Thus was our father Adam appointed Lorde and Maister ouer all the worlde, all the Elementes and all the beastes of the earth serued him quietly, and all fruites serued his tast and fauour. What was hee in his person? Hee bare the Image of God, and was of so great noblenesse and worthinesse that hee was as the Angels of heauen: and hee had dwelled in this worlde, with all his lynage, as in a place where hee shoulde haue had no trouble; but hee could not abide to bee so gently entreated. When God had thus enriched him with his benefites, hee must needes mistake himselfe, hee could not serue God with a good heart nor with ioy. What could haue greued him? For God shewed him a sweete and a gracious countenance, and powred out the treasures of his fatherly loue towards him; but Adam could not abide that, but through his vnthankfulnesse hee alienated himselfe from God. And in what case are wee now? Wee must serue God in hunger and thirst, in nakednesse and reproche, for the earth is cursed vnto vs. When we haue tilled it, it must bring vs fourth thistles and thornes. Wee see the seasons contrary; when we wait for a good yeere, we see hayle or frost, drought or rayne, which serue to pluck the bread out of our mouthes, and to disappoint vs of our foode. Wee see the ayre troubled, and infectious which oftentimes engender diseases. Great is the toyle of men. For when they haue gotten foode with greates distresse; yet want they wherwith to cloath themselves. See there (I say) in what taking we be. And wherefore? Because wee would not serue our God cheerefully and with a good hart, when he gaue vs abundance of all all manner of blessings. But this is not the cheefe matter, (as I haue sayde heretofore:) for wee are destitute of the righteousnesse of God. Our very true ornament, was that wee could haue fashioned our selues to all manner of right; and now we be spoyled thereof. As then wee had reason and vnderstanding: but now we become beastly, for the brightnesse that shoulde shine in vs, is bur darkenell. Againe, we be covered with reproche: and whereas the Image of God shoulde shyne in vs, now we haue the markes of sinne; so that euen our very bare bodies must giue vs to vnderstand of the same: insomuch that if a man bee naked, hee is ashamed of himselfe. And why? God doeth by this meane shewe vnto vs what infection there is in our soules, in that wee bee sayne to hyde vs, as not being worthy to bee numbered amongst his creatures. Finally wee bee like dry earth. Truth it is that wee bee ouer fruitfull in euill: but of goodnesse, what is founde in vs? Seeing wee bee thus vnfinisshed of all graces, it is good reason that wee shoulde languish in this fraile lyfe, by cause wee could not serue our God with ioy and a good heart, at such tyme as hee had powred out all his riches most perfectly vpon vs.

Nowe sith wee beholde the euill that is in all mankynde; let vs also apply the same particularly to our selues. Therefore when as our Lorde visiteth vs, and maketh vs to feele afflictions that bee straunge vnto vs; let vs cast down our heads, and enter into such examination of our selues as thus: Goe to, whereas GOD hath giuen vs wherewith to serue him, howe doe wee discharge our selues thereof? If there come an ill yeere that bringeth dearth of Corne or wine, so that famine doth threaten vs; let vs looke howe wee honoured GOD in the tyme that hee gaue vs plentie. If wee see there is aboundaunce of wine, then drunkennesse hath his full scope, so that men cannot be restrained from breaking out into all manner of disorder, and (which worse is,) they sticke not to blaspheme the name of GOD, and to iust out into all disorder, and to take leaue to surfeiting and glutting of themselves out of all measure. In aboundaunce of Corne wee see the like; men bee so proude thereof that they cannot abyde either warning or discipline, but they kicke against GOD, and their pryde is moreouer: matched with crueltie, so as euery man taketh to himselfe; hee that hath the most, will if hee can playe the Tyrant ouer his neighbours, in taking no pitie vppou them that bee in want. At this poynt are wee in the tyme of plentie. Therefore is our Lorde sayne to chaunge his Copie, and to manifest his Maicstie vnto vs, and to compell vs to vnderstande what souerainie and dominion hee hath ouer vs, seeing wee cannot finde in our heartes to serue him with a cheerefull heart and with a good will, nor to giue ouer our selues vnto him. Are wee in rest? All our iudeouer is howe to plucke out one another eyes, and to torment our selues lyke Cattes and Dogges. And if wee warre not with men, wee fight against GOD, which is farre worse. And if wee holde on, let vs not be greued that wee bee confounded altogether, seeing wee set vp our selues agaynst the Maicstie of him, vnder whome wee ought to bowe. Nay, wee see that most commonly men make warre against GOD, when hee giueth them rest: wee shall see both generally and particularly that they which bee at leasure to doe euill, doe persecute the Church, and torment the poore saythfull ones. As soone as GOD giueth them any respite, they seeke nothing but occasion to doe hurt and to exercise their crueltie. And this is to be seene, not onely in the enemies of the Church, but also in all others: insomuch that both greate and small, when GOD hath left vs in rest, and wee haue made an ende of warring one against another, wee fall to despising of GOD one way or other. Let vs not wonder therefore, if when a warre is finished; it beginne againe immediately. For it is needfull that GOD should deale with vs in such manner, otherwise he cannot rule vs.

And lets mark well howe it is sayde heere moreover, That GOD will raise vp a barbarous people against such as would not be obedient vnto him. Such is Gods reigning ouer vs, that hee desireth to bee as a father vnto vs, rather than to bee a dreadfull King or Prince ouer vs. It is true that wee must doe him homage as to our soueraigne Lorde, and that wee must behaue our selues as his people in all subjection and humilitie, submitting our selues vnder his obedience: but yet therewithall hee doeth the office of a father towards vs, and will be knowne to bee a father. For hee speaketh after an amiable manner, insomuch that although his commandementes be harde vnto vs, because of our malice and rebellion as concerning the flesh: yet notwithstanding after hee hath declared his will vnto vs, hee exhörteth vs, he warneth vs, he rebuketh vs; and all these things hee doeth with such myldnesse, as wee must needs shewe our selues to want both witte and reason, if wee be not benefited by the goodnesse hee vseth. But will wee not hearken to our GOD when hee speaketh vnto vs in so gentle and gracious a manner? Then will hee talke with vs with maine strokes of halbardes, pykes, and hagbuts. Wee shall there vnderstande nothing, the language of them will be very strange vnto vs. And wherefore? By cause wee had no cares to heare when GOD spake graciously vnto vs, yea and when hee stooped so lowe, as to teache vs lyke little children, that are taught their A, B, C. Go too then, let vs vnderstande that when wee bee so deafe against God: hee must talke with vs in another language, and hee must stirre vp some barbarous and brasen faced people, that haue neither reuerence, reason, nor equitie: to whom when yee shall pray for pitie and compassion: it shall be but in vaine, they will giue no care vnto you, you shall goe that way in spite of your bardes,

beardes. And what is the remedie of all these euils? Let vs enter, let vs enter into our consciences, let vs not grynde our teeth at men, as wee are wont to doe, let vs not striue with them. For our combate is not there. But let vs vnderstand that God meaneth to chastise vs by men, bycause wee haue beene stubborn: towards him, and would not bee edified by his woordes, according as his meaning was. And therefore let vs benefite our selues by all these warnings, 10 and corrections which GOD doeth sende vs. And let vs not abyde till wee feele the knockes; but whensoever GOD doeth vs the fauour to teach vs at other mens cost, let vs receiue profite thereby: and when he spareth vs, let vs not abuse his patience. And for as much as the meane to reconcile vs vnto him, is to accept the promise that hee offereth vs in the Gospell; let vs embrace our Lorde Iesus Christ, which is our peace, to the ende that wee may be entrea-<sup>Eph 2 14</sup>ted after a fatherly sorte, at the handes of our God.

Nowe let vs fall downe before the Maiestie of our good God, with acknowledgement of our mildeedes, beseeching him to make vs to perceiue them yet better; and therewithall to beare with vs in such sort, and that his chastisements and corrections may bee so fatherly and measurable towards vs, as wee may bee reduced to the obedience of his righteoulesse, and that he will euermore so comfort vs, as wee may haue whereof to reioyce in him, and to glorifie him, for his procuring of our saluation by all meanes. And so let vs allay, Almightye God heauenly father, &c.

On Thursday the xxvj. of March, 1556.

The CLXI. Sermon which is the ninth vpon the eight and twentieth Chapter.

49.50 The Lord will stirre vp, &c.

51 The same shall eat the fruite of thy Cattel, and the fruite of thy land, vntill thou bee rooted out, and hee shall leaue thee neither Corne, wine, nor Oyle, nor any fruite of thy Cattel, nor of the flocks of thy sheepe, vntill he haue brought thee to nought.

52 And hee shall besiege thee in all thy Townes, vntill hee haue cast downe thy high and strong walles, wherein thou vddest put thy trust throughout all thy lande: and hee shall besiege thee in all thy Townes throughout al the lande that the Lord thy God hath giuen thee.

53 Thou shalt eat the fruite of thy wombe euen the fleshe of thy sonnes and daughters, which the Lorde thy God hath giuen thee, in the siege and distresse wherewith thine enemy shall straiten thee.

54 In so much that the man which is tender and exceeding daintie among you shall bee grieved to looke vpon his brother, and vpon the wife in his bosome, and vpon the rest of his children that be left,

55 And shall not giue vnto them of the flesh of his children, whereof hee himselfe eateth, for feare least he should leaue nothing at al for himselfe, by reason of the siege and straitnesse wherewith thine enemy shall distresse thee in all thy Cities.

56 Yea and the woman that is so tender and nyce among you, that shee will not venter to set the sole of hir foote vpon the grounde, bicause of hir tendernes and nycenesse, shall bee grieved to looke vpon the husband that lyeth in hir bosome, and vpon hir sonne and vpon hir daughter, 57 And vpon the afterbirth which is come out from betwixt hir legges, and vpon the babes which shee hath brought forth: for shee shall eat them priuily for want of all manner of things, in the siege and straitnesse, wherewith thine enemy shall distresse thee in thy Cities.

58 If thou doe not keepe and perfourme all the wordes of this Law, which be written in this booke, and feare this glorious and dreadfull name of the Lorde thy God,

He must remember what was touched yesterday , and also what Moses doeth still continue to speake of: that is, that if men bee rough and cruell vnto vs, God doeth stirre them vp thereunto: by cause he hath found vs rebellious towardes him . And therefore whensoever men deale not to myldely with vs as we woulde, let vs looke whether we haue answered God, & whether wee haue meckely embraced all that he hath commaunded vs: for if any of vs doe finde himselfe to haue made warre and to haue set vp himselfe against God; it is not to be wondered at, if God pay him with the like againe, on the behalfe of men . But wee shall neuer be perswaded of this doctrine, vnlesse we vnderstande, that God holdeth the hearts of men in his hand to soften them , when it pleaseth him be they neuer so hard hearted; and on the contrarie part to harden them , though they bore vs neuer so much good will before. Let vs not therefore trust to y loue of men, vnlesse we walke in the feare of God. For it lieth in him fo to change their hearts as they shal beare rancor toward vs , & be quite & cleane wdrawen fro vs for lesse than nothing, in so much as the worlde shall see y they which were most forward to helpe vs , shall become most against vs. And on y other side let vs vnder-stand, y our Lord can well qualifie al malice, yea though they be as fierce as a Lion, he will make them mylde & friendly towardes vs. There was neuer nation so proude & cruell as y Egyptians: and in special, how pitifull were they against the children of Israel? It seemed y this poore people should neuer haue founde any mercy . And yet God wrought in such wise, y the Egyptians gaue them all their treasures, & all that euer was excellent in their houses , there was neither siluer nor gold spared . And whereof came that? Before y time they had held the Iewes in bondage, they had vexed them out of all measure: they wold haue plucked y bread out of their mouths, yea & haue cut y throates of the all . A litle afore they had killed their children as soone as they came out of their mothers wombs, of purpose to haue destroyed y whole stock of them; & wherof then came this foundaine myldnes y euery man brought them y things y were most precious in his house? It was god y couerted their harts, And likewise on y cotrary side, it is said y he hardned the hearts of kings, when y people were to enter into y land of Canaan: whereas they shold haue bin suffered to passe, there were many gainclay-ers y resisted them. Whence came that? Euen of this, y they had resisted their God. Let vs therefore learne (as I haue saide heretofore) so to behaue our selues in obedience towardes God, y men also for their partes may be friendly vnto vs, For there is none so great nor so mightie, but he shal finde some miserie to rise vp against him, when he wil needes play the stout fellow in struing against God. And we haue seene that they which are drunken w their owne greatnes , must in y end bee punished, nor by such as are in any authoritie, or by such as are of estimation in this world; but by rascals & naughtipacks: such folke must euen spit in their faces. And such examples are to be seen euen in princes, & men of great state. For when they yeelde not themselves to be gouerned of God, he is faine to stirre vp gouer-nours to y contrary, to shame such as wil not be obedient vnto him. Yet notwithstanding when men yeelde not the selues tractable; then must we vnder-stand y god manageth the matter by a secret meane; and that he doeth it to make vs to stoope.

 Therefore let vs not deceiue our selues in the creatures, saying: What fortune is this? In deede we may say so, but wee must go yet one step farther: & we must vnderstand y it cometh not to passe without y direction of God. And thereupon wee must repaite to y remedie, that is to wit, wee must stoope vnder the word & hand of God, and consider, y if it please him, he can turne y minds of men y were so spitefull against vs, & make the to become friendly to vs. And y is a thing more than necessarie. For when wee haue to doe with them y be rough & intractable , we be by and by out of heart, & woulde, (if we could possibly) ridde our selues of all troubles, and be set free from the at the first dash. But we should rather returne vnto God, acknowledging y those things proceede from his hand. And so, when men shew the selues so vnfaithful and cruell towarde vs , handling vs scornfully & opprobriously, so as we canot get one whit of right or reason at their hands, but we see how their whole seeking is to set their feete on our throtes, & they haue such a beastly shame-lesnes (as it is said here,) y they be not ashamed of any thing y is said vnto them, but they take y bridle in their teeth, & play the wilde beastes, so as there is neither grace nor honestie in them; when wee see such barbarous beastinesse, let vs learne to resort vnto our God, & to acknowledge y we deserue to be so tamed by him. Moreover y onely meane to appease such furie, & to aswage those which are so hot and harkie; is to call vpon our God, and to pray him to touche those inwardly with his holy spirite, which are so cruell and cannot yeelde to doe vs good, by cause we haue set vp our selues against our God. That is the thing wherof we are admonished in this Text.

Nowe Moses repeateth that which hath bene touched heretofore: namely, That God will bring vs enemies from a farre Countrey, and shal they shall sie as Eagles, to the intent wee shoulde not thinke that GOD needeth to make any preparation long aforehand, As if a man shoulde threaten vs: we woulde looke whether he had a sword in his hand, and whether he be in readines to execute y which he hath said . But if God doe but whistle (as he often speaketh by his Prophets,) by and by he hath his men of warre in readines; he needeth not to make musters, or to inrolle them, or to founde the drum: he needeth none of al this: onely at his whistle (for he vseth that similitude;) all the whole earth must needes bee moued. Therefore let vs not looke whether things be in a readines, nor whether any hurt or harme be done vs. Let vs not looke whether any worldly meanes be prepared thereunto: but let vs vnderstand that ere we can conceiue what euill may happen vnto vs, we shall be presently ouerthrowne. And wherefore? Bycause it is God that speaketh, which maketh men to flye as birds, euen from y<sup>e</sup> one end of the earth to the other. There is neither sea nor mountains able to saue vs from the experience of y<sup>e</sup> which we neuer beleecued. Howbeit God hath so disposed things, yea & euen amongst the heathen is oftentimes scene incredible speedines, when God is disposed to chastise the great est part of y<sup>e</sup> world; in so much that some one man hath risen with a smal number of people, to chastise an infinite multitude y<sup>e</sup> did set themselves against him: and that not for one time onely, but twise or thrise one after another, with taking of Townes & Fortresses, which seemed to be so well appointed, yea and strong by naturall situation, that they could not be approached vnto, & yet haue they bin sacked as if God had meant to renewe a great part of the worlde. It hath bin in likewise scene, that a people without renouue or estimation, haue risen and made the most mighty to tremble. In this dooing God giueth examples of that which is written heere: to wit, that he can surely bring our enemies vpon the soudayne, and that they shal make such dispatch, as if they came swifter against vs than by post: and that when we suppose to haue some respite, by truce for one month, for one yeere or for al our lifetime, we shall be suddenly surprisid in a morning before we thinke thereon. Let vs therefore vnderstand, that as soone as God speaketh, wee must haue an eye vnto the infinite power (that is in him, yea and which is incredible to mans vnderstanding,) & to tremble at his very word, and to yeeld vnto him: knowing well that if we delay from day to day, wee may be prevented, & then will it be too late. Let vs therefore be aduisid to humble our selues in due time, and to graue pardon when we haue offended him.

Moses sayeth expressly, That they which are disobedient vnto God, shall be besieged & shut up within their walles, vntill all their fortresses in which they trusted, be beaten downe. Here we see how God reprooueth the false and cursed presumption whereby men deceiue themselves, in thinking themselves to be well fenced against him. It is a sacrifice whereby God is robbed of his honor, whē we attribute vnto the creatures, y<sup>e</sup> meane to vphold vs. It is certaine y<sup>e</sup> God serueth himselfe by meanes, & we must also apply the vnto our vse: but in the meane while to settle our trust vpon them, were a robbing of God of his maiestic. For he wil haue vs to hold al things of him, and to do him homage for them. So then it is an intollerable presumption for vs to put our trust in creatures & to ground our selues on them: and yet there is no fault more common in y<sup>e</sup> world. We can say wel ynough, y<sup>e</sup> it is not lawfull, & that we ought not to doe it: but in the meane while cuerie one doth it. Now let vs remember our selues, for there is nothing y<sup>e</sup> God holdeth more deare, or whereof he maketh greater account than his honour. Neither is it sufficient for vs to leaue him the title & name of God: but he must also be knowne as he is, y<sup>e</sup> is to say, that al power lieth in him, that he is the fountaine of all manner of grace & goodnes: that it is his proper office to maintaine and preferre vs: that our life is in his hand, & all things that belong therto. When we haue well thought vpon this, let vs take order to gather our wits so about vs, as we be not grounded vpon creatures. Surely the mischief is double when we shield our selues with y<sup>e</sup> creatures against God, & therby to become stubborne whē he threateneth vs, & to hold on still when he vttereth forth tokens of his displeasure: let vs consider that the offence is then much more grievous. But yet is this our common. For whilest we perceiue not any danger towards, as in respect of the world; doe not wee continue in our sinnes? And doe we not abide in stubbornnesse? God speaketh: but we regard him not. So y<sup>e</sup> men doe fauour vs, & so we haue wherewith to fortifie our selues, we thinke that y<sup>e</sup> hand of God can not come at vs. And therefore it is not without cause y<sup>e</sup> our Lord reprooueth the frowardnes of al such as are disobedient towards him: that is to say, that they put their trust in their fortresses, in their high walles, in their munitions, and in such like things. Now forasmuch as we be subiect to these things, it were better for vs y<sup>e</sup> we had neyther hedge nor aught else, than to be well fenced with walles and bulwokes. For they serue but to blinde our eyes, that haue no more respect to our God: but be bewitched by Sathan to put our trust in things which shalke our confusion. Howsoeuer the case standeth, let vs aduisedly holde this rule in general; that is, y<sup>e</sup> God be euermore our fortress: as we see he promiseth by his Prophet Esay, aswel in the 12. Chapter, as also from y<sup>e</sup> 55. vnto the end: for it tenderth al to this point. And it is so common a doctrine in the holy scriptures, that we can scarce turne a leafe; but we shal see some text, whererein God telleth vs y<sup>e</sup> he wil be our rampyres, our wals, our ditches, yea & double ditches, our towers, and whatsoever else is needefull for our defence. And why? For (as I haue heretofore said,) our nides do forthwith slide into vanitie so as God is not able to hold vs backe to himselfe; and to make account that we will put our whole trust in him. What must wee then doe? First of all, if we be destitute of mans aide, let vs vnderstand that God alone is sufficient, if we returne vnto him, [& say:] Ah Lord, it is certaine y<sup>e</sup> we are set for a pray, we haue not wherewith to saue our selues, for all the world doth faile vs: but yet it is ynough y<sup>e</sup> thou art our succour. After y<sup>e</sup> maner should wee learne to resort vnto him. And so shoulde wee take occasion to yeelde our selues wholly vnto him when the things of this worlde doe faile vs. And by the way, although wee haue walles, and artillerie, money and munition, and all that wee can wish for, yea and people also, and all things else: yet let vs vnderstande that wee must in the meane while so vse them, as our Lorde may be alway our trust, and we giue him euermore this honor, that it is his office to defend vs, and that thereupon wee wade no farther. It is certayne that wee may serue our turne with the things which hee putteth into our handes: but yet in the meane meane while, our hearts and mindes must bee rayfed vp about all the worlde, and hee alone must bee our shootcanker. Thirdely, wee must not vaunt our felues of the force of the helpes that he giueth vs: for a speare of a bramble (as they say) is enough to make vs beleuee that wee bee inuincible. What [say wee?] Is it possible that they should preuaile against vs? All this is nothing: no nor worth the pill of an Oayon, as they say: yet will wee needes straine our wittes to giue it price and the glory. Nay contrariwise, let vs acknowledge our debilitie and weakenesse, that we may reparaire vnto God, and let nothing hinder vs from yeelding our felues wholly vnto him and vnto his protection: let vs not deceiue our felues with such vaine confidence, as the Iewes had in their high wals. Nowe herewithall hee sheweth also that all that euer wee can deuise for our strength and safegarde, can doe nothing against his power: but that wee shall continue besieged, vntill wee bee altogether wasted. Yea and wee may gather by this Text, that it were much better for vs to bee deliuered at the first into the handes of our enemies, than to haue meanes to resist, whereby wee may bee made to languish in such wise as wee may not dye a simple death [out of hand]: for the poore people that be abroad in the fieldes, are spoyled at the first, and so are dispatched of it. Surely it is a pitious case, to beholde their throates cut and all fet on fire: but yet for all that, by that meanes they are deliuered from their miseries, so as they pine not away in them. But as for them that are in strong Townes, they must bee faine to abide a long siege, they must languishe and pine away by peccemeale, not for a moneth or two, but euen vntill they can holde out no more: and that is asmuch as if they should passe a hundred deaths. Thus doth our Lorde reuenge himselfe of them that thinke themselves to bee dispatched, when God doth not roote them out at the first. No, saith hee, bethinke your felues whether of these fruites doe speede best; they that are brought to the market in their prime, and eaten out of hand; or they that are kept for a time, and in the ende doe rotte? It were better then for you to bee ouercome and vanquished by your enemies at the first. Let vs therefore consider well, that when wee haue wherewith to defend vs to the worldward, where it should profite vs, it shall turne to our double confusion if wee trust therein: for wee must growe a great while vnder the burden, and bee wasted by little and little. For when wee bee disobedient and wil not be reformed, our Lorde wil neuer leaue vs till he haue vtterly brought vs to nought, as he sheweth here so oftentimes. And y is yet better exprest by this that Moses addeth. The man (saith he) that is tender and delicate among you, shall bee greened as his brother, and as the wife which lyeth in his armes, because hee cannot bee suffered to eate his owne children alone. The woman which is so nice that shee dare not touch the ground with her foote (for so are the very wordes of Moses) shall seeke to destroy and to spoile her own children; yea, they shall no sooner bee borne out of her wombe, but shee shall bee desirous to deuoure them; and if shee haue brought them vp to some bignesse, shee will spare them neuer the more. These bee dreadfull things: for it is not sayd alone, You shall bee besieged, and tarie a long while in famine, so as you shall bee diuened to eate, Horses, Rattes, mice, shooleathers; yea and the very dounge of byrdes (as it hath bin seene) and all these things shall bee your meate. Neither is it sayd that men and women should bee eaten: but that euery man shall eate his owne children. Seeing that God speaketh in this maner, were it not enough to make our hayre stand vpright? Yes vctily; and yet here is nothing declared by Moses, which hath not bin seene in execution. It is not for a man to say, it is not credible, it is repugnant to nature, a man would plucke the bread out of his owne mouth, when hee is in extremitie, to giue it vnto his children, he would dy to helpe them, inso much that wee see that Agar could not abide to see the death of her childe, but shee left him alone, and wished her owne death. But wee neede not to alledge examples of these things: for the common affection doth sufficiently declare, that euery man would rather dy, than eate his owne children: but yet was such crueltie seene among the Iewes. They which were instructed in y lawe of God, and should haue had much more humanity and compassion, than the Paganes and infidels, euen they forgot al manner of honestie, and were overcome with this madnes. It was meete that this blindness, whereof the Prophets had spoken, and which wee see here before touched also by Moses, should bee then accomplished in them, and that they should bee rauished of their wittes: For when G O D taketh away all reason and vprightnesse from men: then hee leaueeth them to a kinde of madnesse. Such furie then must needs be in them, when they did eate their owne children.

Hereby wee bee specially warned, that they which bee referred for the last cast, bee in no better case than they, whom God hath chasticed long afore. And this is a profitable warning. For so soone as God striketh some, and forbeareth other some: And why not these also, say wee? Haue not these deferred asmuch? We haue not the patience to suffer God to execute his iudgements in such order as seemeth good vnto himselfe: but wee surmise, that thole whome hee dooth respite, and whom hee for a little while forbeareth, bee priuiledged more than wee. But it is contrary: for it had bin better for them to haue bin punished sooner than to be so referred. And therefore let vs not enuy them because that God forbeareth them for a time, as though they were exempted from all plagues, but let vs tary till God fetch them about at their turne: for it had bin farre better for them, to haue bin dispatched out of hand. And therewithall let euery of vs looke to himselfe. Let vs not trust to the patience that God vseth toward vs, to deceiue our felues therewith. In deede when God hath bin patient, and forborne vs, it shoulde giue vs the better disposition, to resorte vnto him, and to hope to finde him pitiful, to forgiue vs our faultes and trespasses. But we must not fall asleepe thereupon, to dally with him, and to say: O, hee hath taried for vs, he will yet doe the lyke hercafter; as wee see the wicked doe, which doe but shake their head at it: when they see that God hath spared them, they thinke they be discharged. Let vs beware that, For wee see how he faith, that when we be well appointed, and haue fortress as it were inuincible, all must fall on our heades, and wee shall be so much the more grieuouly punished. Thus much haue we to remember touching this text.

Now let vs marke further, that when we forget our God, wee must also forget all the course of nature, and he must needs bereaue vs of our wittes: for it is hee on whom all fatherhood dependeth, he is the wellspring thereof. We should not knowe what the dutie of the parents is towards their children, nor what reuerence children doe owe to their parentes and superiours, vnlesse God did beare the fouercentie. If we referre not all vnto him, he wil make vs to become blockish, (so as wee shall not vnderstand what this fatherly affectio toward our children should meane. Thus much for one poynt.

But by the way wee haue to note, that the men which did so deuour their owne children, were not so blockish but that they were pinched with terrible heartbitings, and vexed with such furious fearefulness, as made them euen to abhor that which they did. True it is that they were caryed away by force, and had no reason in them; but yet for all that they had certaine secret stings and prickings inwardly, and God held them as it were vpon the racke or torture, as if he should haue sayd vnto them, What wilt thou doe; thou wretched creature? It had bin better for thee to haue bin borne afore thy time, and y<sup>e</sup> the earth had swallowed thee vp a hundred times, than thou shouldst haue comitted so terrible a fact: but yet must necessitie needs get the vpper hand of thee. Let vs marke therefore, that when wee be not meekened by the hand of God, wee must then fall into such a woodnes, as shall ouermaister vs, and make vs torment our selues without the helpe of any other executioner, so as euery of vs shall execute Gods vengeance vpon himselfe, which he had skorned afore and scoffed at. I haue sayd, that here is nothing spoken of, which hath nor bin feene in effect: to wit, that the fathers haue eaten their own children, and in lyke case the mothers. But like as the Iewes had most exceedingly prouoked God; euen so came they to the fullnesse of iniquitie, and consequently it behoued God so to vter his wrath toward them with extremitie, as it was seene when they were besieged with their enemies; for then did they eate Pygions dounge, and bought it by golde weight; yee shall see that they committed actes against nature in eating one another. But when they had once reiected the sonne of God, & had vterly cut themselves off from the hope of saluation by forsaking the redeemer vpon whom whome were grounded all the promises which had bin made vnto them concerning the goodnesse of God; then was it of necessitie that those things should bee the more accomplished. For if yee reade the histories, euen of them that were of the same nation, and which were present witnesses of the matter; yee would thinke that yee heard dreames or fables; and yet for all that, those things were then notoriously known, and noted to bee true, and God intended as it were to set vp scaffolds, that it might be scene how his threatening of his people after that manner, was not in vaine, as wee see, and that all men should take example thereat. For they bee horrible thinges, and such as may make our hayres to stand vpright, when it is sayd that the husband shall deceiue the wife and steale away the children issued of the bodies of them both, and that y<sup>e</sup> wife lykewise shall seeke some secret place to cut the throat of her childe in, as if shee should say, I will locke vp this for my selfe: and that both the husbands and the wiues should bee so madde as to say, I will eate mine owne childe. Seeing that all these things were accomplished; and that our Lord hath executed such vengeance: let vs vnderstand that wee ought not to reade these things at this day without trembling, euen as if GOD should lay forth his foredenounced vengeance beore vs in a paynted table. Morouer let vs vnderstand, that when God had pronounced such sentence against the Iewes, it was not executed at the first day. For he waited for them with so long patience, that it seemed that no mischief should light vpon them. But when the sore was burst, then was the rottennesse perceiued which lay hidde afore and the disease was the more deadly. Also let vs marke, that if God doe beare with vs, and afterward do diuers wayes correct vs, and yet nor strike so roughly as to come to extremitie: wee must not thinke that wee are thereby escaped his hand, but we must returne vnto him, and notary till hee see our disobedience vnreformable, and so be faine to proceede to the extremitie of his threatninges. Thus much haue wee to remember touching this text.
